After several remarks upon the resemblance between the Greek, Egyptian and Hindu systems, Capt. Willard gives evidence of the authority upon which his treatise is compiled, by stating that he has consulted the most famous performers, the first Veenhars* in India, the more expert musicians of Lukhnow and Hukeen Sulamut Ulee Khan of Benares, who has written a treatise on music. In the introduction following the preface, he gives us an account of the origin of Hindu music, and here, very prudently, he examines into the causes of that repugnance to Eastern music displayed by so many Europeans of cultivated minds; and this he rightly attributes to one or other of the following causes: First, ignorance, in which he includes the not having heard the best performers. Second, natural prepossession (which he might have stated to arise from pride in supposing everything European to be so much superior). Third, inattention to its beauties. Fourth, incapacity of comprehension. We declare ourselves not to be of the number of these prejudiced persons; on the contrary, the more we read and hear the more decided becomes our conviction that the genuine system of music that, founded on poetry and assisted by feeling, melody is to be found nowhere in greater purity than in the East; but by an unfortunate circumstance the ancient Brahmins, who were the living repositories of all scientific learning, threatened with excommunication any of their tribe who should presume to apostatize and betray the sacred writings.

Thus we are excluded from a positive knowledge of the rules that guided these poet musicians in their exhibitions of the art, and can only gather by collateral proof sufficient to show that they sang their own compositions when under an unusual degree of mental excitement by the occurrence of a victory, a death of any of their princes, a festivity, &c., which afforded them in their retirement† a subject on which to expatiate. These men who adopted this austere method of living, concerning themselves little about the luxuries and vanities of the world, could not be bribed to display their talents in public as hired professors. They neither cared for nor accepted gifts or presents. Princes and great men of taste courted their friendship, and considered themselves honored by accepting the fruits of their genius as a favor for which they possessed no other means of repaying them, but with respect and kind treatment. This order of bards, honored, admired and even reverenced by the natives, continued to meet due favor and patronage till the reign of Mohamed Shah. After his time they declined, owing to the disastrous wars and massacres in which that monarch's successors were engaged, leaving neither tranquillity nor leisure for such amusements.

Captain Willard goes on to describe the system termed Sungeet, including all their forms of solemnization, to which we must refer the reader for much curious information, page 23 in the treatise. Their gamut is termed Surgum. The number of tones is the same as in the modern music of Europe; but the subdivisions are more in the manner of the ancient enharmonic genus of the Greeks. At page 32 he mentions the great difference that prevails between the music of Europe and that of the Oriental nations in respect to time, in which branch it resembles more the system of the Greeks and other ancient nations, than the measures peculiar to the modern music of Europe. This rhythm was no other than the poetical feet which formed the basis of their musical measure. That their language was favorable to musical effects will appear from the circumstance of the Sanscrit containing more than double the vowels found in the English language.

"The peculiar nature of the melody of Hindustan not only permits but enjoins the singer, if he has the least pretension to excel in it, not to sing a song throughout more than once in its naked form; but on its repetition, which is a natural consequence, occasioned by the brevity of the pieces in general, to break off sometimes at the conclusion, at other times at the commencement, middle, or any certain part of a measure, and fall into a rhapsodical embellishment called Alap; and after going through a variety of ad libitum passages, rejoin the melody with as much grace as if it never had been disunited, the musical accompaniment all the while keeping time."

Here we have exactly the same rules as those laid down by the great Italian masters, never to sing a melody twice in the same manner. Perhaps no term could better convey the "frightful heap of notes," as Mr. Worgan calls them, with which some singers of later times trick out the simple melodies they sing, than a rhapsodical embellishment. We have hitherto considered this a modern improvement (?) but lo! here we see it as old as the hills.

There are four sorts of characters for time. The Undroot, the Droot, the Lughoo and Gooroo, with marks serving like our dots or points, to lengthen the preceding note half its value. Here we may observe the superiority of the Hindu over the Greek musical system, the latter having only two sorts, the long and the short, which served to mark the measure both of poetry and music.

"It is not a little remarkable, how small is the amount of the information possessed by the writers on music, respecting the stores of musical works still remaining in some of the libraries in Spain, one of the most celebrated seats of the learning of Arabia. When the rest of the world was sunk in Gothic ignorance, these sacred fires of knowledge continued to burn with more than their ancient splendor. In the library of the Escurial is preserved a work by the Arabian Orpheus Al Farabi, entitled "The Elements of Music," treating of the principles of the art, the harmony of natural and artificial sounds, the various kinds of composition, and upward of thirty figures of their musical instruments. In the same place is another work by Abulfaraji, called the "Kitab al Aguni," or great collection of songs, containing 150 ariettas, the lives of fourteen distinguished musicians and four eminent female singers." (See Crichton's "History of Arabia," Vol. I., p. 25.)

Time, in the acceptation it has in music, is called Tal. The origin of this word is said to be from Tand, the dance of Muhadew, and Las, that of his wife, Parvutee; the first letters of which form the word Tal.

The Hindoostanees reckon an immense variety of times; but such as are now practiced are limited to ninety-two, of which the author gives a table, explaining their value in musical notes, with the use of the different species of accent. The accent seems to abound with a variety and means of expression to which the European system can scarcely be said to afford a parallel.

The melody of the East has always been admired, and, as Captain Willard believes, very justly; but so wide is the difference between our system and that of the Orientals, that many of the Eastern melodies would baffle the attempts of an expert contrapuntist to harmonize them by existing rules. Their authentic melody is limited to a certain number, said to have been composed by professors universally acknowledged to have possessed, not only real merit, but also the original genius of composition, beyond the precincts of whose authority it would be criminal to trespass (p. 47.). What the more reputed of the moderns have done is that they have adapted them to their own purposes, and formed others by the combination of two or more together. Thus far they are licensed, but dare not proceed a step further, as whatever merit an entirely modern composition might possess, should it have no resemblance to the established melody of the country it would be looked upon as spurious. It is implicitly believed that it is impossible to add to the number of these one single melody of equal merit—so tenacious are the natives of Hindustan of their ancient practices!

Thus we see, even in these countries, bigotry flourishes as it does elsewhere, and by all right-minded artists this has been considered the grand obstruction to the elevation of every art where this narrow and detestable feeling exists, and is sanctioned by authority. Is it not lamentable that talent and genius must forever be fettered by scholastic pedants, whose minds are utterly incapable of appreciating anything but mechanical power, who would clog the wheels of that splendid machine, the imagination, by the constant impediment of rules, and bind down to earth the soul of the music, which, but for their overbearing interference, would soar aloft, and imbibe from heaven the soul inspired strain?

"The songsters of Hindustan pretend that any song sung out of the time appropriated for it sounds uncouth. They allege that the times and seasons allotted to each melody are those at which the divinities are at leisure to attend at the place where their favorite tune is sang, and to inspire the performer with due warmth in his execution." (Page 54.)

Here we must remark the high feeling, although carried to a most absurd excess, with which all the Eastern nations employed the poetical and musical arts; they were held sacred, and the performers were considered as inspired persons; the art by them was pursued with a serious devotedness and earnest appreciation of the exalted purpose it was designed to fulfill, that may well put to shame many a miscalled modern professor. In the more remote patriarchal ages, when literature could scarcely be said to exist, and civilization had not extended the means of accumulating subjects upon which the bard might exercise his noble art, God and his attributes were the constant theme of the prophet bards; this continued to supply mental food to the later and equally renowned poets, whose works continue to delight us. Homer, Dante, Ariosto, Milton, Cowper, Thomson and Wordsworth have all adopted similar means of exciting the mind, by the union of the most sublime subject with the most artful resources of genius.

When dissent from the worship of the Most High

*Players upon the Veen, a national instrument. †The common opinion in Hindustan is that to be a great musician, a man must live retired from the world like a Jogee.—Page 15.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN PUPILS

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, Coast of MAINE

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

JEAN GERARDY

December, 1901, to May, 1902.

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER

JANUARY to MAY, 1902.

Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.

Wagner Lecture Recitals.

VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS: Miss Pauline Cramer.

Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.

Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

Kindergarten Music Building.

The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.

Kate L. Darlington

1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,

Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,

7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,

Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!

ADVICE GRATIS.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.

BASS.

For Terms, Dates, &c., address

Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

degenerated into idolatry, and from thence again branched off into the deification of real or imaginary persons, the systems both of poetry and music were regulated by all Oriental nations according to the ramifications of divinity they had thus established, and by consequence, the immense variety (as observed in the Ragmala) or personification of melodies arose. (P. 62.) Each of these deities was to be propitiated by tunes or airs, expressly intended to excite attention to their votaries, and whatever absurdities may be ingrafted on this plan as a mode of worship, the educated musician will at once discover what a prodigious field is opened in composition, especially of the imaginative class. In one mentioned by our author "the god Hindol is represented seated in a golden swing, while a number of nymphs, by whom he is surrounded, amuse him with music, and keep time with the rocking of the swing in which he sits, indolently gazing on their charms, enjoying the sweets spontaneously offered to his shrine. His countenance is wan, which seems to indicate that, although an immortal, his constitution is impaired, &c. Another, called Nut, is a young maiden, who prefers the career of glory to that of pleasure. She is adorned with jewels, and has clothed herself in man's attire, and being mounted on a furious steed, Minerva-like, engages in battle with those of the opposite sex; her countenance flushed with all the ardor and fatigue of such an undertaking.

The musical instruments of the country are many, but defective, the manufacture of them being intrusted to carpenters and other artificers instead of properly qualified scientific men. The chief defect alluded to is the radical imperfection which will not admit a change of key. They have no method of tuning their instruments to any certain pitch, but are guided in this respect merely by the ear.

"The most prominent among their deities is the god Crishnu, whose attributes are a sort of amalgamation of those of Cugid and Jupiter, the hymns in which the Hindus celebrate his actions always having love for theme. Some adore him as a god, others esteem him as a lover, and a few treat him as an impudent fellow," which latter title he has earned by his daring exploits among the maidens who come to draw water from the Jumna.

"To comprehend the songs of this country and to relish their beauties, we must figure to ourselves Hindustan, not in the state which it is in at present, but must transport ourselves back to those earlier ages to which allusions are made by them—when each region was possessed by petty chieftains, each arbitrary in his respective dominions—when no high roads existed, the communication between one village and another being maintained by narrow footpaths, and rude mountains and jungles formed the natural barrier of the chief—when navigation by river was as impracticable as traveling by land—when topography was almost unknown, and the advice of a stranger adventitiously met was to be cautiously embraced"—to the time, in short, when parting even for a journey to an adjoining village was accompanied by mutual tears and prayers for safe return. A distant tour, such as in these days is looked upon with indifference, was formerly contemplated and consulted for a year or two before undertaken; and when a man who had accomplished his purpose returned home in safety, after encountering all the hardships incident to it, the wonderful recital of his adventures, the skill with which he conducted himself in the presence of princes, his valor and intrepidity in times of danger, his cunning and foresight in preventing or avoiding the toils of the evil minded, and all these exaggerated by the vanity of the traveler, formed the theme of admiration to the village, and the subject of pride to his relatives not soon likely to be forgot. It is observed by the author of "An Inquiry Into the Life and Writings of Homer," page 26, "that it has not been given by the gods to one and the same country to produce rich crops and warlike men; neither indeed does it seem to be given to one and the same kingdom to be thoroughly civilized, and afford proper subjects for poetry." It is this which renders Hindoostance songs flat and unpalatable, unless we transport ourselves back to their barbarous and heroic ages. Their abhorrence of innovation induces them to retain their ancient ways of thinking, or at least to unite their manner of thinking in times of yore, notwithstanding the changes introduced by time.

The tenor of Hindoostance love ditties generally is upon one or more of the following themes:

1. Beseeching the lover to be propitious.
2. Lamentations for the absence of the object loved.
3. Imprecation of rivals.
4. Complaints of inability to meet the lover from the watchfulness of the mother and sisters-in-law, and the tinkling of little bells* worn as ornaments round the waist and ankles, called payel, bichooa, &c.
5. Fretting and making use of invectives against the mother and sisters-in-law, as being obstacles in the way of her love.
6. Exclamations to female friends termed Sukhees, and supplicating their assistance; and
7. Sukhees reminding their friends of the appointment made, and exhorting them to persevere in their love.

The conquest of Hindustan by the Mohamedan princes forms a most important epoch in the history of its music. From this time we may date the decline all arts and sciences purely Hindu, for the Mohamedans were no great patrons of learning, and the more bigoted of them were not only great iconoclasts, but discouragers of the learning of the country. The progress of the theory of music once arrested, its decline was speedy, although the practice, which contributed to the entertainment of the princes and nobles continued until the time of Mahamed Shah, after whose reign history is pregnant with facts replete with dismal scenes. But the practice of so fleeting and perishable a science as that of a succession of sounds, without a knowledge of the theory to keep it alive, or any mode to record it on paper, dies with the professor.

Dr. Burney in his notice of Hebrew music hazards the assertion that we have no authentic account of any nation except the Egyptians, where music had been cultivated so early as the days of David and Solomon, the Greeks at that time having hardly invented their rudest instruments. But this is a gratuitous assumption on the part of the worthy doctor, and a reference to the treatise we are now reviewing would alone suffice to controvert this hasty opinion. Look to the fact also of the Arabians having invented upword of thirty different musical instruments including the bagpipe,† commonly believed to have first appeared in Scotland. Besides, we should remember that "even before man existed, the melodies of nature must have sounded for ages unheard; companions in waste and non-enjoyment to the glories of that magnificent vegetation which, when man awoke, he found buried in dark transmutation beneath his feet. The seven notes it has been shown are absolute existences in nature. Physical bodies and air are everywhere, and must have been at all times capable of producing them."

See article Music, No. 321, Chamber's Edinburgh Journal.

*A girdle of small bells is a favorite Hindu ornament; also silver circles at the ankles and wrists which emit a ringing noise as the wearer moves.—Wilson's Megha Dula, p. 85, i. 514.

†See Colonel Johnson's overland journey to India, and for list of Arabian instruments, page 108, Foreign Quarterly Review, No. 39, which forms part of an excellent paper on ancient music.

The Hindus, although an idolatrous, were never so luxurious and vicious a nation as their conquerors, the Mohamedans, most of the vices existing in this country having been introduced after the conquest. The songs of the aborigines of Hindustan will bear comparison with any other country, for purity and chasteness of diction and elevation and tenderness of sentiment.

Among the most ancient musicians of this country who are reckoned inventors, compilers and masters of the science, the most promient are Sumeshwur, Bhurut, Hunooman, Coolnath—these have all left treatises on the art; Haha, Vayoo, Shesh, Narud (the Mooni or devotee), Cushyup (another Mooni), Hoohoo, Ravrm, Disha and Urjoon.

The ancient singers who are not acquainted with the theory of music, are termed Gundharbs and Gooncurs; they are very numerous, and some of them still perform in the presence of Julul ood deen Mohummud Nebur, King of Delhi. Space will not allow of further extracts from this little work; enough has been said to show its value as the most complete treatise extant on the subject, the perusal of which will amply repay the inquirer in such department of musical literature.

TIVADAR NACHEZ.

HERE are some more press notices earned by this eminent violinist:

A regular hurricane of applause was evoked by the soloist of the evening, Tivadar Nachèz, an eminent virtuoso and extraordinary violinist. He might be placed nearest to Sauret, but he adds a peculiar national trait and perhaps a richer and not too exacting technic. He possesses in common with him uncommon sweetness of tone. His playing is incomparable for its elegance and charming nobility.

He played the Bach E major Violin Concerto, the first movement classically, the second charmingly. This second movement is of the noblest character, of the purest gold from the treasury of the inexhaustible. Nachèz brought out wonderfully its golden contents.

In general the violinist seems to me to give his very best in pure cantilene, which he draws from the strings with an emotion and inwardness that never become feeble. Proof is his rendition of the Beethoven G major Romanze and the "Abendlied" of Schumann given in reply to stormy, unending applause, and breathed forth magically.

The last movement of the Bach concerto, with its breathlessness and rhythmical difficulties, was rendered by the soloist with glorious simplicity and purity of style.

With the Paganini number Nachèz reached the highest point of virtuosity. The theme in the octave etude was taken in a highly original style; with the theme of G string etude we wandered without reluctance in the forgotten fields of Bellini's "Norma." What the virtuoso drew from the instrument in the octave etude was almost beyond the limits of possibility.—Dr. Schotten, Heidelberger Zeitung, November 14, 1899.

The second concert of the Harmonie had an exclusively classical character. After an arioso of Händel by the orchestra, a Bach concerto (No. 2, E major) was performed by Tivadar Nachèz. The Hungarian violinist is no stranger to Dresden. We have learned to value him as one of the first representatives of the instrument, and comparisons with Sarasate, Joachim and Wilhelmj are not unfavorable to him. He possesses, like the first, a perfect and elegant technic, he successfully competes with Joachim in purity of style, and, like Wilhelmj, he has a grand, powerful intonation, especially on the G and D strings, which he makes sing like human voices. He distinguished himself in the rendering of the Bach concerto and the Beethoven F major Romanze by his classic repose and keen conception, and in Schumann's "Abendlied" by delicate poetic interpretation, while in the Paganini etudes he gave again brilliant proof of his extraordinary virtuoso endowments. The bravura of his play, the impeccable technical sureness which glides softly and easily over the greatest difficulties as over trifles, the stately crescendo of effects, all this united to form such a perfect execution that Herr Nachèz again distinguished himself as one of the first of bravura players. No less excellent was he in the performance of his own composition, "Poème de la Puszta" (with orchestra), and in the Wieniawski "Legende," played as an addition.—Hermann Starke, Dresdener Nachrichten, January 17, 1901.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

FRENCH SCHOOL!
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 9. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1118.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION. Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing.
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 410 Carnegie Hall,
New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS.

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madisun Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

McCALL LANHAM, BARITONE.

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Vocal Instruction.
Open for engagements. Address
Care American School of Applied Music,
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship

Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."

Glens Falls, N. Y.

GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

August 12, 1901.

Odds and Ends.

IN these excessively hot days I found the following interesting reading under the somewhat peculiar title "And Many Dear Shadows Are Uprising." Carl Reinecke, for many long years the conductor of the celebrated Leipsic Gewandhaus concerts, who is now enjoying a well earned otium cum dignitate, has published some reminiscences of celebrated musicians, which disclose the amiability of the old gentleman and at the same time a gift for amusing chatter. Liszt, Schumann, Hiller, Brahms, Mendelssohn and the singers Jenny Lind and Wilhelmine Schroeder Devrient form the contents of these recollections, in which Mendelssohn is treated extensively, and Brahms, curiously enough, the briefest of all.

Of Franz Liszt's wonderful memory Reinecke narrates a striking example: "When on one occasion we took supper alone we fell to talking of Hummel. I considered the D minor Septet that master's most perfect work, and mentioned that I had heard it at Hamburg once with the composer at the piano. Liszt, however, was of opinion that Hummel's F sharp minor Sonata was superior even to the septet, and when I had to confess that I did not know that composition, Liszt immediately sat down at the grand piano and performed the work for me from memory from beginning to the end."

Also of Liszt's unexcelled mastery in prima vista reading Reinecke gives an example: "I had composed a Concertstueck for piano and orchestra. Liszt placed the by no means caligraphically written score upon the desk and played not only prima vista in perfect style what stood in the score, but he enhanced at the same time my somewhat old fashioned Klaviersatz with improvisations of a most graceful sort."

Of great interest is what Reinecke has to say of Robert Schumann, not only because their relations were most intimate, but also above all because Schumann thought very highly of Reinecke and used to consult him frequently and with confidence in matters of art. How valuable is, for instance, the information dating from the year 1848 and referring to the C major Symphony about which Schumann said to Reinecke: "When I began writing the symphony I was a sick man, but with the finale I have recomposed my health." Later on (in 1849) Reinecke played the "Pictures from the East," for four hands, with the composer from the manuscript. "When we had finished," Reinecke writes, "Schumann said to me: 'These pieces you ought to orchestrate.'" When Reinecke many years later actually performed this task suggested by Schumann and desired by the publisher, he had to submit to a criticism which deemed it very inartistic to orchestrate these four hand piano pieces.

About the first performance of "The Rose's Pilgrimage" Reinecke relates: "Clara Schumann sat at the piano, Robert Schumann conducted the chorus, and the amiable, graceful composition caused general delight. When the performance was concluded and Schumann became aware of the deeply favorable impression it had created he came to me with the wish that I should orchestrate it. The accompaniment, however, was so extremely Klaviermaessig that I believed that an effective and practical instrumentation could only be accomplished by emancipating oneself in many places from the original, and I should not have liked to run the risk of acting with such freedom, or taking such liberties with a work by Robert Schumann, as seemed to me necessary for the above purpose. For that reason I begged of him to dispense with my services for a task for which I did not feel myself sufficiently endowed."

Later on Schumann orchestrated the work himself.

Remarkably scanty and without importance, as I stated above, are Reinecke's reminiscences of Brahms. They treat only the beginning and the end of his career: "It was at Cologne in the summer of 1853 when a good looking young man with long blond hair and almost girlish face entered my room, brought me greetings and introduced himself as Johannes Brahms. At that time he was as yet entirely unknown. He asked me whether I cared to hear something of his, and when I requested him to play he performed for me the scherzo, which was later on published as his op. 4, in such artistically finished style that I was just as joyfully astonished over his piano playing as I was over the composition of the then twenty year old artist."

Some weeks after that day on which young Brahms had undertaken his trip to Robert Schumann, there appeared in print the latter's article, "Neue Bahnen," which has since become celebrated.

It is surprising that the recollections of Mendelssohn, though they consume the most space in the little volume, and despite the numerous and variegated personal relations that existed between the two artists, contain nothing that is absolutely new. Perhaps it is because Reinecke in his great predilection for Mendelssohn—theirs were kindred natures—wanted to demonstrate too much. He essays a sort of unnecessary apology for or vindication of the honor of the composer of "St. Paul," which reads as if he wanted to make propaganda for him, which at this late day is superfluous. Doubtlessly Mendelssohn was for a time an overrated composer. If the twentieth century will, as the end of the nineteenth did, bring in this regard a reaction, the fact is only a sign of the adjusting justice of the history of art. Reinecke, however, who sees in Mendelssohn only light and no shadow, beholds him with the eye of love and gratitude, while the musical historian, if he wants to remain objective, must use sharper glasses.

The word Uebermensch, which Goethe coined and Nietzsche appropriated, has become popular not only as far as the meaning which the philosopher attached to it is concerned, but the prefix of ueber in the sense of hyper has of late been connected with many things of which the philosopher's wisdom could not yet have dreamt. Thus, the Ueberbrettl begotten by Wolzogen, which is nothing more nor less than a hyper-tingel-tangel, has developed into a perfect nuisance, a sort of epidemic of mind which is peregrinating through the whole of Germany. What wonder, therefore, that the witty and amiable causeur Alexander Moszkowski took hold of the hyper notion, and that it pervaded him to such an extent that he could not help perpetrating an "Ueberbuechl," a hyper-booklet which in fourteen different stories simply keeps what the title promises. They have nothing directly to do with music, thanks to the Lord, or else I should not have read them while traveling. But they are very amusing nevertheless, and, of course, are replete with humor, true Moszkowski humor, which affects the mind refreshingly during these days of torpid and unbearable, suffocating heat. The illustrations in the latest German Jugendstyl suit the text, and the "hyper-booklet," nicely gotten up by Ernst Keil Successor at Leipsic, and to be had for the cheap price of 25 cents, and for the asking, should find readers and friends also in the United States.

The city of Berlin has inherited 1,500,000 marks from a musician! Dr. Georg Vierling, the composer, whose death occurred at Wiesbaden in the beginning of June, as reported at the time, left by his last will and testament the above mentioned big sum to the city of Berlin for charitable purposes. Professor Vierling was born at Frankenthal, in Bavaria, but had made Berlin his second home. Since 1853, with very few and small interruptions, he lived in the German capital, where a few years after his settling down he founded the Bach Society, which flourished under his direction. His compositions are for the greater part based also upon Markish subjects. Vierling was also a member of the Senate of the Royal Academy of Arts, Section of Music. He left neither children nor other near relatives. The number of composers who are in a position to bequeath a sum of 1,500,000 marks is without doubt a very limited one in Germany as well as elsewhere.

In a recent budget I made mention of the sorry fact that Prof. Dr. Salomon Jadassohn had lost the savings of a lifetime through the failure of the Leipsic bank. This eminent musician and theoretician will celebrate to-morrow his seventieth birthday anniversary. Congratulations will be sent to the meritorious music pedagogue from near and afar, for everywhere where music is seriously cultivated pupils of his can be found.

He was born seventy years ago at Breslau, where he also received his first musical education; then went to the Leipsic Conservatory and later on to Liszt at Weimar. In 1852 he became a composition pupil of Moritz Hauptmann, and soon thereafter began to develop a successful activity as teacher, conductor and also as composer. Since 1871 he has been attached to the staff of the Leipsic Conservatory, whose most important teacher he became after Reinecke. Countless pupils have learned from him "der Regel Gebot," and no matter whether they stuck to his conservative rules or later on struck "Neue Bahnen," they were bound to profit by his lessons. He has the secret of teaching, viz., the art of imparting to others his own knowledge. His theoretical pedagogic works have been published in many editions and various languages. The most prominent among them is his book on "Harmony," his "Counterpoint"; furthermore, "Canon and Fugue," "Forms in Musical Art Works," and his book on "Instrumentation." No less fertile was Jadassohn as a composer, the number of his published works exceeding one hundred. Among them are four symphonies, four serenades for orchestra, two piano concertos, several choral and chamber music works, vocal and piano pieces. Most remarkable are his compositions in canon form, of which Jadassohn is an unexcelled master. Several of his vocal canons have become famous. As conductor Jadassohn led for a time the concerts of the Euterpe, and since 1866 until this day the vocal chorus of the Jewish synagogue at Leipsic. The university of that town bestowed upon him honoris causa the doctor title in 1877, and on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the Leipsic Conservatory in 1893 he was nominated royal professor. Despite his seventy years, Prof. Dr. Jadassohn, who is much liked and highly esteemed by everybody, still displays diligent activity. May he live much longer and prosper!

At the summer opera in the Berlin Theatre, of which undertaking I reported in my budget of last week, the royal Bavarian chamber singer, Otto Brucks, will make his first guesting appearance to-morrow night in the baritone title part of Tell. Werner Alberti, as heretofore, will sing the part of Arnold.

Gustav Amberg, whose death was recently announced erroneously, and for whom therefore according to proverb a long life may confidently be predicted, seems to be very much alive yet, for he reports from St. Maurice the engagement of the Austrian actress Katharine Schratt for a tournée through the German theatres of the United States.

Several days ago a new operetta, entitled "The Débutante," by Alfred Zamara, of Vienna, met with considerable success at Leipsic, where the first performance took place. The same work will form the opening operetta novelty of the next season here at the Theater des Westens. Zamara was invited to conduct the Berlin première in person, but the composer's sister wrote in his stead that he had only lately recovered from very severe illness, and hence had to decline the invitation, as he did not feel well enough yet to travel and to undergo the excitement connected with the task demanded of him.

A storm has broken out at the Viennese Conservatory. The pianists Door, Epstein and Fischhof, for many years teachers of the piano at the said institution, and also Concertmaster Arnold Rosé, first teacher of the violin, have tendered their resignations because the directors concluded to open with the new school year a master school of piano playing, under the direction of Emil Sauer, of Dresden, and they took this step without having first consulted the above named professors. I wonder how it will all turn out and whether the old fogies will really withdraw and make room for a more modern spirit and much needed improvement. Moriz Rosenthal was first offered the post now about to be accepted by Sauer, but for reasons of his own he did not accept.

About the six subscription concerts of the Berlin Tonkuenstler Orchestra, to be given at the New Royal Opera House (Kroll's) next season, and to be conducted by Richard Strauss, I learn that the principal purpose of the new undertaking is to perform almost exclusively novelties, and of course in the best possible reproduction. Works of importance of various living composers who have been but sparingly dealt with in the concerts conducted by Nikisch and Weingartner will find a prominent place upon Richard Strauss' programs. The soloists to be engaged for these concerts will also have to make modern, if possible, hitherto unknown selections. Furthermore, Strauss wants to perform all of Liszt's symphonic poems in chronological order.

Paul Buloz's contract with the Berlin Royal Opera having expired, and not having been renewed, this great baritone intends to make a tournée in the United States during the coming season. Julius Lieban, our unexcelled Mime and David, will do likewise in 1903, when his contract here will have run out.

Miss Martha Hofacker, the handsome and stylish looking young dramatic soprano from New York, a former pupil of Mme. Anna Lankow, informs me from Weimar that she has secured a first-class engagement on a three years' contract and for first parts at the Strassburg Opera House. Miss Hofacker is now busy studying five new roles, one of which is Eva in "Die Meistersinger."

Miss Marie M. Heimlicher, who fifteen years ago used to delight New Yorkers by her excellent chamber music performances, she being at that time the pianist of the Heimlicher-Liebe Trio organization, but who has since and for many years been a resident of London, sends me from there the announcement of her marriage to the violinist Dezsoe Acmès. Congratulations are in order.

Yielding to the earnest demands of quite a number of piano students, Leopold Godowsky has decided to devote a part of his time to teaching. [See later news in another column.—Ed. M. C.]

Otis B. Boise will sail with his family for the United States on the 25th inst. He has been summering, as usual of late years, at Alt-Gaarz, on the Baltic, and feels in the best of health and spirits for assuming his duties of first composition teacher at the Baltimore Peabody Institute, which conservatory can be congratulated upon having been able to secure the services of so eminent a master.

In place of the above mentioned lately deceased Professor Vierling, and of Prof. Martin Blumner, who tendered his resignation because of ill health, Prof. Xaver Scharwenka and Philipp Ruefer have been elected senators of the Royal Academy of Arts. O. F.

ITALIAN CONCERT MATTERS.

JOSEPH SMITH, of Florence, Italy, owner of the Concert Direction in that city, and also correspondent of The Musical Courier in that city, announces the following concert affairs in Italy under his management for next season: Pablo de Sarasate and Mme. Bertha Marx, December, 1901; I. J. Paderewski, January, 1902; Eugen d'Albert, February, 1902; César Thomson, for Italy, Nice, and Greece; Ferruccio B. Busoni, for Italy and Nice, March, 1902; Mme. Teresa Carreño, Nice, March, 1902; Kaim Orchestra, Felix Weingartner director, Italy, April, 1902.

Mr. Smith is the most active and energetic musical manager in Italy south of Milan, and his list of artists is the most varied and extensive he has ever announced.

Asheville, N. C., Summer School.—Under the management principally of Adrian P. Babcock, head of the musical department of Asheville College for Women, with the co-operation of F. W. Riesberg (both the musical directors of the summer school this year), the summer school has, for the first time, paid its expenses, the previous seasons having lost money for the fifty stockholders of Asheville.

Babcock has keen business judgment, also playing piano solos and accompaniments for the five concerts the summer season, and has gained many friends during his short stay of six months in the Southern city. The school had a good attendance, and on the 19th a students' recital was given, pupils from all over the South participating. The concerts were most successful, the programs being all carefully arranged and standard as well as popular works being given; two piano works were also performed at each concert, and the "Daisy Chain" given complete.

Miss Estelle Harris won all hearts by her singing and graceful personality, and Percy Hemus, the baritone, made a hit. He gave a song recital on the 21st in the college chapel under distinguished social auspices. A useful member of the faculty was F. W. Riesberg, who played piano and organ accompaniments, organ obligato, piano solos, and taught piano, harmony and organ. The school attracted much attention from the local people, and the concerts were always well attended, there being over 300 season tickets sold.

Mrs. John A. Roebling gave a dinner in honor of Miss Harris, and the artists were the recipients of much social attention during their very pleasant six weeks' stay.

LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG AT THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

AN American born, and one of the great violin virtuosi that America has produced, is Leopold Lichtenberg, the principal of the violin department of the National Conservatory. Lichtenberg is one of those wonder children who have outlived the prodigies of their childhood, who have more than verified its golden promise. This San Francisco boy captured the heart of one of the great violinists in the annals of music, Henri Wieniawski, who, after hearing the lad, at once elected him as a prize pupil, and during the Polish artist's American tour the little Lichtenberg played at all his concerts and enraptured his audiences by the boldness and brilliancy of his performances. Three years of hard work in the Brussels Conservatoire transformed Lichtenberg into a master, and he often played before royalty and made a tournée in Belgium as a substitute for Wieniawski and with astounding success.

His subsequent career is history. He returned to the United States and appeared as solo violinist at all the principal concerts and in all the large cities. After a residence in Boston and a membership in the Boston Symphony Orchestra he accepted an invitation from Mrs. Thurber to conduct the violin classes of the National Conservatory, where he has been ever since.

As a virtuoso Lichtenberg is distinguished by impeccable intonation, a big, beautiful, liquid, sonorous tone, a rare sympathy and acumen in interpretation. His interpretative powers are not limited to any one school, for to the broad classic style of the German he unites the dash, fire and resiliency of the Belgian. He has a fascinating personality on the concert stage and in the classroom, a personality that at once enchains the attention of the public and of his many pupils.

Whitney Tew's Repertory.—Whitney Tew's repertory is remarkably varied and extensive. It embraces the leading oratorios and operas, while the songs which the gifted basso interprets range from simple ballad to rapturous love song or spirited martial refrain. Thus his song recital programs are never monotonous, and in making miscellaneous selections from oratorio, opera or other forms of compositions his resources are well nigh unlimited. Critics have frequently commented favorably upon his wonderful memory for music and words. Possessing the highest artistic ideals, Mr. Tew has continued to develop musically during the past season in London, England. Much interest is centred in his forthcoming professional visit to America under Henry Wolfsohn's direction, in November and December, 1901.

Armbruster Lecture Recitals.—Carl Armbruster, the lecturer on the life of Richard Wagner and his music dramas and the music of other prominent composers, has already been engaged for a series of ten lectures at the Lowell Institute in Lowell, Mass., five public lectures in Boston and five in New York. As well as these he will deliver lectures before all of the principal universities throughout the country and in many of the more prominent cities. Mr. Armbruster will have the vocal assistance of Miss Cramer, who is a well-known Bayreuth singer.

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS, Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

Musical Clubs.

The Schubert Glee Club, of Lynn, Mass., gave a successful concert three weeks ago at Ocean Park, Me. A number of excellent soloists assisted the club.

The Concordia Singing Society, of Broadalbin, N. Y., won the first prize in the singing contest at the Saengerfest of the Central New York Saengerbund.

An important event in Detroit musical circles this summer was the concert given a fortnight ago by the Detroit Musical Circle at the Detroit Yacht Club on Belle Isle.

Leonardsville, a suburb of Utica, N. Y., was the scene of a fine concert on Wednesday evening, August 14, given by the Music Club of Leonardsville, and artists from Utica.

Under the auspices of the St. Cecilia Club, of Midland, Mich., a concert was given early in the season, which attracted a large number of music lovers from surrounding villages.

Frederick Goodwin, of Springfield, Mass., directed the concert given by the Blandford (Mass.) Choral Union given at the Congregational Church at Blandford on August 7.

The charter members of the Excelsior Musical Club, Jersey City Heights, N. J., are all Italian-Americans of recognized talent and standing. The new club was organized last month.

Miss Idalia Levy, of Boston, sang recently "on trial" before members of the Tuesday Musicale, of Rochester, N. Y. The committee from this leading music club heard Miss Levy at the Eureka Clubhouse. The singer's numbers were "Ah, fors e lui," from "Traviata," the "Chanson Provençal" of Dell' Acqua and Leo Stern's waltz song, "Printemps," and also a group of songs by Bizet, Godard, Dvorák and Hawley.

The Milwaukee (Wis.) Musical Society gave a concert at Schlitz Park, Milwaukee, before an audience of over 2,000 people. Miss Emma Felix, soprano, and John Oestreich, tenor, were the principal soloists.

The Wednesday Club of Richmond, Va., conducted a successful musical festival in the early part of August. Miss Louise Brehaney, a soprano singer little known, captured the audiences by her style, voice and singing.

Following are the new officers chosen for the Utica (N. Y.) Cecilian Society: President, Mrs. S. E. Jones; vice-president, Miss Anna Hodinger; secretary, Miss Nellie Williams; treasurer, Mrs. John Foulkes; director, I. T. Daniel.

JUSTICE TO THE MUSICIAN.

PERHAPS no class of people outside the clergy are so generous of services as musicians. Perhaps no class is less appreciated. The musicians are expected to respond, gratis, to countless invitations from promoters of church sociables, philanthropies, clubs, benefits, civic and military societies. He is called to serve by voice and instrument at "extra meetings," funerals, in volunteer choirs. He is expected to give valuable private time to countless causes for nothing but thanks.

This is not an unhappy thing in itself if the thanks are adequate. The musician should also be a sympathizer with his fellowmen, and glad to add his mite to the enterprises that go to aid benevolent plans or cultivation of higher and nobler artistic development. But he is human and has his pained moments when he is aware that he has not been treated according to his deserts.

A musician is not simply an entertainer. Yet the nature of his work is such that it attracts many who are lovers of entertainment alone. These he meets on their own ground and ministers unto as best he can. Because he often does this without charge, do those who make demands on his services owe him nothing? Not even courtesy?

It is no uncommon thing for a musician to serve at some gathering only to experience the chill of the perfunctory thanks of one or two of the program committee or perhaps not even this scant recognition. Too rarely are those in charge cognizant of any responsibility as to the welfare of the singer or instrumental performer after their musical number has been rendeed.

Not long since an Elmira lady whose voice is in demand, consented to sing for a concert which was to be a benefit to those who had it in charge. Although the night was stormy and she lived off the street car line no provision was made for conveyance and she was obliged to hire a carriage to and from the place of assembly. Not one of the committee asked her how she made the journey, though her costume, from the character of the entertainment, was necessarily her best.

Young girls are often called upon to assist in some gathering that requires rehearsals, and an evening appearance, without any consideration of chaperonage. This entails a double draught upon the family generosity or leaves the contributor to face the night alone.

It is a curious fact that leading singers are sometimes asked to render music at a funeral, and not the slightest attention is paid to them after they agree to do so. No one would expect afflicted mourners to give thought to details, but surely someone should have matters of this sort in charge. A quartet of Elmira men not many months ago, in order to favor a family, met for rehearsal in business hours and attended a funeral in business hours. Yet, though only one could avail himself of a street car, no carriage was provided on an exceedingly snowy day, and the time lost to the quartet was doubled by the oversight. This, too, was an entirely gratuitous service, and though it seems an improbable story, not so much as one word of thanks was ever written or spoken by any member of the family.

Accompanists perhaps get as little thought as any class of performers. Their task is a most unselfish one. They make themselves cheerfully subordinate and essay to aid the triumphs of others. They spend time in rehearsals for the benefit of both singer and audience. They are rarely twice thought about by the hearers. Often they are persons toward whom committees are totally ungrateful. How they come or how they go nobody inquires. Yet without them no program of musical numbers could prosper.

Of course there are musicians who know little of these experiences, and there are committees whose members are never chargable with discourtesy. But if any doubt that there are many careless and graceless offenses of the kind mentioned let him listen to a bit of history from the diary of any singer or player who has ever tried to please the public.—Elmira (N. Y.) Key Note.

JEANNETTE DURNO RETURNS TO CHICAGO.—Jeannette Durno has returned to Chicago from a seven weeks' sojourn in Michigan. During the summer Miss Durno has prepared for her concerts this season. She will begin with a piano and song recital at the Catholic College at Dixon, Ill., on September 18.

AMY WHALEY IN NEW ORLEANS.—Miss Amy Whaley, soloist of the United States Marine Band concerts, returned to town from Atlantic City last week, and left for New Orleans, where she is singing this week at the West End.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD
Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
CONCERT ORGANIST.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

CINCINNATI, August 24, 1901.

LAST Saturday afternoon the cornerstone was laid of the new Conservatory of Music at Oak, Highland and Burnet avenues, Mt. Auburn. The grand old Shillito homestead will be completely remodeled into one of the best equipped, most modern and up to date schools of music in this country. A select number of invited friends, members of the faculty of the summer school and some of the pupils were present on this solemn occasion.

It had been the intention of the venerable directress of the conservatory, Miss Clara Baur, to have three prominent ministers in the city, all of them special friends of the school, to participate in the religious exercises. As it was two of these were unavoidably absent—Rev. Dr. Ziegler, pastor of the First English Lutheran Church, of which Miss Baur is a member, who is away on his vacation, and Rev. Dr. A. J. Nast, who is in Europe. Rev. Frank Nelson, rector of Christ Church, therefore performed the ceremony alone, with a great deal of grace and dignity, in accordance with the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

After the recitation of the Ninety-first Psalm, the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Gloria, the prayers proper to the solemnity were read.

Hereupon followed the notice of deposits made in the cornerstone, announced in a clear and ringing voice by Miss Bertha Baur.

The list of articles was as follows: The Holy Bible, opened at Ninety-first Psalm; Lutheran Missionary Journal, Living Church, Missionary Review of the World, Christliche Apologete, conservatory catalogues, 1870-1886-1896-1901-2, collection of programs by members of the faculty and students, visiting cards and photographs of Miss Bertha Baur and Miss Clara Baur, samples of catalogue letters "A, B and C," United States postage stamps and coins of this year's mintage, conservatory billheads, letterheads and other stationery, thanksgiving dinner menu cards, advertising cards, booklets containing history and press notices of Frederic Shailer Evans, Theodor Bohlmann, Georg Krüger, Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, Louis Schwebel, and copies of all the daily newspapers; autographs of Miss Mary Gallagher and Mrs. Rufus Burckhardt, of the Woman's Club.

The autographs of Miss Mary Gallagher and Mrs. Frederic Burkhardt, both great personal friends of Miss Clara Baur, were also deposited by their special request.

After the box was sealed and lowered in position Miss Clara Baur placed the first trowel of mortar upon it.

Rev. Mr. Nelson hereupon read the following poem, contributed by the blind musician and lecturer, Dr. J. S. Van Cleve, who was unable to be present:

Laying of the Cornerstone.

Each fruit of labor holds a seed of hope,
Achievement is the calyx of new love,
The expanding spirit still must onward move
Nor bound the flight save by heaven's highest cope.

The breath of God is music, violets
That publish their sweet presence with perfumes
And so, moss-hid, enchant the glimmering glooms
Shows us how music soothes the spirit's frets.

Here now we lay this fixed initial stone,
God's work through æons vast; we add the touch
Of human thought and feeling, for of much
In past and future 'tis the touchstone.

Thou, noble lady, whose prophetic vision,
Patient, created all, thou hast not missed
Life's meaning, crystal souled idealist,
For thousand hearts made glad attest thy mission.

The most solemn part now came, when the venerable foundress, and for so many years directress of the conservatory, Miss Clara Baur, attended by Miss Bertha Baur, and her nephews, George, Paul and William Baur, amid profound silence, stepped to the stone, and striking it with a mallet, slowly and distinctly pronounced the words:

"In this faith I lay the cornerstone of the Conservatory of Music, and devote the building to be erected to the praise of God and the study of music, in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

Rev. Mr. Nelson read Psalm 96, and pronounced the benediction, concluding the ceremony.

John C. Weber and his famous Military Band were finally honored during the past week, previous to their departure for the Pan-American Exposition, where they play an engagement. He was presented with two magnificent gold medals by his friends, whose number is legion in this city. The first presentation took place at the café of Weber Brothers in Vine street on the evening of August 15. The presentation speech was made by Sam Cary. The medal is a masterpiece of the jeweler's art. It is beautifully enameled, bearing the following device: "John C. Weber—Music," and on the reverse side the inscription: "King of Bandmasters, from Cincinnati Friends, August 15, 1901." The face of the medal bears the American eagle, the seal of the State and a large diamond centre, surrounded by six smaller diamonds.

Mr. Weber was completely taken by surprise and visibly affected. He attached the medal to his coat and with a tremor in his voice made a suitable reply. He said that he hoped the opportunity would arise when he could show the world that he was worthy of the honor—that Cincinnati musicians did not need medals, and that they were the peers of those whose chests were covered with medals. In concluusion he thanked the donors, after which the band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and the guests adjourned to the dining room, where a delicious banquet was served.

The donors who subscribed to the purchase of the medal are Frank F. Fowler, John J. Regan, H. E. Hudson, S. F. Cary, George Doerr, G. W. Schuler, Wash. Guhman, Joseph Rielag, Otto Luedeking, E. W. Baylis, Jacob Dorst, R. W. Gruber, Fred B. Salmar, Fred Rothkamp, H. S. Koop, Walter Doerr, J. M. Martin, Arthur Boden, Fred Bader, Simon Krug, George Behlen, Frank Krug, Charles Mayers, Dan Murphy, William A. Bettelon, Charles C. Lewis, Harry F. Smith, Dr. Frank Caldwell and sixty members of the band.

Mr. Weber had hardly recovered from his surprise when a second one came quite unexpectedly a few evenings ago. It was another gold badge of the most beautiful and costly design. The occasion was the annual outing of the John C. Weber Military Band at Coney Island. It was a great gathering, and fully 6,500 people were present. In the evening H. E. Hudson, of the S. H. Knox Company, presented the badge to Bandmaster Weber in a neat address, stating that it was a token of esteem from a number of business men who did not care to have their names published. Mr. Weber rallied for a short reply, and the band struck up his latest production, "Knox's Pan-American March."

In the work of the summer season of the Conservatory of Music a piano recital invested with special interest was given on Tuesday evening, August 13, in the Recital Hall by Miss Ella Opperman, who has just returned from Europe, where during the past year she pursued her studies under Jedliczka at the Karl Klindworth School in Berlin. Miss Opperman was formerly a pupil of Theodor Bohlmann and is a graduate of the conservatory. She was assisted by Louis Schwebel, piano; Miss Laura Strubbe, soprano; Matthias R. Oliver, violin; Miss Ottilie E. Leonard, organ; Miss Edna Strubbe, Hugo Sederberg, accompanists, in the following program:

Organ solo, Suite Gothique.....Boellmann
Violin solo, Hungarian Dances.....Nachez
Styrian Song.....Eckert
Piano soli—
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 5.....Liszt
Eroica Etude, op. 5, No. 1.....Henselt
Violin solo, Zigeunerweisen.....Sarasate
Recitative and aria.....Verdi
Concerto, E flat major, op. 32.....Weber
(Orchestral part on second piano.)

The selections of Miss Oppermann were of a brilliant order—especially the Henselt and Weber numbers—and showed her technical equipment to fine advantage. Her playing has acquired finish and maturity. Considerable character she imparted to the Hungarian Rhapsody.

Mr. Oliver's playing made a decided impression. His playing was not only technically clean, but there was a great deal of expression and soul in it. This was particularly the case with the "Zigeunerweisen," which he played with a good deal of warmth. After it Mr. Oliver was recalled twice by the applause of the audience, finally responding with an encore—a melodious and poetic composition by Tirindelli. Miss Laura Strubbe is to be congratulated upon her singing. It is one of the best and most promising soprano voices heard at the conservatory for some time. It is coloratura in quality, true to the pitch and exceedingly flexible. Miss Leonard played the Organ Suite with taste and technical ability. She has decided talent for the organ, and is a pupil of Professor Barbour.

Mr. Schwebel played the orchestral part of the Piano Concerto with scholarly insight.

An interesting pupils' recital of the Conservatory Summer School was given on Friday evening, August 16, in the Recital Hall of the conservatory, presenting the following program:

Sacred Song.....Rodney
Organ accompaniment by Miss Carrie Lee Blocker.
Miss Mattie B. Moss.
Violin soli—
Traumerei.....Schumann
Mazurka.....Obertass-Wieniawski
Miss Alice Bullard.
Songs—
Serenade.....Neidlinger
The Robin.....——
Miss Esther McNeil.
Song, My Love.....Arthur Lieber
Miss Hilda Hyman.
Organ soli—
Gavotte, Annette et Lubin.....Durand
Grand Chœur.....H. Deshayes
Miss Carrie Lee Blocker.
Song, Come to Me, My Love.....Chaminade
Miss Bessie Gray Stoner.
Song, Asleep in the Deep.....Petri
Miss Mattie B. Moss.
Piano solos—
Nocturne, E flat.....Chopin
Fantaisie Impromptu, C sharp.....Chopin
Miss Mazie Homan.
Song, Longing for Spring.....Schubert
Miss Esther McNeil.
Recitative and aria, Queen of Sheba.....Gounod
Miss Hilda Hyman.

The vocalists deserve much favorable comment. Miss Mattie B. Moss has a genuine alto voice—one of that character which belongs to the classification of "rara avis." It is of very musical quality. Miss Hilda Hyman is making a great deal of progress. Her voice is a mezzo soprano, endowed with a great deal of dramatic expression. Of this she gave good proof in the recitative and aria from "Queen of Sheba." Miss McNeill sang with much finish and interpretative faculty.

Miss Mazie Homan sustained her reputation as a prodigy, her playing of the difficult Fantaisie and Impromptu of Chopin being of such a matured and poetic character as to suggest more the finished artist than one of such tender years as she. Her velvety touch was particularly in evidence.

Matthias Oliver left on Saturday, August 24, on the Campania of the Cunard Line, for London, England. He goes accompanied by his aged mother. Mr. Oliver will continue his violin studies under Sauret at the Royal Academy. His contemplated stay will be for three years.

John Yoakley, son and sister are touring the lakes for their summer vacation.

Philip Werthner, of the Walnut Hills Music School, returned this week from his vacation. He is as brown as a berry, the result of four weeks' fishing along the Georgian Bay and in Northern Canada. Mr. Werthner tells some tall fishing stories, but "'distance lends enchantment to the view." Mr. Werthner always tells the truth.

J. A. HOMAN.

H. WHITNEY TEW'S RECITAL TOUR.—H. Whitney Tew, who is considered in England one of the best of bass singers, is coming to this country in November next for a tour under the management of Henry Wolfsohn. He is already engaged to give a song recital before the Brooklyn Institute and later with the Brooklyn Oratorio Society. He is also engaged to sing with the leading choral societies in the West. He will remain here until late in December, and will be heard in this city before leaving in a song recital and possibly in an oratorio performance.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

THE tenor Rothmuhl, the star of the opera house at Stuttgart, lately quitted that theatre and gave a farewell performance. He was fêted in an extraordinary manner, and the King sent him his photograph with his signature. But whether the tenor had consumed too much beer, or that this ovation had swelled his head, he could not refrain from insulting Madame Satter, one of the company. Witnesses declare that this heroic tenor spat in the lady's face. The lawyers are now busy at work to prosecute the expectorating artist.

A journal of Klausenburg, in Transylvania, has been accused of plagiarism by a theatre director for publishing every day the announcements of the theatre, bill of the play, cast, &c. The theatre manager held that the playbill was a literary work. The court agreed with him and fined the journal 200 crowns. How happy our managers would be to find such a plagiarist! What thousands of dollars they would save in ads, press notices, &c.!

Gailhard, the manager of the Paris Opéra, lately visited Dresden and had some extraordinary adventures. In a letter to the Gaulois he tells his countrymen how he was welcomed to the Saxon capital by the Graf von Seebach, the intendant of the Court Theatre, whom he describes as an artist to the tips of his fingers. He gave the stranger his box for a performance of "Siegfried," at which Malten sang the Brünnhilde and the celebrated capellmeister Scheidemantel conducted. During an interval Scheidemantel came and shook hands with him and gave him a valuable present, a manuscript score of "Siegfried," with Wagner's notes on the scenery and action, which Gailhard declares he will study carefully with a view of bringing it out in Paris.

This is a very pretty story, but unfortunately Graf von Seebach was not in town at the time and consequently did not welcome Gailhard. The welcome was given by Herr von Schuch. Moreover the celebrated Scheidemantel did not conduct, and did not shake hands with him; it was von Schuch again who did these things. Furthermore the notes on the manuscript score were not by Wagner, but by the aforesaid von Schuch. With these exceptions the account is all right, and very good natured and flattering.

The latest religious work reported from Italy is a biblical cantata, "Baltassar," by Giovanni Quartero, given in the Church of St. Francis di Paula in Turin.

DEATHS.—At Währing, near Vienna, May 22, Vincenz Müller, the composer and teacher, aged eighty.——At Vienna, July 8, Julie Singer, sister of Joseph Joachim, aged eighty-one.——In London, C. K. Salaman, composer and pianist, founder of the Musical Association, aged eighty-seven.——At Brussels, the Flemish composer, Joseph Mertens, aged sixty-six.

Paris next spring will enjoy a Strauss cycle, to be given by the operetta troupe of the Carl Theatre, of Vienna, which for two years has been playing in Russia under the direction of Vladimir Schultz.

A Naples paper announces that it knows somebody who posseses and will sell an "antograph and authentic score of a four act opera by Meyerbeer." The score is not only entirely instrumental, but is accompanied by colored designs of the costumes. Its authenticity will be proved by indisputable documents, among which is a letter from Meyerbeer's widow and a certificate of the composer Ponchielli. Here's a chance for an enterprising manager!

The Emperor of Austria lately sent to Mme. Concha Mendez a present on her eightieth birthday. Soon after the death of the Emperor Maximilian, the audience at a theatre in Mexico asked Concha Mendez, who was then the popular favorite, to sing a song ridiculing the late emperor and his wife. She replied: "I do not insult the dead and the unhappy."

At the late Mozart festival at Salzburg by the orchestra of the Imperial Opera of Vienna and distinguished soloists two performances of "Don Juan" took place, and three concerts with programs comprising Mozart's works exclusively. Many Americans and English were present.

A statue to Mendelssohn has just been unveiled at Dusseldorf. At the inauguration ceremonies the only music was the "Wedding March," from the "Midsummer Night's Dream." There is no accounting for tastes!

The legal troubles about Brahms' legacies are becoming more perplexed than ever. Two Hamburg societies, against whose claims a decision had been given, profess to have found some new documents which justify their claims.

Munich is not to have a zither conservatory. A petition with 2,000 signatures has been sent to the Prince-Regent asking for a zither department in the Royal Academy of Music in which teachers of the zither can be properly educated. The Regent submitted the petition to the Minister of Fine Arts, who agreed with the Academy that the zither is not sufficiently artistic.

Anton Bennewitz, since 1880 director of the Prague Conservatory, has retired. A Czech by birth, he was educated at the Prague Conservatory as a violin player under Moriz Mildner, and appeared with great success as a violin virtuoso. He himself preferred quartet playing, and as a teacher in this field did admirable work, of which a striking proof was given by the Bohemian String Quartet. For some time he was concertmeister at the Mozarteum at Salzburg, and later in Stuttgart, but from 1866 was teacher of the violin at the Prague Conservatory.

A street in the Saxon village of Zschieren is to bear the name of a singer who is still professionally engaged, namely Teresa Malten, who has been a great benefactress to the neighborhood.

A monument to the late Georg Vierling will be erected by the City Council of Frankenthal.

At the end of June two concerts were given at Hamburg by a corps of students from Helsingfors, entitled "Suomen Laulu." The performances of Finnish folksongs and other Lieder were highly successful, and especial mention is made of some compositions by Sibelius, Kajanus, Järnefelt, Faltier, Krober and Pacius. The corps consisted of forty young fresh voices, under Klemetti as leader. They sang without note. Enthusiastic applause followed every number.

The court opera of Vienna during the last season produced 56 operas 292 evenings and 14 ballets 84 evenings. Richard Wagner was represented on 70 evenings by "Lohengrin" 12 times; "Tannhäuser," 9; "Meistersinger," 8; "Dutchman," 7, and "Rheingold" "Walküre," "Siegfried," "Götterdammerung" and "Rienzi," six times each. The greatest number of performances was of Strauss' "Fledermaus," given sixteen times.

Miss Adele Margulies to Return.

MISS ADELE MARGULIES, the pianist and teacher, sailed from Europe on August 24 for this country, and is accordingly expected to arrive here this week. Miss Margulies has been away since May. Her long vacation was passed in Vienna and the Austrian Tyrol.

As we have already announced, Miss Margulies resumes her classes at the National Conservatory, which reopens on September 3, and also her private teaching at her studio in Carnegie Hall. This coming season Miss Margulies will devote some time to recitals and chamber music concerts. In the latter artists of international reputation will be associated with her. Miss Margulies is herself an artist of rare talents, who is by far too modest of her sterling attainments. Her teaching ability is unequaled, and that has been said of her in Vienna as it has here in New York.

The Beardsleys in Canada.

MRS. MILTONELLA BEARDSLEY, the Brooklyn pianist and teacher, has left her summer home near Milford, Conn., for a trip to include Canadian towns, Niagara Falls, Buffalo and the Pan-American. Mrs. Beardsley is accompanied by her gifted little daughter, Constance Beardsley, and the husband and father, Dr. William E. Beardsley. Last week the Beardsleys visited points of interest in Montreal and Quebec. After stops at Niagara Falls, Buffalo and the Fair, they will go to the Adirondacks. Mrs. Beardsley will reopen her studio in the Pouch Mansion the first week in October.

J. WARREN ANDREWS' VACATION.—J. Warren Andrews, organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Divine Paternity, Seventy-sixth street and Central Park West, is at South Essex, Mass. He and Mr. Merrill, the bass of King's Chapel, Boston, having been making music together in the local church. Mr. Andrews will teach organ at the Mollenhauer Conservatory the coming season. His choir will sing important works this winter, among them Sullivan's "Prodigal Son," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Dubois' "Last Words," Stainer's "Crucifixion," as well as Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," the new quartet, one of the best in the city, namely Miss Estelle Harris, soprano; Miss Marvin, alto; Albert P. Quesnel, tenor, and Gwilym Miles, bass, assisting.

JEAN GERARDY'S EXPECTED ARRIVAL.—Jean Gerardy, the 'cellist, is now touring Australia, New Zealand and the Honolulu Islands. In the antipodes he has met with enormous success. During the coming season Gerardy will play in a number of concerts and recitals under the management of Henry Wolfsohn, who has already arranged for him to appear with the principal orchestral societies and in a number of private concerts. Gerardy will make his reappearance during the middle of October with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Later he will make a tour with them. Gerardy is expected to arrive in this country about the middle of September, by way of California.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.

Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS.
Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16
Early application for instruction is suggested.
126 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY

ARTHUR
BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

Musical . . People.

Max Bendix, as the leader of the orchestra at the Grand Union Hotel, Saratoga, is giving some fine programs.

W. Alexander Heath, a Somerville (Mass.) singer and musician, has returned from an interesting trip abroad.

Miss Edna Dunn, soprano, assisted by other talent, gave a successful concert at the Stanley (Wis.) Opera House on August 14.

P. C. Hayden, of Keokuk, Ia., is the instructor of music at the summer Normal Institute which is being held at Fort Madison, Wis.

Hartley Turner gave an organ recital at St. Paul's P. E. Church, Lynchburg, Va., on August 8. The vocal soloist was Cary Lewis.

Theodore H. Schneider was elected several weeks ago to conduct the choruses announced to sing at the State Fair to be held at Columbus, Ohio.

Mrs. Ella M. Peirce, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has arranged a series of interesting concerts given this summer at resorts on the lakes in the Northwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Kreison, of Jackson avenue, Bradford, Pa., gave a musicale recently, which the local papers reported was the important musical event of the season.

Clinton Routh, who has played for three years in the Richmond Orchestra, Richmond, Ind., has been appointed director of music in Humphreys College, Missouri.

Miss Myrtle Oulette, of Marinette, Mich., has joined the colony of American musical students at Leipsic, Germany. The young Western girl expects to spend several years abroad.

Miss Leona Clarkson, pianist, and Miss Dorothy Whitcomb, violinist, gave a recital in Atlanta, Ga., on August 9. Both young women received their entire education in the South.

C. S. Cornell, a Vermont singer, gave a recital at Jeffersonville, Vt., on August 15, at which he was assisted by other musicians, notably W. E. Daignault, the Montreal tenor.

Miss Love Frances Hewins, a soprano with a New England reputation, gave a recital at the Town Hall, Falmouth, Mass., on Tuesday, August 13. The Svensden Trio, of Boston, appeared with her.

Henry G. Andres, connected for years with the College of Music in Cincinnati, and director of the music at the Mound Street Temple, Cincinnati, is about to leave the Ohio metropolis and come to New York.

Howard Massey Frederick, a young baritone and vocal teacher of Detroit, Mich., has received the appointment of vocal teacher in the department of music in the College of Fine Arts in Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y.

Alfred Donaldson Wickes, violinist, and Mme. Lisa Dehaze-Wickes, pianist, assisted by Harry Self, baritone, all of New York, gave a concert at the Chester House, Chestertown, N. Y., on Saturday evening, August 10.

Mrs. G. Rawson Wade, an enterprising woman of Davenport, Ia., has arranged to give a series of big concerts in Illinois and Iowa this coming season. Only artists of national reputation are being engaged for these concerts.

Luther O. Emerson, a resident of Hyde Park, Mass., and a musician of local note, celebrated recently his eighty-first birthday. Mr. Emerson has a brother, the Rev. Charles Henry Emerson, of Tacoma, Wash., who has just completed celebrating the anniversary of his eighty-third birthday.

A morning recital given at the St. Sauveur at Bar Harbor, Me., by Miss Margaret Strickland, assisted by Theodore Bjorksten, attracted many of the fashionable people spending the month of August at the exclusive Maine resort.

Mrs. Harry Minors, a popular Western singer, has returned to her home in Oshkosh, Wis., after a pleasant vacation passed at Albion, N. Y. Mrs. Minors' voice is a contralto of good quality. While at Albion she sang in the church erected by the late George Pullman as a memorial to his parents.

The Organists' and Teachers' Society, of Cincinnati, Ohio, gave their first banquet at Gries' Garden recently. President Anthony Matre acting as toastmaster. Toasts were responded to as follows: Prof. A. J. Barbour, "Our Most Reverend Archbishop and the Diocesan Commission on Church Music"; Dr. N. J. Elsenheimer, "Sacred Music"; Prof. Wm. Donnelly, "Old Reminiscences"; Prof. A. J. Boex, "The Full National Chorus"; Prof. N. L. Fischer, "The Dignity of an Organist"; Prof. N. Stederman, "Our Officers"; Prof. J. F. Wilson, "The Society's Historian"; Prof. Ed. Grimm, "Our First Banquet"; Prof. A. Matre, "Our Society Since Its Organization"; Prof. B. Wullner, "The Teachers' Mission"; Prof. B. Macke, "Fraternity"; Prof. R. Schipper, "Our Covington Friends"; Prof. Adam Propheter, "Our Future"; Prof. John A. Schehl, "The Organ"; Prof. Ed Klaphaeke, "Where We Fail"; Prof. Alfred Schehl, "Our Members"; Prof. M. Kellermann, "For the Good of the Society." The honorary membership includes Archbishop Elder and Vicar General J. C. Albrinck.

E. PRESSON MILLER.

E. PRESSON MILLER has severed his connection with the Metropolitan College of Music, and will open a private studio in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Miller has been connected with the above named institution for over ten years.

After studying with some of the best known teachers in this country, Mr. Miller came to New York, where his ability and talent were at once recognized. He was immediately offered the position of instructor of voice in the Metropolitan College, at that time one of the best institutions of its kind in America. Upon the resignation of H. W. Greene he was chosen to succeed him as director of the voice department, which under his efficient directorship has always maintained the high reputation then established. In order to be better equipped for his work, Mr. Miller went abroad and placed himself under the best masters in Europe, among them Sbriglia, Dubulle and Trabadelo in Paris and Henschel in London.

While best known as a vocal teacher Mr. Miller is a thorough musician, having studied piano with Albert Ross Parsons and Rafael Joseffy, and theory and composition with Dudley Buck. For a number of years he filled the position of organist and choirmaster of a prominent New York church.

His pupils have attracted widespread attention by their correct use of the voice, and easy and natural method of singing. A large number of them are meeting with marked success in opera, concert and in church choirs, while many are well-known teachers in prominent schools and colleges throughout the country.

Mr. Miller is busily engaged in preparing his new studio, No. 601 and 602 Carnegie Hall, and as a private teacher expects to offer special advantages to his pupils, devoting his entire efforts to their welfare. His classes begin about September 15.

DUNKL IN THE DARK.

THERE is a law in the Empire of Austria that provides that if a young man is able to make his own living and contribute to the support of his parents before he becomes of age—which is at twenty-five years—he can, by special decree, be declared of age before that time at any period after his twenty-first birthday. This law was created many years—many, many years ago, probably in the days of Rudolf of Hapsburg or one of his descendants, and while it was apparently passed for general purposes, it now appears to have been a deep laid plot aimed at a man who was to have been born in Pesth, Hungary, about thirty or forty years ago only. That is to say, judging from a recent event in which musical circles are bound to be interested, the law was enacted for the special purpose of preventing a Mr. Dunkl, of Pesth, Hungary, from continuing in the management of an interesting violinist who is about to visit America on a concert tour.

Norbert Dunkl, the Hungarian in question, some years ago secured a contract for the control of young Kubelik, the Bohemian violinist, through and by the advice of Julius Scrivan, the secretary of the young man, who continues to be a good adviser. Mr. Dunkl made considerable money for Kubelik and for himself as a side issue, and having done so, particularly in England, he kept a weather eye open for America, merely casually watching across the Atlantic for the golden opportunity when he could introduce young Kubelik to a nation that was anxious to be Paderewskiated once more before it was too late.

He threw out many hints regarding the great gain which some day would come to America through his sympathetic genius in appreciating our institutions as he does those of Britain, but no response came to him of such a nature as to ensure hearty co-operation, and he went forward quietly giving out concert contracts in Europe on the strength of the fact that he had a contract with Kubelik's guardian for the control of the minor Kubelik.

But then that Austrian law regarding the metempsychosis of minors into majors was known to certain people, among whom was a certain Rev. Hugo Görlitz, who is acquainted in America on account of his management of four Paderewski tours, and this Reverend Görlitz decided that he might as well be instrumental as not in transposing the minor into a major, and he and Scrivan set to work and in a short time had secured from the Austrian Government a decree giving to violinist Kubelik a title to majority, under which rights he at once entered upon a contract with the said Rev. Hugo Görlitz, giving the latter the management of the Kubelik concerts generally, and in England and America particularly.

Of course, Mr. Dunkl, of Pesth-Buda, or Buda-Pesth, was in the dark, and only reached the light after it was too late for America. This is really sad, for it was America which he had kept in his mind for years past, and now America belongs to Görlitz. That Austrian law should be rescinded.

WEGENER RESUMES TEACHING OCTOBER 1.—William A. Wegener, the Chicago tenor and teacher, will return to the West in time to reopen his studio by October 1. Mr. Wegener is now at Asbury Park. He will have a number of new pupils and reports promise of a successful season.

VITTORIO CARPI.—Sig. Vittorio Carpi, famous as a baritone, and who for several years was located in Chicago as vocal teacher, arrived here last week from Europe. Sig. Carpi during the past five years has been living in Milan. He will make New York his future home.

E. PRESSON
MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday.
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S.
JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

SOUSA'S BAND.

This Famous Organization About to Invade Great Britain.

THE cover of this week's MUSICAL COURIER presents an excellent picture of John Philip Sousa, the "March King," arrayed in his suit of white. Everyone who has seen him thus habited will recognize him at a glance.

Sousa and his band will close their engagement at Manhattan Beach next Monday, and at once will start for Pittsburg to fill an engagement at the Exposition, arriving in time to open the new Music Hall. After a stay of two weeks in the "Smoky City," Sousa's Band will proceed to Indianapolis for the purpose of playing at the Indiana State Fair, which will be in progress in that city. At the conclusion of that engagement the "March King" and his men will return to New York and will give a farewell concert in the Metropolitan Opera House Sunday night, September 22.

Sousa and his band of fifty-five men will sail from New York for Liverpool, Wednesday, September 25, on the St. Paul.

The band will open in London Friday night, October 4, in the Royal Albert Hall, and will give another concert there the following night.

Sousa and his men will then go to Glasgow for a four weeks' engagement at the International Exposition in that city. The band will fill the concluding engagement there, being regarded as the greatest musical attraction of the fair. At the exposition have appeared some of the most famous bands of Europe. All the British bands have filled short engagements there, and such other organizations as the Berlin Philharmonic and the Belgian Garde Band. Sousa's Band was honored by being given a much longer and better engagement than any other band.

November 3 Sousa and his band will start on their provincial tour through Great Britain. This tour will keep them continuously busy until a short time before Christmas, when they will return to London to fill a return engagement. Then they will sail for home, arriving at New York a day or two before the holidays.

The tour through England, Scotland and Ireland will be one of the most important tours that Sousa's Band has ever undertaken. The following cities will be visited: Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Brideford, Leeds, Worcester, Plymouth, Oxford, Cambridge, Nottingham, Sheffield, Portsmouth, Bath, Preston, Chester, Clifton, South Lea, Coventry, Lester, Belfast, Dublin, Londonderry and many other towns.

This tour will be under the management of a syndicate organized expressly for the purpose of exploiting Sousa and his band in Great Britain. Philip Yorke, the manager of the Palace Theatre, is at the head of this syndicate, and will personally engineer the tournée. Mr. Yorke commissioned a representative to come to New York to hear the band play and to open negotiations with Mr. Sousa for a visit to England. The syndicate is backed by an abundance of money, and it guarantees Mr. Sousa a certain sum of money for every concert. Mr. Sousa assumes no risk whatever. Frank Christianer went to London to look after the preliminary arrangements. He returned to New York last Saturday. He is brimful of enthusiasm about the British engagement, which he predicts will be brilliantly successful. George Frederick Hinton, of the executive staff of Sousa's Band, leaves New York to-day for London, where he will remain until the arrival of the band, and will go with it on the tour.

Mr. Sousa long has had a desire to show the music lovers of Great Britain what his band can do, so he anticipates with much pleasure the forthcoming tour. With the band will go the soloists who have done so much to enhance that organization's high reputation. Besides Clark, Bent and Pryor, Miss Dorothy Hoyle, the violinist, will accompany the band. An American prima donna will join the organization in London for the tour.

Mr. Sousa, while an exceedingly busy man, is never too busy to receive a newspaper representative, and he always talks freely and entertainingly. Mr. Sousa was asked to say something touching the nationality of music and he responded:

"No successful attempt has yet been made to place a melody within its geographical limits. Music is a universal language, yet it is exceedingly difficult to ascertain its genesis and the origin of any of its forms. Who knows where the waltz was born? It may have originated in Germany. When we hear a composition by Wagner we instinctively decide that it must be Teutonic, and Verdi always suggests the Italian. It may be possible to depict nationality by national instruments. When we listen to the sound of a bagpipe our mind at once turns to Scotland. When we hear a guitar thumbed or a mandolin picked we think of Spain and Mexico. A banjo reminds us of the negroes of the South. A song of the palm trees or the cotton fields suggests Dixieland, while one of the sleighbells or snowclad hills makes us think of the North.

"The most trustworthy method of locating a melody is to examine its harmonic structure; but even that is at times vague and uncertain. From the melody itself nobody can positively determine its birthplace.

"The attempt made by the great Bohemian composer Dvorák to write an American symphony exemplifies the difficulties I refer to. His famous composition, 'The New World,' purports to illustrate native American music. In the last movement of that most erudite composition occurs a theme more than suggestive of 'Yankee Doodle.' 'Yankee Doodle' is no more of the New World than Dvorák is himself. 'Yankee Doodle' is old English, but the composer knowing it was a popular tune here did not bother about its origin any more than Southerners do about 'Maryland, My Maryland,' which is German.

"Music which touches the hearts of a people and becomes in a way typical of these people is always the product of emotions and longings common to the masses. The foundation of all so-called national music is the folksong.

"Whenever a true composer ceases his apprenticeship as an imitator and becomes a creator he is lost to whatever school he may have been assigned during his imitative period, and his music only becomes national when he, in turn, is imitated by his disciples. If there were absolutely national schools of music then there would be no Wagnerian style or Weberian style, nor would Schubert or Schumann have been individuals standing alone, nor a composer like Mozart, who imitated in his earlier works the Italians, and in his developed genius simply wrote himself. We hear so often that what Chopin wrote was purely Polish, and that his compositions embodied a remembrance of his youth and the thought of the unfortunate situation of his unhappy fatherland, but an authority just as high speaks of his compositions as 'a faithful poetic revelation of his enigmatic imagination,' and we know that the character of the Poles is as the rest of the human family."

Mr. Sousa was asked how he was pleased with the success of his latest march, and he replied:

"I believe that 'The Invincible Eagle' is destined to prove the most popular march I ever wrote. Its record thus far eclipses any of its predecessors. I am told by Mr. Adams, of the John Church Company, that its sale has been unprecedented. Of course, 'The Invincible Eagle' will figure on our programs everywhere.

"Soon after our return from Europe we shall start on our regular tour through the South and Southwest. In May we shall again cross the Atlantic, going to Germany, France, Belgium and Holland to fill return engagements in those countries."

ANNA OTTEN'S ENGAGEMENTS.—Miss Anna Otten, the violinist, is spending her vacation in Montreal, Canada, Buffalo and the Pan-American. Later she will go to Williamsport, Pa. During the month of October Miss Otten will play at four concerts in New England towns, and other engagements have been booked for her by her manager, Henry Wolfsohn.

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA
Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.
Re-engaged for New England Festivals.
(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).
Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.
Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.
Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., August 22, 1901.

WM. SCHWARTZ, of Philadelphia, gave an enjoyable recital at the Temple of Music August 9. Mr. Schwartz is still young, but he has composed several good pieces, one an anthem, "Great King of Glory, Come," a Fantaisie in B flat, "Slumber Song" and several marches. His playing at the Temple was much appreciated.

Miss Edith Ely assisted Mr. Schwartz. This is the second time Miss Ely has been prevailed upon to sing within one month. Her selections were "Oh, Divine Redeemer" and "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice." She gave two encores.

Wenham Smith, Newark, N. J., played August 11. His program consisted mostly of American composers, with the exception of "Grand Fantaisie," "Tannhäuser." Several transcriptions by himself, "Shadow Song" (Dinorah) and "Liebestraum," Liszt, seemed to please the audience best.

The soloist for Wenham Smith's concert was Mrs. G. B. Rathfon, of this city. She sang "Oh, Divine Redeemer" and "Elsa's Dream," "Lohengrin," with dramatic effect, giving as encores "The Rosary" and "The Last Rose of Summer." Among the American women, who have won merited applause for concert work she stands pre-eminent. She came from Washington, where her musical career was begun under the instruction of Lucien Odend'hal, of Baltimore, Md., and Dr. Anton Gloetzner, D. C. She has held several important positions in church choirs in Washington, those of the Jewish Synagogue and St. Mary's Catholic Church. From the Washington Express I copy: "Miss Mae Whitesell (now Mrs. Rathfon) charmed the audience with her sweet, mellow soprano voice, reaching high notes with remarkable ease. She was the star at the Arion concert; her selections were all encored." Mrs. Rathfon will open a studio for voice culture in Buffalo this fall.

Three concerts by Sumner Salter, of Ithaca's Conservatory of Music, were given August 12-14. They were scholarly productions of the higher class of organ music.

At one of Mr. Salter's concerts he was assisted by Mrs. Cora Geunug Chamot. She was born in Ithaca, began singing six years ago in the Ithaca Conservatory of Music, studied one year in Paris with Marchesi and other teachers. She sings in Ithaca in the Congregational Church and is soloist of the Sage Chapel. She gives song recitals often, but does no teaching work by preference. She has a range of two and a half octaves from A to high D. Mrs. Chamot has a fine stage presence, her enunciation is perfect, her tones possess a quality of warmth and vigor which is most refreshing to her listeners. She received her ovation with a degree of modesty that was nice, seemingly astonished that she had made such a great impression. The selections were: "Hear Ye, Israel," "Elijah," Mendelssohn, and Cavatina, "Plus grand dans son Obscurité" ("Queen of Sheba"), Gounod. For encores she sang "A May Morning," Denza, and "Good-Bye," Tosti.

MRS. G. B. RATHFON.

Of all the organists in the Far West none have a more extended and enviable reputation than Mrs. P. V. M. Raymond, who comes from Lincoln, Neb. She played at the Temple of Music August 17. She is a former pupil of Frederick Archer and now organist of the First Congregational Church, Lincoln. She is also a fine chorus conductor, and choral instructor in the University of Nebraska. She is a lady of pleasing personality, thoroughly in love with her art and ambitious to a degree. The audience recognized her talent from the start when she rendered Sonata in F minor, Mendelssohn, a lovely composition most tastefully played and registered, and throughout the whole concert she held her audience spellbound. Her seletcions were from Bach, Haydn, Guilmant, Tours, Lemmens, Buck, ending with the "Grand Offertoire," by Jules Gricon.

MRS. CORA G. CHAMOT.

Mrs. Frederic W. Taylor is the wife of one of the directors of the Pan-American Exposition. She was assistant soloist at Mrs. Raymond's concert. She is not a professional, but one of Buffalo's four hundred. She consented to sing as a compliment to Buffalo, for she can only be induced to sing for charity or private entertainments. She is a woman of fine stage presence, commanding figure and sings with an intensity of feeling, which carries her soul into her art. Her voice is mezzo soprano, remarkable for its flexibility and it is always true. She sang "As Pants the Hart," Allitsen; "Morning Hymn," Henschel; "In Autumn," Franz. As an encore she sang "Annie Laurie," winning a double encore. In 1899 she studied with Trabadello in Paris; previous to that for some years with Burrett. She was for some years soloist in Chicago in the Sinai Temple.

The concerts given by Mr. Lund's Pan-American Orchestra are drawing large audiences. He is a splendid conductor and Buffalonians are justly proud of the acqui

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE,
CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to 121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York

sition of the talent that conducted the symphony concerts here so many years. Mr. Schmidt, of Seidl's Orchestra fame, is concertmeister. Later on pictures and description of concerts will be published.

Annotations of the concerts given by R. H. Clark, of Meriden, Conn., will follow in a later number.

W. S. Sterling, Cincinnati's famous organist, was booked to appear at the Temple August 18 for three concerts. He was taken ill on his arrival here, and William Gomph supplied his place at an hour's notice for all the three concerts. He was ably assisted by Ben Franklin, of Albany, whose fine tenor solos were much admired.

Miss Emma L. Maynard, of Gary, S. Dak., the blind organist, whose musical reputation had preceded her, gave two concerts August 21 and 22. She was ably assisted by Miss E. Genevra Richards, soprano soloist, of Chicago. Description of the concerts and pictures will follow next week.

MRS. KATHERINE RIESBERG.

Scottish Recitals by Amy Murray.

WE append additional press reports of the Scottish recitals given this summer in the Maritime Provinces by Miss Amy Murray:

Miss Amy Murray passed through St. John yesterday on her way from Nova Scotia to Houlton, Me., where she will rest for a couple of months before starting out on another concert tour. Miss Murray speaks in glowing terms of the generous hospitality extended to her in all parts of Nova Scotia, and particularly in Cape Breton, where her knowledge of Gaelic, which she speaks fluently, endeared her as nothing else could to the Scotch heart. At Halifax Miss Murray was the guest of Lieutenant-Governor Jones, and the last few days of her trip will be spent in Paradise, at the summer home of Mrs. James, a Bermuda lady. Miss Murray has received several requests to sing in St. John, and will probably visit this city on her next tour, which begins in October.—The Daily Sun, St. John, New Brunswick, August 3, 1901.

Never has Paradise been honored by such an artist as on Friday evening last, when Miss Amy Murray gave her "Evening of Scottish Song" at Ellenhurst That this great singer, who has delighted audiences of thousands in the largest Canadian and American cities, as well as in Scotland itself, should devote an evening to the entertainment of folk in this wee village was due to the invitation of a friend to rest for a few days in Paradise after her tour through the provinces.

Miss Murray's voice alone, strong and of rare sweetness, would be delightful to hear, but added to this are sympathy and dramatic power, a charming personality and an expressive face, so that with her innate Scottish spirit and her acquired knowledge of the people their character, dialects and manner of living—she is able to interpret Scottish songs as no other could.

Never shall we forget the vigor of "Lochinvar," the dreamy flow of "Sweet Afton," the sarcasm of "Johnny Cope," the warm passion of "Charlie Is My Darling," the irresistible mirth of "The Wooin' O't," or the quaintness of "Caller Herrin'," as in the costume of a fishwife she sang the praises of the "bonnie fish and halesome farin'."

Only a true Scot could fully appreciate the Highland songs and laments, those classics of Scottish music, full of weird melody, wondrous pathos and a spirit purely national, sung as by the bards of o'd to the clarsach.

Her Scottish stories were well told, while the interesting explanations added greatly to the intelligent enjoyment of the songs, and we heartily joined in the spontaneous outburst "For she is a jolly good fellow," thanking Miss Murray for the rare pleasure she has given us, and wishing her "gude luck" in further journeyings.—The Weekly Monitor, Bridgetown, Annapolis County, Nova Scotia, Wednesday, July 24, 1901.

Also the following announcement from Maine:

Miss Amy Murray, of New York, who is passing a few weeks in this town at Mrs. F. A. Nevers', but is at present at Innis' Drew's Lake camp, will soon treat the public to "An Evening of Scottish Songs." Miss Murray possesses a voice of great power and magnetism, and tells a story as well as she sings a song. She was born in the United States of Scotch parents, but studied Scottish song in the land of its origin. The press of this country and Canada are loud in their praise of her "Evening of Scottish Songs."—Aroostook Pioneer, Houlton, Me., August 13, 1901.

THAT MUSIC CYCLOPAEDIA.

Latest from Vienna.

VIENNA, Austria, August 16, 1901.

NO doubt you have already referred to the telegraphic information sent from here a week ago on the new or original General Musical Encyclopædia to be issued in this city under semi-official Government auspices, the prospectus issued by the Press-Bureau here giving a fairly well written sketch of the publishing proposition, and the fact may be added that nearly all the important Austro-Hungarian music publishers are, in some form, to participate in the huge undertaking. The title of the work will be "Universal Edition," although you will at once perceive that it will not be universal, either in the ground covered or in its spirit of elaboration, the subjoined list at once indicating its strong national tone—as it should be and as, under all circumstances, it must inevitably be.

Of course, all the classics will be embraced in this collective edition, but in addition thereto the technical works will receive an attention hitherto limited to a distinct and different class of publications. Much space will be devoted to the works of Bruckner, Johann Strauss (which will please Mr. Finck), Goldmark, Dvorák, Liszt, Volkmann, Rubinstein, Grieg, Smetana, &c. And now I can add the important information that it will appear in the three languages, German, English and French. The revision of all the departments, the specialty field, the particular texts and text works will be edited and revised and re-edited by authorities in the various countries as appended, but it will surprise your readers to learn or see that our glorious musical nation, which spends several millions of dollars annally on European artists and musical institutions and publications, is left out in the cold and unsympathetic world.

It may be said that this reference is small and narrow-minded, but how could it be made if the conduct toward the most munificent musical nation were not small and narrow-minded? It seems, after all, that your editorial position is correct, and that the high salaries paid to European artists in America have created an impression here that we are not a musical nation, but merely a fungus of sensationalism that patronizes "stars" because they secure large salaries, instead of patronizing music as music.

I append a list showing how some of the work is distributed and the specialists co-operating toward the perfection of the publication:

Austria-Hungary.

VIENNA CONSERVATORY GROUP.

Anton Door.....Beethoven
Julius Epstein.....Mozart
Robert Fischhof.....Mendelssohn
Josef Hellmesberger (Estate),
Celebrated Violin Concertos and Chamber Music
Josef Hellmesberger, Jr.....Fiorillo, Meysider, Rohde
E. Ludwig.....Charles Mayer
Karl Prill.....Beethoven
Wilhelm Rauch.....Haydn, Clementi, Diabelli
Hugo Rheinhold.....Thalberg
Arnold Rosé.....Beethoven, Bach, De Beriot, Kreutzer
Stephan Stocker.....Beethoven
August Sturm.....Schubert
Willy and Louis Thern,
Haydn, Moscheles, Kuhlau, Beethoven

Ignaz Brüll.....Mozart
G. A. Glossner.....Chamber Music
H. Schencker.....Phil. Em. Bach
Rudolf Bibl.....Organ Works
Brandt-Buys.....Overture, Symphonies, Opera
J. P. Gotthard.....Classical Piano Compositions
Richard Henberger.....Opera and Oratorio
Josef Krempl.....Guitar and Mandolin
Edward Kremser. Popular Songs, Chorals, Lanner, Strauss Karl Novotny.....Etudes
Joseph Reiter.....Loewe
Anton Rückauf.....Schumann, Schubert
Edward Schütt.....Schumann
Dr. Wilhelm Kienzl.....Opera
Hans Schmitt.....Clementi

BUDA-PESTH GROUP.

David Popper.....'Cello Works
Jen Hubay.....Tartini, Paganini
Hans Kösler.....Organ
Carolus Agghazy.....Mozart
Josef Erney.....Kalkbrenner, Döhler

Germany.

Heinrich Barth (Berlin).....Scarlatti
August Iffert (Dresden).....Vaccai, Bordogni
Julius Röntgen (Stuttgart).....Joh. Seb. Bach
Karl Klindworth (Berlin).....Cramer Etudes
Henri Petri (Dresden).....Bach, Spohr, Mozart
J. Stockhausen (Frankfurt).....Vocal Exercises
Dr. Fritz Volbach.....Weber
Dr. Franz Wüllner (Cologne).....Oratorio

France.

Charles De Beriot.....Hummel, Dussek
A. Duvernoy.....Field
Th. Laforge.....Mozart, Schumann
Raoul Pugno.....Chopin

This is the supposed temporary list of collaborateurs, no English or American name appearing thus far. The price of the edition is to be popular. The time limit is not announced, nor the name of the publisher. B.

ZELDENRUST.—In response to an informal invitation Eduard Zeldenrust, the celebrated Dutch pianist, paid a visit to Her Royal Highness the Princess Stephanie of Austria and her husband, Count Longay, at their summer home in Scheveningen on August 8 and played for over two hours a varied program, which included the princess' favorite numbers. Her Royal Highness was deeply moved by Zeldenrust's "exquisite emotional tenderness, wonderful sympathy, scholarly interpretation and masterly technic," and before he left, after expressing her appreciation in words, she presented the eminent artist with a cigar case ornamented with her crown and the letter "S," and cordially invited him to visit them in Austria after his return from his American tournée, which latter Manager Charlton announces will commence early in November.

NORDICA

Season 1901=1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
HAS OPENED A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St.,
NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, August 24, 1901.

THOUSANDS of people who enjoy the advantages and privileges which the Fine Arts Building, with its spacious studios, luxurious halls and manifold attractions, offers, will take pleasure in reading the ensuing official announcement which THE MUSICAL COURIER has received regarding important changes in University Hall and interesting developments at Studebaker Hall, where "King Dodo" still reigns supreme:

"Taking advantage of the inactivity of the summer season, the management is having extensive alterations made in University Hall, Fine Arts Building, by which the seating capacity of this auditorium is being enlarged from a little more than 700 to 1,080. University Hall is a companion hall to the Studebaker, of which Louis Francis Brown is also manager, and after its improvement will be available for many of the affairs such as Central Music Hall formerly cared for. While much of the time is already taken, there is yet considerable time open for the season of 1901-2. The Studebaker, with a capacity of 1,550, has also many bookings for concerts and lectures, including the Burton Holmes series and the annual concerts of the leading glee clubs and local musical organizations. A part of the time from October 5 to Christmas will be filled by leading dramatic attractions, and after Christmas the Castle Square Opera Company will begin a season of twenty weeks.

"In the University Hall improvements mentioned above there will be a marked change in the interior architecture of the hall. The stage has been enlarged to an ample area for amateur theatricals, orchestral or band concerts. The greatest change, however, is to be found in the balcony, which originally occupied but the rear end of the hall. This has been extended in both directions and along the two sides of the auditorium, where two rows of seats have been placed. These are arranged in such a manner that they may be removed and the space converted into private boxes. The seats on the main floor have also been rearranged. Both the Studebaker and University Hall possess one of the best grand organs in Chicago.

"Manager Brown is now in New York completing contracts for both the Studebaker and University Hall for the coming season. These bookings will include many of the leading American and European musical artists and organizations, and some excellent dramatic attractions for the larger auditorium."

"While everybody in Chicago and vicinity is flocking to the Studebaker to see and hear that successful comedy opera, 'King Dodo,' now in its twelfth week," says a local writer, "the question is asked a thousand times a day, 'Where did they get such a name for a comedy opera?' and 'Why do they use that funny bird in their advertising?' The story of the bird is of no little interest. The dodo is the only thing in animal life that has become extinct within the time of men now living. It inhabited the island of Mauritius when that island was discovered by the Portuguese and was named by the Dutch. The bird was what might be termed an absolute simpleton. It was a massive, clumsy, fightless and defenseless thing, about as large as a goose. It possessed a stout hooked bill, short, strong legs, short tail and wings too small for flight. Frank Pixley, in speaking of the naming of his principal character in the new and successful production, said last night: 'The dodo was one of the strangest creations in the world of birds—in fact, it was the most absurd specimen of animal life ever seen. It was notably a simpleton. To my mind came the creation of a character equally absurd and unique. But with this creation it became necessary to infuse a mind that saw nothing but the humorous, the laugh-producing side of life!'"

The 100th performance of this opera took place at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, on the evening of August 20, handsome souvenirs being given away in honor of the occasion. Many of the leading singers were presented with flowers, and Raymond Hitchcock, who plays the title role, introduced several appropriate lines, including a reference to "century runs." On Monday, September 2, there will be a special Labor Day matinee. Messrs. Pixley and Luders, composer and librettist, are to be congratulated upon the great popularity of this their latest production.

The Chicago Musical College likewise is to be congratulated upon its publication in the form of a beautiful catalogue just issued. These are among the opening paragraphs of an historical sketch which it contains, the writer being George P. Upton, of the Chicago Tribune:

"The Chicago Musical College, organized in 1867, has entered upon the thirty-fifth year of its long and successful career, under the auspices of its president and founder, Dr. Florence Ziegfeld. It first opened its doors when Chicago was a city of about 200,000 people, and it has grown with the municipal growth and strengthened with its strength. It is now the musical educational centre of a city of over a million and three-quarters of people, and in all its departments it has kept even pace with the marvelous growth of this Western metropolis. It long ago passed the tentative stage, and has now become a permanent educational institution, holding the same prominent position in music as the University, the Art Institute, the Academy of Science and the Field Columbian Museum in their respective departments of educational labor.

"Looking back over its long and brilliant career—a career which covers almost the whole space of music in Chicago—and considering its humble beginning in the ante-fire days when its home in the Crosby Opera House was the musical centre of the city, comparing its present distinguished array of teachers and professors, its generous equipment and comprehensive curriculum, embracing not alone music in the abstract but the arts allied with it, with the modest beginning of 1867, one realizes that it has kept even pace with the material growth of the city, and has satisfied every demand of musical culture. Dr. Ziegfeld, looking back over these thirty-four years of labor, has every reason to congratulate himself upon the success which he has achieved, and the great and lasting work he has done for music. His musical children are now numbered by thousands. Some of them have taken places upon the lyric stage, many have become distinguished teachers and professors, while others who have gone into active business life, or into society, have carried with them the knowledge and skill acquired under his tuition, and

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

added to their own pleasure as well as to the delight of those in their circle with the musical attainments of voice or instrument secured in the Chicago Musical College."

Frederic Grant Gleason, director of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, will return next week from Starlake, Wis., where he has been spending the summer. During his absence Mr. Gleason has made the first English translation of Lortzing's "Undine," which will be produced this season by the conservatory's School of Opera. Upon his arrival in this city he will find that the institution which he directs has made admirable progress under the capable management of Roy Arthur Hunt.

Detailed accounts of the Auditorium Conservatory's catalogue will appear in a future issue.

William A. Willett, vocal instructor at the Auditorium Conservatory, has been exceedingly busy teaching a large class of pupils throughout July and August.

Errico Sansone, of the Auditorium Conservatory, has organized a faculty chamber music society, consisting of himself, Robert Stevens, Julius Herner, Francesco Zito, William Z. Cole and John Quinn. Mr. Sansone's first pupils' recital of the season will take place on September 12.

Frederick Warren, baritone, of the above conservatory, has recently prepared three programs of compositions by Americans, prominent among whom are Foote, MacDowell, Chadwick, Nevin, Arthur Bird, Buck and Lang. During the coming season Mr. Warren will visit Texas and New Orleans professionally.

George Hamlin, the well-known tenor, will continue to devote the time that he can spare from the duties attendant upon his professional concert singing to teaching and "coaching" vocalists. He is now making arrangements for his fall work, which will begin on September 1 at his studio in Kimball Hall.

Maurice Aronson, who has returned from his vacation to resume duties at his attractive studio in the Auditorium Tower, states that the number of applications received thus far is unprecedented, necessitating the curtailing of his holiday. In his preliminary announcements he refers to his methods in a convincing manner, leaving no doubt as to his seriousness and enthusiasm, and also his endeavor to secure the best possible results. Again a number of individual pupils' recitals will be given by members of his class, among the performers being Miss Katherine Ida Johnston, Miss Jean Maguire, Miss Evie Backus, Arthur Wood and others. Two recitals and lectures by Mr Aronson likewise will be heard.

At the recent graduating exercises of the College Conservatory of Music, Wheaton, Ill., the Misses Marion Bissell and Cora Jean Bredenbeck, having completed the course in piano with Herbert J. Wrightson, showed considerable talent and ability in their performances. The former pupil played the first movement of a Schumann concerto with more than a student's grasp of its beauties, and the latter J. H. Rogers' "Scènes de Bal," with its delicate "The Bird that Sings in the Garden" and brilliant Polonaise.

Mme. Anna Weiss, of Steinway Hall, has left Chicago for a three weeks' trip in the East, the places to be visited including Buffalo, New York, and Asbury Park, N. J.

Charles R. Baker's Announcements.

Esther Feé, the beautiful and talented violinist of Paris, who comes to America under the direction of Charles R. Baker, has been engaged for her opening concert in New York by the Paur Symphony Orchestra. She will be heard under the famous director in November, at Carnegie Hall.

Miss Katherine Hoffmann, recently selected by Charles R. Baker as the regular accompanist for his artists this season, will have for her first engagement a two weeks' tour with Electa Gifford, the noted soprano, whose manager has already booked her at Elgin, Rockford, Beloit, Janesville, Menominee, Madison (return engagement), Eau Claire, Green Bay and Milwaukee during the first two weeks in October.

Mr. Baker's annual prospectus for the season is now ready and will be mailed upon application.

The Hamlin Company's Announcements.

The Hamlin Company has assumed the management of the young Danish flute virtuoso, Miss Julie Petersen, who is under the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra of England. Miss Petersen has appeared with the leading orchestras of Europe, everywhere with great success. She will not be in America until February 15, 1902, but the Hamlin Company is already negotiating for her appearance with several orchestras after that date.

Miss Augusta Cottlow, the eminent young American pianiste, is in the East, resting and preparing herself for arduous work during the coming season. Chicago has every reason to feel proud of this young artist, who has won such favorable notice both here and abroad. Following are a few of her European press notices of last season:

A pianist of most remarkable ability, Miss Augusta Cottlow, gave a decidedly successful recital last night, when her faultless technic and thorough musicianship were displayed in selections from Mendelsssohn, Brahms, Chopin and Liszt. These were all given with splendid brilliance, excellent tone and fine phrasing. The rhythmic swing of the Liszt Polonaise could not have been bettered, and it is difficult indeed to know in what respect improvements in style or execution could be suggested.—Times, London, England.

Augusta Cottlow is one of the most gifted and sympathetic of the younger generation of pianists. * * * Her rhythm and phrasing are always on strong, firm lines, and her tone singing and mellow, a true echo of her poetic, artistic nature.—Musik und Theater Welt, Berlin, Germany.

The marvelous characteristics of this young artist's playing are her clear interpretation, strong individuality, great imagination, fresh, energetic temperament and the seeking for original effects, so that the Grieg Concerto was presented in a much clearer and poetical light than we had ever heard it.—Kurjer Warszauski, Warsaw, Russia.

Arthur Dunham, organist, will return from Paris, where he has been studying with Widor, the celebrated French organist, about September 1.

Watkin-Mills.—Mr. Watkin-Mills, the English basso, will be in America next spring under the direction of W. Spencer Jones, of Brockville, Canada. He will be the principal basso at many of the important choral productions.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

THE last week of the Kaltenborn Orchestra at the St. Nicholas Garden opened Sunday night with an excellent program. Miss Ida Branth, violinist, and Mrs. Frederic Dean, contralto, were the soloists. Miss Branth played the Wieniawski Polonaise in D major brilliantly, and an extra number as an encore. Mrs. Dean's sympathetic voice was heard in songs by Robandi, Kjerulf, Grieg and Nevin. Arthur Severn played a 'cello obligato to "Confiding Star," by the former composer. Mr. Kaltenborn was the soloist on both Wagner nights, Wednesday and Thursday. Miss Sabery d'Orsell, a promising pupil of Mme. Helene Maigille, sang at the operatic concert on Friday night an aria from "Traviata" and one from "Le Perle du Bresil," Charles Kurth playing the flute obligato to the latter.

The Kaltenborn benefit last night (Tuesday) will be reviewed next week. This was the program:

Overture, 1812.....Tschaikowsky
Symphonic Poem, Les Preludes.....Liszt
Songs—
Time's Garden.....Goring Thomas
Elegie.....Massenet
Mrs. Mildred Hirschberg.
'Cello obligato, Louis Heine.
Piano solo, Hungarian Fantaisie (by special request).....Liszt
Leopold Winkler.
Ballet music, Le Cid.....Massenet
Violin solo, Fantaisie in E.....Mollenhauer
Edward Mollenhauer.
Waltz, Blue Danube.....Strauss
March, St. Nicholas.....Kaltenborn
Selection, The Trumpeter of Sackingen.....Nessler Trumpet solo, Albert Bode.
Quartets—
Andante Cantabile.....Tschaikowsky
Shepherd's Dance.....German
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Kammenoi Ostrow (Cloister Bells).....Rubinstein
Huldigung's March.....Wagner

To-night (Wednesday), to-morrow (Thursday) and Friday will be devoted to Wagner, and the programs will be a repetition of those played during the first week of August. The program for the closing night, Saturday, August 31, follows:

CLOSING CONCERT.
Saturday August 31, 1901.
(324th Concert.)

Soloists—
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard, soprano; Leopold Winkler, piano; Franz Kaltenborn, violin, and Emile Levy, accompanist.
Overture, Triumphale.....Rubinstein
String Orchestra—
Evening Song.....Thallon
Love's Dream After the Ball.....Czibulka
Sayonara.....Homer N. Bartlett
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Rhapsodie No. 2.....Liszt
Piano Concerto, in E flat.....Liszt
Leopold Winkler.
Waltzes—
Life Let Us Cherish.....Strauss
Rondo d'Amour.....Van Westerhout
Slavic March.....Tschaikowsky
Night Song.....Albert Mildenberg
Violets.....Albert Mildenberg
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Accompanied by the composer.
Violin solo, Prize Song, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Franz Kaltenborn.
Prologue, Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
Spring Song.....Van der Stucken
American Fantaisie.....Herbert

VICTOR HARRIS,
Vocal Training.
The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.
STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, August 19, 1901.

THE first night of "Otello" was played to a crowded house on Tuesday last. The Tivoli is doing a big business with this grand opera season, and "Otello," which was one of the favorites last year, proves quite as great an attraction this season. Besides this it was Montanari's first appearance, and thus it became an event, with the usual accompaniment of bravos, laurel wreaths and huge florists' bouquets.

This week "The Barber of Seville" alternates with Boito's "Mefistofele," with an unusually strong cast in the latter. Dado, who was here during Sembrich's abbreviated engagement last year, is to do the title role of Mefistofele, Agostini will do Faust and Montanari Margaret; Lia Poletini will do Martha and Cortesi Wagner. In the classical Sabbath scene Margaret becomes Helen, Martha Pantales and Wagner Nereus. Mr. Steindorff has spared no effort to make this a perfect production musically, making some additions to the already large orchestra to that end, and the management has had new scenery painted under the brush of Frederic McGreer. In "The Barber" Repetto will be Rosina, Russo takes the part of Almaviva and Ferron is Figaro.

Word has reached this coast that Frank Coffin, erstwhile of 'Frisco, and lately heard from in Chicago, is going in for the heavy professional. He is the new tenor in "The Explorers," and is said to have made a hit in his first appearance in "My Lady Champagne." He certainly has the voice, and 'Frisco will always be glad to hear of his success.

Byron Mauzy, who has spent a great deal of pains in refitting and decorating Mauzy Hall, expects soon to be in readiness for the different concerts and recitals to be performed in the hall this season, and will soon be ready for his first announcement.

Sir Henry Heyman, the violinist, who had a serious spell of illness in June, has been spending his convalescence in the mountains, and later on at Santa Barbara, from which place he writes of a splendid time and rapid return to health. He returns to town and will open his studio August 19.

Some of our old friends are in town again, Madame Rosewald to stay and Marie Withrow for quite a little season, after being in London. Miss Millicent Levenberg has returned from a season of study in New York and Cecile von Sieberlich has reopened her studio on Polk street. James Hamilton Howe returns to town Monday week to resume his work here.

Frances Graham, who made a decided hit during an engagement at the Tivoli with her rich contralto, is spending her vacation with her family in Napa. She is said to be one of the finest operatic contraltos in the United States.

H. J. Stewart is said to have a worthy successor at Trinity in Frank Eaton, who hails from the East and comes highly recommended. He is reported to be a pupil of Guilmant, which is in itself sufficient recommendation.

Professor Dohrman substitutes for Franklin Palmer during his absence from St. Dominic's.

According to latest advices from Hugo Mansfeldt, now in Paris, he expects to return to San Francisco early in November. It is not yet decided whether Mrs. Mansfeldt will return with him or spend the winter there.

Leonora Jackson, the violinist, has with her for this season's tour Harry Fellows, the tenor. Mr. Fellows was out here some years ago concertizing with the Genevra Johnstone-Bishop Company and made a favorable impression. Should they come this way Mr. Fellows will be warmly received.

The Ensemble Club is the name of a new concert organization composed of the following talent: Miss Lily Roeder, soprano; Grace Morci Dickman, contralto; Walter B. Anthony, tenor; Homer Henley, bass; Ethel Kathryn Holladay, violinist, and James Hamilton Howe, organist, pianist and director. The purpose of the club is to give high class concert programs, not alone in this city but throughout the State. The concerts will be under Mr. Howe's management.

It is said that at the presentation of the oratorio "Elijah" at Pacific Grove recently there was an audience of 2,000 people, and hundreds were turned away from the doors, unable to gain admission. The performance was well spoken of, and had for soloists Mrs. McCauley, Miss McMillan, Mr. Anthony and Mr. Henley. Lehmann's "Persian Garden" was also successfully given with the following soloists: Miss Doane, Miss Smith, Mr. Lawrence and Walter Kneiss.

The San Francisco College of Music opens for the fall and winter season Monday, August 26. J. H. Howe is the director.

The California Conservatory, Otto Bendix director, opens formally September 1.

The San Francisco Conservatory, Bonelli director, is open and will give a recital early in September.

The Beringer Conservatory is also open for the fall and winter term. Studios are gradually taking up the customary routine, and ere long everything will be in smooth running order. Several of our former musicians have returned and will open studios here. The prospect bespeaks a lively winter season.

Roscoe Warren Lucy, the pianist, opened his studio in the Hotel Beresford Wednesday, July 24. He reports engagements ahead that will make a busy season of it for him. Something interesting in this connection next week.

Mr. Pasmore announces several concerts to be given this season in which a feature will be the appearance of his three talented little daughters, Mary, Susan and Dorothy, who play respectively the piano, violin and 'cello, and play them not alone well but like the small artists they are. One concert is booked for Sacramento. Mr. Pasmore is devoting some of his morning hours to writing, and it may be that the public will receive the benefit of his work in some of these recitals.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
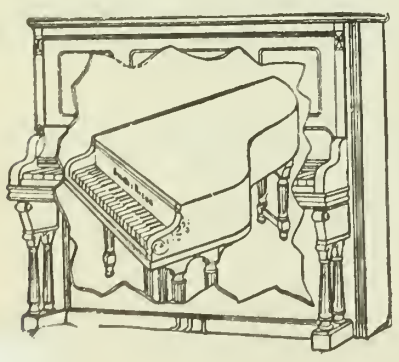
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON.
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

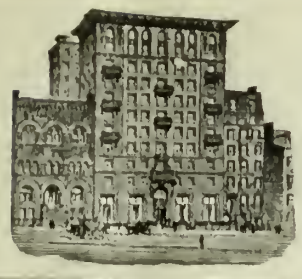
At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

Boston Music Notes.



HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, August 24, 1901.

Mme. Gertrude Franklin-Salisbury, who has been spending the summer at Lake Sunapee, N. H., returned to town last week, having had a most enjoyable summer. During her stay at Sunapee Madame Franklin sang at a number of private houses, and also at a concert given at the Ben Mere Inn, of which the Transcript has the following to say:

A most delightful concert was given at the Ben Mere Inn, Lake Sunapee, N. H., by Mrs. Gertrude Franklin Salisbury and Mrs. W. H. Prior, with Mrs. Irving Putnam at the piano. Both artists were in splendid voice; it was said, indeed, by those who have heard them sing before, that they never did better work. The large audience of guests at the Inn was tremendously enthusiastic, and demanded a repetition of the concert.

The program was as follows: Three ducts, Carracciolo, Mrs. Salisbury and Mrs. Prior, "L'Esclave," solo; "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix," Saint-Säens; "Rosary," Nevin; "Hasheen," Needham, Mrs. Prior; "Spring," Henschel; "Irish Love Song," M. R. Lang; "Si mes vers," R. Hahn; "Berceuse," Godard; "Good By," Foster; "Last Rose of Summer," Mrs. Salisbury.

Madame Franklin will resume teaching on September 20, although a number of pupils will begin lessons on September 3, her time being nearly all engaged for the season, from 9 to 5. When Madame Franklin left town she left a large class of pupils in the charge of an assistant to teach during July and August, the class consisting of teachers from the South and West who came to Boston to study during their vacations.

Two of Madame Franklin's pupils sang in "The Persian Garden" at Nahant on August 20, and Mrs. Hunt has been singing most successfully at Narragansett Pier during July at recitals. Miss Idalia Levy has also been singing at concerts during the summer.

A number of Madame Franklin's pupils are teaching in conservatories and seminaries in the South and West, and Madame Franklin has more demands than she can fill for girls willing to leave home to teach.

During the coming season Madame Franklin will give several recitals at which her pupils will be heard.

Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles, who sang at The Weirs Music Festival recently, was highly lauded by the critics for her work, the Laconia (N. H.) News and Critic saying:

"Mrs. Ruggles is a cultured, intelligent singer. She is a graduate from Wellesley and a most successful teacher. Her interpretations of 'The Messiah' roles were those of an artist."

The preliminary announcement of the Worcester County Musical Association has just been issued, showing the general scheme of the work to be done. The Festival takes place September 23 to 27, the conductor will be George W. Chadwick, and Franz Kneisel and Wallace Goodrich will be, respectively, assistant conductor and organist. Among the orchestral works will be:

Vorspiel to Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in F major.....Brahms
(First time in Worcester.)
Overture (Phèdre).....Massenet
Prelude to The Deluge.....Saint-Saëns
(First time in Worcester.)
Aladdin Suite.....Kelley
(First time in Worcester.)
Overture, Scherzo and Finale, op. 52.....Schumann
(First time in Worcester.)
Coriolanus Suite.....Mackenzie
(First time in America.)
Symphony in D major, No. 2.....Beethoven
Overture, Merry Wives of Windsor.....Nicolai
(First time in Worcester.)
Variations for strings (from Kaiser Quartet).....Haydn
(First time in Worcester.)
Suite (Jeux d'Enfants), op. 22.....Bizet
(First time in Worcester.)
Suite .....Widor
(First time in Worcester.)

The principal choral works to be performed are:

"Manzoni Requiem" (Verdi). Soprano, Mme. Emma Eames; contralto, Mrs. Clara Poole King; tenor, Ellison Van Hoose; bass, Carl E. Dufft.

"The Beatitudes" (César Franck). Soprano, Mrs. Shannah Cumming; mezzo-soprano, Mrs. Clara Poole King; contralto, Miss A. J. Griggs; tenor, Evan Williams; tenor, E. C. Towne; voice of Christ, bass, Stephen Townsend; Satan, bass, David Bispham.

"Judith." Lyric drama, by G. W. Chadwick.—Judith, mezzo-soprano, Miss G. M. Stein; Achior, tenor, E. C. Towne; Sentinel, tenor, E. C. Towne; Holofernes, baritone, David Bispham; Osias, bass, Carl E. Dufft.

Mozart—Motet, "Glory, Honor, Praise and Power." A quartet to be selected from the artists. Richard Burmeister has been engaged as piano soloist.

Miss Aagot Lunde has been much in demand for her professional services this summer. While making Cohasset her summer headquarters she has had to go back and forth often to sing in public and private recitals. The coming season promises to be a busy one for this young contralto, as she has made many concert engagements already.

The event of last week at the South Shore was the song recital given by Miss Lunde and her sister, Mrs. Sigrid Lunde Souther, with Mrs. J. L. Tippett at the piano. Among those who were present were Mrs. T. B. Williams, of Commonwealth avenue, and Mrs. A. L. Lincoln, who arranged this artistic affair; the Misses Williams, the Misses Lincoln, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bolles, B. C. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bigelow, the Rev. and Mrs. Milo Gates, Mrs. Harry Gay, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Burrage, Miss Barlow, Mr. and Mrs. William Parker, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Moore, Albert L. Lincoln, Jr., E. H. Lincoln, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Knowles, Mrs. Morton Crehore.

VIRGIL RECITALS.

TWO impromptu recitals were given at Mrs. Virgil's school on the afternoons of August 14 and 19 for the benefit of the summer school pupils and their friends. Miss Florence Traub, Miss Bessie Benson, Miss Laura Race, C. Virgil Gordon, Master Miner Gallup and Master Hans Bergman were the players. These delightful players are well known to the public, and they fully sustained their reputation on these occasions.

Miss Traub gave:

Death Nothing Is but Cooling Night.....MacDowell
The Erl-King.....Schubert-Liszt
The Revolutionary Etude.....Chopin
Tenth Rhapsodie.....Liszt
Barcarolle .....Grodsky

Miss Benson gave:

The Melody in F.....Rubinstein
Witches' Dance.....MacDowell
Minuet .....Bizet
Gems of Scotland .....Rivé-King
G Minor Concerto.....Saint-Saëns

C. Virgil Gordon played four of the "Sea Pieces," MacDowell, and a Mazurka and the "Rigoletto Fantaisie," by Liszt.

No less artistic programs were played by the children, though they were less intricate as a matter of course. Laura Race (a pupil of Mr. Gordon's) gave a Bach Fugue, a beautiful Heller Etude and the Second Mazurka, by Godard. Master Miner Gallup played a Chopin Prelude, a Bach Fugue and a "Song Without Words," by Mendelssohn; while little Hans Bergman played a Bach Invention, part of a Beethoven Sonata, a Chopin Waltz, "To a Wild Rose," by MacDowell, and the Tarantelle in A flat, by Heller.

The remarkable thing about these players is their splendid tone, clearness, easy and accurate execution, and, above all, their intelligent phrasing and musical conception. All have gained greatly during the last year in dramatic effects and in the emotional qualities necessary to hold and thrill an audience with pleasurable excitement. Under favoring conditions a great future in piano playing lies before every one of these young people, who are justly entitled to the name of young artists even now.

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK,
HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE
THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:
EDUARD ZELDENRUST
First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.
"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.
Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
For Piano Solo.
GRIEG ALBUM. 45 pieces. Edited by L. OESTERLE. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols, in one, $2.50
JENSEN ALBUM. 25 pieces. Edited by A. SPANUTH. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, $2.50
LISZT ALBUM. 25 pieces. Edited by A. SPANUTH. 2 vols, each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, $2.50
MOSZKOWSKI ALBUM. 24 pieces. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, . . . $2.50
SEND FOR A SYSTEMATIC COURSE OF STUDIES FOR PIANOFORTE.
By ALEX. LAMBERT.
In 3 vols., each, $1.00.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS
Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
Office: Astor Court Building, New York.
Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.
Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, Inclusive, MANHATTAN BEACH,
NEW YORK CITY.
Wednesday, Sept. 4, to Saturday, Sept. 21, Inclusive,
WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA EXPOSITION,
PITTSBURG, PA.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.)
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1118.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . . .	£1 5s.	Austria, ...	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.
For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

A SOCIETY reporter, in his letter from Newport to one of the New York dailies, waxes enthusiastic over the appearance of a prominent young man in society in the role of musical conductor. Here is the reporter's criticism:

At a classical concert given the other evening at one of the cottages he assumed the direction of the orchestra and wielded the baton throughout the evening with the maestria and brio of a Thomas, to the amazement and admiration of his numerous acquaintances and friends, who had been altogether ignorant of his talents in that direction.

The young man referred to was Henry Clews, Jr., son of the financier and well-known Wall Street man.

—

Musical devotion could hardly go further than in the case of H. J. Sayler, the Philadelphia violinist, who had the tips of the fingers of his left hand cut down by a surgeon because they were too spatulate to admit of correct stopping. When his wounds are healed he is going to Germany to study for three years, and if he does not succeed after that, it will be a pity.—Springfield Republican, August 18, 1901.

It is pitiful to read of such cases as referred to in the above paragraph. The fingers of the great violinists of the day vary, as do the fingers of the great pianists, and the fact that the fingers are long, short, thick, thin, hard, soft, tapering and square seems not to have interfered with individual success.

A decade ago there was a fad among certain would-be pianists which led to operations on fingers in order to achieve better results as performers; but so far as we know none of those who submitted to a surgical operation ever emerged from their obscurity. Some of us recall what happened to Robert Schumann when he attempted to bind the fourth finger of his right hand while practicing with the others. However, Schumann's experiment proved providential, for when the injury prevented him from becoming a pianist he turned composer, and to-day his name illumines the hall of the immortals.

SOME NEGLECTED SYMPHONIES.

A CLEVER man asks us to explain why orchestral conductors neglect Schubert's symphonies. Of course we do hear once in a while the "Unfinished Symphony," in B minor, and the joyous Symphony in C major; but the other seven by the great Schubert are a sealed book to our concert audiences. The man who has appealed to us declares that he has attended orchestral concerts in New York and vicinity for thirty years, and yet he does not remember ever to have heard one of the unfamiliar Schubert symphonies. Consistently enough, our friend adds that "the man who wrote the beautiful 'Unfinished Symphony' and the romantic and charming Symphony in C major would hardly be hopelessly dull and uninteresting in his seven other symphonies." This is a matter we commend to conductors in and around New York. As we look at the case, it would seem that we cannot hear all the orchestral music worth playing until we have a permanent orchestra. Even in the regular musical season we do not have orchestral concerts to satisfy the demand of the public, a limited public to be sure, that prefers the orchestra to any other form of musical interpretation. The Philharmonic, with its eight concerts and eight public rehearsals, and the Boston Symphony, with its five concerts and five matinees, is all we New Yorkers have to look forward to. With only twenty-six concerts that we can accept as first class it is hardly reasonable to expect conductors to attempt works that for some cause have been laid upon the shelf.

Raff's symphony "Lenore" is another interesting composition which our conductors have neglected in recent years. The late Anton Seidl liked this symphony, and it frequently was played, either in part or the whole, at the concerts at Brighton Beach. The march from the symphony "Lenore" used to be a favorite with conductors of summer orchestras, and invariably audiences demanded it. If we ever get a permanent orchestra and a cultivated public to support nightly concerts then will come the musical millennium of the idealists, who must now content themselves with what can be presented under conditions somewhat unsettled and chaotic.

A retrospective view of the symphonies played in New York last season by the Philharmonic and Boston Symphony orchestras includes a list worthy of serious consideration. Here it is: Boston Symphony—"New World Symphony" (Dvorák), the Fifth in C minor (Beethoven), the C minor by Brahms, Goldmark's Symphony No. 2, in E flat; Richard Strauss' symphonic fantaisie "In Italy," Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Tschaikowsky; Fantastic Symphony No. 1, in E major, Berlioz; Symphony No. 3, in C minor, Saint-Saëns; Symphony No. 9, in C major, Schubert; Symphony No. 3, in A major ("Rhenish"), Schumann.

Philharmonic—Symphony No. 1, in E major, Joseph Suk (first performance); Symphony in E flat ("Ein Heldenleben"), Richard Strauss (first performance); Pastoral Symphony, Beethoven; Symphony No. 3, in F minor, Brahms; Symphony in B minor ("Manfred"), Tschaikowsky; "New World Symphony," Dvorák; "Ein Heldenleben," repeated by request at the last concert.

OUR BROTHER, THE COMPOSER.

THE American composer is an unhappy bird. We have segregated him from his kind, we have penned him behind a national wire netting, we have labeled, placarded, classified and exhibited him, and he now reminds one of those curious, large, awkward, strange birds, all heads, all bills, no legs, with unhappy mien, that mope in menageries and utter raucous cries when poked at by small boys. The American composer, after being almost coddled to death, is now in danger of being frozen by contemptuous neglect. It is his own fault, and it is also the fault of his admirers.

Half a century ago it was an almost unprecedented thing to see on a program the name of a native. Gottschalk played his own piano pieces, and local organists played their own postludes and preludes, and occasionally a cantata was sung, and William Henry Fry wrote an opera or two, but the American composer was non-existent as far as the public was concerned.

Then came the hegira to the musical Mecca of those days, Leipsic, and happy, hopeful home comings. There was a group of ambitious young fellows, now for the most part graybeards, and they believed in Dwight's Journal of Music and wondered at Wagner. They fiddled and played the piano and organ and patterned after Schumann and felt modern, but no one took them seriously. The M. T. N. A. was the first incubator that exposed the American composer to the public gaze, although Frank Van der Stucken was a pioneer with his American concerts in Chickering Hall over a decade ago; but the M. T. N. A. fostered the timid bird after it broke the shell and gave its little peep-peep a chance to be heard. Programs devoted exclusively to American music (composed in Europe) figured throughout the land, and in Indianapolis and Delaware and Ohio and Detroit and Philadelphia was played and sung the music by Smith, Jones, Brown and Robinson. Some of it was good, much was mediocre, and a moiety damnably bad; but no matter, the good work went on until the public fled affrighted from all concerts devoted exclusively to native music makers. It was E. A. MacDowell, and afterward George W. Chadwick, who had common sense enough to see that all this was doing incalculable injury to the cause, nd that if the American composer expected to rear is head among the other birds of the great inter-national aviary he (she or it) must stand on his her or its) hind legs, and not flock into parochial corners, there to sulk disdainfully.

The M. T. N. A., in a word, has done damage o the American composer by making him conscious. While we have ever fought for America and the Americans, we have always in-sisted that to develop native talent comparisons with the world's music are imperative. Put your American composer on a program with the famous nd familiar names of music, and if this treatment s analogous to throwing a lad overboard to swim, he test will either kill or cure. If your American composer has stuff in him he will bear with hardy usage and comparisons will spur him on. If he cannot endure this method, why, then let him rust n Hogwash, Mo., or in Indian Territory, but he must not claim that he is an American musical composer.

Better still, let him study the technics of his art here, and then with his portfolio full let him go broad and make all the delicate analytical com-parative tests needful; but never should he seek to olster up a weak case by flocking together. Two r three indifferent compositions cannot be made o equal a good one; besides, one nationality in a program is usually a bore. That is the reason Grieg, Chopin, Brahms and Beethoven recitals veary.

The American composer is at present a rather nhappy bird.

AFTER all, is there such a thing as a Swedish touch on the keyboard of a piano, and can a critic recognize an Italian, a French or a German chool in handling of the instrument? These questions may be answered in the positive and negative. A man's nationality cannot, of course, be accurately revealed merely by his touch; but his chool is at once traceable, and so we reach from chools to race, and are seldom mistaken. The wo main currents of piano playing, both Italian n their origin, which diverged at the time of Mozart and Beethoven, were derived from Scarlatti nd Clementi, and the divergence has lasted to this ery day. From the Italians, Scarlatti and his chool, to Mozart was but a step. Hummel studied with Mozart and Thalberg with Hummel. Thal-erg bred the modern French school, with its ristocratic ideals of elegance, repose, finesse and npeccability of execution, while we find in Hen-elt another Hummel pupil, carrying these qualities nto the rugged and gnarled Teutonic school, and lso infusing in it his passionate, poetic lyricism.

MAIN CURRENTS.

The German school at its highest development ame from Beethoven, who built his technics on Clementi's. Its topmost achievement was en-ountered in the playing of Rubinstein, and not Von Bülow, who always had something of the edagogue, something of the petit-mâitre in him. Yet before Von Bülow Germany had such strong nen as Moscheles and Cramer, both in their vari-us fashions masters, and severely influenced by the Clementi-Beethoven and the Mozart-Hummel leals. On his Teutonic side Rubinstein was a iant interpreter of the classics, but a Slavic strain nfluenced his style, and gave it sweetness, light, ower and color.

This leads to the third great group, and in it iano playing reached its noblest stage. Tausig, ncomparable artist; Rubinstein, a Hercules; Chopin, the tenderest, most subtile, spiritual and oetic pianist who ever lived, and Liszt, the unique, Liszt, the divine, the master of all styles—the naster of masters. These men revolutionized the eyboard, silenced the pale, elegiac and neat pian-ts of the salon type and made the instrument an orchestra. Color, an almost unknown quantity, was discovered, and the piano at last took a digni-fied position among other musical instruments. It was no longer the vantage ground for lofty tum-bling and acrobatic feats, but became a voice—a voice which in many accents sang the noble melodies of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Brahms. The purely decorative ele-ment, both in performance and in composition, began to vanish, and in another generation will be viewed with the same genteel contempt we now manifest for purely rhetorical or digital exhibitions. The Slav is the greatest interpreter of piano music, and while the Gallic school still adheres to its old-fashioned methods, while the Italian has not made any advance in technics since Golinelli, while the German is as hard and as hide bound as ever, the Slav, the Magyar, are real vivifying and progressive factors.

Yes, race manifests itself at the keyboard, for race usually expresses itself in the modes of the schools, and adherence to any one school means petrifaction—artistic death. Liszt overturned all traditions—after he had mastered them—and all modern pianism comes from Liszt.

THE ethical as well as musical value of our festivals would be increased by a greater variety in the programs. There is a magnificent array of choral music to select from. Everyone knows this who knows anything of musical history. Yet, rather than take the trouble to examine and select from the mass of compositions available, most of our chorus leaders and festival directors and solo singers—always except the best among them—continue to copy the same old programs and continue to present examples of the same style and the same periods, regardless of the educational opportunities they are thus throwing away.

NOVEL CHORAL WORKS.

The difficulty of choral works by modern composers need not be argued as an objection to attempting them, for if the greater compositions by Bruch, Berlioz, Schumann, Rubinstein or Brahms are too difficult in their entirety, selections from them may be made, and beautiful selections, too, which are quite within the compass of ordinary festival voices; and minor singable works by these composers, excepting Brahms, are many and varied. It seems necessary to assert this positively.

As to the older composers, Bach, Händel and Mendelssohn, one would imagine they had written little else besides, respectively, "The Christmas Oratorio," "The Messiah" and "Elijah," and that Bach particularly—the unsurpassable Bach, magnificent in invention and intense in feeling—was a composer of but one idea. Händel and Mendelssohn are of course more fairly represented by minor examples of choral music; but even they must suffer, if capable of suffering in Elysium, at hearing the perpetual strains of "Comfort ye my people" and "Thanks be to God" wafted across the waters of the Styx.

The main line of development in choral music should be attentively considered by those who aim to keep in touch with general musical progress. A most profitable undertaking it would be for every choral society of any standing to study in chronological order selections from oratorios and secular choral works with the view to gaining some adequate ideas of the wonderful and firm contrapuntal foundation laid by Palestrina and Bach for all subsequent composers to build upon, and with the view, too, of gaining some knowledge of other underlying musical forces which have shaped the more difficult of modern choral compositions. It would be of incalculable benefit to do this, for so could be gradually created the necessary atmosphere of enthusiasm which arouses in the average singer a desire to understand the great modern works, and ultimately to interpret them. The opportunity to thus learn limitations also should not be underrated. The best choral works of today, it must be remembered, are all preludes to the magnificence of Brahms; they mark together a period of high development; but Brahms himself, as we all know, represents the stupendous climax of a series of important climaxes in musical history.

But in order to understand modern choral music it is advisable to glance for a moment at the early chorales. They were called into existence through religious feeling. There were choral symphonies in ancient Jewish temples, and choral hymns were sung to Apollo and Dionysius in the temples of Ancient Greece. The early hymns of the Christians were based on this traditional music, but they had the important element of quietude. The music of the early Christian Church, necessarily in harmony with all teachings of the Church, aimed to repress all outward signs of emotion. These strains were yet timeless. They were the expression of deep and solemn feeling. No gesticulation was allowed in singing them. Antiphonal singing was taken up by the early Christian Church and practiced in the first century, according to Pliny the younger, who, in a report to the Emperor Trajan, spoke of it as a fault among Christians that they were wont to assemble before daylight and sing alternately among themselves a hymn to Christ as God. Not until the twelfth century did ecclesiastical music become rhythmic or measured. Time in our sense of the word was employed only in dance and folksongs.

Of the secular music of this early period much less definite knowledge exists than of the early Church music. The Church took no cognizance of secular music, caring to preserve only what added to its own glory. As the learning of the darker periods of history has been mainly transmitted through the hands of the Church, through monks and monastic libraries, the reason for our lack of knowledge both of secular music and secular literature of these early periods is very apparent. It is known, however, that folksongs and dances existed, and that the separation was marked between them and religious music. Not only was the difference marked in structure, a difference that has always seemed necessary, but the ornaments and graces in the coloratura sense were most strictly eschewed. But while the separation in structure remained marked, a peculiar union took place of secular words with plain song. The association came about most naturally, by the employment of popular tunes as bases upon which to erect counterpoint, sometimes of a most florid nature. Thus arose the scandalous combination of the "Gloria" and the "Credo" sung by one part of the congregation, while the other half sang "lewd chansons of Flanders," both to the same tune. Therefore Palestrina was commissioned to purify ecclesiastical music of florid devices and sacrilegious words, and therefore music is enriched by that wonderful "Missa Papæ Macelli," which remains for all time a musical landmark, unimpeachable in the accuracy of proportion and thoroughly informed with the spirit of beauty; its contrapuntal interweavings, so free, yet so perfectly subordinated to the higher purposes of art. Paradoxical as it may sound, it was in reality to Palestrina that the beginning of the whole romantic school in music may be traced. He was the sculptor who first awakened in the marble Galatea an animating soul.

Choral music now began to make rapid strides in England, the English school of anthem service arose, the same composers devoting themselves equally to sacred and secular music; didactic oratorio was originated in Rome; cantatas preliminary to the modern form were written, and in Germany Luther adapted his inspiring hymns to popular tunes or to ancient Church melodies. Again it was through the Church that music received a powerful impetus. For these inspiring and vigorous chorals or hymns, which voiced the feelings of the people in rhythmic measure, had a most stimulating effect upon art, as is readily attested by the works of North German composers from that time onward. How these chorals—differing from English hymns in that they are not usually separable from certain words—have appeared and reappeared in modern compositions; how, for example "Ein feste Burg," Luther's hymn, has been used by Bach and Mendelssohn, and by Meyerbeer in "The Huguenots," and by Wagner in his "Kaiser March," and how, for another example, "Allei Gott in der Hoh," based upon a hymn of the Roman Church, appears with fine effect in Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"—are incidental matters of choral history which indicate an interesting field of research. The text now received more serious consideration than formerly. Errors like those in Palestrina's time no longer occurred. The text then was treated with such amusing indifference that even the great composer himself, in his "Lamentations," carefully set to music the introductory phrases "De incipit Lamentatione," and even the Hebrew initial letters.

The seed planted by Luther soon grew to a goodly plant, in the shape of the recitation of the "Divine Passion"—an early form of oratorio—and blossomed finally into the flower of Bach's most important work, the "St. Matthew Passion."

Bach's contrapuntal skill was the result mainly of his own searching study of the earlier music. He was, as all great composers must be, almost entirely self-taught. But he used the past to illuminate and extend the vista of the present. On the simplest old chorals he imposed the grandest conceptions, raising the people's thoughts to the highest point attainable at that period, and to a height which can compel us to lift our eyes in admiration. His great fertility is known theoretically, but practically unrecognized in America. Putting aside the "Christmas Oratorio" and the "St. Matthew Passion Music," how little realizing sense we seem to have of all that mass of choral music, of the cantatas written for each Sunday's service of the Lutheran Church—five series, each series including the entire year; of the numerous secular cantatas, the great Mass in D minor, so sublime in its passionate yet controlled fervor. Always throughout Bach's music runs the spirit of freedom. His mastery of form, of all complexities of counterpoint, conveys to the listener or the student the impression of wandering in a leafy forest where the intricacies of the underbrush but intensify the lofty outlines of the stately trees through which blow eternal breezes of the morning.

What infinite gain in knowledge that may help toward comprehension of modern work, what a clearing up of cobwebs that bedim the sense of beauty, result from the study of Bach! He is the great epoch maker in choral music. He marks the third climax in its development, the first being the development of choral hymns, according to the Greek scales; the second the elaboration and beautifying of counterpoint by Palestrina. Bach standing midway between the past and present reveals the value of the one and forecasts the glory of the other.

FANNIE HIRSCH.—Miss Fannie Hirsch, the dramatic soprano, will reopen her studio in "The Niagara," 71 East Eighty-seventh street, during the first week in September. Since she returned from her tour abroad Miss Hirsch has passed a delightful vacation at Lake Huntington, N. Y., and while there charmed many with her singing.

SCHERHEY AT LAKE GEORGE.—M. I. Scherhey, the vocal teacher, is spending his vacation very pleasantly at Lake George. He and Mrs. Scherhey are guests at Pearl Point, where they expect to remain until September 15. Mr. Scherhey resumes his teaching at his Park avenue studio on September 16.

SINFONIA EROICA.

My Love, my Love, it was a day in June,
A mellow, drowsy, golden afternoon;
And all the eager people thronging came
To that great hall, drawn by the magic name
Of one, a high magician, who can raise
The spirits of the past and future days,
And draw the dreams from out the secret breast,
Giving them life and shape.

I, with the rest,
Sat there athirst, atremble for the sound;
And as my aimless glances wandered round,
Far off, across the hush'd, expectant throng,
I saw your face that fac'd mine.

Clear and strong
Rush'd forth the sound, a mighty mountain stream;
Across the clust'ring heads mine eyes did seem
By subtle forces drawn, your eyes to meet
Then you, the melody, the summer heat,
Mingled in all my blood and made it wine.
Straight I forgot the world's great woe and mine;
My spirit's murky lead grew molten fire;
Despair itself was rapture.

Ever higher,
Stronger and clearer rose the mighty strain;
Then sudden fell; then all was still again,
And I sank back, quivering as one in pain.
Brief was the pause; then, 'mid a hush profound,
Slow on the waiting air swell'd forth a sound
So wondrous sweet that each man held his breath;
A measur'd mystic melody of death.
Then back you lean'd your head, and I could note
The upward outline of your perfect throat,
And ever, as the music smote the air,
Mine eyes from far held fast your body fair,
And in that wondrous moment seem'd to fade
My life's great woe, and grow an empty shade
Which had not been, nor was not.

And I knew
Not which was sound, and which, O Love, was you.

AMY LEVY.

THERE is this to be said about technique—intense absorption in its pursuit is apt to become nerve deranging. One falls to viewing the world through the medium of muscular movements. A stroke of the forearm, the staccato wrist, the fingering of double notes, resilient bowing and the use of the pedals fill one's foreground so completely that from over there, in the world the sounds of life reach you faintly, are muffled inconsequentialities. After a six hours' wrestling with the technical demon, after he has thrown you many times and is vanquished finally, you hang up your fiddle or drop the fallboard, according to the nature of your pet musical poison; you sally abroad and with nerves all tense, heart beating and brain in continuous conflagration you walk the earth lightly, proudly.

Behold, one approaches! He may be a tailor's bill disguised as a man, he may be the husband of your sweetheart, he may be your father-in-law, he may be a policeman, priest or politician; but you know him. He stops and together you chat, and there follows the perception of an enormous dissonance. You are back on earth, you are talking to rational human beings and you grow irritable. The news that you have studied a Chopin or Paganini etude is received by your man with equanimity, while the new tunnel or the health of Mr. Croker is alluded to with genuine zest. There is no use escaping the fact—music plays an inferior role in daily life, and so you go away disgusted, misunderstood.

Ah! that is the word which has proved a veritable rock of disaster to weak minded artists. Misunderstood! What a luscious word it is to roll under the tongue; how its mouth filling length coddles one's conceit. If you were not misunderstood you would be unhappier still. The moment that we are understood, two legged phantoms that we are, we feel affronted. Your pseudo-genius loves to pose as the great enigma—his very walk contains darkling hints of his profundity. As a matter of cold, hard fact, genius, like murder, will out; so if you have any stuff in you never fear that it will not be discovered. You may succeed in hiding your light under a bushel for a little while, but the world is full of syndicates that search for talent like the early street sweeper the cigar stump of midnight.

In heaven's name, then, why all this pother simply because you finger a keyboard or the neck of a fiddle, blow in wood or brass, wave a wand or force rhythmic air through your lips? The world existed before Beethoven and will outlive Wagner. There are, besides, other arts. In that adorable art of Henry Fuller's, "The Chevalier of Pensieri-Vani," you will find this striking thought:

"His leaning toward music was * * * sufficiently pronounced; but he never regarded that art virile enough to fill the major portion of his mind. Architecture, on the other hand, he considered the most masculine, vigorous and dignified of all the arts, and the architect he esteemed as the most manly and honorable and many sided of all art workers; one who presented the highest union of the practical and æsthetic, who walked with his feet upon the earth and his head among the clouds, and wielded all the forces that art might offer—the rhythm of music, the glow of painting, the rotund pomp of sculpture, the graceful certitude of geometry, the clearness and directness and force of logic."

We may be masters of a very noble art, a luxurious art, but we should remember that no matter how finely attuned are our sensibilities there are other persons footing the globe, persons who love, hate, work, struggle, battle and weep, while we but give a feeble representation of a dream picture, a sound pantomime of their motives and motions. In a word, O musician, get not the swelled head! Remember that thy wife, thy children, inferior ants crawling between moon and mound, are human like yourself, have rights; so don't sneer or tease them out of existence. My heart goes out to you, you wives of artists, musicians, vain, irritable, self-centred musicians. Your Golgotha is at home and you daily mount to Calvary carrying the heavy cross of your husbands' disappointments and artistic shortcomings. Better, far better, to be the dusky Senegambian belle in the clearing; to hear the hurtling yells of your husbands as they come home to lay at the ebon toes of their polyandrous spouse the newly hatcheted skull of the stranger!

When I watch one of Walter Pater's long prose lines go curving and careering past me like some great golden chariot I recall with a shudder this master's green and sympathetic eyes, his prognathic jaw, his curiously shaped forehead and his large musical ears. Pater was an ugly man, judged by conventional standards. He was as un-Greek as Socrates, but he had a subtle Greek brain. Beethoven, the Fleming who happened to be born in Bonn, was an ugly little Dutchman with a frontal bone of extraordinary thickness. Schopenhauer looked literally like a devil with his two angry spurs of white hair on either side of a threatening skull. Chopin was not as sweet as his music, his nose being too prominent—hence his insane hatred of the Jews—while Richard Wagner was as ugly a man as one could meet in a day's walk around and about the ghetto. Other shining examples of homeliness and brains are Michael Angelo, Franz

Schubert, Liszt, Berlioz, Schumann, Tolstoy, Dr. Johnson, Rubinstein, George Eliot, Pope, Ibsen, Kipling and Zangwill.

Here, then, is my plea: Are there no arts but the literary and musical? Must the plastic arts be forever forced to reproduce the forms and faces of ugly men and women simply because ideals of beauty have vanished?

Oh, for those dead Greek days when shapely men and comely women trod the rind of the globe unhampered by coat or stays! The tailor and dressmaker are to blame for much of the formal ugliness of this age; but shall I whisper the real, the most disturbing cause? The white and yellow races are developing their cerebral areas and the head and face suffer in consequence. When a man or woman has brains farewell to unfurrowed symmetry, to the eloquent oval, to the lofty bridged nose, the mouth bowed like Cupid's, ears tiny and forehead unwrinkled. Thought kills, eats, destroys and effaces beauty; thought feeds upon itself, and, like a worm, burrows from involute and secret places to the mask of humanity and disfigures it with sharp lines, great splotches of tense nerve and muscle, folds under the eyes, millions of criss-crossings about brow and mouth, while over the map of the features hover shadows, mezzotintings of envy and jealousy, and dull etchings of pain and care. Thought and his foster-sister Feeling do all this.

To be beautiful is to be brainless, and consider the charm of stupidity. Not to think is to economize enormously the friction of the human machine. Sixty-nine out of the seventy millions of this land do their own thinking; hence the almost universal ugliness. And this, too, despite such thought saving devices as books, newspapers, women and churches. By resolutely putting aside the tempter Thought, by firmly crying aloud Retro Me to all forms of emotion, beauty may be conserved. For centuries women have been the guardians of plastic beauty. They refused to develop the irritating stuff in their cerebrum, and therefore to them were given grace, sweetness and beauty. But the Devil of Equality got their ear and whispered in it all sorts of fine things about "characteristic expression," "interesting profile," "the future of the sex"—and they succumbed to the temptation.

How this tempts us to foreswear the pleasures of the soul and become frankly pagan, adoring our material vestment lest ugliness, cosmical ugliness, descend upon the tribe human like a plague of darkness. Books, music—ah, worst of all this nerve shattering, tearful art!—pictures are the instruments chosen by the gods first to madden us with pride and then destroy. Ignorance, profound, sublime and naïve as one of Tolstoy's peasants, is our sole salvation. Let the art of reading be suppressed, higher education be accurst and upon all illicit aural pleasure a ban proclaimed. Tall, brainless young men with broad low foreheads and supple frames, maidens with lovely vacuous eyes, fawn-like movements, and laughter silly and divine, will supplant the nervous, ugly, intellectual, striving and unhappy races of our times. Beauty and brains do not consort. To be stupid is not only to be beautiful, it is to be happy. The hideous competition—social, commercial, artistic and scientific—would cease, the golden age of agriculture return; and with the lowing of the herds on the lea, man and woman would roam and love, facing no problems but the easy getting of food, drink and shelter. Squalor, intemperance, millionaires, symphony concerts, Wagnerism and Women's Rights would be no more. Let us all be stupid, let us all be beautiful!

Stephané Mallarmé felt all this when he wrote that exquisitely sad prose poem called "The Future Phenomenon." Here it is Englished by George Moore:

"The pale sky that lies above a world ending in decrepitude will perhaps pass away with the clouds; the tattered purple of the sunset is fading in a river sleeping on the horizon submerged in sunlight and in water. The trees are tired; and, beneath their whitened leaves—whitened by the dust of time rather than by that of the roads—rises the canvas house of the Interpreter of Past Things; many a lamp awaits the twilight and lightens the faces of an unhappy crowd, conquered by the immortal malady and the sin of the centuries, of men standing by their wretched accomplices quick with the miserable fruit with which the world shall perish. In the unquiet silence of every eye supplicating yonder sun, which, beneath the water, sinks with the despair of a cry, listen to the simple patter of the showman: 'No sign regales you of the spectacle within, for there is not a painter capable of presenting any sad shadow of it. I bring alive—and preserved through the years by sovereign science—a woman of old time. Some folly, original and simple, an ecstasy of gold, I know not what! which she names her hair, falls with the grace of rich stuffs about her face, which contrasts with the bloodlike nudity of her lips. In place of the vain gown she has a body; and the eyes, though like rare stones, are not worth the look that leaps from the happy flesh; the breasts, raised as if filled with an eternal milk, are pointed to the sky, and the smooth limbs still keep the salt of the primal sea.' Remembering their poor wives, bald, morbid and full of horror, the husbands press forward; and the wives, too, impelled by melancholy curiosity, wish to see.

"When all have looked upon the noble creature, vestige of an epoch already accursed, some, indifferent, not having the power to comprehend, but others, whelmed in grief and their eyelids wet with tears of resignation, gaze at each other; while the poets of these times, feeling their dead eyes brighten, drag themselves to their lamps, their brains drunk for a moment with a vague glory, haunted with Rhythm, and forgetful that they live in an age that has outlived beauty."

We are no sooner informed by the Pall Mall Magazine of Stevenson's pathetic struggles in San Francisco journalism, where, so Howard Wilford Bell will have it, he was cruelly entreated by the desk men of the Chronicle, than the myth is exploded in the London Times, and a laudable attempt to embroider on the legend of the Amateur Immigrant's early struggles is defeated. John P. Young, the managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, writes:

"The part of Mr. Bell's article regarding which I am able to speak with positiveness is that in which he states with some circumstantiality that Robert Louis Stevenson, late in December, 1879, arrived in San Francisco, and in the spring of the following year was given a job in the city department of the San Francisco Chronicle, which he performed in such an unsatisfactory manner that the item he was assigned to write had to be given to another reporter to put into English suitable to the readers of the paper and the latitude of California; and that later 'he continued to write articles for the Sunday edition of the Chronicle, but there is no indication that he thought affectionately of them, for he never rescued them from the files.' Both these statements are absolutely false. I was managing editor of the Chronicle at the time, and personally knew every reporter, whether on the regular staff or doing merely detail work. I also read and accepted all the manuscripts published in the Chronicle during the period mentioned, and can assert with positiveness that the Chronicle was never honored by the offer of one from Mr. Stevenson. I do not trust to my memory solely on this point, but have caused the account books of the Chronicle to be carefully examined, and no trace of Mr. Stevenson's name can be found in them. * * * I wish to add something that should be conclusive on this point. The Chronicle, like most journals, tries to make the most of such facts as the connection of distinguished writers. Does anyone suppose for a moment that if Robert Louis Stevenson had been a contributor to the paper we should not have been proud to dwell on the fact?"

The day of the literary "boom" is passing, if we may trust H. G. Wells' "Anticipations" in the current Fortnightly Review.

The literary "boom" affected the entire reading public of the early nineteenth century. It was no figure of speech that "everyone" was reading Byron or puzzling about the Waverley mystery, that first and most successful use of the unknown author dodge. The booming of Dickens, too, forced him even into the reluctant hands of Omar's FitzGerald. But the factory siren voice of the modern "boomster" touches whole sections of the reading public no more than fog horns going down channel. One would as soon think of Skinner's soap for one's library as So-and-so's Hundred Thousand Copy Success. Instead of "everyone" talking of the Great New Book, quite considerable numbers are shamelessly admitting they don't read that sort of thing. One gets used to literary booms just as one gets used to motor cars, they are no longer marvelous universally significant things, but merely something that goes by with much unnecessary noise and leaves a faint offense in the air. Distinctly we segregate. And while no one dominates, while for all this brawling there are really no great authors of imperial dimensions, indeed no great successes to compare with the Waverley boom, or the boom of Macaulay's History, many men, too fine, too subtle, too aberrant, too unusually fresh for any but exceptional readers, men who would probably have failed to get a hearing at all in the past, can now subsist quite happily with the little sect they have found, or that has found them. They live safely in their islands, a little while ago they could not have lived at all, or could have lived only on the shameful bread of patronage, and yet it is most often these very men who are most covetously bitter against the vulgar preferences of the present day.

The genius of Jesus Christ was the subject of a recent international symposium. Here are a few of the more sensible remarks on the absorbing theme:

Cesare Lombroso, the criminologist and professor in the University of Turin, says:

"In my eyes Jesus is one of the greatest geniuses the world has produced; but he was, like all geniuses, somewhat unbalanced, anticipating by ten centuries the emancipation of the slave, and by twenty centuries socialism and the emancipation of woman. He did not proceed by a precise, systematic demonstration, but through short sentences and by leaps and bounds, so that without the downfall of the Temple, and without the persecutions of the Christians under Nero, his work would have been lost."

Max Nordau writes:

"Jesus is soul of our soul, as he is flesh of our flesh. Who, then, could think of excluding him from the people of Israel? St. Peter will remain the only Jew who said of the son of David, 'I know not the man.' If the Jews up to the present time have not publicly rendered homage to the sublime moral beauty of the figure of Jesus, it is because their tormentors have always persecuted, tortured, assassinated them in his name. The Jews have drawn their conclusions from the disciples as to the Master, which was a wrong, a wrong pardonable in the eternal victims of the implacable, cruel hatred of those who call themselves Christians. Every time that a Jew mounted to the sources and contemplated Christ alone, without his pretended faithful, he cried with tenderness and admiration: 'Putting aside the Messianic mission, this man is ours. He honors our race and we claim him as we claim the Gospels—flowers of Jewish literature, and only Jewish.'"

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, of the Sinai Congregation and professor of rabbinical literature in the University of Chicago, says: "Under close analysis his precepts will be found to contain nothing that was new. There is scarce an expression credited to him but has its analogon in the well-known sayings of the rabbis. He did not pretend to found a new religion. The doctrines he developed were the familiar truths of Israel's prophetic monotheism. Nor did his ethical proclamation sound a note before unknown in the household of the synagogue or in the schools. He was in method a wonderfully gifted Hagadist. His originality lies in the striking form which he undertook to give to the old vitalities of his ancestral religion. He moved the heart of the people.

"The Jews of every shade of religious belief do not regard Jesus in the light of Paul's theology. But the gospel Jesus, the Jesus who teaches so superbly the principles of Jewish ethics, is revered by all the liberal expounders of Judaism. His words are studied; the New Testament forms a part of Jewish literature. Among the great preceptors that have worded the truths of which Judaism is the historical guardian, none, in our estimation and esteem, takes precedence of the rabbi of Nazareth. To impute to us suspicious sentiments concerning him does great injustice. We know him to be among our greatest and purest."

It is the period of rehabilitation of forgotten genius. Hazlitt to-day is little more than a name, and more's the pity. An English publisher with the courage to print his complete works has been found, and this tardy act of piety is to be directed by Arnold Glover and A. R. Waller, who will retrieve from the magazines of the time many of Hazlitt's essays which have so far escaped the collector and editor. For Hazlitt himself the London Daily News has this almost extravagant praise:

"Though we can hardly rank Hazlitt with thinkers like Pascal and Leibnitz, who have influenced the whole trend of human thought since their time, we do place him on a platform which is not very thickly inhabited at present. It is, of course, as a literary critic that we value him, and in that useful department of authorship he holds a worthy place in the great succession of Dryden and Johnson. Coleridge, Lamb and Matthew Arnold—with the possible addition of that shrewd and pregnant thinker, Walter Bagehot—are the only names of the nineteenth century in our literature that we should be inclined to set beside that of Hazlitt; and when we take everything into account—the charm and individuality of his style, the originality and frequent profundity of his thought, the sanity of judgment which was mingled with a delightful talent for starting the quaintest of paradoxes—we are not at all sure that we ought not to give Hazlitt the same pre-eminence among our literary critics which is unquestionably assigned to Sainte-Beuve in France, and—though perhaps with more hesitation—to Lessing in Germany."

The main interest of the Deutsche Rundschau centres in the correspondence between Heine and Christiani which is handled by Ernst Elster, says a reviewer in the London Saturday Review. The letter with which it opens from Göttingen in May, 1824, is especially interesting. The youthful poet had returned from a visit to Berlin, where he characteristically remarks "* * * there are 150,000 inhabitants and twenty-five souls." This is how he conveys the impression made on him by the death of Byron: "While I am writing I learn that my cousin, Lord Byron, is dead at Missolungi. This great heart, too, has ceased to beat. It was great, and a heart, too, no mere bundle of feelings. Yes, this man was great. He revealed new worlds in his agony. He defied miserable men and their more miserable gods like Prometheus; and the renown of his name penetrated to the icebergs of Thule and the burning sand wastes of the East. 'Take him al in al (sic) he was a man. We shall not easily look upon his like again.'" There is quite new matter in Heine's early converse with Immermann; they reveal the younger poet's most enthusiastic side. Excessively interesting, too, are the passages relating to Goethe's personality. The commentator is of opinion that Heine ill appreciated the "great heathen's" significance and forgot that the bard who wrote "Enjoyment Vulgarizes" can be no intellectual epicurean. There is also a striking early review of Heine's first poems by Peters. The two aspects of Heine's character, the ideal and self-oblivious and the shrewd and egoistic, are well delineated. Other and less known poetical characters take the stage, including Haxthausen, the founder of a poetical guild. We await the completion of these fascinating letters with eagerness.

When next you hear from me I shall be in Bayreuth, enjoying its magnificent cookery, its remarkable hotels, its sumptuous Turkish baths, its bad beer—and possibly its bad singing.

OLE BULL'S VIOLINS.

THE announcement that the widow of Ole Bull lately gave to the Museum of Bergen a "Gaspard da Salo" (1532) violin belonging to her late husband has elicited a letter from Signor Pio Bettoni, professor at Gaspard's own town, Brescia. If, he writes, the violin is dated 1532 it cannot be by Gaspard da Salo, as he was not born till 1542. It need not be denied, however, that Ole Bull had a Gaspard violin, which to graceful form and sovereign sweetness of tone added the charm of ornaments carved by Benvenuto Cellini. But in 1876 this precious instrument was sent to a Brescian violin maker, Giuseppe Scarampella, director of the musical museum of Florence, to be restored. He restored it, however, by improving the Cellini ornaments out of existence. The story ran that Cardinal Aldobrandini had employed Cellini to add the ornaments. There were four Aldobrandinis cardinals, but none of them were cardinals when Cellini was at work.

Another story is that in 1809 Rhehazek, of Vienna, the great collector of that day, bought for a trifle from a French soldier a Gaspard violin that had been looted from the museum at Innsbruck. In 1841 the son of Rhehazek sold it to Ole Bull for £1,866 sterling ($9,330). Now, Ole Bull left one of his best violins to a friend and another to the Bergen Museum. This latter may be the instrument in question, provided that it has a date later than 1532. In fact, before that date there are no examples of the violin.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

[GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

LONDON, August 13, 1901.

FRED. R. COMEE, ESQ., of the administrative corp of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been in Europe for some weeks, takes the Thursday steamer home

Marc A. Blumenberg, of this paper, is at present in London.

"La Statue," by Reyer, is in rehearsal at the Grand Opéra, Paris.

Arthur Friedheim is announced for a piano recital in Berlin on October 3.

Nordica is at Feldberg, near Baden, in preparation for her work at Munich this month.

M. Paderewski is at his villa in Galician Poland, and has his agents on a visit for conference.

M. Gailhard, of the Paris Opéra, has purchased a residence at Biarritz, and is there at present.

William Castleman, the American tenor, left London August 16 for Algiers, where he is engaged to sing in the opera.

J. F. Runciman, correspondent of THE MUSICAL COURIER from London, is at Grez-sur-Long, Fontainebleau, with Fritz Delius, the composer.

Florenz Ziegfeld is reported to have won 200,000 francs at Ostend on August 13. The amount was exactly 191,610 francs—sure, but there is no truth to it.

Emil Paur, the New York director, will be in Berlin September 10 to 12, and will leave Hamburg on the 15th of September, on the Phœnicia, for New York.

James G. Huneker, of THE MUSICAL COURIER, is at Bayreuth, and will proceed thence to Munich to attend the opening of the new Prince Regent Opera House.

Colonne, of Paris, conducted two orchestral concerts at St. Petersburg, Russia, August 12 and 13, and was engaged for three regular orchestral concerts to take place during the month.

Kubelik will open his American season first week of December at Carnegie Hall, New York, with Emil Paur and orchestra, playing the Beethoven Concerto and the big Paganini Concerto.

Interesting news comes via Berlin about Leopold Godowsky, who is re-engaged to play with the London Philharmonic next spring. In January he plays twice at the Lamoureux concerts in Paris, and during the same month at Huddersfield, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Miss Mary Sherratt, a young lady of talent, who has been studying with Godowsky for five years, will make her début in Berlin on December 6 with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra at the Beethoven Saal, playing three concertos. On December 16 she will give a piano recital with an elaborate and unique program.

On the Continent Godowsky plays four recitals in Berlin, once with the Berlin Philharmonic under Nikisch (but not the Brahms D minor); once each in Leipsic, Dresden, Frankfort, Mainz, Mannheim and twice in Vienna and once in Königsberg. A few select pupils have been accepted by Mr. Godowsky, who has now become a permanent resident of Berlin.

Mme. Anna Weiss, of Steinway Hall, Chicago, a well-known concert pianist, was among the callers at THE MUSICAL COURIER office last week.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIÈS, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

The seventeenth scholastic year begins September 3 and ends May 1. Annual entrance examinations: Piano and Organ—Sept. 17, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and All Other Orchestral Instruments—September 18, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Singing—September 19, from 10 A. M. to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M. and 8 to 10 P. M. Children's Day—September 21, Piano and Violin—10 A. M to 12 M; 2 to 4 P. M.

WAGNER-NIETZSCHE.

[Continued.]

WAGNER'S passionate declaration that Nietzsche was the only man who understood him was evidently intended to soothe the morbidly suspicious mind of his friend. In October Nietzsche writes from Basel that he is going to Bayreuth, and that he had been asked to draw up an "Appeal to the Germans" in behalf of the Bayreuth scheme, and that he had devised a plan of signatures according to rank and profession. After his return from the meeting of the patrons at Bayreuth he reports that his "appeal" was politely but firmly declined, and that he protested against any change in it. He speaks rather sneeringly of the meeting, but seems to have been consoled by being placed at the closing banquet between Frau Wagner and Frau Von Meysenberg, the only ladies present. Then he returns to his "appeal," and says that Wagner liked it and that it will be some day of value if the present optimistic one fails.

His health continues to fail, and on July 4, 1874, he writes that he considers a visit to Bayreuth at that time would not suit, especially as they are anxious about his health, and see everything in dark colors, and in reply to Fiersdorff's urgent advice to go there he says: "We both know that Wagner's nature is very much inclined to suspicion, and I thought it as well not to arouse it. I have, also, some duties to myself, in the present broken state of my health. I will not be driven by anybody. Take all this kindly and humanely." A few months later, however, he proposes to visit Bayreuth next year (1875) and take lodgings there with his sister, in order to hear the instrumental rehearsals of the "Gotterdämmerung."

In June, 1875, however, he is taking large doses of quinine twice a day, and is forbidden by his doctor to go to Bayreuth. "You can think how sad I am. But I wish to live through next year, and therefore this year will do as I am told. Tell them in Bayreuth that I shall not be there in July. Wagner will be very much annoyed, and so am I." A few weeks later, however, he writes: "It is no use, I cannot stay away," and in another letter says that the quinine has done him good, and, thanking his friend for some news from Bayreuth, asks: "Was there not something cold in the words of Frau Wagner which you repeated to me? Perhaps I may be deceived, and perhaps I am too sensitive a thermometer." This letter is dated July 12, but on July 2 we find him taking a kur at Steinabad and abandoning his hope of going to Bayreuth; news from his friends there gives him a cruel pain. His health continued to decline. In May, 1876, Wagner wrote to cheer him up, and congratulated him on his book, "Richard Wagner in Bayreuth." "Friend, your book is ungeheuer. Where did you learn to know me so well?" Three weeks later the first performance of the "Ring des Nibelungen" took place, and while all the world admired Wagner, Nietzsche abandoned him.

How far they drifted apart by the beginning of the year 1878 may be seen by a letter dated January 4, 1878: "Yesterday I received from Wagner a copy of 'Parsifal.' Impression of first reading, more Liszt than Wagner; spirit of the counter-reformation. To one devoted to the Greek, humanly universal, it is all too limited christlich and zeitlich; mere fantastic psychology, no flesh and too much blood (especially too full of blood in the last supper); then I do not like hysterical young ladies. Much which for the inner eye is tolerable will be unendurable in representation. Fancy an actress praying and quivering in ecstasy. The interior of the Gralsburg cannot be effective on the stage, nor the wounded Swan. All these pretty inventions belong to the Epos, and, as I have said, to the inner eye. The language, too, reads like a translation from a foreign tongue. But the situations and their sequence—is not that of the very highest poetry? Is it not a last challenge to music?"

(Conclusion.)

Pears'

Only they who use it know the luxury of it.

Pears' is the purest and best toilet soap in all the world.

Adelina Patti says:

"It is matchless for the hands and the complexion."

MRS. VIRGIL'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

MRS. VIRGIL'S new plan for the summer school worked well this season.

Students accomplished more than ever before and with far less wear and tear of body and mind. The teachers also passed through hours of teaching each day without overdoing and with only a two weeks' rest will be ready for the fall season. Mrs. Virgil herself has not been better for years, and is as full of energy as ever, and has many new plans and ideas in her busy little brain for the advancement of pupils the coming year.

Over fifty students were in attendance, among them a number of directors of music in large institutions, who will introduce the Virgil method in their schools this season. Anton F. Koerner, director of the Norfolk Conservatory of Music; Joseph MacLean, of Atlanta, Ga.; Miss Agnes Kelly, of Philadelphia; Miss Marie Soule, of Portland, Ore.; Miss Nellie Van Vorhes, of Athens, Ohio; Miss Annie Ewell, of Sumter, S. C.; Miss Antoinette Ward, of La Grange, Ga.; Miss Mary E. Singleton and Mrs. Viola Hampton, of Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. Jaeggli, of Hoboken; William Powell Twaddell, of Philadelphia, and many others from this city were among the most enthusiastic, both over the method and over Mrs. Virgil's new practice instrument.

Summer schools have undoubtedly come to stay, and they are doing a vast amount of good by spreading new and advanced ideas of teaching throughout the country, and in this line no teachers have done more than has been accomplished by Mrs. Virgil and her increasing corps of teachers.

Pupils have already begun to enroll for study the coming year. This is much earlier than usual, and undoubtedly presages an extraordinarily busy season.

Marie Titiano.

AMONG the American singers to be heard here next winter is Marie Titiano, who has just completed her studies at Florence, and last spring made her operatic début at Varese, where she sang with extraordinary success in "La Traviata" and "Faust." Before going abroad Mlle. Titiano appeared at one of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and, although still a student of singing at the time, she was so successful that Wilhelm Gericke engaged her to go on a tour with the orchestra. On her return to Boston she decided to follow the career of a singer, and went to Italy to finish her studies with Leandro Campanari, the well-known conductor, who is a brother of Giuseppe Campanari, the famous baritone of the Maurice Grau Opera Company. She will give forty concerts in this country, and may appear at the Metropolitan Opera House. S. Kronberg is booking her tour.

PERCY HEMUS' RECITAL AT ASHEVILLE, N. C.—On August 21 Mr. Hemus, who has been connected with the Asheville, N. C., summer school and concerts, gave a solo-recital, under distinguished social auspices, at Asheville College. He sang three groups of songs, ranging from modern to classic, and in them all showed himself the refined artist, possessed of a magnificent baritone organ, of great range, power and flexibility. Along with these gifts he has also intellectual appreciation of the nicest subtleties in music, a warm musical temperament and pleasing personality, hence his success whenever he sings. Mr. Hemus will be heard regularly at St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Cathedral the coming season, as solo-baritone of the choir, and concert engagements are also coming on.

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,

Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY

has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.

ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

First American Tour

Marie Titiano

In America November, December and January.

DATES NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE

SOPRANO.

Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.

Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager, 444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,

Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN

Distinguished American Pianist.

our—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS.

WEBB GARDNER

SOPRANO.

FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.

ORATORIO, CONCERT. RECITAL.

Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B.

VOIGT

SOPRANO.

Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.

Address

RICHARD BYRON

Manager.

301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK.

VICTOR BAILLARD,

Basso-Baritone.

ORATORIO AND SONG RECITAL.

Address: 146 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK.

Elizabeth

Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals

Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

THE ETHICAL ASPECTS OF MUSIC.

(Queen Victoria Lecture, delivered at Trinity College, London, by Professor Niecks, Mus. D., on Thursday, June 20, 1901.)

I.

SUBJECT AND OBJECT OF THE LECTURES.

The title of my lectures may puzzle you. There are no treatises, short or long, on the subject, and the allusions to it to be found in literature are, as a rule, slight and vague. Remembering, however, the existence of a well-known book entitled "Music and Morals," you may be tempted to doubt this statement. But the book thus entitled contains little about music, and nothing whatever about morals. In fact, there would not be much exaggeration in saying that the only really good thing about the book is its title, which hints at a subject deserving the attention, not only of musicians, but also of philosophers, educationists and statesmen. The title of this book explains the title of my lectures, at least to some extent. To be quite plain. The problem with which I intend to grapple is this: Has music ethical qualities and powers—has it qualities and powers that can exercise an influence on the character, morals and manners of its cultivators?

I shall answer this question in the affirmative, but must ask you to note at once what my assertion does not imply. My assertion that music can exercise an influence on the character, morals and manners of its cultivators implies neither that all music can do that, nor that music actually does that to a large extent. An immense mass of music is, for various reasons, non-ethic; and music, as at present cultivated, can exercise but a tithe and even less of the influence of which it is capable.

My subject is one of extreme difficulty, both on account of its vastness and its complexity. It would require more than one stout volume to set it forth fully. In the short time at my disposal I can do little more than draw your attention to it, and point out the most important facts involved. As the educative power of music depends largely on its expressive power, it will be necessary to pay, in my discussion, special attention to this much debated question. Let us note, however, that although the educative power of music depends largely on its expressive power, it does not depend solely on it. Music may educate by its æsthetic side as well as by its ethic side—by beauty of form and harmoniousness of proportion as well as by the matter expressed. Indeed, observation and thought will show us that the æsthetic is capable of exercising an ethic influence.

The following are the main questions with which we shall be concerned:

1. What are the views held in the past and present on the ethic powers of music?

2. In which way does the æsthetic side of music educate those who cultivate the art?

3. Is music expressive? And if it is expressive, which are the means that enable it to be so?

4. What practical conclusions have the teacher of music, the educationist, the philosopher and the statesman to draw from these facts?

ETHICAL VIEWS OF THE ANCIENTS.

The greatest attention was paid to the ethic powers of music and the most decided opinions expressed regarding them by the ancient Greeks. Already Pythagoras, of the sixth century B. C., and his school were interested in the subject. Their philosophy was a number theory, a philosophy based on the principle of proportion and harmony. The universe, they said, is regulated by numbers; all things physical and psychical are—the the motions of the stars, of music, of the soul itself. Owing to the corresponding regulated motion of music and in the soul, the one can influence the other; different melodies and rhythms producing different mental effects. The Pythagoreans claimed for music great ethical powers, among others that of changing a mental state of unrest and confusion into one of calm and serenity. They claimed for it also power of curing disease, especially mental disease.

In proceeding from Pythagoras to Plato, of the fifth and fourth centuries, B. C., we leave tradition and come to the written ipsissima verba of the author. The importance which Plato attaches to music may be gauged by the prominent position occupied by it in his dialogues, "The Republic" and "The Laws," where he points out the part music can play and ought to play in the training of the citizen, and the obligation of the state to legislate on the subject. It has, however, to be noted that Plato uses the word music in the wider sense, including poetry.

In the proposition that "rhythms and music in general are imitations of good and evil characters," we have the root from which Plato's teaching springs. Now let me illustrate this teaching by a few characteristic quotations:

"Good language and harmony and grace and rhythm depend on the simplicity of a truly and nobly ordered soul."

"If our youth are to do their work in life, they must make these graces and harmonies their perpetual aim.

"All life is full of them, as well as every creative and constructive art. * * * And absence of grace and inharmonious movement and discord are nearly allied to ill words and ill nature, as grace and harmony are the sisters of goodness and virtue and bear their likeness."

"Musical training is a more potent instrument than any other, because rhythm and melody find their way into the secret places of the soul, on which they mightily fasten, imparting grace, and making the soul graceful of him who is ill educated; and also because he who has received this true education of the inner being will most shrewdly perceive omissions or faults in art and nature, and with a true taste, while he praises and rejoices over and receives into his soul the good and becomes noble and good, he will justly blame and hate the bad, now in the days of his youth even before he is able to know the reason why, and when reason comes he will recognize and salute her as a friend with whom his education has made him long familiar."

"The harmonious soul is both temperate and valiant, the inharmonious soul is cowardly and boorish."

Plato, in "The Republic," declares, through the mouth of Socrates, that all modes, except the Dorian and the Phrygian, should be banished—the Ionian and Lydian because they induce softness, indolence and drunkenness, the mixolydian because it expresses sorrow, &c. On the other hand, the Dorian is the strain of necessity, of the unfortunate, of courage, the warlike mode, "which will sound the word or the note that a brave man utters in the hour of danger and stern resolve, or when his cause is failing and he is going to wounds or death or is overtaken by some other evil, and at every such crisis meets fortune with calmness and endurance," and the Phrygian is the strain of freedom, of the fortunate and of temperance, the mode "to be used by him in times of peace and freedom of action, when there is no pressure of necessity, and he is seeking to persuade God by prayer, or man by instruction and advice; or, on the other hand, which expresses his willingness to listen to persuasion or entreaty or advice and which represents him when he has accomplished his aim, not carried away by success, but acting moderately and wisely, acquiescing in the event."

"Next in order to modes, rhythms will naturally follow, and they should be subject to the same rules, for we ought not to have complex or manifold systems of metre but rather to discover what rhythms are the expressions of a courageous and harmonious life. * * * What rhythms are expressive of meanness, or insolence, or fury, or other unworthiness, and what rhythms are remaining for the expression of opposite feelings?"

Now listen to what Plato says about how music should be cultivated:

"When a man allows music to play and pour over his soul through the funnel of his ears those sweet and soft and melancholy airs of which we were just speaking, and his whole life is passed in warbling and the delights of song; in the first stage of the process the passion or spirit which is in him is tempered like iron and made useful instead of brittle and useless. But, if he carries on the softening process, in the next stage he begins to melt and waste until he has wasted away his spirit and out and out the sinews of his soul, and he makes a feeble warrior."

One more quotation shall conclude my statement of Plato's view. "Damon says that when modes of music change, the fundamental laws of the state always change with them."

Aristotle, of the fourth century, B. C., shares in th

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

PUPILS

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New Yor

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

GREGORY HAST.

IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory

Hast

Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:

Loudon G. Charlton,

Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN

BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE

HUMPHRYES

Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.

FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS

Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New Yor

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attraction

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTIS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,

the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,

SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

ain his master's views, but treats the question with more efiniteness and particularity.

Here are some of his sayings:

"Rhythm and melody supply imitations of anger and entleness, and also of courage and temperance and of rtues and vices in general, which hardly fall short of the tual affections, for in listening to such strains our souls ndergo a change."

"Even in mere melodies there is an imitation of char ter, for the musical modes differ essentially from one anther, and those who hear them are differently affected by ich. Some of them make men sad and grave like the -called mixolydian; others enfeeble the mind like the laxed harmonies; others, again, produce a moderate and ttled temper, which appears to be the peculiar effect of e Dorian; the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. * * * he same principles apply to rhythms; some have a char ter of rest, others of motion, and of those latter, again, me have a more vulgar, others a nobler movement. nough has been said to show that music has a power of rming the character, and should therefore be introduced to the education of the young."

"We accept the division of melodies proposed by certain hilosophers into ethical melodies, melodies of action and assionate or inspiring melodies, each having, as they say, mode corresponding to it. But we maintain further that usic should be studied, not for the sake of one but of any benefits, that is to say with a view (1) to education, 2) to purification; music may also serve (3) for intelctual enjoyment, for relaxation and for recreation after xertion. It is clear that all the modes must be employed y us, but not all of them in the same manner. In educaon ethical melodies are to be preferred, but we may listen the melodies of action and passion when they are perrmed by others. For feelings such as pity and fear or, gain, enthusiasm, exist very strongly in some souls, and ave more or less influence over all. Some persons fall nto a religious frenzy, whom we see disenthralled by the se of mystic melodies, which bring healing and purification f the soul. * * * For the purpose of education * * * ose modes and melodies should be employed which are thical, such as the Dorian, although we may include many thers which are approved by philosophers who have had musical education. * * * All men agree that the Dorian music is the gravest and manliest. And, whereas e say that the extremes should be avoided and the mean llowed, and whereas the Dorian is a mean between the Phrygian and Lydian, it is evident that our youth should e taught the Dorian."

My last quotation from Aristotle will be on the study of music

"The right measure will be attained if students of music stop short of the arts which are practised in professional contests, and do not seek to acquire those fantastic marvels of execution which are now the fashion in such contests, and from these have passed into education. Yet the young pursue their studies until they are able to feel delight in noble melodies and rhythms, and not merely in that common part of music in which every slave or child, and even animals, find pleasure * * * thus then we reject the professional mode of education in music."

(To be continued.)

MADAME MANTELLI IN SANTIAGO DE CHILE.

The following notices of Mantelli's triumphs in Santiago will be of interest:

"Carmen." Mantelli received an enthusiastic ovation, which was repeated in the dance number and the duo of the fourth act.

This sympathetic artist is now a star of great brilliancy. Her voice has gained not only in timbre, sonority and discipline, but also in intensity and expression. To use a graphic but vulgar phrase her Carmen made a furore.—El Chileno, Santiago, July 4, 1901.

The versatility of Eugenia Mantelli displayed itself in interpreting the roles of Carmen and Mignon, than which it is difficult to imagine more opposite types. In her personification of Mignon she never reminded us by a single trait of Merimée's heroine. Without going into details we may content ourselves by quoting the chief moments of her performance which produced a genuine effect by her vocal and dramatic gifts, by the fullness of her artistic means, her intelligence and profound sincerity.

From the lips of Mantelli "Know'st Thou the Land?" acquires a far off expression that seems to come from the hidden depths of the heart, impregnated with the aroma of spring and pathos of rustic idylls. Then the charm of her half spoken dialogue and her touching reply to Wilhelm Meister's question, "Chi ti nutrira?" ffow charming, too, the scene with Filine, while in the last scenes Mantelli gave a superb termination to the work which she interpreted so admirably. La Lei, Santiago de Chile.

Señora Mantelli interpreted the role of Mignon with the supreme mastery which we have admired in previous years, and was the object of enthusiastic manifestations. The romance of the first act, the aria in the second, and the passionate scenes in the fourth were all triumphs for her. El Ferrocarril.

Señora Mantelli, in "Mignon," played with great mastery, each act being a new triumph for her. In the romance of the first act, the aria in the second, the duo with Lothario at the beginning of the third act, and in all the fourth she received great ovations. Señora Mantelli will be the favorite of our public this winter.—El Mercurio, Santiago, July 5.

The scenic ability of Madame Mantelli; her beautiful voice, so easy and taking; her incomparable music, have already charmed us. To-day she is in all the brilliancy of her great talent, and her success was considerable. It is impossible to render with greater intensity the various effects of the role of Carmen. Madame Mantelli, merely by her expressive countenance, lets us see what is passing in the heart and soul of the Gipsy. We have seen Galli-Marié and Emma Calvé in the role, but in listening to Madame Mantelli we remembered them no more. This is the highest praise we can bestow.—La Colonie Française.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

••••

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

••••

Exclusive Management

Loudon G. Charlton,

CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE

T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE ONLY

"LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.

Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.

PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.

CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.

LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency

(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),

108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.

Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."

Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London

MR. WHITNEY TEW

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evideuced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

In America November and December, 1901

Sole Representative:

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

HAROLD BAUER DATES.

SOME of the dates already closed by George W. Stewart, manager for Harold Bauer, are as follows:

With Boston Symphony Orchestra:
Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, January 9.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday, January 10.
Symphony Hall, Boston, January 11.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, January 13.
Music Hall, Baltimore, January 14.
Carnegie Hall, New York, January 16.
Academy of Music, Brooklyn, January 17.
Infantry Hall, Providence, January 22.

With Pittsburg Orchestra (Victor Herbert, conductor):
Pittsburg.

With Theodore Thomas' Orchestra:
Chicago, March 28.
Chicago, March 29.

Cincinnati Orchestra (Frank Van der Stucken, conductor):
Cincinnati.

There are also other dates at Troy, Oberlin, Ann Arbor and so on. Mr. Bauer will be in this country from January 1 for three or four months, and judging from the way the dates are being booked he will be a busy man all of that time.

Innes and His Band.

INNES and his band will open their season at the Pan-American Exposition in October. There will be no change in the instrumentation of the organization. The string basses, harp, zither, preponderance of clarinets, saxophones, oboes and bassoons will be retained. Many novel features have been added to the repertory, notably the overture "Mignon," Innes' new two-step "Prince Charming," which is already being played by all the New York bands and summer resort hotel orchestras, and Rubinstein's "Kammenoi Ostrow." Mr. Innes has had three magnificent cars built especially for his use by the Pullman Company for the tour which is to follow the Buffalo engagement. One of these cars will hold forty men, each in his individual berth. A second car contains the private rooms and tour offices of Mr. Innes, together with staterooms for the accommodation of the six vocalists, the business staff and the principal instrumental soloists of the band. A third car has been fitted up as a combination baggage and dining car. Two cooks, two porters and three waiters will operate these cars, in which the entire organization will live throughout the twenty-six weeks covered by the tour.

SIBYL SAMMIS AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH.—This popular soprano, after two months' singing at various Western Chautauquas, is at the above place until September 1, and next season will be at the head of her own concert company.

She has had great and well deserved success, as may be seen by the appended notices:

The popularity of Miss Sammis seems to have increased as her stay here lengthened; she is undoubtedly one of the very best sopranos in this country.—Lexington Herald.

* * * The greatest favorite of the Chautauqua talent. Her singing always affords the greatest pleasure to her listeners, and last evening was no exception. She was called back twice, and still the audience was not satisfied. Twice again she bowed, and it was with reluctance they saw her leave that evening. Her pleasing personality, hearty spirit and beautiful voice make her most charming.—Marinette (Wis.) Daily Eagle.

Following the lecture the greatest hit of the entire Chautauqua was made in the singing of Sibyl Sammis. She took her audience by storm, and is the whole topic of conversation to-day by those who heard her. She is a great singer; no one like her was ever heard here. Her magnificent stage presence, exquisite gowns, sweet, pure, though strong and forceful voice—all captivated her audience.—Daily Union.

Miss Sammis proved that lady all that had been claimed for her; her voice is superb, possessing to an uncommon degree the full, round tones of a violin. Miss Sammis sang various songs, such as three "Children's Songs," Buck's "Sunset," "Little Doris," "I Heard a Song," and finishing with Brooke's "Our Nation's Guard," a vocal march, which she sang with vigor and swing. Miss Sammis made a deep impression on all who heard her; she puts into her singing a power that is too often lacking in singers. Miss Sammis has something to tell, and she tells it.—Moline Daily Journal.

GREGORY HAST.—Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor, has a vogue abroad so great, and so widely established that he can only give November and December to America. That his fame has already crossed the water his American manager, Loudon G. Charlton, has discovered by the demand for Mr. Hast's appearances in both oratorio and song recital. He is as celebrated for his ballad interpretation as for his oratorio work. Here is a notice that appeared in the London Daily Telegraph after a recent ballad concert in St. James' Hall:

Mr. Hast is one of the few singers who can take a quaint old folksong and, while preserving all its native simplicity, can idealize it into a work of art. He did so with the old Sussex folksong, "The Week Before Easter." A higher flight still was taken in "How Deep the Slumber of the Floods." One of Mr. Hast's gifts is that of achieving intensity without volume of tone. With never a touch of exaggeration he can breathe a world of intensity into a whisper. Here his whispered ejaculation, "How deep the slumber of the floods," had a profundity of meaning. In its subdued, polished phrases the song was a masterpiece of simple but fervent feeling, while the manner in which the voice lingered on the closing words, "My soul shall find repose," and finally melted away into silence, was exquisite. Another gem of unaffected pathos was the encore song; the closing words were a triumph. They were just "O Mary dear that you were here," into which Mr. Hast breathed an infinitude of heartfelt yearning and pathos, governed by a sweet mellowed spirit of resignation.

Mr. HENRY WOLFSOHN
begs to announce that he has engaged
ESTELLE LIEBLING
The Young Lyric Prima Donna of the Dresden Royal Opera.
ENTIRE SEASON IN AMERICA.
Address: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 E. 17th Street, New York.

JEAN GERARDY
December, 1901, to May, 1902.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.
Wagner Lecture Recitals.
VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS: Miss Pauline Cramer.
Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.
BALDWIN PIANO USED. Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mimc."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

WALTER L. BOGERT,
Musical Lectures. Song Recitals, Conducting.
Instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint and Song Interpretation.
72 Lawrence St., Flushing, New York City.

CALIFORNIA
Conservatory of Music,
OTTO BENDIX, DIRECTOR.
1416 CALIFORNIA STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN.
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC.

"BAYREUTH AND OTHER THINGS," BY JAMES HUNEKER.

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 10. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1119.

VITTORIO CARPI

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART. Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION. Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus.
The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer course.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS.

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK.

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed. Style. Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue. New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE.

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH,
VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS.

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY.

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

McCALL LANHAM, BARITONE.

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Vocal Instruction.
Open for engagements. Address
Care American Institute of Applied Music,
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL.

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.

BAYREUTH—AND OTHER THINGS.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

BAYREUTH, AUGUST 19, 1901.

BAYREUTH would be a charming summer resort were it not for the Wagner theatre. The little town nestling in the heart of the Fichtel Mountains, Franconia, has changed little since I was here last. Some new trees have been planted in the Alexanderstrasse, and the old baker's shop near the station—you surely remember it!—has a new metal sign, which glances bravely in the sun. And there seems to be more dogs in town. There are more dogs in town. At night they foregather and howl parodies of the music heard during heated afternoons. This brings me back to my original contention—that Bayreuth would be a much more lovable place if there were no Wagner music or Wagnerians in it.

The place is overrun with tourists, mostly Germans, for the American, English and French contingent is no longer in the majority. The cheap Cockney "trippers," the man and woman armed with Baedekers, have supplanted the distinguished company of ten and twenty years ago. No longer are celebrated composers and musicians to be met on the esplanade before the theatre; indeed a genuine celebrity is a rarity, eagerly viewed and sought after. In a word Bayreuth has become popular, and must pay the usual penalty of such popularity in being cheapened, vulgarized, and the objective point of Cook's excursionists. And I must confess that the Wagner family does nothing to improve matters. It rather encourages promiscuity, for that spells money—money, the present titular divinity of Wahnfried.

I have grown to love the pretty woods, roads and various by-ways in this old Bavarian town. The "Burgerreuth" back of the Wagner theatre is as restful a place as one may find in Germany—that is during a performance below. The restaurants are as bad as ever, and Sammet's garden, with its eccentric proprietor—who blows the same crazy horn—has lost its interest for me. As for the hotels they are simply impossible. Absurdly high prices, even for New York, horrible cooking and a general atmosphere of grabbing, extortion and impudence. The dream of cheap living in Germany has become a nightmare. No seaside or mountain hotel in America charges so high and gives so little in return as these places in Bayreuth and Hamburg. The little figure sold in the toy shops here of a boy and a gold piece symbolizes to the German imagination—at once naïve and commercial—the American abroad, who when squeezed drops his gold freely. Ah! how I admire the practical, æsthetic, sentimental German, who is business man in the morning, a weeping willow in the evening. He sits in gardens, drinking coffee, beer, wine, and smoking villainous tobacco; but what a picture of contentment he makes when of a calm afternoon he moves about in the landscape with a large family, wearing an air of condescension toward the universe and the stranger within his gates, who parts with his money for half its value. Deutschland über alles!—especially for the German.

The steamship Graf Waldersee, of the Hamburg-American line, reached Hamburg the day the real Graf von Waldersee returned from China. But the death of the Emperor's mother put a stop to all the festivities. Hamburg is a loyal city and mourned the dead, as well as the lost opportunity for a royal time. Despite the general gloom I found the place delightful. Even the coachmen glibly call it "the Venice of the North." It is. A more picturesque view than the Alster See, which meanders through the town, would be difficult to discover. For two and a half cents you can ride its placid surface, sprinkled with swans and fringed by villas. Here are gardens wherein noisy music and cheap beer may be had. I saw the harbor, and was impressed by its tremendous activities, its many shipbuilding industries. But the crowning joy of Hamburg is its Zoological Garden. There you can roam for days, seeing beasts, reptiles and birds that one never sees outside of the pages of a natural history. Fancy viewing live armadilloes! Fancy the aspect of a genuine mandril, a living specimen of the cynocephalous, the sacred ape, with the purple beefsteak back and the bizarre markings on its snout—blue, white, red. It was akin to an opium dream, and it also evoked visions of Hamilcar's garden when the legionaries feasted to the marmoreal displeasure of Salammbô. There, too, I witnessed the human actions of a pair of recently imported chimpanzees. After watching them over an hour nothing I saw later in Bayreuth surprised me. In the principal monkey house a little domestic comedy occurred that recalled a French love tale. A monster dog-faced baboon, the terror of the caged community, attempted to flirt with a small ape. But the jealous wife raised such a screeching and gave her husband such a wigging that, dismayed, he sought refuge in a tree, where all the monkeys insulted him with perfect impunity and multitudinous cacklings—a dethroned king for the moment. Evidently humanity has not pre-empted all the minor vices.

In the Kunst Halle, a substantial building, I found a fairly good collection of paintings. Andreas Achenbach—the father of the late Max Alvary—was represented by several of his marines, and Hans Makart's big glowing canvas, "Entrance of Charles V. into Antwerp," has lost none of its original brilliancy. Gabriel Max, at one time a favorite of mine, was plentifully present. The best specimens were by English painters, Calcott, Calderon, Goodall, Cole, Collins, Creswick, Dyce, Thomas Faed, Luke Fildes, Colin Hunter, Landseer, Linnell, Sir John Millais, Daniel Maclise, Orchardson, William Clarkson Stanfield—a fine specimen— Val. Prinsep, Turner—a scene on the Loire—and several others, whose names may be found in the catalogue. There is an Overbeck, a dreary composition, "Die Kunst im Dienste der Religion," and a Regnault, though not the Henri Regnault whose "Moorish Execution" is in the Luxembourg. Adolph Schreyer has one of his characteristic, dashing scenes of Wallachian military life. I once knew this Frankfort painter when he lived near Coutoure's country house at Villiers-le-Bel. He died only last year. A Bakhuizen marine attracts the eye because of its simple, noble painting of water. Claude Monet is there and Munkaczy also. Constant Troyon, Horace Vernet, Arnold Boecklin—a great genius—Kaulbach, Lenbach, Menzel, Verboekhoven, Segantini, Defregger and Meissonier are all good specimens, and there is a well preserved Rembrandt. The sculpture did not impress me. I did not have time to visit the public library, with its 250,000 volumes, but I saw the Rathskeller, with its frescoes, the eleventh century cathedral, Altona, a big suburb of Hamburg; the new Gothic exchange and the enormous Roland statue of 1412. Hamburg is an expensive city, and the cooking is of high order—for Germany. It would not be tolerated in New York because of its oiliness. Even in its Delmonico—Pfordt's—the cuisine was not at all remarkable, though the prices were blistering ones.

I arrived in Bayreuth Sunday afternoon after a distressingly hot and dusty ride from Hamburg via Würzburg, in which latter place I found the beer decidedly inferior to August Lüchow's American paraphrase of the same. Indeed I don't mind confessing that beer in Germany is not what the American imagines it to be. It is dear if you drink real Pilsner, and the real Pilsner cannot be compared in flavor to the export variety. Besides, when you get beer for breakfast, dinner, supper, even in the soup, it loses its raciness. With the wines, however, no fault can be found. Rhine wine is cheap and of excellent quality. Champagnes are to be avoided. There is an immense amount of drinking—the soft, rather enervating climate seems to demand a stimulant. Coffee here is chiccory. Tea exists not—that is, strongly brewed. Another reason why wine and beer must be taken is the greasiness of the food. Fried beefsteaks, veal, potatoes, heavy pastry, all require dampening, and to do the German justice he and she dampen themselves all day long. After the theatre is closed the hungry, thirsty mobs descend in carriages upon the town like mosquitoes seeking victims. The amount of material stowed away until midnight is something astonishing. Music feeds not upon itself, despite what the poets say. It needs a very solid foundation of nourishment, especially Wagner's music.

I had barely time enough to hurry from the train to the theatre before the first signal of "Parsifal" was sounded. Of course there were no seats left—I inquired of Mr. von Gross at Feustel's—and, of course, I found an odd one for the gallery, much to the surprise of Willy von Sachs, who was attending the last series of the "Ring." This New York journalist, whose lines are now cast in pleasant places, travels over Europe seeking musical meat. I also saw Henry Holden Huss at a distance, seated beneath a tree of the sacred Bayreuth grove, reading his Wolzogen. In trying to reach him I met Mr. and Mrs. Herman Hans Wetzlar and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Schulz and so missed Mr. Huss, for the crowd was a large one. No matter what may be printed in American newspapers take my word for it that more Germans attended this season's festival than ever. As we hear as good, if not better, Wagner performances in New York city there is little need to visit this out of the way place, except for "Parsifal." This was the cast on August 11—Mr. Floersheim has probably told you of the initial performance:

Amfortas	Rudolf Berger
Titurel	Robert Blass
Gurnemanz	Paul Knüpfer
Parsifal	Ernest van Dyck
Klingsor	Hans Schütz
Kundry	Marie Wittich
Erster Gralsritter	Franz Josef Petter
Zweiter Gralsritter	Richard Könnecke
Erster Knappe	Fanchette Verhunk
Zweiter Knappe	Rosa Ethofer
Dritter Knappe	Willy Merkel
Vierter Knappe	Hans Breuer
Sechs Einzelsängerinnen	Sophie David, Emile Feuge-Gleiss, Fanchette Verhunk
1. Gruppe.
2. Gruppe.	Josefine V. Artner, Rosa Ethofer, Maria Knüpfer.

2 Chöre (Sopran und Alt), 24 Damen.

Die Brüderschaft der Gralsritter, Jünglinge und Knaben.

I shall speak of this music drama, which Dr. Muck conducted, at length next week, for I have just secured two seats for the performance of tomorrow (Tuesday, August 20), for which I paid Herr Forster, the bookseller, $25, or 100 marks. Oh, no, there are no ticket speculators here! And the management becomes indignant if such a thing is suggested. Yet a bagful of tickets left London a week ago bearing early dates—December, January, March. Mine are March 2 tickets, and are of a suspicious freshness, which points to the fact that they have been carefully stowed away until it was time to put on the thumb screws. Question Mr. Schulz-Curtius or Herr von Gross about these things, and they will look as blandly unconscious of them as the lovely clouds that always hover like a flock of white birds over the Fichtel Mountains.

However, I have the seats—and that is what I came here for—for "Parsifal." I care little for the "Ring" and less for "The Flying Dutchman." Yet I was condemned to hear both, for on Monday afternoon, "The Flying Dutchman," the 12th, tickets went begging. Not even the speculators could sell them. Doubtless you have read of the scenery and performance. Both were far from being noteworthy. Of the "tall" tales told of enormous outlay not one holds water after seeing the scenery. It was commonplace, like the performance. I give the cast as a matter of record:

Daland	Peter Heidkamp
Senta	Emmy Destinn
Erik	Ernst Kraus
Mary	E. Schumann-Heink
Der Steuermann	Franz Josef Petter
Der Holländer	Theodor Bertram

Schumann-Heink's Mary was the most interesting thing during a dull afternoon. The orchestra was not particularly remarkable, much muddy playing being noticeable in the brass. Mottl conducted with his accustomed authority.

The second series of the "Ring" included the following singers—a list which I print for history's sake, not because it is at all phenomenal. "Das Rheingold" was given Wednesday, August 14, with this cast:

Wotan	Götter	Anton van Rooy
Donner		Hans Schütz
Froh		Alois Burgstaller
Loge		Dr. Otto Briesemeister
Alberich	Nibelungen	Fritz Friedrichs
Mime		Hans Breuer
Fasolt	Riesen	Hans Keller
Fafner		Johannes Elmblad
Fricka	Göttinnen	Louise Reuss-Belce
Freia		Fanchette Verhunk
Erda		E. Schumann-Heink
Woglinde	Rheintöchter	Josefine v. Artner
Wellgunde		Sophie David
Flosshilde		Ottilie Metzger

During the next three afternoons the order was as follows:

"Die Walküre"

Siegmund	Alois Burgstaller
Hunding	Peter Heidkamp
Wotan	Anton van Rooy
Sieglinde	Marie Wittich
Brünnhilde	Ellen Gulbranson
Fricka	Louise Reuss-Belce

Walküren: Josefine v. Artner, Sophie David, Rosa Ethofer, Anna Huber, Maria Knüpfer, Ottilie Metzger, E. Schumann-Heink, Fanchette Verhunk.

"Siegfried"

Siegfried	Ernst Kraus
Mime	Hans Breuer
Der Wanderer	Anton van Rooy
Alberich	Fritz Friedrichs
Fafner	Johannes Elmblad
Erda	E. Schumann-Heink
Brünnhilde	Ellen Gulbranson
Stimme des Waldvogels	Emilie Feuge-Gleiss

"Goetterdaemmerung"

Siegfried	Ernst Kraus
Gunther	Rudolf Berger
Hagen	Robert Blass
Alberich	Fritz Friedrichs
Brünnhilde	Ellen Gulbranson
Gutrune	Louise Reuss-Belce
Waltraute	E. Schumann-Heink
Nornen	Josefine v. Artner, Louise Reuss-Belce, E. Schumann-Heink.
Rheintöchter	Josefine v. Artner, Sophie David, Ottilie Metzger.

Mannen und Frauen.

Again were the performances sold out, and again did I find simple, musical souls who were willing to part with their birthright for a mess of pottage, i. e., $ $ $. Yankee-like, I was foolish enough to expect the worth of my money. But I did not get it, for Siegfried Wagner conducted, and when the tempi were not too fast—as in the prelude to "Rheingold"—they were too slow. Certainly few were correct. And there was throughout an absence of decision, briskness, poetry or dramatic effect. This was all the more surprising since Dr. Hans Richter—who never looked better in his life—and Felix Mottl had carefully rehearsed the orchestra. I certainly never heard a more commonplace version of the "Ring." Siegfried Wagner has not improved as a conductor. I heard him five years ago. He seems about the same. Perhaps his composing cramps his left arm. He looks more and more like Louis Blumenberg, the 'cellist, every day. As for the acting I can only quote what George Moore said to me—the author of "Evelyn Innes" came down here August 14—after the "Rheingold" performance: "Madame Wagner puts pins in the stage and expects her artists to move from one to the other, as if they were automatons."

"Die Walküre" went better than "Siegfried" or "The Dusk of the Gods." Schumann-Heink as Erda and Waltraute was certainly at her best. Gulbranson's Brünnhilde still leaves me cold, as it did in 1896. Blass as Hagen is known to New York, as is Van Rooy's Wotan. This latter singer drives about Bayreuth in a neat road wagon, and many are the winks and nods, for in the matter of money spending he is said to outrival the efforts of Salvini and Tamagno.

Cosima Wagner is still a well preserved woman and dominates Bayreuth as of yore. Her hair is white, but there is fire in her eye, and her speech, so I am told, is very much to the point at rehearsals. While she is friendly with Mottl I fancy that Van Rooy is now the reigning favorite. The lady resembles much her esteemed father, the late Franz Liszt. An old and familiar cry resounds as the season nears its close. "We have lost money!" Hence there will be another Festspiel next season. Poor Wagner family! They must find it hard to keep the wolf from the door, with all the royalties flying in at the windows of Wahnfried. However, I have heard that Munich threatens, and next year there will be a gathering of the clans to determine the "Parsifal" question. Without "Parsifal" Bayreuth is doomed; and "Parsifal" is the property of the world in 1913!

As I told you above I did not go to Sammet's, but to a private club garden of the Gesellschaft Harmonie. It is next door to Sammet's, is quieter and boasts of a better ordered and more varied cuisine. Here is a little picture of the garden. On the steps of the old Schloss are placed the tables. It is very romantic and very dyspeptic—not to mention winged things that fall from trees and the bees that buzz in your butter. (Butter is always extra.)

Harmonie Garten.

The proprietor, Herr Johann Streil, weighs about 300 pounds, and is as light as a feather duster and as oily as a suet pudding. He seems to bound from step to step, from table to table, soup in one hand, beer in another, while a heavenly smile plays about his face. His picture does not do him justice. It makes him too handsome, too thin. It was taken ten years ago. I begged for a contemporary view—but there were none. Possibly no camera could stand the strain. However, in the Fatherland fat is not fatal, as it is in America. I pass everywhere for a slim person, with aspirations toward a waist.

The fanfares blown before each performance and during the entr'actes are the same as in 1896, 1897, 1899 for the "Ring des Nibelungen," that is to say, before "Das Rheingold," the Donner motive; before the first and second acts of "Die Walküre," the Sword motive; before the third act, the Sword motive twice repeated. "Siegfried" employs the Siegfried horn call before the first act; the Sieg motive before the second, and the Siegfried motive before the third. "Götterdämmerung" begins with the Norse motive; before the second act, the Wedding call; before the third, the Walhalla motive. Like "Rheingold," "Der Fliegende Holländer" has but one call, for in Bayreuth the opera is given without a break. The Dutchman's motive in D minor is used. And this device of Wagner's, which was possibly suggested to him by the military calls of the garrisons, is as effective as ever.

And now for a short list of the visiting Americans. Mr. Floersheim probably told you of Patti, of Henry Wolfsohn, of Nikisch and many others. I shall begin with the Fremden-Liste, No. 20. It will not go much higher than forty this season. Mrs. and Miss Ethel Dubois, New York; Helen de Young, San Francisco; Mrs. and Miss Veaur, San Francisco; Frau Leopold Kahn, with sons, Frankfort; Miss Mary Potter, Miss Eva Shafter, Connecticut; Miss Elizabeth D. Lewis and niece, New York; Albert Stettheimer, New York; R. C. Walken, New York; Miss Romer, Newark; Miss MacCarty, Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Elizabeth Shaw, Boston; Albert Jeffery, Boston; Mrs. and Miss Trust, Mrs. and Miss Jones, Baltimore; Annie C. Stebbins, Louise M. Stebbins, Springfield, Mass.; Mr. Bates, Frank Cramer, America; Marcius Simons, the American painter, now in Paris; Misses Krug and Cuno, St. Louis; Miss Elizabeth Sheldon, New York; Miss Mary E. Chaffee, New York; Fletcher Dexter, Boston; Mrs. Stone, Misses Stone, Saginaw, Mich.; Mrs. David R. McKee, with Mrs. W. McKee-Dunn, Washington, D. C.; Mr., Mrs. and Miss Hull, New York; Miss Stantor, Mrs. Merrill, Mrs. Bunce, New York; Mrs. E. S. Jenney, Miss Jenney, Syracuse; Mrs. Adams, Miss Adams, Chicago; Mrs. John Haron and Miss Laura Mauro, New York; Prof. G. Meyer, Urbana, Ill.; Dr. Swiggett, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, Chicago; Albert Lavignac, the French musical littérateur; Mrs. Lohbiller, with daughter, Boston; Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Bullock, Rome; Mrs. Elizabeth and Miss Clara Davison, Pittsburg; Mrs. J. B. McIntosh and daughter, New York; Miss Frances Hayward, Boston; Miss Wilde, New York; Frank Frick, Miss K. G. Frick, Baltimore; Miss Lürmann, Baltimore; Misses and Mr. Cohen, Savannah; H. Kawes, Mrs. J. B. Kawes, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shepherd, New York; Helen J. Bailey, Boston; Miss E. G. Ogden, Mrs. Eugene Schuyler, New York; Mary Keller, Pittsburg; Miss May Shephard and Miss Lelia A. Garvin, Cincinnati; José Vianna Da Motta, the Berlin pianist—once a visitor to America; Miss Sophy Stanton, Washington; Miss L. Derby, Boston; Lucien Warner, New York; Miss Antonie and Miss Richard, New York; B. J. Goddard, with Miss Goddard, America; Miss Tevis and Miss Bowie, San Francisco; Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Stefenheimer and Mrs. Dyer, New York; C. C. Puffer, sister and daughter, Rochester; Julius Lehmann, New York; Misses Julia C. and Eleanor R. Smith, America; Mr. and Mrs. Stule, Denver; Mrs. Pope and Misses Pope, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Duhme and Dr. Giles S. Mitchell, with Mrs. Mitchell, Cincinnati; the Count and Countess Melchior de Vogüe, of Paris—the Count is the well-known critic of Russian literature; Louise S. Wathington and cousin, Cincinnati; Horace E. Carpenter, with cousin, Bay City, Mich.; Madame Von Pauer, Misses Parsen, New York; Wm. A. Spies, New York; Prof. and Mrs. McN. Miller, Baltimore; Mrs. Mary G. Strong, New York; Robert Patterson, wife and daughter, Chicago; Mrs. Hollander, Baltimore; Mary E. Umstead, Pennsylvania; Mrs. George D. Rose, Mrs. Hartley D. Harper, Chicago; Misses Lymann, New York; Misses Peters, Berlin; Miss Adelaide Schoonhover, Madison, Wis.; Misses Bolland, St. Louis; Victor Baier and Miss Baier, New York; Mrs. Walter K. Stettheimer, Miss Stettheimer, New York; Otto L. Fischer, Mrs. Wortly, Miss Peabody, New York; Miss Henshaw, Boston; Misses Coyle, Washington; Misses Worthington, Cincinnati; Misses and Mr. Woolsey, Berlin; Mrs. John Newton-Ewell, New York; Mary M. Jackson, Utica; Miss Fellowes, Miss Cously, New York; Miss Louise C. Dunn, Maine; Miss Mary Winston, Minnesota; Miss R. M. Caft, Boston; Miss Wilkins, Miss E. G. Murflay, Boston; Theodore Bohlmann and Mrs. Bohlmann, the pianist and composer, of Cincinnati; Misses Ruth C. Willis, Massachusetts; Davis Bergen, New York; Cleofanto Campanini, brother of the dead tenor Campanini, now conductor at Madrid; Mrs. J. M. Rose, New Jersey; Mrs. E. Rose, Miss Hoan, Philadelphia; Mary E. Sumner, Omaha; Hazard Dickson, Arthur G. Dickson, Philadelphia; Anna Miller-Wood, Boston; Miss Mabel Buttere, Boston; Max Ibach and Mrs. Ibach, piano manufacturer, Barmen; Mary L. Davison, New York; Misses Shoyer, Pittsburg; Misses Edith and Winifred Holt, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, Buffalo; Mr. and Mrs. Williams, New York; Mrs. Henry S. Word, America; Mrs. W. H. Haile, America; Eugenie Spadonie, New York; Miss Stiger, New York; Mrs. John J. Beggs and daughter, New York; Mrs. Westley Tucker, Mrs. Howard Ridgely, Baltimore; Miss Sivington, Misses Cross, New York; Mrs. Strauss and sister, America; Mrs. G. Shirmer, Berlin; Miss Maude Gonne—the Irish "Joan of Arc"; Miss Ihrmas, Boston; Miss Corliss, Illinois; Jean Delmas, the well-known basso of the Paris Opéra; Miss Newhouse, Mrs. Langfeld, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Bigelow, with Miss Dorothea Bigelow, Boston; Louis J. Blok, Chicago; Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Thurber, the American pastor, of Paris; Herbert N. Fisher, New Haven; Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Steinway, New York; James J. Boyd, Boston; Frederic S. Law, Philadelphia; Oscar Beringer, the London pianist; Miss Jeannette Jones and Miss Maria L. Chandler, New York; Arthur Smith, New York; Dr. Jos. Lähly, New York; Mary Norres Berry, St. Louis; Francis Riot and wife, music director, Honolulu, America; Miss Very, New York;

This Is Johann.

Jennie B. Sherzer, Misses Stryker, Miss Loehr, Franklin, Ohio; Misses Porton, Mrs. Steile, Denver; Frau Levi, widow of the late famous conductor; Susan Strong, London; Victor and Mrs. Ompteda, the talented novelist of Wiesbaden; Misses Adams, New York; Miss Ruth Sallinger, Oakland, Cal.; Rowland Hazard, America; Ernestine Goodman, Philadelphia; Miss Kate Boyce, New York; Kirke L. Cowdry, Oberlin, Ohio; Mrs. C. C. Pearson, Miss Steams, Boston; Eloise Breese, New York; Arthur Seidl, the Munich author; Miss Alice Kauser, Benj. F. Kauser, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Hicks, America; Miss D. W. Rockhill, Washington; Joseph C. Hoppin, the archæologist, America; Professor Cushmann and wife, Boston; Mrs. S. P. S. Mitchell, Philadelphia; Misses Snowden and Randolph Snowden, Philadelphia; Chas. C. Parsons and wife, Miss N. M. Barker, Boston; William Warren Shaw, Philadelphia; Mrs. Edgar Hicks, Brooklyn, and D. B. Simon, Denver. There were others, too.

I also saw Willy Schütz, fair, fat and forty-five. He was in Bayreuth to hear "Götterdämmerung," which he intends producing in Paris next season. With him was his sister, Mme. Felia Litvinne, who sang at a reception in Wahnfried. Of the London music critics I only read the name of Vernon G. Blackburn, of the Pall Mall Gazette. John F. Runciman was too clever to leave Grez-sur-Loing, where he is spending his vacation, for the dust and heat of German travel. Basil Crump, the lecturer on Wagner; Schulz-Curtius Walcker, the architect, of Paris, and Hans von Wolzogen were also here. But I didn't begin to have as pleasant a time this season as five years ago, when, with Constantin Sternberg, Clarence Eddy and Otto Floersheim, we sat beneath the stars. Wilhelm Tappert, the Berlin critic and Wagnerite, has shaken the dust of Bayreuth forever from his critical shoes. So have many others of the old guard. The reasons for the defection are numerous, and yet a single one—Cosima Wagner!

I spoke for two minutes to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burmeister, who were en route for America via Hamburg. They spent several pleasant weeks just outside of Bayreuth.

Night before last I was amazed by an excellent performance of Sousa's "Washington Post March" by a military band here. Otherwise one hears little save Wagner transcriptions played on odious, jangling, badly tuned pianos.

The grave of Wagner—"they buried him in the back yard like a cat," as Philip Hale wrote—is still an attraction for visitors. Wolfram, the Wagner servant, with the red nose and dangerous breath, still conducts the curious through the Hof-Garten to the back gate, and with many shakes of the head —"Gnädige Frau does not like to see people in the garden"—shows you the simple, broad slab which covers the remains of a wonderful man. Jean Paul Richter remains under the big rock in the cemetery on the Erlangerstrasse, while hard by Liszt slumbers, his tomb covered by old wreaths and very few new ones. I saw one from Francis Korbay, of London, and one from Susan Strong; also a silver wreath from a group of young Russian composers. To tell the truth the place looked neglected. Siegfried rules in Bayreuth now. His picture is in the centre of the postal cards, those of his father and grandfather being much smaller. But I don't think they need not worry about the future.

FROM MILAN.

MILAN, AUGUST 20, 1901.

AS regards music we are in the most quiet season of the year. Nearly all the theatres are closed. There are but a few open with operetta companies, and here and there a "music hall." My first article as correspondent of THE MUSICAL COURIER can hardly be therefore as interesting as I would have wished, for absolute lack of subject matter.

But if the theatres are dead to the public they are nevertheless full of life and bustle, in active preparation for the coming season.

Of the three most important theatres of Milan for musical representations, the first to open will be the Dal Verme, with a sufficiently attractive program, comprising "William Tell," of Rossini; "Poliuto," and other operas. Immediately following these there will be a second series at the Dal Verme, and the opening of the Lirico Internazionale, property of the publisher Sonzogno. At the former will be represented Puccini's last work, "Tosca," already given at the Scala last season, and this second edition of it promises to be more important than that of the Scala, as it will be interpreted by artists of very first standing. Besides this opera there will be given "Lohengrin" and "La Forza del Destino." At the Lirico they will open with "Luisa," of Charpentier, or "Zaza," of Leoncavallo, to be followed by others from the usual repertory of the publisher Sonzogno, with some novelties, such as "Chopin," by the Maestro Orefice, and "Adriana Lecouvreur," by Cilea.

During the Carnival we shall have three theatres open for musical representations, which for Milan is sufficiently remarkable.

First of all, naturally, will be the Scala, which would have been of considerable importance had Boïto maintained his promise to give his "Nerone," so many years expected.

It is well known how three years ago the municipality, finding that the endowment to the Scala constituted a loss which the city could not afford, annulled it, and how a group of rich citizens formed a company, with a time limit of three years, for the carrying on of the theatre, during which time the municipality was to find the means of securing to the Scala a permanent continuance. These three years ended with the last season, and they were three years of glorious life for the Scala, as instead of being worked with a view to profit, every endeavor was directed toward rendering it a temple of art. But all this time nothing had been done by the municipality toward the maintenance of their promise.

The Duke Visconti di Modrone, the richest man in Milan, who was prime mover in the company and had spent so much money in it, told his friends that he would take on his own shoulders the whole cost of management if only Boïto would give his "Nerone." It was then that Boïto promised the representation of this work, which has been looked forward to for twenty years; and all Italy nourished the serious belief that at last they were about to add another "chef d'œuvre" to its glorious repertory. But it appears now that Boïto, in consequence of this friend's entreaties, had promised to give his work only that this might induce the Duke Visconti di Modrone to undertake the contract; and, in fact, when all had been settled, Boïto announced that he could not get his famous "Nerone" ready in time for the Carnival.

In place of this we are assured that we shall have the "Germania" of Franchetti, author of "Asrael" and "Cristoforo Colombo," for which there are also great expectations. With "Germania" they say we will have also the "Africana," "Walkiria," "Linda di Chamounix," "Ballo in Maschera" and "Hänsel und Gretel"; but nothing, we may say, has yet been decided, there being so much confusion in deciding what operas to give that it forebodes little good. And the principal reason of all this, to my mind, is to be found in the inefficient art management, composed of persons absolutely unfitted to the requirements of a theatre like the Scala. As you see, our next seasons at Milan promise to be really interesting, on account also of the artists who are already known to have arrived.

In the matter of novelties also we shall not have much to complain of, notwithstanding the excommunication pronounced by Mascagni and Leoncavallo against the city of Milan. THE MUSICAL COURIER, in its previous numbers, has frequently noticed the doings in Milan, both as regards the "Nerone" of Boïto mentioned above and the interview with Mascagni and Leoncavallo, which occupied the mind of the press for so long a time.

Although rather late, I think it may not be altogether useless if I recall what passed. The Maestro Mascagni had himself interviewed by one of the Messaggero di Roma newspaper men and asserted untrue and impossible things. What Maestro Mascagni had said, coming to the knowledge of the public, the press took it up, and then Maestro Mascagni, while admitting the interview, claimed that things had been published which had never entered his mind, without, however, specifying which were true and which were not.

I, who know the interviewing member of the staff of the Roman paper, he being a friend of mine, am of opinion that what he has published cannot but be the truth; the Maestro Mascagni, hearing the public criticisms of what he in a weak moment had said, has sought to withdraw them, throwing the blame on the journalist.

Besides, what was said by Mascagni was published by THE MUSICAL COURIER even before it appeared in the Italian papers. In fact THE MUSICAL COURIER about three months ago (if I mistake not) stated that in Italy a rich gentleman, Commendator Florio, was contemplating an advance of several millions for the purpose of combating the monopoly of Mr. Ricordi. Mascagni, on hearing the news of THE MUSICAL COURIER, added only that the young authors were all of them already agreed to write for the new company.

Thus, the idea of combating the Ricordi monopoly will find many persons who, like myself, are disposed to give it favorable consideration, but it is not by means of a company that this object is to be attained. Instead of the proposed millions, it is the intervention of the Government that is required, as a law approved by Parliament would at once put matters right, and so much the more now that by the death of Verdi the firm Ricordi loses the only artistic protection that Italy had the duty to respect.

And it was not by haphazard that I said the "millions" are useless; in fact the new company as soon as formed would find itself with several millions in hand, and with no opera to put on the stage. I may be told that Mascagni, Leoncavallo and Puccini are ready to give their future works, but I confess that such a reply would excite my mirth were it not for the discredit I should appear to throw on these masters' native soil. For, although Italy founds her hopes in her young modern authors, still she knows full well that they are mere "airy hopes," if we have the courage to glance over the last works of Mascagni, Puccini and Leoncavallo. And, taking the most optimistic views, we must admit that the new works which may be written for the new company, even allowing them to be true "chef d'œuvres," can hardly suffice, as Italy will not be satisfied with the repeated representations—and this for years—of only two or three operas.

Besides it is difficult to suppose that Ricordi will not tighten still more his hold by an even more rigid adherence to the methods which have made him feared, and up to now so strong. As happens now for the operas of the publisher Sonzogno, it will not be possible to put on the stage other operas than those of the repertory Ricordi or of that of the new company; and is it possible to make a theatrical season with the sole choice of three or four operas of which the success is even doubtful?

They can have afterward, let us say, the operas from the repertory of Wagner, but this also offers a limited selection. The operas of Wagner are now tolerably in fashion, but they are looked upon as rather an "article of luxury," which the majority of Italians submit to and

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

The seventeenth scholastic year begins September 3 and ends May 1. Piano and Organ—Sept. 17, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Violin, Viola, Orchestral Instruments—September 18, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M. and 8 to 10 P. M. Children's Day—September 21, Piano and Violin—10 A. M to 12 M ; 2 to 4 P. M

Annual entrance examinations: Piano 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and All Other Singing—September 19, from 10 A. M. to the others accept as a sort of fashionable duty without any real enjoyment of them. The operas of Wagner serve as the opening of a great theatrical season, and nothing more.

It is useless to disguise the fact that the richness of the Italian repertory is formed principally of the works of Verdi, Bellini, Donizetti, Rossini, completed by Ponchielli, Gounod, Boito, &c., and all this is the absolute property of Ricordi, who makes such use of it as may be his pleasure or even his caprice.

Of what use are these millions to a commercial company when the very article they want to offer to the public is unprocurable? What result has Sonzogno obtained from the sacrifice of his millions, and yet he had an excellent repertory of the best Italian and foreign composers? He may have made known some Italian masters, who but for him might have remained unknown, but he has only increased the tyranny of Ricordi.

How many works in the repertory of Sonzogno has he been obliged to keep on his shelves, or doom to slow or tedious life, while they might easily have figured in all the theatres? And why? Because of the poverty of Sonzogno's repertory! A theatrical manager who wishes to give a Sonzogno opera can only give in that season operas which belong to that same editor. He may seek from Ricordi some of his operas, and Ricordi might even accede to the request, although he has a perfect right to refuse it, but such condescension would be mere irony, because he would demand such a price for author's rights as to be in excess of anything the theatre could afford, reckoning its expenses and legitimate profit.

And Ricordi triumphs; he grants the use of the opera, but the manager is obliged to refuse it. More than this, the young authors (I do not speak of Mascagni, Puccini &c.), who are anxious to get their works staged, apply to Ricordi with a view to his purchasing them, which he does if they show any particular merit, in order to keep them out of his rivals' hands, reserving to himself, however, the right of representing them when (and only when) it may please him to do so; and thus they remain on his shelves, gathering only dust that falls on them.

To how many works, some also well known, has not his lot befallen!

Ask Ricordi, for example, for the operas of Catalani, hat unhappy composer who gave his whole soul and life o his music, and offer any price you like, he will refuse o let you have them. And why? Mystery! Secrets of is trade!

If the Italian press, instead of troubling itself oftenmes about puerile matters of no import, would only ise its voice a little, increasing its tone by degrees until t reached the ears of Parliament and of the Senate, how nuch good might it not do to the country and to art!

If the company that seeks to embark millions in the urchase of works that do not exist, or that are not to be ought, would only spend a little on a campaign in favor f the only article that Italy may still export, how much ood might they not do!

But the principal harm, to my mind, derives from the ct that musical art is in the hands of those who, knowing s necessities and the remedies, have not the means of aking them public; while the press, which has the means, disbelieves in the necessity. There only remains for us to hope that as everything in Italy is, although slowly, in the course of progress, so also may music find its defenders, and rise again to a level with the times, in full vigor and adapted to modern aspirations.

In regard to the malediction of Leoncavallo, and his decision never more to submit his new works to the judgment of Milan, these are things that smack of the ridiculous. I do not say that Milanese opinion may not sometimes have a bias of partisanship, but between this and the belief that such opinion can have so great influence on the life of a new work as to destroy it or decree the measure of its success there is a wide difference; they are things which only those believe who are determined to believe so.

It is well known how in Italy every town holds to its own opinion, to such a point that one town will declare a success, where (and perhaps because) another has pronounced a contrary opinion.

Let Mascagni or Leoncavallo write another "Cavalleria Rusticana" or another "Pagliacci," and they will see that no Milan or other city will be able to deprive them of the merit they deserve.

Another important point in the interview had with Maestro Mascagni is that of his tournée in North America as conductor of orchestra.

According to what THE MUSICAL COURIER wrote some time ago, this tournée would appear only to exist in the imagination of Mascagni, or at least hardly to encourage the expectation of that profit and success which he promises himself; but I have not sufficient grounds for absolutely contradicting it, and must leave it therefore to THE MUSICAL COURIER to judge.

And so for the present I will close, with the intention, however, of returning to the subject on another occasion, should the opportunity occur. F. ORLANDI.

MADAME THOMASON PLAYS IN THE ADIRONDACKS.—Mme. Berta Grosse-Thomason, the pianist, assisted the Beethoven Trio at a concert given on August 18 at the Ruisseaumont, one of the finest hotels at Lake Placid. The program included two arrangements by W. E. Bassett, who is associated with Madame Thomason at her school for piano in Brooklyn. The Bassett arrangements were the "Dream Music," from Humperdinck's "Hänsel and Gretel," and Chaminade's "Pierrette." Mme. Thomason played as piano solos Liszt's transcriptions of the Romance to "The Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser," and Isolde's "Liebestod," from "Tristan and Isolde," accentuating the dramatic side with remarkable power.

FABRIS' REMAINS BURIED IN GREENWOOD.—George A. Fabris, who managed the last tour in this country of Mme. Sofia Scalchi, died last week at his home in Brooklyn and was buried in Greenwood Cemetery. He is survived by a widow and one child. Mr. Fabris was born in Dalmatia. Since he retired from operatic management he was associated with the banking firm of Frank Zotti & Co., 108 Greenwich street. The home of the widow is at 546 Forty-ninth street, South Brooklyn.

Musical . . . . People.

Miss Neuhaus is giving a series of descriptive piano recitals at the Nahant Club and other New England places.

Miss Minnie C. Vesey, a Tennessee singer, has returned to her home at Nashville, after a three weeks' sojourn at Chautauqua.

Miss Florence Austin, a young and promising violinist, was among the recent arrivals from Europe. Miss Austin is a Minneapolis girl.

Albert von Toska, of Syracuse, N. Y., has been engaged to go on the road as orchestra leader of C. L. Sullivan's opera company.

Signor Valenza, harpist, and Signora Valenza, contralto gave a concert on August 21, at the First Christian Church, Duluth, Minn.

A handsome prospectus has been issued for the year 1901-1902 by the Brazelton Conservatory of Music, at Ashland, Wis. Edgar A. Brazelton is the director.

Kirk Towns, a baritone singer of Sioux City, has returned with laurels won after two years' study in Berlin, Germany. He received a hearty Western welcome from his friends and neighbors.

The Cathedral choir of Leavenworth, Kan., under the direction of J. N. Joerger, resumed its Sunday duties on September 1. Members of the choir enjoyed a two months' vacation this summer.

The Year Book of the Denver Conservatory of Music shows surprising growth of the institution. Oliver B. Howells, as dean, and Mrs. Howells, as the director, are assisted by a competent faculty.

Miss Edna More, pianist; Miss Laura M. Wright, soprano; Raymond Taylor, pianist, and Mr. Seiferth, a violinist from the Leipsic Conservatory, gave a concert recently at the opera house at Deposit, N. Y.

Louis T. Chase, director of the Chase Conservatory of Music, at Columbus, Ga., has established a branch at Opelika, Ala. Miss Fannie Trawick, a graduate of the conservatory, will have charge of the new department.

Miss Eugenia Barker, of Denver, Col., who has appeared in opera, sang at a musicale on August 14, given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. Everard Williams, of North Denver. Miss Barker sang numbers from "Faust" and "Carmen."

A successful concert was given recently at the Congregational Church in Morrisville, Vt. Miss Lena Irish, organist; Mrs. Hiram Tracy Hanks, pianist; Mrs. G. M. Powers and Miss Ila Niles, vocalists, contributed the musical numbers.

Jaroslaw de Zielinski and George Amesbury Goold are announced as new members of the faculty of Frank F. Shearer's School of Music, at Lockport, N. Y. Zie-

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

linski will have charge of the vocal department and Goold the violin department.

Musicians and musical people at Lowville, N. Y., are already discussing plans for holding another musical festival next May. The name of L. Harry West is mentioned as the probable conductor, he having served in that capacity last spring.

Three young men, Michael Deluca, Harry Deluca and Vincent Deluca, all brothers, sons of M. Deluca and members of the M. Deluca & Sons orchestra, of Chicago, have been giving concerts with good success at Wisconsin summer resorts.

The trustees of Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pa., elected as director of the Conservatory of Music Franklin Coleman Bush, of Chicago. Mr. Bush studied with W. C. Seeboeck (pupil of Rubinstein and Brahms) and Liszt's great pupil, Arthur Friedheim.

The Lakeside Club, of Ithaca, N. Y., gave a concert at Glenwood on August 20. An excellent program was contributed by Mrs. F. B. Atwater, soprano; Miss Ada Bostwick, soprano; Robert A. Bole, baritone; Miss Etta Mintz, contralto; C. E. Mott, tenor, and several instrumentalists.

Mrs. T. A. Whitworth, of Fargo, N. Dak., gave an organ recital at the Robert E. Lee Memorial Chapel, in Leixngton, Va., August 1, and played selections from Wagner, Händel, Mendelssohn, Beethoven and Schubert. She was assisted by Mrs. S. B. Walker, soprano, and Miss Margaret Graham, contralto, of Lexington, and Mrs. Slicer, of Petersburg, Va.

Following are the names of those who volunteered at the concert given August 16 at the International Hotel, Niagara Falls, for the benefit of the Niagara Falls Memorial Hospital: Miss Ethel Perrine, soprano, of Rochester; Miss Gluck, violinist, of Buffalo; Miss March, soprano, of Syracuse; Albert K. Schneider, basso, of New York; Edward L. Seip, soloist of old Trinity Church, New York; Joseph R. Bolton, humorist, of New York; Miss Naist and Mr. Lautz as accompanists.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD,

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN SEASON CLOSES.

WITHOUT exaggeration it may be stated that several thousand persons regretted the early closing of the Kaltenborn concerts at the St. Nicholas Garden this season. The license expired on August 31, and the management decided to end the season on that date. As has already been announced in the columns of THE MUSICAL COURIER, the concerts this summer have been successful. There has been an encouraging increase in the receipts over last year, and musically the concerts have been on a higher plane. The final concert on Saturday night attracted one of the largest audiences of the summer. Mr. Kaltenborn arranged an interesting program. He himself played one of the best numbers in his violin repertory, "The Prize Song," from "Die Meistersinger." As conductor Mr. Kaltenborn appeared always to the best advantage in the stirring compositions by modern composers.

The vocal soloist of the closing concert, Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard, scored her usual success with the audience, showing particularly the purity of her soprano voice in the pianissimos. Mrs. Hazard sang in the first half of the concert Bartlett's "Sayonara," the Japanese term for "Farewell." As an encore by request, she sang, "The Suanee River." In the second half of the concert Mrs. Hazard sang a group of songs by Albert Mildenberg, with the composer at the piano. Emile Levy accompanied for the other songs by Bartlett and Foster. The Mildenberg songs, "Violets," "The Ivy Leaf" and "Night Song," were well received, and the usual encore was demanded. For this Mrs. Hazard repeated "The Ivy Leaf," which, by the way, is still in manuscript, and which the composer has dedicated to her. Saturday evening was Mrs. Hazard's fifth appearance at the St. Nicholas concerts this season, she having sung at the opening as well as at the closing concerts, and three other times.

Leopold Winkler, the other soloist at the closing concert, appeared for the seventh time this summer. He played the Liszt E flat Concerto in masterly style, and as an extra number a Staccato Study by Rubinstein, to the delight of those who admire technical finish.

Another pleasing feature of the closing concert was the playing by the Kaltenborn String Quartet. By request, Mr. Kaltenborn and his associates played the pathetic and strongly moving Tschaikowsky Andante Cantabile, and the characteristic "Shepherd Dance," by Edward German. At the Wagner festival nights last Wednesday and Thursday Miss Mary Mansfield and Mrs. Dora Phillips repeated their former success. Both of these artists were heard at the festival given the first week in August, and their numbers last week were the same as at the earlier engagement. Mrs. Phillips sang Senta's ballad from "The Flying Dutchman." Miss Mansfield sang two nights. Her number on Wednesday evening was "Dich theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser," and on Thursday evening she sang Isolde's "Liebestod" with surprising dramatic power and musical understanding.

The Kaltenborn benefit last Tuesday (August 27) night attracted another record breaking house. For this occasion the stage was handsomely adorned with rare plants sent down from Morris Heights by Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Hilton, who have been regular patrons of the concerts this summer. All of the soloists at the benefit concert were received with enthusiasm. The venerable Edward Mollenhauer played his own Violin Fantaisie. By request Leopold Winkler played "The Hungarian Fantaisie," by Liszt, Mrs. Mildred Hirschberg sang songs by Goring Thomas and Massenet, and the Kaltenborn Quartet was heard in the selections played at the closing concert.

MADAME MAIGILLE AT CAPE MAY.—Mme. Helene Maigille, the dramatic soprano and teacher, is a guest at the Chalfonte, Cape May.

CARL VENTH.—Carl Venth, the well-known teacher of the violin, has secured the spacious and most conveniently situated house No. 14 Seventh avenue, Brooklyn, for his violin school. The unusually large and commodious parlors will afford ample seating capacity for the parents and friends of the students who attend the monthly musicales, at which selections of the best music of both the old and modern masters will be rendered by the pupils.

The branches taught at the school are violin, 'cello, piano, organ, voice culture, harmony, counterpoint and composition. Lesson hours are being assigned now.

LEONORA JACKSON AT BAR HARBOR.—Leonora Jackson, the distinguished violinist, is now at Bar Harbor, Me. After a sojourn with friends early in the summer on the New Jersey coast, the young artist went to New Hampshire, and through her thoughtfulness and generosity $300 was raised for the benefit of the Boston Floating Hospital at the recital which she gave at the Hotel Wentworth, at New Castle N. H. Later Miss Jackson will go to the White Mountains for a final rest before opening her tournée with Harry J. Fellows, tenor, and William Bauer, pianist, as assisting artists. Miss Jackson will visit again this winter all parts of the United States, including the far South and Pacific Coast, and from bookings already made her managers predict a season even more brilliant than the past one with its record of 161 concerts.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD, Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO. CONCERT ORGANIST. Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER, THE ART OF SINGING. Conductor. 410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE, VIOLIN VIRTUOSO. Teacher. Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE. Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER, PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals. Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT, Teacher of Singing, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON, SOPRANO, 620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD, CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction. Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler. For terms and dates address 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN, BARITONE, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE. BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS. For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . . MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL, Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic. CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION. L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist. (GODOWSKY.) Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers. ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE, SINGING MASTER. The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list. STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO. CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING. Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory. FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager. FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON, Basso-Cantante, 623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY, JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO. ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT. JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors. Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, August 31, 1901

ARTHUR DUNHAM, concert organist, who has been in France studying with Widor, writes to the Hamlin Company enthusiastic accounts of the artistic characteristics and far reaching influence of that great European composer of organ music.

To be impressed by Widor's personality it is necessary for the American student to visit France. But to recognize his genius it is needful only to study the beautiful creations and marvelous musical imaginings of his organ symphonies.

Samuel Warren, of New York, was once looking over a miscellaneous collection of music belonging to one of his pupils. "What," he said, "bind Widor in the same volume with this other composer, whose works are so inferior!"

Perhaps you will be wondering who the "other composer" may have been. He is popular, but not noted. So, of course, it was not Guilmant. The works of the unnamed composer in question are apt to begin with what may best be described as a splurge. Then there comes a violin-like melody for the right hand, accompanied in pianistic style by the accommodating left hand, and later is heard the ponderous finale, "choir," "great" and "swell" combining in questionable accord.

The American Conservatory has just issued its new catalogue, which is attractive in appearance and valuable in contents. At this school of musical and dramatic art the plan of education is of a most advanced and comprehensive description, being so arranged as to meet the individual requirements of its many students. Instruction is given by a carefully selected faculty, comprising about sixty teachers, a number of whom are persons of national reputation. New and important additions to this enthusiastic and skillful force of instructors have recently been made. The director, John J. Hattstaedt, who, with his family, has been traveling in Europe this summer, will return on September 3, in time to preside at the opening of the school's season. During his absence the conservatory's apartments in Kimball Hall have been in the hands of the decorators, who have done their work effectively. The fall term begins on Monday, September 9.

"Comrades," a comedy in three acts, will be presented by the Auditorium Conservatory's School of Acting on September 19.

An important addition to the Auditorium Conservatory's faculty is Julius Herner, whose ability as a 'cello instructor is widely indorsed.

Herman L. Walker, of the above conservatory's vocal department, arrives in Chicago this week from Boston, and Miss Beatrix Peixotto, another vocal instructor at the same institution, will return from Lake Geneva, Wis., on September 1. Other teachers who resume duties this week are Philip A. Laffey, Elsbeth Korrer, Adele Wooster and Myrtle Moss Mericle. John Lane O'Connor, of the dramatic department, recently visited Los Angeles, Cal.

Miss Mary M. Shedd, of this city, has recently delivered lectures on "The American Method of Singing" at the University of Chicago, before the Woman's Club, La Grange, Ill., and at Waukegan, Ill., several of her pupils being present to illustrate her ideas. At her studio in the Auditorium Building Miss Shedd is teaching a very large class of pupils, and she has accepted a number of important engagements to give lectures on "The American Method of Singing." Further accounts of the extensive work which she is accomplishing will be found in future issues of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Charles R. Baker's new circular, announcing the artists whom he will present to the public during the season 1901-1902, is comprehensive and interesting, being characteristic of the artistic progress which is making itself felt in the West. It is attractively designed, portraits of the following artists gracing its pages: William H. Sherwood, Esther Feé, Electa Gifford, Bruno Steindel, Mabelle Crawford, Leone Langdon Key, Glenn Hall, Clara Murray and Sidney Lloyd Wrightson. Evidently Mr. Baker is not indifferent to the influence of arts other than music, for literary quotations embellish this welcome publication, which may be had for the asking.

Miss Mabelle Crawford, contralto, has returned from Bay View, Mich., and her manager states that she will have a busy season, her services being in demand, especially for oratorio performances.

Glenn Hall, the tenor, has been engaged for several October appearances in Colorado. Mr. Hall will sing in Denver on October 17.

William H. Sherwood returns from Chautauqua, N. Y., to Chicago on September 9. He will then resume teaching in this city, his classes in piano interpretation beginning on September 12. Mr. Sherwood has been engaged to appear at concerts which will be given at Boone and Cresco, Ia. He will visit these places on his way to Texas and the Southwest in November.

Mrs. Arthur Middleton Barnhart, pianist, of this city, is to be congratulated upon the enthusiasm which her playing aroused this summer at the Chautauqua (N. Y.) Assembly. Mrs. Barnhart is one of William H. Sherwood's most talented pupils. Last year she made a successful public appearance in Paris, France.

Another Chicagoan whose work was thoroughly appreciated this season at Chautauqua is Prof. S. H. Clark, who gave three series of "Interpretative Recitals" on "Poetry as a Fine Art."

To the list of pianists who appeared successfully in America last season the name of Mary Wood Chase, of this city, unquestionably belongs. Miss Chase is now successfully managing her own engagements, and her prospects, both as concert pianist and instructor, are exceedingly gratifying. Like many another eminent Chicago musician, she has wisely selected for the scene of her activity a studio in the Fine Arts Building.

While this is an age of "specialties," versatility still claims recognition. Possessed of more than one natural gift is Carrie Woods Bush, of the Fine Arts Building. Miss Bush is a writer of ability and a competent musician.

Mrs. Luella Clark Emery, pianist and accompanist, appeared successfully this summer at Chautauqua, Spirit Lake, Ia., and also at the Marinette (Wis.) Chautauqua

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Wells have just returned from a summer vacation spent at Lake Beulah, Wis. Mr. Wells is greeted by numerous recital engagements, and he has a large class of pupils awaiting him at the American Conservatory. Mrs. Wells likewise has many pupils, and her professional duties have increased to such an extent that she is about to occupy a more commodious studio in the Fine Arts Building.

For the past two seasons Maurice Aronson has instructed a class of pupils at Freeport, Ill., on Wednesday of each week, and his efforts have met with such excellent results that he will resume teaching there on September 4. In Freeport this musician is highly esteemed, his influence having been beneficial.

Miss Electa Gifford has been secured by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for concerts on December 20 and 21. This gifted soprano was recently offered by New York managers a fifteen weeks' engagement as the principal member of a prominent concert company, but she was obliged to decline this proposition, owing to the engagements which have been arranged by her present manager.

Chicago musicians will regretfully learn the sad news, which reached this city yesterday, when a personal letter was received stating that Frederick Archer, the well-known Pittsburg organist, is very seriously ill at his summer home in New Hampshire.

Mrs. George A. Coe, pianist and musical lecturer, of Evanston, Ill., has been spending the summer vacation at Alameda, Cal.

A sumptuous revival of George H. Booker's poetic tragedy, "Francesca da Rimini," is being presented at the Grand Opera House, in this city, by Otis Skinner and his company. The latter includes Aubrey Boucicault, William Norris, Frederick von Rensselar, Walter Lewis and Marcia Van Dresser.

Next week several changes will be made in the "King Dodo" cast at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, William Pruette being succeeded by Edward A. Clarke and Maude Odell by Greta Risley, while Miro Delamotta, the original Pedro, will again assume the leading tenor role. The fifteenth week will be inaugurated on Monday night, September 2, when the 115th consecutive performance will take place.

Musicians in this city deplore the sudden and tragic death on August 21 of Miss Pearl M. Ball, an exceptionally talented young Western composer, whose works, including the "Dance of the Dryads," won popularity and praise. Miss Ball was also a pianist of ability. The pallbearers at her funeral yesterday are all prominent in musical circles, their names being Henry W. Newton, Claude A. Cunningham, Edward C. Rowdon, Elmer Depue and Charles R. Baker.

The Pittsburg Orchestra's manager, George H. Wilson, will arrive in this city to-morrow, his purpose being to confer with Charles R. Baker regarding the Western tour of that oganization, which will probably visit Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and Lincoln.

For some weeks to come the Chicago concert season of 1901-1902 will be a thing of the future.

SOUSA IN LONDON.—Sousa's first concert in London will be on October 30 in Albert Hall. An enormous attendance is expected.

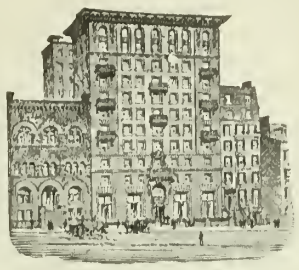
ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

Boston Music Notes.



Hotel Bellevue,
17 Beacon Street,
Boston, August 31, 1901.

Mme. Etta Edwards is again in Boston after a most delightful trip abroad. She spent the greater part of her time at the American National Institute, near Paris, which is under the supervision of Miss Smedley and Count von Daur. Madame Edwards met nearly all the prominent French composers, attended many receptions and teas, interviewed publishers, in fact devoted her stay in Paris to the subject of music—new compositions, for even the social side was arranged with a view to her meeting prominent musical people of the Paris world. Owing to exceptional opportunities, Madame Edwards has brought home a rare selection of music, comprising the best of the modern as well as the older schools of France, Italy, England and Russia, so that those of her students who desire to study repertory will have a remarkable opportunity. A week spent in London was given up to music publishers and concerts, of which there was an unusual quantity, it being just in the height of the season. Madame Edwards having lived in Paris for some time and made yearly trips since her return to settle permanently in Boston, she has a large circle of friends and acquaintances in that city. She is always studying for the best to impart to her pupils, and her success as a teacher is thoroughly well established. The concert given by eleven of her pupils last spring was one of the most noteworthy ever given in this city.

Madame Edwards will open her studio in the Steinert Building the coming week, a large number of engagements having already been made.

The Faelten Pianoforte School is now in the process of removing to its new building, where it will be settled and established early in the coming week. The school opens about the middle of September.

Very few of the teachers have returned to the city as yet, but on Tuesday it is expected there will be a large number at their studios after the Monday holiday.

Before leaving Cohassett Miss Aagot Lunde and her sister, Mrs. Sigrid Lunde-Souther, gave a concert, which was largely attended by all the society people of that place. The concert was under the patronage of Mrs. T. B. Williams, who received many expressions of appreciation from the delighted audience. The Boston Globe of the 18th says: "Those who were present at the recital could not but have been impressed by the personality of these two sisters. Differing remotely in their personal attributes, a difference that was accentuated by their individual dress, the infectious rippling exuberance of the Norwegian folksong as sung by Miss Lunde was rivaled by the deliciously sympathetic rendering of Tosti's 'Ninon' by Mrs. Souther. Nor by this is it meant to contrast the vocal performance of either, for on the one hand the plaintive, weird little melody of Nevin's 'Rosary' won for Miss Lunde unstinted applause, while the airy Japanese love song of Clayton Johns, as given by Mrs. Souther, was equally well received."

Miss Lunde has returned to her apartment at Trinity Court.

A letter from Adah Campbell Hussey, dated Kingussie, Scotland, announces her return early in September. Miss Hussey made a two weeks' tour through England when first arriving there, then went to London, where she studied with Georg Henschel until his departure for the country after the close of the London season. Her work with him has been close and constant, and among the works studied are Bach's "Passion of St. Matthew," Bruch's "Odysseus," "Samson and Delilah," &c. While in London Miss Hussey sang at Sir Alma Tadema's, Mr. Henschel playing her accompaniments. At the last musical given by the Henschels before leaving London, the "Liederspiel," by Mr. Henschel, was sung, Miss Henschel, soprano; Miss Hussey, contralto; Mr. Lewandowski, tenor, and Haydn Bailey, bass; Mr. Henschel at the piano. At Kingussie Miss Hussey sang at a concert early in August and was to appear again on the 28th.

While in London Miss Hussey entertained at dinner a party of Bostonians, Norman McLeod, Arthur Beresford, Miss Janet Spencer, Miss Pauline Woltman and Miss Anna Lohbiller.

Mme. Etta Edwards was also entertained at dinner by Miss Hussey. After a visit to Edinburgh and Glasgow Miss Hussey will sail for home.

Miss Pauline Cushing, pupil of Mme. Etta Edwards, has been elected to take charge of the department of vocal music at Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass. Miss Cushing was graduated from this institution in 1891, she receiving the first honor for scholarship.

Emil Paur, formerly conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give four orchestral concerts in Symphony Hall the coming season, between November and April. He will conduct his own symphony orchestra of seventy musicians, who will devote the entire winter to a series of concerts in New York and various parts of the country. Original and novel programs, made up in part of works rarely heard in Boston, will be an element of the greatest interest. At these concerts Madame Nordica will be heard for the only time, and Fritz Kreisler for the first time with orchestra. Other soloists are to be the new pianist, Zeldenrust; Arthur Hochmann, the brilliant baritone; Sydney Biden and Emil Fischer, besides artists to be announced later.

Genius Is Sometimes Blind.—It is a fact, which is recognized by physiologists and others, that the deprivation of one sense renders the other senses preternaturally acute. There have been famous blind musicians—pianists, singers and violinists; of the latter, however, only a few. Every blind violinist either plays in tune all the time or out of tune all the time. His intonation is habitually true or false. If a blind violinist possess talent for music, and his ear has been trained carefully, he will not play out of tune; he simply cannot.

The most notable example illustrating this principle is William Worth Bailey, a young man of twenty-two, who was born blind. Notwithstanding the deprivation of one of the most important of his senses, he has become a master violinist. He has achieved the stupendous task of memorizing some seventy-five of the standard works for the violin.

Although a native, young Bailey has never been heard in the United States. He will make his first tour next season under the management of Robert E. Johnston, who has conducted the tours of many of the violinists who have visited this country within the past decade.

National Institute of Music.—This institution, of which William M. Semnacher is the director, will resume operations next Monday, when the fall session will begin. During the summer Mr. Semnacher has resided at Rockaway Park, and has taught a few of his most advanced pupils. So well pleased is Mr. Semnacher with this summer resort that he has bought several lots, upon which he will build a large residence. It is Mr. Semnacher's purpose to conduct a summer school of music at Rockaway Park, beginning about June 1 of next year.

Ernst Bauer, chief of the violin department of the National Institute of Music, who has been abroad since last June, will return to New York September 25.

Hattie Scholder in Demand.—Samuel Eppinger is receiving from all parts of the country inquiries about his remarkable young pupil, Hattie Scholder, and already he has made some important bookings. It is likely that Miss Scholder will make an extended tour this season, playing in most of the cities in the East, South and West. Negotiations are now under way which will doubtless result in her appearing in connection with the symphony orchestras in New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago. The indications are that little Miss Scholder will be known from ocean to ocean before the coming season ends.

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
Address: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
First American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
DATES NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager, 444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA
Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.
Re-engaged for New England Festivals.
(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).
Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.
Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.
Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

The Paris Figaro has published a series of the mottoes of celebrated artists. Calvé's is "Mieux vaut brises son cœur que le former," while Nevada piously displays "J'ai foi." Max Bouvet writes "Bien faire et laisser dire," while Louise Theo rejoices in "Toujours la même," and Mathilde de Capronne is content with "My will be done" She must be a terror to her managers.

The Philharmonic Society of Laibach, founded in 1702, at present under the direction of Josef Zöhrer, begins next season with a festival to celebrate the 200th anniversary of its establishment. An interesting prologue is promised, but not yet published.

A new music paper appears in Hamburg. It is called The Zither, and hopes to be the organ of all the zither societies in Germany. In a leading article it says that good temper is the characteristic of all zither players, and recommends for its preservation a special brand of cigars, which will elevate the "stimmung" and strengthen the mind.

Emil Sauer as director of the piano school branch of the Vienna Conservatory will receive a salary of 14,000 crowns and the title of Imperial Royal Professor, while the other teachers receive their professional title from the conservatory simply. The appointment of Emil Sauer caused the resignation of the piano professors named in our Berlin letter last week, and their example has been followed by Jos. Hellmesberger and Stage Manager Stoll.

Julius Stockhausen, an old pupil of Manuel Garcia, lately celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday. His friends presented him with a gold medal, and Garcia, who is now nearing his century, warmly congratulated him.

Otto Schelper, of the Leipsic Opera, has celebrated the fortieth year of his public appearance, and the twenty-fifth of his engagement at Leipsic. In addition to crowns of laurels he received the more sensible and substantial present of 70,000 marks from the subscribers and patrons of the opera house.

The Leipsic Theatre will give next season a one act opera (unpublished) entitled "The Shade of Werther," by A. Randegger. It has just produced with success an operetta, "The Débutante," by A. Zamara.

Felia Litvinne is engaged for four months at the Monnaie of Brussels, to sing in "Tristan," "Walküre," "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser" and "Götterdämmerung." In April she will sing in the last named piece at Paris.

Berlin in the coming season will have two new organizations devoted to symphonic music. Richard Strauss, with an orchestra of 100 members, will give a series of concerts, consisting exclusively of modern music, and mainly of unpublished works. In the series will be presented in chronological order all the symphonic works of Franz Liszt. The other enterprise, by Herr Einödshofer, will offer a series of programs devoted to "easy, amusing and piquant" music. It seems like a resuscitated Bilse.

A short time ago lovers of singing at Moscow were thrown into a state of great excitement, having heard that a songstress like Adelina Patti had been discovered among the laundresses of the ancient Muscovite capital. It turned out that the individual in question did really possess a marvelously sweet voice, but her chances of rivaling the great artist had disappeared. She is already thirty-five years of age, so that she is too old to have her voice trained. Still, she might have proved an excellent singer for the chorus, and a rich patron was ready to send her to the conservatoire, and meanwhile to endow her with a sufficient income Unhappily all these plans were frustrated by the lady's spouse, who stubbornly asserted that a woman who went to the conservatoire was of no use for ever afterward. The husband was obdurate and refused to yield, and so the world will hear nothing more of this diva of the blanchisseuses.

It is stated that Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was used for the first time at an actual marriage ceremony on the occasion of the wedding of the late Empress Frederick in 1858; and that Wagner's "Bridal March," in "Lohengrin," also had a hearing at a state concert during the same week—most likely for the first time in connection with a royal marriage ceremony.

HAROLD BAUER, ETC.

LONDON, August 21, 1901.

THE eminent master of the piano, Harold Bauer, has just been engaged for a series of concerts at Biarritz, San Sebastian, Santander and other North Spanish cities. In all these cities Bauer was received with enthusiasm last season and these are re-engagements.

The English engagements of Harold Bauer have already been announced in your columns, but it may be added that prior to his departure for America to begin his next tour he will play no less than twenty times in this country if no more than the present engagements are booked. But more bookings are sure to take place.

The promenade concerts at Queen's Hall open next Saturday night, August 24. I inclose herewith Robert Newman's preliminary circular:

QUEEN'S HALL,
LANGHAM PLACE, W., August 16, 1901.
PROMENADE CONCERTS.

DEAR SIR—I have the pleasure to inform you that the program for the opening night of the promenade concerts on Saturday evening, 24th inst., will be:

Funeral March.....Chopin
(In memoriam of the late Empress of Germany.)
Capriccio Italien.....Tschaikowsky
Overture, Oberon.....Weber
Two Hungarian Dances.....Brahms
Scherzo, from A Midsummer Night's Dream.....Mendelssohn
Overture, William Tell.....Rossini
Grand Fantaisie, Cavalleria Rusticana.....Mascagni
Hungarian March, Faust.....Berlioz

Vocalists, Mme. Amy Sherwin, Miss Jessie Goldsack, Gregory Hast; solo violin, Madame Von Stosch; solo 'cello, Jacques Renard; solo bassoon, E. F. James, solo cornet, Arthur Smith.

On Monday the first portion of the program will be composed of Wagner items, with Madame Sobrino and Mr. Ludwig as vocalists.

On Tuesday the program will be of a popular character, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood will make her first appearance at the promenade concerts, also Herr Wilhelm Backhaus, the pianist.

Wednesday's program will include Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique" and "Casse-Noisette" Suite.

Thursday—Overture, "Rienzi"; Prelude Act III., "Lohengrin"; German's "Three Dances from Henry VIII.," and other popular items.

Friday—Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, overtures "Egmont" and "Leonora," No. 3.

During the promenade concert season I intend giving opportunities to several new vocalists and solo instrumentalists, and also to members of my orchestra.

The portion of the grand circle to be set aside for non-smokers will be the section of seats on the right-hand side of the centre doors, between doors E and F.

During the vacation the interior of the hall has been cleaned throughout, and the organ not only cleaned but some important alterations and improvements made by Messrs. Hill & Son.

Yours faithfully, ROBERT NEWMAN.

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

MRS. Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
6 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

CINCINNATI, August 31, 1901.

THE Cambrian Club, under the direction of David Davis, tendered a reception and concert to Maldwyn Evans last Monday in their rooms in the College Building. It was a farewell to Mr. Evans previous to his departure for Wales, his native country, where he has fallen heir to a considerable fortune. Mr. Evans, besides having a very fine tenor voice, is a hail fellow well met and exceedingly popular among his fellows, who wished him well on his good fortune and a bon voyage. An elaborate program was performed. Among the selections rendered by the club were: "Let Mirth and Joy Now Reign," Parry; "To the Sons of Art," Mendelssohn; "Pilgrims' Chorus," Parry. Llewelyn Evans recited "The Land Lubber's Revenge," and Geo. H. Singer "Cheer Up! the Villagers are Approaching." Wm. H. Winkelman sang "Bon Voyage and Safe Return," by Davis, and "Calm Sea and a Flowing Sail," by Bishop. Edward J. Jones and Maldwyn Evans also contributed selections. The souvenirs were printed on white satin, bearing the picture of Mr. Evans. Mr. Evans, after settling up the estate, will return to Cincinnati.

Miss Clara and Miss Bertha Baur are gone for a short trip North. They spent a few days in Chicago, and are at present at Bay Port, Mich.

Oscar J. Ehrgott has returned from a short trip to Put-in-Bay. He will probably sing at one of the afternoon or evening entertainments of the coming fall festival.

One of the features of the fall festival will be a chorus of 1,000 voices, under the direction of Prof. A. J. Boex. It is said they will sing an arrangement of the Andante of the Fifth Symphony to the Easter anthem, "The Lord Is Risen." Ye gods, save us from the sacrilege!

Sidney Durst is mentioned as the successor of Mr. Andrés in the position of organist at the Manuel Street Temple. He is said to have been recommended by Mr. Andrés himself. Mr. Durst would be well fitted for the duties of the position. He is at present organist and choir director of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral. He studied abroad, principally under Rheinberger.

Prof. Cary W. Grimm has completed his second volume of "Modern Harmony," and it will soon be published.

Edward Ebert-Buchheim, formerly of the College of Music, now of the Central Normal College, Danville, Ind., recently played with much success at Terre Haute and Indianapolis of the Hoosier State.

Mrs. Dunsmore and her son, Malcolm, is in the East for a short vacation.

Hugo Sederberg, pianist and organist of the Conservatory of Music, is East on a month's vacation.

J. A. HOMAN.

THE MOZART ALBUM.

IN the house in Salzburg where Mozart spent his childhood there are carefully preserved four portfolios. They are bound in black covers, and contain sheets decorated with gold. On each sheet is some famous name inscribed in homage to Salzburg's greatest son.

One of the portfolios contains exclusively the inscriptions of emperors, kings and princes and their celebrated heroes. In a bold handwriting, which was almost entirely across the whole wide page, is the autograph "Wilhelm I., Imp. Rex," and the two pages that come next display the names of Bismarck and Moltke. The leaves on which appear the signatures of the Emperor of Austria, the Crown Prince Rudolf and the Crown Princess Stefanie are richly decorated. Two poetic odes by Ludwig I. of Bavaria and Oscar II. of Sweden express their admiration of the composer's genius, and the dedication, "In memory and honor of Germany's great tone poet, this page is subscribed by Wilhelm Duke of Brunswick, January 1, 1878," reminds us of a peculiar epoch and a peculiar prince. King Albert of Saxony writes "Providential memor," and the words "Fideliter et constanter" express the regard for Mozart felt by Ernest Duke of Saxe Altenburg and Ernest Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha. Leaf follows leaf, each exhibiting some princely name, and it is pleasant to notice that the great men of this world have given time and thought to adorning a work prepared in honor of a man who never won a battle or been an intriguing diplomat; if he had been perhaps he would not have died in poverty.

Every important theatre, every great composer of all countries are represented in these volumes; neither the Opera House of Berlin, nor the National Theatre of Agram, nor Richard Wagner nor Franz Liszt nor Massenet nor Delibes are absent.

And by men of the pen what noble tributes are to be read in these pages! It is as if a breath of the greatness and beauty of Mozart had inspired them as they expressed their feelings for genius.

Thoroughly Mozart and thoroughly Scheffel is the dedication:

"With childlike naïveté, in tender and powerful harmony to tone, nearer to the revelation of the divine in our planet than many famous sages of the world, our Wolfgang Amadeus only charmed and touched his contempararies, never depressed or wearied them. Hail to every artist who thus completes the earthly pilgrimage to God!"

Rosegger writes: "I measure great artists only by the feelings, hence I know no words to express my love and honor for Mozart."

Auerbach's page is characteristic of the philosophical, warm hearted nature of the poet from the Black Forest: "If everyone told what and how Mozart has been to him, it would be a thought symphony beyond comparison. Next to Goethe and Spinoza, I owe to Mozart during my whole life the grandest elevation and pacification of the soul. I have in many of my writings repeatedly but never adequately attempted to give expression to my grateful feelings. One of my earliest and deepest recollections of youth is that I heard the melody from 'Titus' (lasst Glück, lasst Schmerz uns theilen) sung in my native village, as the text of an Easter hymn in the synagogue, and that I often sang it in field and forest. Who can fathom what is awakened in a youthful soul by such a breath of a far off parted genius? Not till later years did I learn the name of the creator of the melody."

Eduard Bauernfeld breaks into poetry and writes:

So wollt ein Plätzchen uns gewähren,
Den Epigonen die den Genius verehren.

Roderick Benedix devotes to the memory of Mozart a poem which shows that the dramatist was a skillful writer of occasional poetry. The last strophe may be condensed into, "If care and sorrow rule anywhere, if sad misfortune has to be helped, then comes the song modestly before us and begs us to listen, and thus drives away grief. This is the power of song, of German song, so let us hold it fast with faithful heart."

Gustav Freitag is content with quoting from his "Fabians": "The resolute will that ventures to grasp what brings deliverance compels the worst of fates, for help lives for all."

E. C. Brehens writes: "National history is a contribution to the knowledge of man, for it springs from or returns to man."

Heinrich Vogl is practical: "Let the singer's chief struggle be to bring the notes to expression as they were actually prescribed by the composer."

Vogl was not only one of the greatest Wagner singers but also one of the best Mozart singers. In reply to a request from the Mozarteum, Madame Marchesi wrote:

"The very thing, sir, on which you lay great stress and which is the foundation of singing, is neglected by all the present teachers, or rather they have not studied th

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. A Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New Yo

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1158.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe St

female voice and begin with the end, that is, with studying lieder, arias and the like. Every voice has its own peculiarities, and although there are strict rules, yet there are exceptions and every voice must be treated according to its individual character."

The following page, in the form of a letter, reveals the misery and the delicacy of a composer who is appreciated too late.

"To the Provisional Committee of the International Mozart Foundation: As, in consequence of an incurable disease of the ear, I am myself in the sad position of being compelled to receive assistance from strangers, it is repugnant to my feelings to sign with my name an appeal that primarily contemplates a benefit fund. Under other circumstances I should reckon it a great honor for me to forward your noble project with all the means at my disposal. DR. ROB. FRANZ.

Many pages professing to do homage to Mozart read like a protest against the reformation embodied and culminating in Richard Wagner.

One of the greatest of these protesters is C. M. Ritter, formerly Prussian Minister of Finance, who has gained reputation as an historian of music and biographer of Bach. His page relates: "On April 22 of the year 1788 the motet with double chorus of the great master whose simple life I have written, 'Sing to the Lord a new song,' was performed before Mozart on the organ of St. Thomas' Church at Leipsic as a surprise by the pupils. Mozart was ravished with the beauty and magnificence of this work and spent several hours over the study of the remaining Bach motets." To this he rather illogically adds: "He, the greatest of all, was not of the opinion that the Germans if they wished to have a national art had to follow other paths than those of earnest study, of respect for the great masters of the past and of recognizing what artistic beauty demands in form and content."

Emanuel Geibel writes poetically: "The world may for a brief time lose the taste for simple beauty, yet in the long run it will not worship what is unnatural. It will push onward, homeward to the summit crowned by genuine laurels—

And with rapture hears again
Goethe's words and Mozart's strain.

The most characteristic of the protest against Wagner comes from the Berlin Opera House. The late Intendant Von Hülsen openly proclaimed in the period of the Wagner movement his devotion to the old school, and therefore the following lines are no surprise: "Mozart's never to be forgotten creations, 'Don Juan,' 'The Marriage of Figaro' and 'The Magic Flute,' are the music of all times, and therefore the true 'Music of the Future.' —Berlin, June 11, 1879. Von Hülsen, Ferdinand von Strantz, Mathilde Mallinger, Vilma von Voggerhaber, August Fricke, Franz Krolop, Robert Radecke, Marianne Brandt, Salomon."

Two great artists once the glories of the Royal Opera House, Albert Niemann and Franz Betz, are naturally not among the signers of this page.

One page in the Mozart album bears the name of Von Hülsen alone: "You are no better when you are praised nor worse than when you are despised."

ALFRED HOLZBOCK.

LAKE GEORGE.

A SUMMER sojourn on the shores and mountains of this most beautiful of American lakes has forced upon me a rather unwelcome bit of philosophy, to wit: that hope and disappointment, fortune and misfortune, are reciprocal sentiments and conditions. Where there is light there also is intervening shade; and in the train of these beauties and delights of Lake George one must note the interchangeable, inverse conditions which follow.

After enjoying the charm and quietude for a fortnight and feeling full sympathy for those who were held by the thraldom of duty in our heat stricken cities, I was minded of my obligation to devote at least the interval of a few hours to your far reaching columns. Moved by this enterprising thought and equipped with pencil and tab, I reclined for many idle hours in the alluring hammock. I found myself face to face with the same proposition which baffled the boy when he first attempted to write an essay—"Let's see; what shall I say?" and I could not get beyond the preamble of the unskilled letter writer: "I now take my pen in hand." Of course, there were many fruitful themes for discourse—Chromatic vs. Diatonic Harmony; Counterpoint as it is written, not as it is prescribed; Richard Strauss' Leider; the New Italy; Russia's Awakening, &c. But how could I write of these facts and problems when nature had thrown her magic spell about me and claimed my every thought? The cooling air, scented with the breath of flowers, of clover and new mown hay and mountain pine, might inspire a composer to create, but not a theorist to dissect, an art work. And what the eyes behold is still more fascinating. The ever varying lights and shadows play in perspective upon the surface of the lake, and lend to it the charm if "infinite variety." To describe these surroundings and experiences would require the skill and fancy of a poet, which I do not possess.

The last report of the New York State Historical Society furnishes many interesting bits of information concerning the early settlers in and around Lake George, the battles on land and water, the development of the surrounding country, &c. The narrative covers a period of about 200 years and seems quite venerable in comparison with San Francisco, Fresno and even Chicago.

Several well-known New York musicians make their summer homes here. Professor Federlein and Professor Huss (father of Henry Holden) have cottages near the lake. Last week I paid my compliments to H. G. Thunder, the famous Philadelphia organist, who with Mrs. Thunder is passing the season near the head of the lake, on the Eastern shore.

During my last drive to Glens Falls I heard that the organ of the First Presbyterian Church had been placed at Mr. Thunder's disposal, so that he might have a little practice for his recital at the Pan-American Exposition.

A trolley line of cars is now running from Glens Falls to the head of Lake George (Caldwell) and thence over the mountains to Warrensburgh. The management of this road have purchased the large Fort William Henry Hotel at Caldwell, the Otis Inclined Railroad to the tip of Prospect Mountain and other properties, and to incite travel over their road they have imported several variety shows of poor quality. The final result will be that in a few years more the grand solitudes and rustic beauty of Warren County will have been destroyed by cheap inventions and the pranks of rowdies. And all this degeneracy will be classed, with similar evils, as the progress of civilization!

A. J. GOODRICH.

ROYAL CONSERVATORY OF DRESDEN.—The Royal Conservatory of Music and Theatre at Dresden, Germany, with the opening of its fall term this month, begins its forty-eighth year. It is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the world, and its instructors and faculty comprise some of the most noted in the musical profession.

This institution has long been famous for the instruction offered in the study of piano and string instruments, its instructors being among the foremost members of the Royal Symphony Orchestra, and no less attention has been given to its departments for the study of voice and the opera. It is a frequent occurrence for a pupil to be engaged from the conservatory by one of the Royal Court Opera intendency.

E. A. Leopold, of New Haven, the well-known singing master, in their American representative. Communications should be addressed to him.

E. A. LEOPOLD COMPLETES HIS TOUR.—E. A. Leopold, the well-known vocal instructor, has just returned from an extended tour to the Pacific Coast. He gave recitals at San Francisco and at Los Angeles, and returning home by way of Oregon and Washington, spent a week at Yellowstone Park. Mr. Leopold has traveled much in Europe and this country, and maintains he has never seen such grandeur of scenery and so many unique features as are found in this wonderland of America. He resumes his classes in New Haven this week and in Hartford, where he devotes three days each week to pupils, next Monday. Mr. Leopold makes a feature of non-resident pupils, a specialty of his being to prepare pupils for further study abroad. His success has been very remarkable in his crowded field.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,

SOPRANO,

Dramatic and Coloratura.

CONCERT and ORATORIO
REPERTOIRE.

Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.

Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, August 26, 1901.

SAN FRANCISCO has been undergoing a "hot spell" this last few days, though an Eastern lady who overheard a 'Frisco native complain of the heat one day said in surprise: "What, you don't call this warm?" Still it has been quite tropical enough to sap one's energy and make "dolce far niente" the prevailing theme.

The good work at the Tivoli Opera House goes merrily on, however, and the heat does not keep the crowds at home. Fortunately in "God's country" the nights are cool, and whatever the day has been the moment old Sol puts on his nightcap the weather changes accordingly.

Samuel Adelstein, the mandolinist, has issued an attractive treatise on the mandolin and its nearest of kin in the plectrum family, under the title of "Mandolin Memoirs." It is published in paper covers of dark pastel green, ornamented in red and gold. It is profusely illustrated, and for frontispiece has a photograph of the author and his autograph signature.

A recent letter from Paris states that Hugo Mansfeldt positively sails for home on November 10. That Mr. Mansfeldt's friends will be glad to welcome him home again goes without saying. He has been greatly missed. Mrs. Mansfeldt will remain in Europe some months longer before following her husband homeward across the Big Pond.

Percy A. R. Dow has returned from his camping trip in the Redwoods, much refreshed and quite ready to take up the season's work, which with Mr. Dow is no sinecure, as his "pupils' evenings" and afternoon recitals, which were so popular last year, will be repeated this season with added features of interest, and these are only a part of Mr. Dow's plan for the coming season's duties. He reports some excellent new voices who have engaged for tuition and a prosperous outlook for the year.

Elizabeth Westgate, much to the delight of the Unitarians in Alameda, has arranged her other engagements, so that she can still officiate as organist at the Unitarian Church for the vesper services in the afternoon, which last year her untiring efforts made so popular.

Miss Marion Bear, whose good playing at the piano recital a year ago upon her return from Europe placed her at once in the front ranks among pianists in 'Frisco, is seriously contemplating another recital to be given in the near future, though as yet time and place are not fixed upon for a certainty. So favorable an impression was created by her really artistic work on the last occasion of her public appearance, however, that the prospect of hearing her again will be welcomed, and warmly, by all music lovers.

The Minetti String Quartet is promised us for the coming season, with new numbers—quite as fine a musical menu as was dished up to us last season, and for which our appetites were keenly whetted by the very superior quality of the work then given. The members of the quartet are all artists and under Mr. Minetti's leadership gave a series of afternoon and evening concerts that were largely attended and exceedingly popular. I hope to have more to say in this connection ere long.

It has been told me on good authority and at first hand that financial backing is promised for a first-class school of music, which will be under the directorship of one of our first musicians, and will be able to compete with institutions of the same class in the East. It may be some little time before the plans are perfected for carrying out the work, but it is surely the harbinger of growth and broadening out of our too narrow musical life here, and everything that points to the development in the musical line, or, in fact, any reaching out for the development of art in any branch, should be welcomed with enthusiasm. We are too narrow—we know it—therefore let us "evolute" all we possibly can and help others to do so wherever and whenever the opportunity offers.

I notice that Katherine Ruth Heyman is booked under Loudon G. Charlton for a tour through the United States this season. I hope with all my heart Mr. Charlton finds it profitable to bring Miss Heyman to 'Frisco, for there are many people in this part of the country who remember her as a girl of wonderful ability and fully developed artistic temperament even before she went to Europe to finish. Music under her father's supervision had always been a part of her daily growth and a matter not to be slighted for any consideration whatever. In Sacramento, where she was born and reared, she was familiarly known as "Kittie Heyman," and at one time was editor-in-chief of the high school paper, the name of which slips my memory at this time. Her return to her native haunts even for a season would be hailed with delight by many, many old friends.

Little Irene Goudey, a pupil of Joseph Beringer, of the Beringer Conservatory, San Francisco, recently played at an entertainment in San José, given by the "Vendome Parlor" of Native Daughters in that city. In writing of the entertainment the San José Daily Mercury speaks of the piano playing of the little seven year old tot as being "wonderful for so small a child."

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Rebecca MacKenzie in the West.—Miss Rebecca MacKenzie, the successful soprano pupil of Madame Ohrstrom-Renard, the noted Swedish singer and teacher of this city, recently gave a song recital in Duluth, Minn., with remarkable success, being greeted by a large audience. The Duluth News-Tribune of July 22 speaks of her concert as follows:

Miss MacKenzie has verified the predictions of her most ardent friends. The young woman was royally received when she made her bow in the crowded Lyceum last evening. She was enthusiastically greeted at each entrance. She opened the program with the beautiful aria from Gounod's "Mirella," which difficult number she sang with exquisite expression and power. At her next appearance she sang "Lorelei," from Liszt; Hahn's "Si mes vers" and Grondahl's "My Heart's Queen." The melodious Hindoo song from Bemberg and Dvorák's "Songs My Mother Taught Me" were well sung, but the young artist captured her friends entirely when she sang for them the "auld Scotch sangs." "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" was a special favorite. "I Lo'e Na Laddie But Ane" was rapturously applauded and "When the Kye Comes Hame" evoked an encore that amounted to an ovation.

Miss MacKenzie's voice is of splendid range, full, mellow and clear as a bell, and was in excellent condition last evening.

Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE. RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
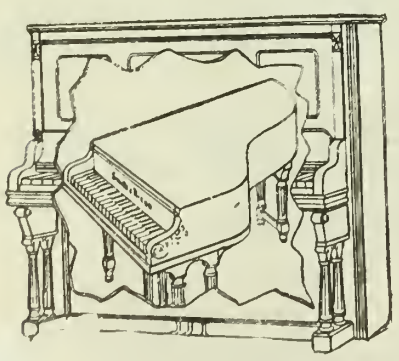
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathe
Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Sp and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N.
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YOR

Fletcher Music Method.

MRS. EVELYN A. FLETCHER-COPP has just returned to her residence in Brookline, Mass., from Buffalo, where she had a large and most successful class during the summer.

The class consisted of twenty-eight members: Miss Margaretta E. Stephens, Owen Sound, Canada; Mrs. R. H. Peardon, Kamloops, Canada; Miss Margaret L. Hambleton, Willink, N. Y.; Mrs. Margaret Clerihew, Kingston, Canada; Miss Helen M. Muckleston, Toronto, Canada; Miss Ethelwyn Drake, Bay City, Mich.; Miss Anna E. Proudfoot, London, Canada; Miss Ida L. Cleland, Cardinal, Canada; Miss Sally Hardin, Crockett, Tex.; Mrs. Virginia E. Hammond, Anderson, S. C.; Miss Effie Graham Hall, Corsicana, Tex.; Miss Laureen McGregor, Chicago, Ill.; Miss Lucie M. Howell, Hanover, Canada; Mrs. C. A. Grand, Sherman, Tex.; Miss Olive Bradshaw, Kingston, Canada; Miss Helen M. Macfarlane, St. Catharines, Canada; Miss Louise Colborne, Goderich, Canada; Miss Vivler E. Wilson, Fenelon Falls, Ontario, Canada; Mrs. Sally Woods Austin, Warren, Ohio; Miss Ivy M. Ash, Milwaukee, Wis.; Miss Helena G. Mitchell, Waterloo, Canada; Miss Agnes C. Bryan, Hartford, Conn.; Miss Sarah Cryster, Niagara Falls, Canada; Miss Lottie E. A. McLean, Todmorden, Canada; Miss Theresa A. Palmer, Toronto, Canada; Miss Clara S. Stambach, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. Lucella S. Sullivan, Rochester, N. Y.; Miss Amanda Snapp, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. Fletcher-Copp has received a large number of enthusiastic letters from music teachers who have studied with her, and who have been teaching the Fletcher music method for some time, two of which are reproduced.

GUELPH, Ont.

I have taught the Fletcher music method now for about three years with increasing satisfaction as to results. It has helped me wonderfully, not only directly with my junior pupils, but in broadening and deepening all my work, and solving many knotty problems of teaching. There is nothing one-sided about it; eye, ear, fingers, will, memory, imagination, all are reached and made to contribute their share to the general musical culture. Further, it is a delight to the children, who learn easily, love their classes and later on their practice, finding it no hardship, to the great surprise of their parents.

ROBERTA GEDNES-HARVEY,
Mus. Bac. (Trin. College),
Organist of St. George's Church, Guelph, Ont.

MY DEAR MRS. COPP—I have heard you say your method was only common sense, nothing wonderful," but when I think of the many years I taught and how little I accomplished with the average child, and how hard I tried, and now how much I have accomplished in one year and what happy times I have had with the children, it really does seem wonderful. The children love to do things they used to dislike. They love to write notes, scales, intervals and chords. To find them on the piano. How difficult it used to be to teach a child the dominant seventh in all keys. Now they read them easily and find them on the piano, and it is all play. "Now let us have some other game," said a boy who had been writing chords half an hour. "Let us have technic, I like technic," said another. "I did that nine times yesterday," said another, showing that they think of their lessons at home.

The ear training alone is worth all the time the children spend in the classroom.

A pupil at her first private lesson played every major scale, fingering technic, and all were correct. How different from the old first lesson. She also memorizes easily pieces that many pupils would be proud to play in their third year.

I have tested your system of memorizing, both with the children and myself, and am delighted with it. It is so sure. Pieces learned in that way stay. Yours sincerely,

CORA FARMER.

The last normal class of the season in America opened in Boston on the 20th inst. After the expiration of this term the originator and only normal teacher of the Fletcher music method, Mrs. Evelyn A. Fletcher-Copp, will go to London, England, and Leipsic, Germany, to teach normal classes in those cities.

WALTER JOHN HALL.—Walter John Hall is already assigning lesson hours for the coming season, although he will not resume teaching at his studio in Carnegie Hall until September 17. Of his professional pupils who achieved pronounced success last year, and who will be heard even more frequently in public the coming season, deserving especial mention is Herbert Witherspoon, bass soloist at the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn. Mr. Witherspoon has already been secured for many important concerts for next winter and spring by leading musical organizations of the country, and his work is attracting marked attention. Mr. Witherspoon may be said to have arrived. Others of promise are Miss Edith L. Davies, contralto soloist of the Brick Church, Fifth avenue, New York city, and Alexander Howell, tenor soloist of the West End Presbyterian Church, New York city. Conservative critics declare Mr. Howell to possess a pure tenor voice of exceptional beauty, range and power, and as the young man has an artistic nature, correct musical instinct, and a fine stage presence he undoubtedly has a fine future. Mr. Hall is one of the teachers who is proving daily how unnecessary it is to go to Europe to study the art of singing.

E. M. SHONERT.—Edwin M. Shonert, the pianist with the William Worth Bailey Company, sailed for Europe to-day on the steamer St. Paul to join Mr. Bailey at Brussels, and to rehearse with him. He will return with Mr. Bailey on the steamer Deutschland, arriving here October 25. The season begins October 28. Over forty concerts are already contracted for at extraordinary prices for a new company.

MADAME OGDEN CRANE.—Madame Ogden Crane, who has been spending the heated term at Asbury Park, where she has a summer school, will return to her New York studio, No. 3 East Fourteenth street, on September 16.

Sherwood Pupils' Recitals.

WILLIAM H. SHERWOOD, the distinguished pianist and teacher, has finished his summer work at Chautauqua, N. Y., and returned to Chicago, where he resumes his duties at the Sherwood Musical School in the Fine Arts Building. For thirteen summers Mr. Sherwood has been a powerful influence among the musicians and musical students at the famous New York summer school. This season has been by far the most important and successful. The Sherwood pupils appeared in a joint recital on August 16, at the Amphitheatre, with the violin pupils of Sol. Marcosson. Appended is the program:

Sonate, op. 31, No. 3 (first movement).....Beethoven
Miss Mary A. Booth, Rochester, N. Y.
Cavatina.....Bohm
Miss Pearl Mabry, Cleveland, Ohio (pupil of Mr. Marcosson).
Polka Humoresque, op. 68.....Brandeis
Miss Olive Poole, Cameron, Tex. (pupil of Mrs. Tobey).
Polonaise in B major.....Paderewski
Miss Lillian L. Battelle, Demopolis, Ala.
Concerto, F sharp minor (first movement).....Hiller
Miss Florence Huntington, Yonkers, N. Y.
Orchestral accompaniments on second piano by Wm. H. Sherwood.
Liebestraum.....Liszt
Miss M. Ellen Morgan, Wilkesbarre, Pa.
Passepied.....Gillet
Miss Martha Watts, St. Louis, Mo. (pupil of Mr. Marcosson.)
Dialogue, op. 72.....Tschaikowsky
Miss Laura Hawley, Chautauqua, N. Y.
Murmuring Breezes.....Jensen
Miss M. L. Wilson, Belton, Tex.
Gigue (from Fifth French Suite).....Bach
Menuetto-Scherzoso, op. 28.....Liebling
Miss Elizabeth B. Stanton, Greenville, Miss.
Song to the Evening Star, from Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Miss Marjory Clark (pupil of Mr. Marcosson).
Waltz in E, op. 34.....Moszkowski
Miss Bessie Groves, Selma, Ala.
Concerto, op. 25, G minor (last movement).....Mendelssohn
Miss Edith Garland, Memphis, Tenn. (pupil of Mrs. Tobey).
Orchestral accompaniments on second piano by Wm. H. Sherwood.
Hungarian Fantaisie.....Liszt
Mrs. J. Harry Wheeler, New York (accompanied by Mr. Sherwood).

As director of the piano department at Chautauqua, Mr. Sherwood has had as his first assistant his accomplished sister, Miss Eleanor Sherwood, and the other assistant is Mrs. E. T. Tobey, of Memphis, Tenn., also a highly gifted woman. Mrs. Tobey has been associated with Mr. Sherwood seven years at Chautauqua. Miss Sherwood, who will work with her brother at the Chicago school, has studied abroad for some years, principally in Berlin. She is teaching both harmony and theory in addition to piano.

ALBERT GERARD-THIERS' EXPECTED HOME.—Albert Gerard-Thiers has been highly successful with his lecture recitals in France and England this summer. The popular tenor and teacher will return this week, and on September 16 resume his lessons at his studio, 649 Lexington avenue.

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK,
HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE
THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:
EDUARD ZELDENRUST
First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.
"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.
Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
. . . Vocal Score of . . .
MANRU.
Opera in Three Acts by
I. J. PADEREWSKI.
Translated and Adapted for Performance in English
By H. E. KREHBIEL.
PRICE, ... net, $5 00.
Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS
in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS
Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
Office: Astor Court Building, New York.
Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.
Wednesday, Sept. 4, to Tuesday, Sept. 17,
INCLUSIVE,
WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA EXPOSITION,
PITTSBURG, PA.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.)
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1119.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Liukstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Frankllustrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from Loudou Office.
Siugle copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Aveuue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondluelli, Floreuce, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Aveuue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States,	$5.00
Great Britain,	£1 5s.	Austria,	15 fl.
France,	31.25 fr.	Italy,	31.25 fr.
Germany,	25 m.	Russia,	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months	$25.00	Nine months	$75.00
Six Months	50.00	Twelve Months	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months	$75.00
One inch, 6 months	125.00
One inch, 1 year	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion	175.00
One Column	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

THE Monday holiday will delay the publication of this issue twenty-four hours.

WILL "Reader," from North Carolina, send his name and address to this office? THE MUSICAL COURIER does not publish anonymous communications.

"BACK to work." That is what musicians as well as men in more prosaic walks are echoing, now that September is here. Work is man's normal condition, and in this country at least the man of leisure is not envied by his friends and neighbors. More often he is an object of pity.

WHILE the theatres in town are opening there will be no concerts in New York to interest cultivated music lovers until the middle or end of October. When we realize that we must wait until November before hearing a first-class orchestral concert we are justified in asserting that artistically New Yorkers have not advanced very far.

AN account of the rowdyism at Corlears Hook Park, Park Commissioner Clausen was obliged to discontinue the band concerts several weeks before the closing of the regular season. Mr. Clausen declared the people of that neighborhood did not appreciate good music, and toward the last the rougher element insulted the musicians and altogether displayed its hostility. Can it be that the ears of Corlears Hook have become excited over the inevitable rag-time?

WHAT is the use of "A Musical Page" in a daily newspaper when the writers are evidently not musicians or even musical in the broader sense of the word? A paragraph in a recent issue of the New York Press announced that Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard, the well-known concert soprano, would sing Czibulka's "Dream After the Ball" at the Kaltenborn concert. As this happens to be one of the most hackneyed compositions played by string orchestras, the slip is hardly excusable.

SWEDEN promises a new rival to the Oberammergau play. The scene is the old city of Wisby, and the performance takes place in the ruins of the church of St. Nicolas. The piece is a mystery entitled "Sancta Maria," by Topelius, music by Andreas Hallen. It is a legend of the Swedish crusades in Finland. All concerned—actors, artists, singers and musicians—are amateurs. The performances take place every Sunday, and attract numerous visitors from Stockholm and other large cities of the kingdom. The good people of Wisby are so encouraged by the success of the scheme that they propose to repeat it next year, and will advertise largely in all countries to bring in international visitors. They announce that a visit will be much cheaper than going to Bayreuth or Oberammergau, while access will be easier for the proud possessors of yachts.

ABOUT this time of the year the music schools and conservatories of the country are preparing to resume the fall term. Throughout the twelve months, but more especially in the summer, THE MUSICAL COURIER receives hundreds upon hundreds of prospectuses, year books and catalogues from enterprising directors and presidents, and frequently do we refer to the growth of some of these institutions. Much taste is shown in the design of these interesting publications. In some quarters it is evident that effort has been made to eclipse some rival school in the matter of advanced prospectus, describing the advantages and the superior training of certain members of the faculty. This business acumen on the part of those who issue these publications is to be commended. We know the schools with the best teachers are likely to attract the largest number of pupils.

MUSICAL PROSPECTUSES.

In the South and West there has been a remarkable increase in the number of music schools. Many of the so-called conservatories boast an orchestra and give concerts with elaborate programs. In a country of vast territorial extent like the United States the great majority of the people cannot hope to come to the great cities. Traveling, always an expensive luxury, debars even many people of culture from going where the big orchestras play and great artists appear, and therefore many communities must depend upon their own citizens for musical advancement. Many earnest men and women have accepted this responsibility, and are nobly doing their part to interpret Bach, Beethoven and the other great masters to people who may never have the opportunity to hear these works performed by stars of the first magnitude. It is for this isolated population that the music schools and so-called conservatories in far away places have a great work to do. The tuition is small, often pitifully so; nevertheless there is no limit to ambition and energy and desire to make the most out of meagre talents and opportunities.

WE have already reprinted Mr. Hamish MacCunn's letter to the London Times, and now give a reply by Mr. E. A. Baughan in the London Morning Leader. Mr. Baughan agrees with the general modern anti-operatic theory which prevails on the structural weakness of opera as an artistic expression, and he differs with Mr. MacCunn on the proposed practical solution of the question. As a very judicious minded musical artist said to us: "When they write opera in English we can have opera in English," but no one is doing that. Why does no one write opera in English? Is it because we—that is, those who indulge in English as the expression of musical or other artistic impulses—are not in the habit of being emotional in the means of expression and are therefore unfit to adopt opera as a means of expression, or is it because opera appeals to us as a foreign means of expressing emotions which we express with an underlying rationalism of method.

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

When we speak in English, when we say something that moves us or something moves us that impels us to speak in our English, is it not entwined with a residuum of balanced or logical self-consciousness that dispels emotional expression or removes the exuberance and fragrance of language. Is not this the difference between our way, our method of saying something intense and that of our Southern neighbors? And can we then write opera to impress us as their opera impresses us?

Our scientific, our literary works generally and our poetry represent the ideal concrete perfection in style, and whether a work is written by Shakespeare or by Dickens or by Huxley or Spencer our language reaches a finish hard to equal in other tongues and never surpassed by them; but opera cannot utilize a scientific, a literary or a poetic text so far as structural language in concerned, no matter how poetic the thought or idea may be. Even Richard Wagner's texts are absurd as poetry—even as Archaic, Teutonic poetry—and he thought he had succeeded in welding the two elements into one.

Therefore it may be most difficult for us to "think" opera as the foreigner—that is, as Teuton, the Tartar (Russian) or the Latin—mentally and consequently emotionally handles it. Opera is exaggeration. It can only exist in exaggerated form and methods of delivery. It appeals to us in radical manner, as an extreme system of arousing sympathy. The exaggeration does not appeal to the English speaking race. Even the English and American opera singers fail to reach the exaggerated plane of histrionic delivery and always remain below it; hence it can have no Pattis, no Luccas, no Titiens, no Calvés, no Terninas. We have Melbas, Nordicas and others, who are singers and vocalists, but as operatic singers they are constitutionally emotionally disqualified. It takes a Teuton or a Hungarian or Carinthian or Russian or Italian to exaggerate form and content.

But to Mr. Baughan's article:

By Sforzando.

When I opened my Leader the other morning and noticed a short article on "National Opera," I knew that the season of miracles and stale topics had arrived indeed. Hamish MacCunn, whose pleading for a national opera was dealt with in that article, is a composer of uncommon talent, who has been silent too long. He seems to have pleaded for three quite separate things: (1) Opera to be performed in English, because if sung in Italian, French or German it cannot be understood of the people, and so can never become a national or democratic art; (2) the establishment of a permanent opera (in English), and (3)—although the article leaves this rather hazy—the founding of a national school of opera that shall be the expression of the race.

All these topics are very stale, but when dealt with by a composer of Mr. MacCunn's position—especially as he has had considerable experience as an operatic conductor in the provinces—they deserve serious consideration. With regard to the first count I quite agree with Mr. MacCunn on principle. In no other country but England, or in no other cities but London and New York, are operas, as a rule, sung in a foreign language. When they desire to hear "Die Walküre" in Paris they translate the libretto into French—and mighty strange reading it is! We have had it here in London in English—and that was quite as strange. In theory, an opera translated into our own tongue should be more intelligible to the ladies in the stalls—for the man in the Covent Garden gallery knows German well; but I must confess that I have attended many an operatic performance in English which, for all I could grasp of its purport, without reference to a book of words, might have been in double Dutch. The crude truth is that very few of our singers can pronounce English with sufficient clearness and dramatic emphasis. Go to an ordinary ballad concert, and you will see that more than half of the audience is compelled to follow the singers in the book of words.

Our singers are not taught to pay attention to clear and intelligent pronunciation. They do not follow Sims Reeves' method of first learning the poem of a song as a recitation and then learning the music. They boggle over the awkward English vowel sounds and clip the consonants until the word has lost its meaning. I believe this is a good deal due to the fact that English singers as a rule have had but little or no training in opera; for I noticed that M. Plançon, when singing as the Friar in Stanford's "Much Ado About Nothing," pronounced his English with much more clearness and with a juster accent than did any of the native artists. In fact, M. Plançon and Mr. Ispham were the only singers who made a copy of the libretto unnecessary.

Before opera in English could become a possibility, except in provincial towns that hear no other opera except that of the Carl Rosa and Moody-Manners troupes, our singers would have to learn how to sing in English. Then there is the difficulty of translation. It is stated that many excellent translations are in existence. They may be, for all I know, but I have never yet met with one that does not fail in the essential necessity of fitting the right word to the musical emphasis. The exigencies of translation often make it imperative that words having a meaning quite different from those in the original libretto should fall to certain musical phrases. The result is that the wrong emphasis is given to the wrong words. It may be said that can only happen in a bad translation. I am afraid it is unavoidable, for it is caused by the different construction of the two languages.

Also I do not think that the genius of our language and our race makes for opera. The exaggerated emotional expression of singing does not (to my mind at least) accord with our modes of speech and thought. That may be, of course, because one is unaccustomed to hear opera in English; but to my homespun British mind it has always seemed more natural for an Italian or a Frenchman, or even a German, to be operatic. Over a bottle of corked wine an Italian will employ an exuberance of gesture which an Englishman would think excessive, as an expression of his grief at the death of one dear to him. Our genius is not toward expression of emotion. But if you repress emotion there is no need to sing. The ideal national opera would be one in which the orchestra did all the talking, and the dramatis personæ expressed themselves in an occasional long drawn out and very big D. But, accepting the convention of singing, we should require artists who can pronounce English clearly and translations which, by hook or crook, fitted the right word to the right note.

The second of Hamish MacCunn's points—the establishment of a permanent opera—means the awakening of the state to the importance of music in civilization. If the people themselves desired opera it would come. In England I fancy it will be left to municipalities to act in the matter, as they are already acting for concert room and open air music. The other alternative is a privately endowed or subscription opera, for it must be remembered that opera run on artistic lines cannot be made to pay. I would point out, however, that the results of the subvention system abroad are not all that English fancy paints them. The Paris Grand Opéra, for instance, is voted hopelessly old-fashioned and ill managed by many musical Parisians. There is always a deal of bureaucratic favoritism wherever state opera exists.

The third point is due to a mistaken view of musical history. We want no national music in the sense that the characteristics of Scotch or Irish folk music should be incorporated in opera. The day has gone by for that. Attempts have been made, but the result has always been a piebald mixture of folksong and modern technic—a wearisome and make-believe mixture. If our folk music is not already embodied in our art music it is because it was not worth absorption. Besides, the great music of the world has always been cosmopolitan. Mozart was an Italianized German; Beethoven was influenced by Mozart and by the fashion of his youth for Italian music; Haydn was a Germanized Croat; Wagner worshipped at the shrine of Bellini and Meyerbeer; Tschaikowsky was steeped in German music. Only one of the greater men—Bach—could be called thoroughly German, and, after all, even Bach was influenced by the Italian school of Palestrina and by the French harpsichord composers, as well as by the Italian violin writers.

In brief, though an English permanent opera is most desirable, it would not prove a panacea for all our musical ills, and I would rather pin my faith to the young composers who recognize that British music must be cosmopolitan in technic than to those who demand a national school—which means a school of limitations.

MUSICIANS BORN IN SEPTEMBER.

WITH the return of glorious autumn weather and regular hours for work and study who is not happier for existence here. The poet raves over the spring, but truly the artist and philosopher loves the time of year best when nature is at her loveliest, and when the climate is enjoyable and health giving. As this is the first issue of the month of September THE MUSICAL COURIER, following the plan inaugurated at the beginning of the year, publishes a review of the musicians born in the month, with some comment upon the significance of their birthdays considered by the laws of the old astrology. We are not astrologers. The faith by which the ancient Egyptians attempted to control destiny, however, does appeal to many to-day, and thousands of highly intelligent people, too, believe it and regulate their walk and aims by the light gleaned from this source. Having studied the science in order to test its truthfulness, as applied to the master minds in music, the writer has repeatedly been impressed with certain consistencies, almost mathematical correctness of branches explained by several learned writers among the faithful.

The sign Virgo prevails in September until on or about the 21st, when Libra (The Scales) comes to replace Virgo (The Virgin), second sign in the Earth Domain. As dissected by the astrologers Virgo people should become remarkable for intellectual attainments, correct and discriminating taste and perennial good health. One authority declares they need never grow old. Virgo people are born critics, and indeed are often severe in exercising the analytical power of their minds. But like all Earth people the Virgo man and woman are not rash. The Earth is more calculating than Fire, Earth and Air. Matters of material import are carefully weighed, and this is why men and women born in the Earth Domain make good managers. Particularly Virgo people are credited with an exalted regard for money and position, but when these characteristics do not "fit" some sign in one of the other domains has neutralized the Virgo influence. Virgo people are generous to their friends, and may be safely trusted with secrets or the execution of missions requiring tact and diplomacy. Uncultivated and unawakened Virgo people are great fault finders, and this objectionable trait is due to the critical bent of their minds. Above everything Virgo people love beauty and elegance, and even when opportunities have been denied them they are noted for the grace and dignity of manner which brings success. Virgo people are generally popular.

Astrology has demonstrated that genius is more likely to spring from the Fire and Air Domains than from the Domains of Water and Earth. Last month in the August instalment we considered this point, and succeeded in making out a fairly strong case in support of this theory, so far as it concerns composers. To begin, we were enabled to prove that Bach, Haydn, Beethoven, Rubinstein and MacDowell were among those born in the Fire Domain; Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Schumann, Verdi, Gounod and Richard Strauss were born in "Air." While these names do not exhaust the list of great musicians, the number almost completes the roll of those who have made the greatest stir in the world, and therefore the claims of the astrologers cannot fail to interest any fair-minded student. Skeptics continue to belittle and ridicule, but here are the facts which each reader can study for himself, when he (or she) cares to reach an honest conclusion regarding the master minds in music:

Giacomo Meyerbeer and Anton Dvorák are the most prominent of musicians born in the month of September. Meyerbeer, who was born on the 5th, died May 2, 1864, and Dvorák, born on the 8th, still lives and composes. Both were born in the sign Virgo.

Other musicians and composers born this month while Virgo rules include: September 1 (1834), Amileau Ponchielli, died January 17, 1886; September 2 (1863), Willy Rehberg, still living; September 3 (1596), Nicolo Amati, died August 12, 1684; September 4 (1824), Anton Bruckner, died October 11, 1896; September 6 (1781), Antonio Diabelli, died April 7, 1858; September 7 (1726), François André Philidor, died August 31, 1795; September 9 (1852), Carl Mengewein, still living; September 10 (1827), Wilhelm Hagemann, still living quietly in Holland; September 11 (1807), Ignaz Lachner, died February 24, 1895; September 12 (1818), Theodor Kullak, died March 1, 1882; September 13 (1819), Clara Josephine Schumann, died May 20, 1896; September 14 (1760), Luigi Cherubini, died March 15, 1842; September 15 (1819), Jules Etienne Pasdeloup, died August 13, 1887; September 16 (1847), Albert Ross Parsons, still living; September 17 (1795), Giuseppe Saverio Raffaele Mercadante, died December 17, 1870; September 18 (1840), Emil Scaria, died July 22, 1888; September 19 (1813), Francesco Schira, died October 15, 1883; September 20 (1815), Charles Voss, died August 28, 1882; September 21 (1845), August Wilhelmj, still living.

Musicians born in September in the sign Libra begins with September 22 (1807), Julius Knorr, died June 17, 1861, and follow:

September 23 (1842), Carl Munziger, still living; September 24 (1806), George Alexander Osborne, died November 16, 1893; September 25 (1683), Jean Philippe Rameau, died September 12, 1764; September 26 (1833), Carl Friedrich Urbach, still living; September 27 (1827), Heinrich Adolph Wollenhaupt, died in New York September 18, 1863; September 28 (1681), Johann Mattheson, died April 17, 1764; September 29 (1764), Ernst Ludwig Gerber, died June 30, 1819; September 30 (1840), Johan Severin Svendsen, still living.

In each of the four Astrological Domains are three signs. The Fire signs are Aries, Leo and Sagittarius. Aries prevails from or about March 21 to or about April 20; Leo from or about July 21 to August 20; Sagittarius from or about November 21 to December 21. The Earth signs are Taurus, Virgo and Capricorn. Taurus prevails from or about April 20 to May 20; Virgo from August 20 to September 21; Capricorn from December 21 to January 20. The Air signs are Gemini, Libra and Aquarius. Gemini prevails from May 20 to June 21 or thereabouts; Libra from September 22 to October 21; Aquarius from January 20 to February 20. The Water signs are Cancer, Scorpio and Pisces. Cancer prevails from June 22 to July 21 or thereabouts; Scorpio from October 21 to November 21; Pisces from February 20 to March 20 or thereabouts.

Here are the dominating signs of the four domains:

Fire Domain—Anger.
Water Domain—Vanity.
Earth Domain—Selfishness.
Air Domain—Lack of backbone.

The overruling virtues of the four domains are:

Fire Domain—Benevolence.
Water Domain—Adhesiveness.
Earth Domain—Patience.
Air Domain—Magnanimity.

BRAHMS AS A CHORAL COMPOSER.

THE lesson of choral music is—Brahms. He is the legitimate end toward which the study of choral music tends. If any choir or society stops short of the study of Brahms it stops short of the highest musical knowledge, for Brahms assimilated in logical order all musical traditions. He extended the meaning of romanticism and he gave to romantic music a solid structural basis.

Berlioz, Schumann and Rubinstein embodied three striking phases of romanticism. Schumann, the greatest of romanticists, perceived and encouraged the genius of Brahms, and it is said therefore that Brahms received the inheritance of Schumann. In one sense, it is true, he may be called Schumann's successor; but he is also the lineal descendant of Palestrina, Bach and Beethoven. He stands unswervingly on the solid ground of unsurpassable structure. Upon this structure he weaves with incomparable skill the mysteries of counterpoint, of fugue, of polyphonic imitation; primarily in this respect he is more classicist than romanticist; but he also gives full modern interpretation to the spirit of romanticism.

Particularly we may note that Brahms has no touch of defilement. His purity of language is unmistakable. The ideal, the natural, the human—all emotions possible to man—appear in his music, but ever in their true relations. He can set specific ideas in their proper places. He rises above the storm and stress of his time and bases his work upon the fundamental and unchanging laws of mind.

The poetry of Brahms is manifest to all who look intelligently at his compositions; it needs no exposition; it is not the poetry that weakens and destroys; it is the poetry of conscious knowledge, the poetry through which shines not merely a will-o'-the-wisp flicker of fancy but the divine light of reason. His is the language of absolute musical beauty.

One secret of Brahms' power seems to be that he pursued a perfectly natural course of development. He began in childhood by covering reams of paper with exercises in counterpoint; under the wise guidance of Marxsen he studied folk songs and dances, the natural expression of a people's emotion; he studied ecclesiastical modes; he followed the progress of church music, and the gradual development of choral writing through the various cantata art forms, from the chamber cantata of Carissimi and the Church concerto of Viardana to that great Mass of Palestrina, which has never been equaled by any written since for the Roman Catholic service; to that Passion Music, and through the polyphonic variations of later oratorios to the Choral Symphony of Beethoven, whose structural firmness gave Brahms the necessary point of rest. He studied carefully the works of Haydn, Mozart, Händel and Mendelssohn, and was influenced by them occasionally, but never to the extent of modeling his work upon theirs. He has left on record his appreciation of their special excellences, and also of the excellences of certain composers of his own day. He was in every sense of the word eclectic.

It may be said that all this historical study is a matter of course; that all composers follow the same method of development; but the assumption is based upon theory rather than on fact. Many composers of the purely romantic school show by a looseness of structure that they have studied in different fashion; for certain methods bring certain general results notwithstanding predisposition of temperament. We are not attempting, be it remembered, to depreciate the natural characteristics of other composers which lead them to another course of development. We are simply indicating the palpable superiority of beauty based upon order—the order taught by nature and by reason.

Brahms' intellect was equal not only to absorbing all traditional values but to giving them new significance by his marvelous sense of beauty. He did not neglect the harmonic ideal as maintained by Schumann, but he restored the structural ideal, and he purified the extravagances of the romanticists as Palestrina purified the extravagances of the early Church composers.

In passing at once to Brahms, in these steps from one climax to another in choral music, we are compelled merely to refer to another composer who ranks in the estimation of most critics as midway between Brahms and other modern choral composers. Max Bruch is not so generally known in this country as he deserves to be. His "Frithjof Scenen," imbued with genuine dramatic fervor; the subsequent composition, "Frithjof auf seines Vaters Grabhügel," a concert scena for baritone, female choir and orchestra; his "Schön Ellen," with its Scottish coloring; his choral masterpieces "Odysseus," "Arminius" and "Achilleus" stamp him as one who lives on musical heights, while technically his choral works are adapted to general interpretation and are particularly desirable as preliminary to a study of Brahms.

Dvorák, although his peculiar gifts are best revealed in his instrumental music, and many French, English and American composers are also entitled to high consideration. But we are concerned with climaxes. And Brahms marks the fifth climax in the history of choral music.

That there are certain technical difficulties to master in order to properly interpret Brahms is quite true; but this is said in every age of every great composer. This saying is the sign manual of progression, and if intellectual effort is to be eschewed, and if music is to be regarded first of all as a mere emotional accident, as a haphazard titillator of the senses, nothing can be said by the way of argument to those who have so unworthy a point of view. Suffice it to say that those who honestly try to master the technicalities of Brahms find themselves sooner or later introduced to a new world, and will experience the same emotions felt by Keats when he first looked into Chapman's "Homer."

Brahms' songs, from the earliest to the latest—and we may remind those who have forgotten the fact that he has written more than 200, not counting duets, trios or songs for four or six part choirs—though varying in value, are nearly all instinct with tender or brilliant melody. His "Liebeslieder" and "Soldatenlieder" reach the highest point attained in the development of the German lied. Among his lesser choral works may be indicated as examples of musical beauty, quite aside from any question of technical beauty, the "Ave Maria," for female choir and orchestra; the "Rhapsodie," for male choir and orchestra, with alto solo; the "Gesang der Parzen," for six part, chorus and orchestra; the trios for female choir, with two horns and a harp; the Psalm XXIII., for female choir and organ, and the melodious "Rinaldo."

But it is in his greater choral works that he shows himself master of the modern music world. In these he solves some of the music problems which neither Bach nor Beethoven was able to solve. The greatest of his choral works are, as all musicians know, the "German Requiem," the "Triumphlied" and the "Schicksalslied." The first is considered by most German critics the greatest achievement in modern sacred music. It is alive with true spirituality. From the first chorus, "Blessed are they that mourn," to the great double fugue, "Lord, thou are worthy," the choruses represent the high tide of modern choral writing. Two wonderful ideas embodied in this work are the idea of all humanity marching toward the grave, the solemn tramping expressed by a march in triple time, and the idea of God in the great fugue built around a pedal point—"But the righteous souls are in the hands of God." In a description of this fugue Bosanquet (quoted by Humphreys) says:

"That name is translated into music by the pedal note which is held down from beginning to end of the fugue in which these words are set. The pedal note persists, makes its presence felt throughout, is all-enduring, all-pervading. The fugue starts from it, and finally, after many intricate wanderings, returns to it. * * * Everything proceeds from it and returns to it; it alone is permanent, and steadily, continuously and irresistibly self-asserting. Neither poetry, nor painting, nor architecture can express such mysteries as these with such searching force and directness."

Concerning the "Triumphlied" there have been divers opinions regarding the good taste of thus commemorating the Austro-Prussian war, though but little dispute as to the musical merit, especially of the baritone solo with eight-part chorus and orchestra. The "Triumphlied" contains two good examples of choral adaptation—"Heil dir im Siegerkranz" and "Nun danket alle Gott." The "Schicksalslied," that exquisite setting of Holderlein's "Song of Destiny," seems to mark the elimax in sensuous beauty of all Brahms' works. The technical perfections, it is said by those who have heard it, pass unnoticed in the loveliness of the whole.

To enter into any dispute concerning the relative merits of Brahms and Wagner at this late day would be absurd, it is not needful to depreciate the one in order to appreciate the other. Brahms did not invade the field of opera, but in the realm of choral music he is supreme. Like Beethoven, he always suggests the power to master pessimism, to rise above all terrors that beset humanity.

Wagner is dominated by the Zeitgeist, the unrest of the present age. Brahms conquers the Zeitgeist, stretches forth his hand and calms the turbulence. He preaches in his music the eternal, the undying. Wagner fumes and frets and disturbs the soul. He cannot reach the everlasting heights of calm. Brahms, immovable as the Sphinx and undisturbed by passing whim or fancy, is firmly implanted in the sands of the past, but upon his forehead play the beams of the morning sun which tells a musical day.

VITTORIO CARPI.

AN artistic portrait of Sig. Vittorio Carpi, the well-known baritone and teacher, is presented on the cover of this issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER. Signor Carpi has just returned after six years of successful professional work in Milan, and his presence here again will add impetus to the musical affairs of the city.

Signor Carpi, as is well known, established his reputation as an artist in the United States, and the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER, particularly in Chicago, will recall his highly successful work in that city from 1890 to 1895, while director of the vocal department of the Chicago Conservatory of Music.

Pupils and teachers throughout the country have proclaimed the skillful training of this thorough artist, and widespread were the regrets at his departure six years ago for Milan. Now all his former pupils will be glad to know that the metropolis is to be the future seat of his labors, and students all over the country will appreciate the oportunity of consulting such a master exponent of the old Italian school.

His work at the Chicago Conservatory is part of the history of that institution, and he is also remembered as having appeared from time to time in all the principal theatres in the large cities of the United States, including the New York Academy of Music, and never has anything but the greatest success rewarded his appearances.

Signor Carpi is proud of the fact that he met with success and recognition on his return to his native Italy in 1895. His pupils there were many and talented, and his classes and musicales were features in Milan.

The appended articles were published in the Chicago Times in 1891 and 1894:

One of the most prominent vocal artists was brought to Chicago ur years ago by the director of the Chicago Conservatory to take harge of the vocal department, a post which he has admirably led ever since. Signor Carpi is a native of Bologna. His father as the celebrated economist Leone Carpi, grand officier of the rder of the Crown of Italy, and a member of the famous Roman nstitution of 1869. After finishing his studies at the professional chnical school of Turin, his love for music was so strong that he as placed by his father under the tutelage of the celebrated artist d teacher Giovanni Corsi. He studied singing, and after a thorgh course of study and training entered upon his operatic career 1871, and for twenty years sang with phenomenal success in all e principal theatres of the world, his tours embracing Europe, orth and South America and Egypt.

He has been associated with the world's greatest artists. Among em were Patti, Frezzolini, Donadio, Nevada, Volpini, Stolz, aldmann, Biancolini, Ferni, Urban, Bellincioni, Gayarre, Tamagno, asini, De Lucia, Medini, Castelmary, Nannetti, Fioravanti, Bottero d others.

He has assumed the leading roles in fifty-eight operas, some of em in French; appeared in over 1,500 concerts, and has had the nor of singing at the courts of Italy, England, Germany, Spain d Egypt.—Chicago Times, 1891.

Signor Carpi appeared at the leading theatres in the most imtant cities of the United States, including the New York Acady of Music, at all of which he was accorded the highest praise d received with rapturous applause.

In the summer of 1890, at the instance of the director of the Chio Conservatory, he accepted an engagement there as a teacher the Italian art of singing, for the period of five years. At the of the first year his services were so satisfactory and his talent highly appreciated he was given the entire charge of the vocal artment. During the five years at Chicago his success as a teacher and singer was unparalleled, having carried vocal instruction to a higher plane than it had ever been before.

Many of his pupils sang with great success at the principal theatres in concert and opera, and during the Exposition (1893) Boïto and Coronaro's opera, "Il Tramonto," was given in Italian for the first time in America, under the direction of Signor Carpi, by some of his pupils.—Chicago Times, January 28, 1894.

Here are more of Signor Carpi's many press notices:

Signor Carpi immediately demonstrated his artistic fitness to occupy a commanding position.—Chicago Inter-Ocean, 1891.

Miss Mary Linck, former pupil of Signor Carpi, has secured an engagement for two years with the Carl Rosa Opera Company in London. The Carpi Ladies' Trio sang with great success at the concert given at Festival Hall, at the Columbian Exposition.—Chicago Herald, 1893.

At the lecture-concert given yesterday by Signor Carpi at the Royal Conservatory of Music, his pupils sang very well, and the famous teacher, who is a man of culture besides a fine artist, will render great service to the lyric stage.—Il Secolo, Milan, 1895.

Last night at La Scala Signorina Toni, pupil of Signor Carpi, was much applauded in the difficult trio of "Götterdämmerung."—La Perseveranza, Milan, 1897.

At the Famiglia Artistica concert the light soprano, Miss Winnie Titus, a former pupil of Signor Carpi, was much applauded.—The Corriere della Sera, Milan, 1899.

The great baritone Signor Carpi, gave last night a great concert in commemoration of Verdi, and Mlle. Mansour, Signorina Toni and Miss Titus, his former pupils, were greatly applauded.

Great praise is due Signor Carpi for his able management of the concert, which had the assistance also of eminent professional artists, among them the orchestra director of La Scala, Milan, Signor Vanzo.—The Perseveranza, Milan, 1901.

Among Signor Carpi's many pupils in the United States are the following professionals: Miss Mary Linck, Miss Jennie Osborn (Hannah), Miss Mabelle Crawford, Mrs. H. D. Packard, Miss Mary Peck Thomson, Miss Grace Quive, Mrs. Carlton H. Marsh, Miss Marguerite McKinney, Miss Sallie Furnass, Mrs. Edward Toby, Mrs. Kate M. B. Wilson, Miss Padget Watrous, Mrs. Gordon B. Williams, Miss Farie Stewick Skinner, Carl Christ, Harry Christ, Charles W. Clark, Mr. Cain and W. A. Lamson.

Among many other professionals and amateurs in America and abroad are her Highness the Grand Duchess Paul of Mecklenburg, Countess Paolina Durini, Miss Mary Leiter (Lady Curzon), Miss Buda Peck, Prof. E. Crowe, A. F. Clark, professor in the Chicago University; Mrs. Elliot (Elisa Inverni), Mrs. John Mackay, Miss Fannie Francisca, Madame Wronecka, Mlle. Jane Mansour, Signorina Elvira Toni, Miss Winnie Titus, Signora De Mickalska, Signor De Micheli, Signor Tremolada.

In July, 1895, the director of the Chicago Conservatory offered Signor Carpi a new contract, but pressing business in Italy necessitated his return to that country, and all the while he remained there he devoted to teaching. From his school in Italy several pupils graduated with high honors. Prominent among them was Signorina Elvira Toni, who has had the fortune and honor of an engagement at La Scala of Milan.

Among his late American pupils is the light soprano, Miss Winnie Titus, who has already received great applause in Milan for concert singing, and who, without doubt, has a great future before her.

During Signor Carpi's residence in the United States and in Italy many teachers from all parts of the world have availed themselves of the opportunity to profit by his instruction and to know his system of teaching.

Signor Carpi is an honorary member of the Royal Philharmonic Academy of Bologna, of many important music circles, and he had the honor to receive from Verdi in May, 1900, his photograph, with a flattering dedication. Some fifty songs have been dedicated to Signor Carpi, and the list includes some by famous composers.

As is generally known, Signor Carpi is the inventor of the Graduated Voice Rectifier, a simple contrivance for easily correcting, placing and perfecting stiff and defective voices, throaty and nasal voices, of voices too open and all in the chest, as well as of voices uneven in the different registers; also for trembling voices or for those who sing flat.

It is indorsed by Tamagno, Signora Teresa Stolz, Frau Kupfer Berger, Prof. Leone Giraldoni, Signor Carlo Carignani, Signora Fricci, Professor Vanini, Mrs. Kate M. B. Wilson, Mrs. Johanna Hess-Burr, Professor Crowe, &c.

Signor Carpi will sing this season under the management of Rudolph Aronson, and New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear him during the late autumn or early winter.

MYER AT POINT CHAUTAUQUA.—The Point Chautauqua Summer School for Singers and Teachers of Singing, under the direction of Edmund J. Myer, has just closed its fourth and most successful season. Forty-two pupils from many different States were in attendance. Mr. Myer was assisted by John Randolph, of the State University of Lincoln, Neb., and Howard Kirkpatrick. Every period of time was filled the first week of the term, and after that many applicants were turned away. There is a movement on foot now to put up a building to especially meet the wants and needs of this growing school. The school has been recognized for the next season, with Mr. Myer as director and head of the department of vocal technic, the art of teaching, &c., Mr. Randolph will teach interpretation, diction, &c., and Mr. Kirkpatrick harmony, coaching and the art of accompaniment. Mr. Myer will reopen his studio in the city October 1.

NEW YORK COLLEGE OF MUSIC.—Alexander Lambert, director of the New York College of Music, has returned from his country seat to attend the reopening of his institution, which took place September 3. The entire building has been renovated and elegantly fitted up. The faculty has been increased.

The American Institute of Applied Music.

METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,

212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.

Faculty and Examiners Include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, MCCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.

Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.

The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.

For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

THE TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employers Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JULY 1, 1901.

Total Assets,	$32,198,504.44
(Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)
TOTAL LIABILITIES (including Reserves),	27,499,719.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,698,785.19
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$44,469,462.48
Total Insurance in Force,	$499,260,653.00

GAINS: 6 months, January to July, 1901.

IN ASSETS,	$1,270,172.92
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	4,739,635.00
INCREASE IN RESERVES (both Departments),	1,165,244.44
PREMIUMS, INTEREST and RENTS, 6 Months,	4,538,683.18

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Secretary.
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON, General Manager of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

OSCAR SAENGER,

Vocal Instruction,

ALL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.

Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.

Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.

TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,

HAS OPENED A

Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor, 6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.

Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., August 30, 1901.

JOHN LUND'S PAN-AMERICAN ORCHESTRA.

The engagement of John Lund and his Pan-American Orchestra at the Temple of Music is giving an unusual amount of pleasure to all visitors at the Exposition. The high opinion which our people have of Mr. Lund's ability is being shared every day by the thousands of visitors now here. Twice a day at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m. the Temple is crowded, and the great applause given each number indicates in a conclusive manner the favor of the audience. Every Wednesday night is "Request Night"; every Friday night is devoted to Wagner. Among numbers by request last Wednesday were Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slave"; scenes from "Walküre," Wagner; Raff's "Lenore" Symphony; Delibes' "Sylvia Ballet," &c. Henry Schmitt is concertmaster, and the orchestra numbers fifty men, mostly from New York.

Buffalonians have a pardonable pride in Mr. Lund's work. Since his coming here in the eighties he has been director of the Orpheus, a society whose work has attained a remarkable degree of perfection during his leadership. During the dozen years he directed our Symphony Orchestra we have had the opportunity of hearing much of the best, some of the newest and only the most interesting music. As a composer Mr. Lund has established a well founded claim to serious consideration. His larger and more important published works are for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. His "Greek War Song" and his "Germanenzug" have become a part of the repertory of the leading singing societies. All his compositions display a fertile imagination, excellent judgment of effects, a broad style and a complete mastery of technical details.

Mr. Lund is comparatively a young man. Having accomplished so much in his time we look for much more from his brilliant talent in the future.

John A. O'Shea, of Boston, has given five evening concerts. His reputation is an established one in Boston, and his work here was no less admired. Annotations of his concerts will follow later.

HENRY GORDON THUNDER.

It is difficult to describe within restricted limits an active artistic life in its progression and results. Mr. Thunder gave three concerts, and at the beginning it needed only a few minutes to realize that a master hand touched the keys. Mr. Thunder's chief characteristics as a virtuoso are great technical ability, a careful observance of the composer's inner meaning and a regard for the production of the legitimate in the interpretation of orchestral effects. Mr. Thunder is the conductor of the Choral Society of Philadelphia. He has been conductor of the Symphony Orchestra and organist of St. Patrick's and St. James' churches. He has composed a mass and several choruses.

JOHN LUND.

He is a member of the American Organ Players Club and one of the founders of the Guild of American Organists. His programs consisted of selections from the best composers, containing some of Mendelssohn's, Widor's and Guilmant's sonatas. The Wagner arrangements for the organ are all his own.

Mrs. Eleanor Baum-Shaw, of Philadelphia, assisted. She is a pupil of Mr. Whelpton, Buffalo, and possesses a clear pure soprano voice. She sang nicely "Shepherd of the Fold," Zarnard; "In May Time," Buck, and for an encore "Thy Beaming Eyes," MacDowell.

Andrew T. Webster, Buffalo's well-known organist, gave an excellent concert in the Temple, August 26. His selections were mostly from French composers, with the exception of "Elevation," by Rev. Father Bonvin, who is the poet and musical composer connected with St. Michael's Church and school. Mr. Webster was assisted by Mr. Hicks, tenor, who sang "The Soft Southern Breezes," from "Rebecca," and for an encore he gave a selection from the "Bohemian Girl." Mr. Tanner, one of Buffalo's lawyers, gave two fine selections. His nice baritone voice rang out full and clear in "King of Eternity," Jones. Continued applause induced him to sing the quaint old Irish melody, "Bendemeer Stream," Gatty Arthur Bernier, of Quebec, gave three organ recitals. He has an immense technic, but his furious tempo cannot suit the musician, who considers the organ the instrument to convey our best and holiest aspirations to God's service. He raced through his program as though speed and volume of sound was the one thing most desired in organ music. Of course his selections were all from the French school. He was assisted by Miss Marion W. Hutchison, soprano, from London, Ontario.

H. G. THUNDER.

Walter Heaton, of Reading, Pa., gave two organ recitals August 27 and 28. He was assisted by "The Singing Four," of Buffalo, the quartet of the Church of the Ascension, who sang two selections from Bullard and Buck with admirable taste.

THE HAVANA BAND.

Captain Tomas and his Havana Band had a veritable ovation at the Temple of Music last night. They have made this their last week especially such a one that th

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE,
CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

THE Guilmant Organ School
(COPYRIGHT)
RE-OPENS
Monday, October 14th.
EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....
34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

people of Buffalo and visitors from the entire United States will remember them and regret their departure.

Without exception, the band is the finest one we have had at the Exposition. At the end of the concert they played a selection by Tomas Meacham, a medley of all the patriotic American airs; "Uncle Sam's Land," then "Farewell, Farewell," by Schubert, closing the program with the National Hymn of Havana. Cheer upon cheer arose, handkerchiefs were waved and among a general handshake by those nearest, the band said "Au revoir, we meet next spring."

MRS. KATHARINE RIESBERG.

MADAME VON KLENNER'S NEW RESIDENCE.

A BRILLIANT scene of many artistic musicales and notable receptions will be the new residence of Mme. Evans Von Klenner, whose New York home, after October 1, is to be, not 40 Stuyvestant street, but 230 West Fifty-second street. In the former locality the distinguished American representative of the Viardot Garcia method of singing will be greatly missed; but, in consideration of the highest interests of her pupils, of whom, as has frequently been said, "she is ever thoughtful," Madame Von Klenner will move to West Fifty-second street.

The Greeks of old, who promoted art, were not regardless of the enlightenment which beautiful surroundings and associations offered, and to-day educators are writing much on behalf of the worldly advantage or spiritual inspiration which students may derive from congenial and elevating environments. Thus, in making this selection, Madame Von Klenner has displayed unquestionable wisdom. Her numerous pupils will now find Carnegie Hall, Mendelssohn Hall, the Metropolitan Opera House and kindred buildings more accessible than formerly, while many of the Fifth avenue churches whose choirs excite the admiration or studious attention of visiting vocalists, will not fail to exert their beneficial influence upon pupils of the Von Klenner School of Singing—pupils who in future years will continue to grace choir loft or concert platform of these or equally famous metropolitan institutions.

ELECTA GIFFORD.—Electa Gifford, the young soprano, has been engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sing in that city in December.

THE FAELTEN PIANOFORTE SCHOOL IN ITS NEW HOME.

IN removing to Huntington avenue the officials of the Faelten Pianoforte School, of Boston, have taken a long look ahead, and have not only provided greatly improved accommodations for the school's already splendid patronage, but have planned for the natural increase in attendance for several years to come. The new building, which is known as Huntington Chambers, is situated opposite the Public Library and Copley square, in the educational centre of the city. A tour of the premises shows that, in every detail, the special needs of the school have been considered, while its convenient location, as regards street car and railroad facilities, leaves nothing to be desired. Faelten Hall is on the street floor. It is a large, well lighted and well ventilated auditory, with spacious lobbies, waiting rooms and lavatories, for the convenience of patrons. The pupils' recitals will be given in Huntington Chambers Hall, which is also on the street floor. The offices, main waiting room and teaching rooms are on the third floor. Nearly all have a frontage on Huntington avenue, and are of generous proportions and convenient arrangement.

The advance registration for the new school year is unusually large, and all indications favor an exceedingly prosperous season for this popular school.

CHARLOTTE MACONDA.—Mme. Charlotte Maconda has returned to her New York apartment in Central Park West, after a long rest and recreation at Seabright Silver Lake and other summer resorts. Madame Maconda's engagements, which begin with the New England festivals in the early fall, will be followed by a transcontinental recital tour. Immediately after her return she is booked for "The Creation," with the Haverhill Choral Society, and later in the season she is to be soloist at the big music festival at Milwaukee.

E. PRESSON MILLER'S NEW STUDIO.—Mr. Miller has issued the following:

E. PRESSON MILLER
begs to announce that he has severed his connection with the Metropolitan College of Music, and will resume teaching at his New Studio, September 16,
Carnegie Hall.

Voice Culture
and
Art of Singing.

Address,
601-2 Carnegie Hall.

MADAME OHRSTROM-RENARD.—Augusta Ohrstrom-Renard, the well-known singer and teacher, returned last week after several weeks' rest in the country, and will resume teaching at her studio, 444 Central Park West. Madame Renard, although but two seasons in New York, has during this time built up a large and constantly growing clientèle of pupils, many of whom are now meeting with much success. Miss Rebecca Mackenzie, her pupil and protégée is in a fair way to achieve an international name.

MAUD ROUDEZ'S SUCCESS.—This soprano, who sang with the Grau Opera Company, was the principal in a series of concerts in Western Pennsylvania, giving three concerts in Oil City and vicinity, and one in Meadville, which not long before was visited by Schumann-Heink, Leonora Jackson and others. She was highly successful, making many new friends by her beautiful voice and artistic personality.

E. PRESSON
MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,
Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN
Distinguished American Pianist.
Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS.
WEBB GARDNER
SOPRANO.
FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.
Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B.
VOIGT
SOPRANO.
Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.
Address
RICHARD BYRON
Manager.
301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK.

Sig. Mo. VITTORIO CARPI,
Vocal Instruction.
ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.
STUDIO: 31 West 61st Street, bet. Broadway and Columbus Ave.
NOTE.—Sig. CARPI is the inventor of the Graduated Voice Rectifier. Patented in United States.

Elizabeth
Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals
Direction
Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

FREDERIC MARINER TO LOCATE IN MAINE.

Frederic Mariner announces to his many pupils and friends his withdrawal from the Virgil Piano School, New York city. On October 1 he will assume the directorship of the Bangor Piano School, Morse-Oliver Building, Bangor, Me.

THE above announcement will be a surprise to many who have valued Mr. Mariner's work in New York. But for many summers past Mr. Mariner has taught in Maine, and his recitals, too, have attracted large audiences up there. A large number of new pupils will enter the school when Mariner assumes the directorship. The fact that he is going to locate in Bangor has created something like a sensation in that prosperous and picturesque city. The following extracts are from the Bangor Daily Commercial of August 29, 1901:

TO SETTLE HERE.

FREDERIC MARINER HAS DECIDED TO CONTINUE HIS WORK IN BANGOR—NOTED PIANO TEACHER—BANGOR PIANO SCHOOL TO BE STARTED IN MORSE-OLIVER BUILDING—WEEKLY RECITALS TO BE GIVEN.

Frederic Mariner, the noted technic specialist, and one of the foremost piano instructors in America, has decided to locate in Bangor, and on October 1, in conjunction with Miss Abbie N. Garland, he will open a studio in the Morse-Oliver Building. This news will be received with delight not only by Bangor music lovers, but by those all over Maine. It means that hereafter piano instruction can be received in Bangor such as cannot be had in Boston or in places east of New York. Mr. Mariner has but just decided to locate in Bangor, and the details of his work have not as yet been wholly determined.

Up to the present time Mr. Mariner has been the principal instructor at the famous Virgil Piano School, at 29 West Fifteenth street, New York. By the direction of his physicians, however, he has decided to resign his place there and devote himself to work which will not be physically so fatiguing. Mr. Mariner is in Bangor at present, as has already been announced in the Commercial. He has been here before and is attracted by the place. By locating here Mr. Mariner will do much toward making Bangor the musical centre of the State.

With Mr. Mariner will be Minor Walden Gallup, his star pupil, and probably the best known boy pianist in America to-day. Master Arthur Beaupre, of this city, who has been studying with him in New York, will be another of his pupils. He does not commence active work until October 1.

Miss Abbie N. Garland, a well-known Bangor music teacher, will be associated with Mr. Mariner, and a suite of four large rooms have already been engaged by them on the seventh floor of the Morse-Oliver Building. Mr. Mariner's institution will be known as the Bangor Piano School, and that it will draw pupils from among music teachers and pianists all over New England is certain.

Studio recitals will be given by Mr. Mariner's pupils once each week, to which Bangor music lovers will be invited. Every month larger and more elaborate recitals will be given, possibly in Society Hall or the Memorial Parlors, to which a larger number of invitations will be issued.

A COMPARATIVE REST.

"My work in New York has been very fatiguing during the past few years," said Mr. Mariner to a Commercial reporter Thursday, "and by the advice of my physician I have decided to leave there, at least for the present. I am very much taken with Bangor and have always had a desire to be here more. I have received many inquiries from Maine people who desired to come to New York to study with me, and I have decided to come here to them instead, that is all."

As is well known, Mr. Mariner is a Maine man, having been born and brought up but a short distance from Portland. His decision to remain in Bangor will be greeted by musical people and by his friends with great satisfaction.—Bangor Daily Commercial, August 29, 1901.

National Conservatory of Music—Examination Dates.

THE dates for the seventeenth annual entrance examinations of the National Conservatory, 128 East Seventeenth street, New York, are as follows:

Piano and Organ—September 17 (Tuesday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and all other Orchestral Instruments—September 18 (Wednesday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Singing—September 19 (Thursday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m., 8 to 10 p. m.

Children's Day—September 21 (Saturday), Piano and Violin—10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

We give the above dates every week because we believe in calling the attention of the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER to the remarkable advantages offered by the National Conservatory to those desiring a thorough musical education. The faculty of the institution is of wide reputation and the pedagogic system pursued has hitherto been productive of the highest results. Every department of the National Conservatory is unique, every department has at its head a teacher who has won artistic honors and has had large experience as a musical instructor. The orchestral classes attracted much talent last season, and the series of public concerts inaugurated in 1898-9 will be continued this coming season. The operatic classes are filling in, and the examinations promise to be of the liveliest competitive character. Do not forget that genuine talent will be carefully nurtured and developed at the National Conservatory, as the remarkable history of the institution so conclusively proves. September 3 the season of 1901-1902 began.

Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber, founder and president, will personally receive all applicants, their parents or guardians.

CAROLINE MABEN.—Miss Maben, the piano teacher, whose studio is in Carnegie Hall, has returned from her summer vacation at Saratoga and will resume teaching.

Miss Maben took part in the musicale given in Saratoga, August 21, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Caryl, the occasion being a patriotic tea, under the auspices of the Saratoga Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

DR. LAWSON ENGAGED.—Dr. Franklin D. Lawson, the tenor, has been engaged for the double quartet of the Temple Beth-el for the coming year. Dr. Lawson will retain his positions at the Brick Church and the Washington Square M. E. Church.

Adele Margulies at the National Conservatory.

ONE of the silent workers and one whose accomplishments in her chosen field far outshine others more belauded is Miss Adele Margulies. Miss Margulies was a pupil of Anton Door in Vienna, and a gold medallist for three years in succession at the Vienna Conservatory. She has played abroad and here with Theodore Thomas, but her life work is teaching, and as a teacher of piano her success is unique. She possesses in an eminent degree the psychologizing faculty, the flair, the divination of a pupil's peculiarities of individuality. Then her great experience, thorough science and frugality in expenditure of the nervous and muscular energies of her pupils make her an ideal teacher. The fruits of her labors are many. Her pupils have an unmistakable cachet in their technical finish and musical conception, yet no two play alike. A double score of names ought to be adduced to prove this, names that to-day are well known in the piano playing world. Suffice to mention one, Bertha Visanska, whose piano and musical education is entirely the results of her years with Miss Margulies at the National Conservatory. The brilliant European successes of the Visanska girl, successes the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER are acquainted with, are due to Miss Margulies and to her the credit must be given.

DEATH OF EMIL J. NORDLINGER.—Emil J. Nordlinger, a prominent member of the Harmonie Club, died last Sunday at his home, 245 West 122d street. He was forty-four years old, and is survived by a widow, one son and a daughter. Mr. Nordlinger was born in New York city. He succeeded his father in the feed business, and was for a time a member of the Produce Exchange. Music and philanthropy occupied his thoughts when away from business. Mr. Nordlinger died after two weeks' illness from typhoid fever.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

PUPILS

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

The Virgil Correspondence School.

THE CLAVIER METHOD BY MAIL.

A new, superior and eminently efficient system for Teachers and Players (only). Special Technic Course (24 lessons). Every principle explicitly stated and clearly illustrated. Each lesson taken gives the right to send a question letter, the answers to which will receive Mr. VIRGIL'S personal attention.

Certificates to qualified teachers of the CLAVIER METHOD.

Prospectus, explaining system, terms, conditions, &c., sent on application. Address

SECRETARY, VIRGIL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,
26 West 15th Street, New York.

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory Hast

Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE HUMPHRYES

Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.

FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York.

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS, MUSICAL SOCIETIES, MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW'S POPULARITY IN EUROPE.

IT is safe to assert that no young American pianist has more fame in Europe than Augusta Cottlow has, and her successes on this side of the water since her return have been equal to those abroad. The best proof of the impression she created abroad was the frequency of her return engagements. One of her most notable triumphs was achieved in Warsaw, Poland.

It was with no little trepidation that she made her initial bow to the large musical audience that awaited her in the Hall of the Philharmonie. But her fears were groundless, as she was most cordially received, and the last measures of her closing number were drowned in enthusiastic "bravos" and cries of "bis-bis" (encore). She was compelled to add four numbers to her program before the audience would leave the hall.

Hers was a sensational success, and she was at once engaged for a second appearance a month later. A few short extracts from the notices accorded her by the Warsaw press will serve to illustrate in a degree the impression she made upon the musical, poetical Poles. Her dates are being rapidly booked with the best organizations in this country.

Last night we heard for the second time the wonderful young American pianist. Miss Cottlow possesses a technic that is simply astounding, yet it cannot be called mere virtuosity. * * * But the marvelous characterists of the little artist's playing are her clear interpretations, strong individuality, great imagination, energetic, fresh temperament and the seeking for original effects, so that the Grieg concerto was presented in a much clearer and poetical light than we had ever before heard it. * * * The cadenza in the allegro was stupendously played, and created the greatest enthusiasm. * * * Among her soli the "Krakowiak," by Moszkowski, was rendered with true Polish feeling and rhythm, and to satisfy the imperious demands of the audience had to be repeated. * * *—Kurjer Warszawski, Warsaw, February 23, 1899.

* * * In this day of technical display how very welcome is an artist who brings to us a wealth of original thoughts and individual feeling; in a word, a genius whose personality makes itself felt in everything she does. Miss Cottlow's playing is full of fine color and shading, by which she is able to present many ideal tone-pictures. The Grieg Concerto was given with all the romantic spirit that the composer intended. * * * The wildest enthusiasm prevailed, and the young artist was compelled to repeat several of her soli and add encores. Slowo, Warsaw, February 24, 1899.

The second appearance of the unusually gifted Augusta Cottlow served to strengthen the splendid impression she made a month ago. * * * Besides her natural endowments, she possesses everything that the most exacting schooling can give. * * * She made the Grieg Concerto more interesting to us than it had ever been before. How splendidly she played the big cadenza, and with what majesty and strength the grand finale! Kurjer Poranny, Warsaw, February 23, 1899.

* * * Miss Cottlow belongs to the small category of artists who at once captivate the entire audience through her finished, thoughtful, energetic, poetical and rhythmical playing. * * * Her performance is like a newly blossoming flower, which fascinates by its color, form and fragrance. Her beautiful technic and the repose at her command lend a great charm to her work. * * * Several of her soli were stormily re-demanded amid the greatest enthusiasm. Her success was decidedly sensational.—Curjer Codjienny, Warsaw February 24, 1899.

Miss Augusta Cottlow's dates are rapidly filling, among the important ones being the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, Chicago, January 24 and 25; Young People's Symphony Orchestra, Brooklyn, March 8; Choral Symphony Orchestra, St. Louis, March 20; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston, April 17 and 18.

A SEMNACHER PUPIL.—The success which Miss Stella Newmark has won as a pianist is very gratifying to her former teacher, William M. Semnacher, who has watched her progress with a great deal of interest. Miss Newmark is one of a number of most excellent pianists who were taught by Mr. Semnacher. After taking a course of instruction from him she went abroad and studied for several years with Jedlczka.

THE ROBINSONS.—Walter H. Robinson and his wife, Mrs. M. Wessin Robinson, of Carnegie Hall, while spending a portion of their vacation in Canada, sang frequently in church and concert.

Their voices aroused much interest and won admiration from the musicians and music loving public. Before returning to New York they will spend a few weeks at Glenmore, Essex County, in the Adirondacks.

MISS JESSUP, PIANIST AND VOCALIST.—Miss Emily C. Jessup, of Salt Lake City, daughter of a member of the Salt Lake City Tribune staff, took a prominent part in a concert recently given at the Cornish House in the Catskills. She is a pianist as well as vocalist, and is one of Madame Devine's most promising vocal pupils. The audience, numbering 200, gave Miss Jessup a very hearty reception.

Frederic Mariner,

TECHNIC SPECIALIST,

Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,

— NOW —

Director of the

Bangor Piano School,

BANGOR, ME.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantagesas a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE

T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumwska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio ill be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.

nder the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

••••

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

••••

Exclusive Management

Loudon G. Charlton,

CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

'HE )NLY

"LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.

Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.

PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.

CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.

SCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
DEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
ANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency

(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),

108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.

Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."

Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

MR. WHITNEY TEW

In America

lovember and

December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality oi his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene bein especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first oi nis recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

Sole Representative:

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

James Oppenheimer Drowned.

CHICAGO OFFICE THE MUSICAL COURIER, September 3, 1901.

JAMES OPPENHEIMER, leader of Oppenheimer's Orchestra, Chicago, was drowned while swimming in Lake Michigan on Sunday morning. He was overcome 200 feet from shore and sank just before help came.

H.

ZELDENRUST.—It always carries double weight when one musician speaks in praise of another's achievement. More convincing, therefore, than the ordinary advance announcement are the comments upon Eduard Zeldenrust, the famous Holland pianist, made in a letter from Carl V. Lachmund, director of the Woman's Orchestra, and head of the New York Conservatory bearing his name. This letter, addressed to Zeldenrust's American manager, Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York, speaks for itself:

"My Dear Mr. Charlton—Let me congratulate you on your success in securing Eduard Zeldenrust for the coming season in America. We were fellow students at the Cologne Conservatory in 1881-1882. Although at that time he was but a lad he was one of the star pupils notwithstanding, and whenever he played he made a sensation.

"I remember well his exceptional aesthetic sense, his fine touch, artistic style and intellectual interpretation. His whole habit of life and thought showed beautiful refinement and culture.

"He already had at that time a local reputation as a pianist of mark, and I shall certainly be very glad of the opportunity to hear him again in his maturity and the fulness of his power. Believe me, very truly yours,

"CARL V. LACHMUND."

EMIL HOFMANN.—Emil Hofmann, the baritone, who filled many important engagements in America last season and scored successes everywhere, writes the following incident from Leipsic, where he is making some summer appearances in opera and concert:

The morning following a recent concert where Mr. Hofmann had sung a group of songs the paper said: "After the Liszt Concerto we made the acquaintance of a young, much-talked-of lieder singer, who was on the program for twelve classical songs. Herr Hofmann, however, disappointed the audience—" Just there the end of both column and page were reached, and Mr. Hofmann quickly turned the paper to find wherein the critic had found him lacking, when on the next page he was much relieved to read—"in none of the beautiful songs. His beautiful rich baritone and splendid interpretation marked him at once as an artist of highest distinction, and at the end of his group he was accorded an ovation."

This coming season Manager Loudon G. Charlton will have the sole management of Mr. Hofmann's American appearances, and he will said in time to meet his first engagement in October. His bookings in oratorio, concert and lieder recital already extend over a large amount of territory and well into the spring.

MISS CHITTENDEN TO RESUME HER WORK.—Miss Kate S. Chittenden, who has passed the summer in the Adirondacks, returns to the city September 9, preparatory to the opening of the sixteenth year of the Metropolitan College of Music, now amalgamated with the American Institute of Applied Music. Miss Chittenden begins the season with a special three weeks' course of advanced work for teachers. Last year ninety-six passed through the regular courses. Since the formation of the classes in pedagogics, thereby condensing the teachers' course, Miss Chittenden has not only been able to manage a much larger professional class, but she has also gained time to devote more attention to pupils pursuing piano playing, exclusively. Aside from the larger following of private pupils her normal piano classes are extensively patronized. Teachers who have studied other methods in other schools bring their pupils for criticism at the fortnightly meetings, as they gain there the results of a long professional career, which has been passed under circumstances calculated to produce a sympathetic understanding of the needs of both teachers and pupils.

RUDOLPH ARONSON.—Rudolph Aronson, the impresario, returned from Europe last week with a number of attractions for America for the coming season. One of his most important contracts is that with Sig. Vittorio Carpi, who arrived here a few days ago from Italy.

DEATH OF A SONG WRITER.—Anthony Stanford, a song writer, died last Monday at the New York Hospital soon after an operation for appendicitis. He was thirty-one years old, and resided at 226 West Thirty-eighth street.

New York College of Music,
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.

Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and all branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.

All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction in harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing and free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.

Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

ESTELLE LIEBLING
The Young American Lyric Prima Donna of the Dresden Royal Opera.
ENTIRE SEASON IN AMERICA.
Address: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 E. 17th Street, New York.

JEAN GERARDY
December, 1901, to May, 1902.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau,
131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England.
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.
Wagner Lecture Recitals.
VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS:
Miss Pauline Cramer.
Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.
BALDWIN PIANO USED. Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE.
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

CAROLINE MABEN,
Teacher Piano, Harmony and Virgil Clavier.
Studio. 81 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER L. BOGERT,
Musical Lectures Song Recitals, Conducting.
Instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint and Song Interpretation.
72 Lawrence St., Flushing, New York City

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 146 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CHARLES FRANK,
BASS-BARITONE.
Vocal Instruction.
Opera, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 226 East Sixty-ninth Street, New York

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC

"'PARSIFAL' AND BAYREUTH," BY JAMES HUNEKER.

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK - LONDON - PARIS - BERLIN - CHICAGO - BOSTON

VOL. XLIII.—No. 11—Whole No. 1120.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1901.

ALMA STENCEL

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR.

Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY.

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER.

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION,
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS.

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue, and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building. May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK.

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING.

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN.

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA. OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO.

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 31th Street, New York

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue. New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY.

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE.

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY.

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director.
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL.

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship

Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."

Glens Falls, N. Y.

PARSIFAL.

Parsifal a vaincu les filles, leur gentil
Babil et la luxure amusante et sa pente
Vers la chair de ce garçon vierge que cela tente
D'aimer les seins lègers et ce gentil babil.

Il a vaincu la femme belle au cœur subtil
Etalant ces bras frais à sa gorge excitante;
Il a vaincu l'enfer, il rentre dans sa tente
Avec un lourd trophée à son bras puéril.

Avec la lance qui perça le flânc suprême
Il a guéri le roi, le voici roi lui-même
Et prêtre du très-saint trésor essentiel;

En robe d'or il adore, gloire et symbole,
Le vase pur où resplendit le sang réel,
Et, O ces voix d'enfants chantant dans la coupole.

PAUL VERLAINE.

PARSIFAL AND BAYREUTH.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

I.

THE BOOK.

ARSIFAL was published in book form December 25, 1877. The first act was completed during the winter of 1877-8, and the instrumentation of the prelude finished by December 25, 1878. The spring and summer of 1878 were devoted to the second act, a sketch of which was prepared October 11 of the same year. The third act was finished by April 25, 1879, and from 1878 to 1882 the gigantic task of orchestration was undertaken. In this Wagner was assisted by the late Anton Seidl and Engelbert Humperdinck. The entire first act was not completed until the spring of 1880. In a villa near Naples he finished the second act, with its famous garden scene; and in Palermo, January 13, 1882, the sacred music drama was given its final form. July 28 of the same year "Parsifal" was first performed at Bayreuth, with Materna as Kundry, Winklemann as Parsifal, Reichmann as Amfortas; Kindermann sang the phrases allotted to Titurel and Scaria as Gurnemanz. The Klingsor was Karl Hill. Hermann Levi conducted. Thus much for dry statistics.

"Besides my 'Siegfried,'" Wagner wrote August 1849, to Uhlig, "I have in my mind two tragic and two comic subjects; but not one of them seems to me to be suitable for the French stage. I have just found a fifth one; it is indifferent to me in what language it will appear first; it is 'Jesus of Nazareth.' I have the intention to offer it to the French and thus to get rid of the whole affair, for I foresee the indignation this project will excite in my collaborator."

Wagner's plan was to make a play in which Christ would be tempted by Mary Magdalen. This idea was abandoned. With the exception of "Tristan and Isolde" came the scheme for a "Parsifal." He wrote of this to Liszt in 1876, being full of Schopenhauer and Buddhism at the time. "The Victors" was the sketch found among his papers, the hero of which is the Eastern prince Ananda, who rejects the love of the beautiful princess Prakriti, and by this act of renunciation achieves his and the woman's redemption. "Parsifal" is not far removed from this sketch. In 1857 near Zurich Wagner became obsessed by the idea, and on a Good Friday the genesis of "Parsifal" occurred. In 1864 this sketch, at the request of Ludwig II., was carefully developed, and as we have seen became the complete music drama.

Wagner has rooted his story in the old legends and history of Wolfram von Eschenbach and Chrétien de Troies. The latter wrote his poem in 1175, "Perceval the Gaul; or, the Story of the Grail"; the former was composed between 1201-1210. But the story was centuries old before Chrétien handled it, its origin probably being Provençal. And before that it may have sprung from the Moorish, from the Egyptian, from the Indian, from the very beginnings of literature, for it is but the old story of might warring against right; evil attempting to seduce good. It crops out in a modified form in the Arthurian cycle, for the Round Table and the Grail are united in one. Whether Perceval, Parzival or Parsifal, we find the guileless young hero fighting against wrong and resisting evil. There is even a Romance of Peredur to be found in the Mabinogion or Red Book, a collection of Welsh romances. Some believe this Peredur to be the prototype of the French Perceval. In all these poems there is a Kundry, or Kondrie, or Orgeleuse, a sorceress; and a King who has sinned—Le Roi Pecheur. The Knighthood of the Grail is a consecrated community that worships the sang-real, the precious blood of Jesus Christ, which some say was caught up in a goblet after the soldier Longinus pierced the side of the Saviour on Calvary. This lance also plays an important part in the poems, and in Wagner's music drama. Montsalvat is a beautiful temple in a far away land—presumably Spain—where the Knights of the Grail, or Graal, meet to receive spiritual nourishment from the holy chalice containing God's blood. Every year a white dove descends from heaven to lend new powers and strength to the miraculous vase inclosing the blood. These knights are vowed to chastity, and it was a sin against chastity committed by Amfortas that caused the monarch all his suffering. Kundry it was who tempted the King. Klingsor, the enchanter, a eunuch by his own act, prompts Kundry to all this evil. Gurnemanz, the aged servitor of the Grail, and Titurel, the dead King, though miraculously alive, father of Amfortas, make up the rest of the characters in this strange drama of pity and renunciation.

Wagner saw many opportunities in the legends and poems, and as was his wont synthesized them into the shape we know Parsifal. His Parsifal is a born innocent, a pure fool. Wagner pretended to derive the word from Parsi-fal or Fal-Parsi—i. e., Pure Fool—born after the death of his father, Gamuret, and living alone with his mother, Herzeleide, in the woods. Attracted by a cavalcade of shining knights he follows it and finally enters the domain of the Grail. Let us leave him there and consider that curious composition of the poet-musician—Kundry. Wagner found some of her characteristics in the old poems, but to him belongs the credit of creating the woman we see in his drama. She is Kundry the enchantress, Herodias, who laughed at Christ, who had John the Baptist beheaded—"she is said to have laughed when she bore aloft the head," and it breathed upon her, thus condemning her to eternal wandering. Besides this Kundry is also Gundryggia of the Northern nymphs, the slaying Valkyr. A type of the eternal temptress, and yet a Magdalen, Wagner calls her the Rose of Hell, the She Devil, a tempestuous spirit, a perpetual seducer. She is under Klingsor's rule, though she humbly serves the Grail Knights in their estate when not asleep. Asleep Klingsor can summon her as he wills, and then, instead of the Beneficent Kundry, she becomes the Demon Kundry.

Now follows the story of Richard Wagner's "Parsifal," which I condense with the help of Maurice Kupferath's version and from the epitomes of Von Wolzogen, Albert Heintz and others. It is assumed before the curtain rises that the spectator is acquainted with the tale of the foolish lad Parsifal and his roaming in the forest, bow and arrow in hand, in pursuit of the "shining men mounted upon noble steeds." He loses his way and enters the region of the Grail. At this point the curtains part and we see a deep wood in a mountainous district. The book of the play tells us of the scene of action: "The domains and Castle Montsalvat of the Guardian of the Grail, with scenery characteristic of the northern mountains of Gothic Spain. Later Klingsor's enchanted castle on a southern slope of the same mountains, looking toward Moorish Spain." The scene in act one represents a clearing upon the border of a beautiful lake. It is morning. Stretched in slumber upon the ground are Gurnemanz, a pious, hale old servant of the Grail, and two squires. Brass music awakens them, and after prayer they prepare to attend the King Amfortas, who is at the very moment approaching the lake for his bath—he suffers cruelly from his wound. Two knights appear and inform the others of this suffering. The balsam of Gawain is without effect. Suddenly there appears on the edge of the forest a terrible figure. It is Kundry. Wagner thus indicates her appearance: "In wild garb fastened high with a hanging girdle of snakes' skins; black hair, flowing in loose tresses; dark brown, reddish complexion, piercing black eyes, at times flaming wildly, but oftener fixed as in death." She brings from Arabia a balsam to soothe the King's pain. Enter Amfortas. He seeks the cool of the forest after his night of agony. The lake, too, will give him some surcease to his pain. But Gurnemanz knows better: "But One thing helpeth—One the helper," he mutters. Amfortas repeats the prophecy that once in letters of fire appeared about the rim of the Grail vase: "Durch Mitleid wissend, der reine Thor, harre sein, den ich erkor"; that is, "By pity waken'd the blameless Fool, him await my chosen tool." The King longs for death. Kundry offers him the balsam. "Of what use the balm? All is useless; rather a bath in the waters of the lake." The litter bearing the royal sufferer moves sadly and slowly away, while Kundry crouches down like a hunted wild animal. The squires tease her until Gurnemanz recalls to them that even beasts are sacred within the territory of the Grail. Then follows a long recital by the elder man, who, in reply to questions, relates the story of Amfortas and his sin. Klingsor, enraged at being denied admission to the Order of the Grail, after his mad act of self-mutilation, raises by his infernal arts a magic castle and gardens not far from Montsalvat. This he fills with lovely girls, who tempt the Knights of the Round Table. Amfortas resolves to destroy this Castle of Perdition. Armed with the sacred lance which pierced the Saviour's side he lays siege to Klingsor's abode. Unluckily for him a supernaturally beautiful woman, Kundry, is sent by Klingsor—whose heart is black with envy, for he can no longer indulge in the delights of the senses, nor yet participate in the divine mystery of the Grail—and waylaid by her Amfortas succumbs to her fascinations. As he is clasped in her embrace the spear drops and is seized by Klingsor, who gives him a fatal thrust in the side. No alleviation is there for this pain. Even the mystic bread which he occasionally dares to dispense to his knights does not bring ease. Klingsor keeps the sacred spear, and by its aid hopes some day to capture Montsalvat itself.

When Gurnemanz finishes this harrowing tale the four squires kneel and sing the above prediction, "Durch Mitleid wissend." Cries are suddenly heard, and knights rush in to inform their horrified hearers that a blasphemer has dared to enter the sacred park and shoot one of the swans. The culprit is dragged in. It is Parsifal, with his bow and arrow. The swan lies in death throes before him. While vainly endeavoring to discover his name, his identity, Gurnemanz reproaches him for having shed innocent blood, and points out to him the heineousness of his offense. Parsifal is overcome with shame—and pity. Here is first indicated the cardinal trait of his character. He relates to Gurnemanz the little he knows of his early life—with which the reader is already acquainted—and tells of his mother Herzeleide. Kundry sneeringly interrupts. His mother is dead from sorrow at her boy's desertion. Parsifal, raging, throws himself upon the woman, but is dragged away. The truth forcing itself upon him, he grows faint and is revived by water from a spring. At this juncture Kundry grows sleepy. Well she knows—though the others do not—that her master is about to summon her. Filled with despair she staggers into the bushes and is seen no more.

Gurnemanz, his heart revived by the pure foolishness of the lad, begins to hope anew, and the King's litter returning to the palace, he again questions Parsifal: "What is the Grail?" asks the youth. Then the pair appear to move slowly, and the scene changes, to the accompaniment of the sombre "Verwandlungs musik," from the forest to rocky galleries, finally to the Byzantine hall of the Holy Grail. All this is accomplished by scenery which moves in grooves. Parsifal questions Gurnemanz as to this phenomenon. "I slowly tread, yet deem myself now far," he says. "Thou seest, my son, to space time changeth here," answers Gurnemanz, which is a choice metaphysical morsel for the admirers of Kant and Schopenhauer.

Now begins the most magnificently solemn scene of the music drama. To the pealing of bells, the intoning of trumpets and trombones, the scene of the Holy Grail is inaugurated. Into the vast hall files the cortège of the sick monarch, and the Grail Knights, wearing white coats of arms, a dove embroidered upon a red mantle, advance in double lines and group themselves about the table. They chant, and boys' voices from the middle part of the dome reply, while children's voices in the cupola high above join in a celestial chorus. This scene is overpowering. After a profound silence the voices of Titurel issues from his tomb behind the throne. The dead man is revived by the potency of the Grail. He bids his erring son to perform the sacred office, to uncover the Holy Grail. Then follows a thrillingly dramatic episode. Conscious of his unworthiness and showing his bleeding side Amfortas long resists the request of his father. It is a part of his expiation that, sinner as he is, he must officiate at the solemn sacrifice. His protests are not heeded. The children's voices from the cupola recall the prediction, "Durch Mitleid wissend." Exhausted, pale and suffering untold agonies, Amfortas lifts the crystal vase, the Grail. A ray of piercing pure light falls from above on the chalice—the hall is now dark—which becomes luminous and glows with purple splendor. Amfortas sings, "Take this bread, it is my flesh; take this wine, it is my blood which love has given thee." The singing by the various choirs breaks forth anew, and as daylight returns the holy ceremonies conclude with the kiss of peace by the brethren. The King is carried away, the knights withdraw as the voices from the cupola sing, "Happy in faith, Happy in love." Parsifal, who has been staring about him all this time, is interrogated by Gurnemanz. The latter has not seen the convulsive start made by the pure fool when he sees Amfortas fall back upon his couch. Pity has entered his heart, though he is not able to voice this sentiment to Gurnemanz. The latter, angered by such seeming stupidity, thrusts him roughly from the hall, bidding him go seek a goose for his gander. Then, saddened by this fresh disappointment, the old man stands alone in the hall. Like a gleam of hope an alto voice from the mysterious height repeats the prediction, "Durch Mitleid wissend," and is joined by boys' voices. To this music the curtains close.

As in "Rheingold" where Nibelheim follows Walhalla, Wagner gains a violent contrast by placing the action of the second act in Klingsor's dread castle. The scene represents the magician's laboratory—a sort of Faust-like chamber at the top of a tower. The place is in semi-darkness, a well-like abyss to the left evoking a shudder of anticipation. A narrow staircase ascends to an aperture in the wall, an azure slit of the sky being revealed. The floor is strewn with implements of sorcery, and on the steps Klingsor, an Arabian, and fierce looking man with a black beard, is seated gazing into a wizard's metallic mirror. By its aid he perceives Parsifal approaching the castle, having already forgotten his experiences in Montsalvat and haled by Klingsor's spell. With a cry of satisfaction the magician leaves his vantage post, descends and approaches the chasm. Throwing incense into it he begins his cabalistic spells: "Up Kundry, ascend from the gulf! Come to me. Thy master calls thee, thou nameless one, primal fiend, rose of hell! Thou who wert Herodias, and what more! Once Gundriggia, now Kundry; up, up, to thy master; obey him who has sole power over thee!"

A lovely woman appears enveloped in a misty veil. It is Kundry. She screams, a blood curdling scream which modulates into a feeble, whimpering moan. The dialogue which ensues is not a pleasing one. Klingsor berates the woman for serving the knights like a beast of burden, as reparation for her crime against Amfortas. She sneers at his lost powers and absolutely refuses to seduce the approaching Parsifal. But in vain she resists her master. A sound of battle is heard. Single handed Parsifal, without, routs the feeble, enslaved knights of Klingsor. From his window in the battlements the wizard views the strife with satisfaction. He would be pleased to see his weak servitors killed by this robust, handsome youth. Kundry vanishes to prepare for her fell work of destruction. The tower sinks to strange, thunderous noises, and we behold Parsifal in a many colored tropical garden dense with flowers of an unearthly hue and splendor. Almost immediately he is surrounded by girls, living flowers who coquet, tease and lure him to ravishing music. The scene is a gay one. Parsifal repulses one group after another, when suddenly a voice of supernatural beauty sings: "Parsifal, stay." He is deeply moved. "Parsifal? Thus once my mother called me." He remembers his name at last. Thus does Wagner subtly indicate the growing knowledge that passion reveals. A scene of temptation follows that has no parallel in art or literature. Lulling the youth's chaste suspicions by telling him of his mother Herzeleide, she at last wins him to her side and imprints upon his lips his mother's kiss, her own magic kiss. Instead of succumbing Parsifal leaps to his feet and presses his heart. He cries in agony, "Amfortas! the wound—the wound! It burns within me, too." Kundry's kiss shows him what the entire Grail did not know—that she was the cause of the King's downfall. He understands all now and his one thought is to go to the King and relieve his pain. He is the pure fool who pities. Mad and desperate, Kundry detains him. She believes that he can, if he so wills it, release her from Klingsor's hideous spell. He to be her saviour; a second one, not the real Jesus at whom she laughed and meeting whose reproachful gaze she forever after wandered. She is the real Woman who laughed. Her laughter shudderingly resounds throughout hell, whenever a sinner yields to her seductions. But Parsifal is different. Perhaps, being a frequenter of the Grail land, and a very Erda for wisdom, Kundry knows of the prediction. She weaves a web of voluptuous beauty, but Parsifal escapes its blandishments. Then finding that this fails she curses him with furious and hysterical curses. "Renounce desire; to end thy sufferings thou must destroy their source." Thus Parsifal enjoins her. But Kundry will not be convinced. "My kiss it was that made thee clear sighted. My embrace would make thee divine." He asks for the road to Amfortas. She curses him. "Never, never, shalt thou find that road again. The Saviour's curse gives me power. Wander!" She frantically summons Klingsor, who appears upon the terrace with poised spear. The flower girls rush in, and Klingsor hurls the weapon at the audacious intruder. But it whizzes over Parsifal's head, where floating in the air he seizes it and makes the sign of the cross. An awful cataclysm ensues. The castle and garden sink into the earth, accompanied by volcanic explosions, the flower girls become withered hags, and all the enchanting vista of flowers is transformed into an arid waste. Kundry falls to the ground prostrated. Parsifal, surveying this desolate ruin from the shattered ramparts, utters to Kundry these prophetic words: "Thou knowest where to find me." Immediately the curtains veil this impressive scene.

Act three brings us back to the Grail confines, where a tender idyllic landscape on the edge of a forest discloses a hermit's hut, with a spring hard by. It is a spring morning. Gurnemanz, now a white haired, sorrowful old man, has relinquished all hope of a saviour for the king. He feels that unless death intervenes Klingsor will become master of the Grail, for he knows nothing of the stirring events in the preceding act. A low cry in the bushes apprises him of Kundry's presence. She is half dead, but is revived by the old hermit She feebly moans: "Service, service," and then rises and goes to the hut, where she gets a pitcher. This she carries to the spring and fills. Gurnemanz marvels at her altered and penitential appearance. But she makes signs. One is approaching. A stranger knight in coal black armor, with visor down and spear in hand, is seen. He gravely advances. Gurnemanz asks his name. The stranger shakes his head. Adjured to remove his armor, as it is Good Friday, and no Christian knight must bear arms on that holy day, the stranger obeys. He plants his spear in the ground, removes his shield and sword, unfastens his armor, takes off his helmet and kneels in fervent prayer before the lance. At once he is recognized by Gurnemanz as the youth who killed the swan, and the lance is also remarked with keen emotion. "Oh, blessed day," cries the old man, who knows that his king's saviour is now at hand. Then follows an indescribable series of pictures. They move before the eyes like some strange dream in a land where life has resolved itself into processional attitudes. One picture dissolves into another. The kneeling knight recalls an Albrecht Dürer, and his blessing by Gurnemanz, his baptism of the repentant Kundry—who utters but two words during the act—and the washing of his feet Magdalen-like, are all accompanied by music that is almost gesture, and with gestures that are almost musical. Gurnemanz informs Parsifal that Amfortas is in sad extremities, his father, Titurel, no longer strengthened by the Grail, is really dead, and the king refuses to perform the sacred office. It is this great hour of need in which Parsifal appears. Parsifal tells Gurnemanz of his weary wanderings over the earth in search of Montsalvat. Sorely beset by foes, yet he dare not use the sacred spear. It has been kept intact from worldly stain or strife. Then follows the soothing Good Friday magic music episode, when all nature puts on its sweetest attire to give thanks to the Saviour who suffered. Bells are heard. It is noon. As in the first act, but by a different route and accompanied by other music, the scene slowly changes to the domed Temple of the Holy Grail. The funeral services of Titurel are being held. The hall is full of mourning knights. Amfortas, his agony at its apex, refuses to unveil the Grail, and begs his companions to slay him, for he can no longer endure his pain and shame. Parsifal enters, accompanied by Gurnemanz. He witnesses the king's paroxysm, and then advances to him. With the point of the lance he heals the wound. Kundry dies on the altar steps, and Parsifal, now King of Montsalvat, mounts the step and lifts on high in silent invocation the crystal vase. Mystic voices in the cupola sing "Wondrous work of mercy. Salvation to the Saviour." Thus the mystery ends.

In the first draft of his poem Wagner ended the play with these words:

Great is the charm of desire,
Greater is the power of renunciation.

In all the complicated web of this drama Pity and Renunciation are the two principal motives Wagner drew his themes from all sources. Sagas, legends, poems and histories. He incorporated episodes from the Saviour's life, and boldly utilized the theme of the Last Supper. The blood of Christ which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have received in a chalice becomes the comforting and eucharistic Grail. Then side by side with all these conflicting stories he places the semi-Saracenic Klingsor, the very embodiment of a magician of the Dark Ages, and Kundry, the type of the woman of all times, the wandering Jewess, the Magdalen. Parsifal is a mediæval Jesus. The knights of the Holy Grail, the Apostles transposed to a later epoch. As it suited him Wagner violently tossed about and made sport of the poetic ideas of Chrétien de Troies and Wolfram von Eschenbach. He Wagnerized everything he touched. The result is "Parsifal" as we now see it at Bayreuth.

If the poem is charged to the full with Semitic, Buddhistic, Patristic, Christian and Schopenhauerian philosophies, the play affords the great master fresco painter superb opportunities for scenic display. The stepson of Geyer, himself a scene painter, dramatist, poet and composer, did not fail to take advantage of the chance to indulge his taste for luxuriant, glowing colors, for sensational contrasts, lofty spaces and all the moving magnificence of panoramic display. There are many tableaux in this drama, genuinely a static drama. In Act I. we see Gurnemanz surrounded by the tender squires, while Kundry cowers in the foreground. "Doch Vater sag, und lehr' uns fein; du kanntest Klingsor, wie mag das sein?" The tableau of the killed swan, with Parsifal admonished by Gurnemanz, is another noteworthy grouping. Nothing is so impressive, however, as the spectacle of the sick King being raised, as he elevates the Grail. Klingsor's tower is as sinister as an etching by Salvator Rosa. The flower garden, first with the damsels and then desolate, gives two striking pictures. Parsifal stands spear in hand. "Du weisst: wo einzig du mich wiedersiehst!" The praying knight in Act III.; Parsifal in white baptismal robe, recalling Ary Scheffer's portrait of Christ, and last of all the noble harmonies of the last scene, the descending dove and the mystic chant:

"Höchsten Heiles Wunder, Erlösung dem Erlöser."

Next week the music of "Parsifal" will be discussed; also its real value as an artistic and ethical music drama.

BAYREUTH, August 24.

MINNE HUMPHRYES TO MAKE A WESTERN TOUR.—Mrs. Minne Humphryes, the church and concert soprano, returned from her vacation this week restfully passed up in the beautiful Berkshires. This artist will make a Western tour in November under the management of Arnold Somlyo, of Carnegie Hall. Mr. Somlyo will be her manager for the remainder of the season, and she will be heard here and in the nearby cities in oratorio, concerts and recitals. Mrs. Humphyres has sung with success at several places in New England this summer. Last Sunday the singer resumed her place in the quartet choir of the Greenwood Baptist, where her lovely voice and gracious womanly qualities have won for her many friends.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

The seventeenth scholastic year begins September 3 and ends May 1. Annual entrance examinations: Piano and Organ—Sept. 17, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and All Other Orchestral Instruments—September 18, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Singing—September 19, from 10 A. M. to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M. and 8 to 10 P. M. Children's Day—September 21, Piano and Violin—10 A. M. to 12 M; 2 to 4 P. M.

LONDON AFFAIRS.

London, August 25, 1901.

If no mention were made in this paper of the first Promenade Concert at Queen's Hall this season, which took place in that renovated Chamber of Sounds last night, the musical world, with the exception of Provincial London, would not become acquainted with the fact; but this letter tells at once to the whole musical world that the event transpired, and hence musical Europe and musical America derive the necessary knowledge. It will be asked how this is, and it may be replied that the London papers—to a limited extent in number and in the space they devote to it—refer to the concert, and London papers are London institutions, whereas The Musical Courier, floating as it does all over America and Europe, and specially in musical spheres, informs the international musical world of the fact. Millions of people read the London papers, but few of these are interested in music, while all who read The Musical Courier read it because they are interested in music, and therefore this and all other concerts and musical affairs which are to be known to the world of music must be announced through this paper in order so to become known.

The hall was packed, the pit being devoted to the standees, who, with covered heads and cigars or pipes between their succulent lips, listened devotedly to the program annexed herewith, and enthusiastically encored everything bad as much as that which was good. Discrimination in music goes into smoke, for the connoisseur is supposed to be Bohemian in habit and partially in thought, and he philosophizes gently over the work or the composer as he listens to the music, puffing smoke with the beats and blowing with the rhythms. If he puffs his smoke against them—with the exception of a syncopated puff—he is unmusical sure, like the woman in the audience who fans irrespective of the rhythmical air; but there were so many smokers below that it was impossible to dissect the musical from the unmusical, and all that could be done was to leave it to the applause to decide, and that did decide vociferously, and even—when things were really bad—vehemently, that smoking in London does not necessarily mean musical judgment.

However, as I am on foreign ground I shall not apply any rigorous critical diagnosis to the Queen's Hall opening Promenade, but I will say that Gregory Hast, the tenor singer, who appeared and really did sing as an artist only can sing, proved to be the musical treat of the evening, and all American lovers of song and of song in pure English should congratulate themselves on the opportunity his visit to our country this season will grant to them. In Mr. Hast are centred a fine musical temperament, a delicate refined temperamental glow; a most consummate mastery of the language in its lyric sense and in its application to tone; a truly scientific tone and voice placement instructive to all vocal enthusiasts and enthusiastic vocalists, who will hear how a voice is fitted by culture to meet realistic song and do it full justice. And then besides this, Mr. Hast knows what he is singing from the musical side of it, let alone his vocalism.

The question was recently put: "Why are there so few true critics of the vocal art?" Because there are so few vocal artists to illustrate to the critic what the art is in contradistinction to the screaming, the bellowing, the screeching and the moaning that go for singing. Gregory Hast tells the critic what singing as effected by artistic vocalism signifies, and adds to this art the instinctive and the cultured knowledge of music. That is what we all want, particularly when it is honest and free from any alliance with exaggerations.

But I am forgetting all about the Program, which must follow here to secure some further understanding of the sandwiching of vocal between instrumental that helped to make the interesting popular concert it proved to be. People who go to hear popular concert should not criticise, for the programs are made to please the audiences, and the soloists are selected to please themselves. We combine the two and, although it makes it a difficult matter for the conductor to build up a balanced or unbalanced program, we secure an agreeable mélange, so long as we remember that we are at a popular concert from which scholasticism and technical analysis are banished. Henry J. Wood, who for years past has been the orchestral commandant of these concerts, has by this time become a prestidigitateur in the handling of the programs, and if he had a thoroughly disciplined and rehearsed orchestra he could, if he liked, exaggerate still more where he does it now, and where he imbues a movement with true musical feeling he could vastly improve it, for Mr. Wood is a conductor of orchestra without doubt, and probably the best equipped in England—among the Englishmen. In England, like in its renegade daughter, America, there is a deep seated prejudice against native composers and conductors due to the uninterrupted free trade importation of foreign artists of all kinds. Good ones come here, among them expert conductors such as Richter, Mottl, Nikisch, Lohse and our Paur, and thereupon the British man and woman, like our Yankee and American men and women, simply puff out of existence the native artist.

A man like Mr. Wood (whose woodwind by the way needs much improvement) must have had a difficult climb to have reached the present height of Olympus, particularly with a name so harsh as compared with that, for instance, of euphonious Mottl. Had his name been Henry J. Mottl or Harry Nikisch or Hen Lohse he could have impressed more deftly, but Mr. Wood at the baton is too plain not to have presented nearly insurmountable obstacles in Great Britain and America to an orchestral conductor. Therefore we Americans should glory in Wood, and our musical Smiths, Joneses, Johnstons, Tompkinses, MacDowells, Chadwicks, and particularly Van der Stuckens should never despair. Lady Hope still prevails.

But I must not neglect to give the program which, as will be seen, is not overburdened with the heavy thought of brain to require assimilation if one is at all musically mosaical. In memory of the beloved Empress Frederick, first child of the late Queen, the Chopin Funeral March was played (not Theodore Thomas' arrangement). After the audience (which stood uncovered during this devotion) was seated the program ran as follows:

Part I.

Capriccio Italien.....Tschaikowsky
Flower Song (Carmen).....Mr. Gregory Hast, Soloist
Oberon Overture.....Weber
Zigeunerweisen (Sarasate)...Leonora Von Stosch, Soloist
Two Hungarian Dances.....Brahms
"Sevillana" (Massenet).....Mme. Amy Sherwin, Soloist
Midsummer Night's Scherzo.....Mendelssohn
Song (Gounod).....Miss Jessie Goldsack, Soloist
William Tell Overture.....Rossini

Part II.

Cavalleria Fantasia.....Mascagni
Song (Sullivan).....Mr. Gregory Hast, Soloist
Bassoon Solo.....Mr. E. F. James, "
Song (L. Ronald).....Mme. Amy Sherwin, " Cornet Solo.....Mr. Arthur Smith, " Song (old English).....Miss Jennie Goldsack, "
Rakoczy March.....Berlioz

A few words regarding Mme. Amy Sherwin, who was compelled to sing an encore after the "Sevillana." This artist has been singing in Europe, Africa and Australia, covering an extensive geographical area, and has been received everywhere as a most welcome addition to the artistic forces. She

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers,
514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
Mrs. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lecture
Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406.) Chicago
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(Barth and Moszkowski)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL

has the accomplishments and the finesse of the experienced singer, and her interpretations are carefully thought out and scrupulously followed. The "Sevillana" requires thorough vocal technic and an intelligent conception of the Spanish atmosphere, as supplemented by the art of Massenet, and Madame Sherwin accomplished the task in a convincing manner with spirit, abandon and genuine dash.

There were many opportunities in this orchestral program for Mr. Wood to prove his love for the percussion instruments, for they proved tympani smashers knocking the ear drums out of shape. Why Mr. Wood insists upon these factious accents instead of distributing them with equal favor among all sections of the orchestra some of us, who are none too critical and who are rather anxious to see a full fledged British conductor succeed, cannot perceive. When the kettledrum drummed it nearly split the calves-skins and the bass drum, taking advantage of noise, simply shattered it with one blow, whereupon silence ensued—comparatively speaking. But probably these are conductorial idiosyncrasies, due to the summer vacation study of crickety scores and manuscripts of home composers who, at last, hope to get a hearing on their native heath. No doubt after getting in the way of these accents for several weeks one might find one's aural nerves accustomed to the thunder, for, as will be seen, these concerts are projected far out into the hemisphere of time as it were, so to say. One can realize what it means to indite a musical scheme, with few interruptions, by studying this capacious and unadorned proposition:

ROBERT NEWMAN'S PROMENADE CONCERTS.

MONDAY, AUGUST 26.

WAGNER NIGHT.

Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Prelude to Act I. (Lohengrin).....Wagner
Overture, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Träume.....Wagner
Overture, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Huldigungsmarsch.....Wagner
Grand Fantasia, Il Trovatore.....Verdi
Marche Romaine.....Gounod

Madame Sobrino, William Ludwig, Arthur W. Payne, solo violin.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 27.

POPULAR NIGHT.

Overture, Di Ballo.....Sullivan
Largo in G, for strings.....Händel
Overture, Der Freischütz.....Weber
Four Old English Dances.....Cowen
Suite No. 1, Peer Gynt.....Grieg
Grand Fantasia, Faust.....Gounod
March, Habt Acht.....Gungl

Mrs. Henry J. Wood, M. Mercier, Herr Wilhelm Backhaus, solo piano.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28.

TSCHAIKOWSKY NIGHT.

Suite, Casse-Noisette.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony Pathétique.....Tschaikowsky
Overture, 1812.....Tschaikowsky
Grand Fantaisie, H. M. S. Pinafore.....Sullivan
Marche Heroique.....Saint-Saëns

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29.

POPULAR NIGHT.

Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Three Dances from Henry VIII.....Edward German
Prelude to Act III. (Lohengrin).....Wagner
Hymne à Saint Cécile.....Gounod

Solo violin, harp and organ.

Danse des Sylphes, Minuet des Follets, Marche Hongroise } Faust.....Berlioz
March from Le Cid.....Massenet
Grand Fantasia, Carmen.....Bizet
March, Radetzky.....Strauss

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30.

BEETHOVEN NIGHT.

Overture, Egmont.....Beethoven
First Symphony in C.....Beethoven
Overture, Leonora (No. 3).....Beethoven
Grand Fantasia, Aïda.....Verdi
March, Tannhäuser.....Wagner

SATURDAY, AUGUST 31.

POPULAR NIGHT.

Overture, A Butterfly's Ball.....Cowen
Malaguena from Boabdil.....Moszkowski
(a) Spring Song, (b) Bee's Wedding } from Songs Without Words.....Mendelssohn
Overture, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Minuet in A for Strings.....Boccherini
Hungarian Rhapsodie (No. 1) in F.....Liszt
Grand Fantasia, Carmen.....Bizet
March, Le Prophète.....Meyerbeer

ROBERT NEWMAN'S CONCERTS.

QUEEN'S HALL, SEASON 1901-2.

1901.

August 24 to November 9. Promenade Concerts nightly at 8.
September 29 to March 23. Sunday Concert Society's Concerts, every Sunday afternoon at 3:30.
October 19. Mark Hambourg's piano recital.
October 21 to February 8. Chevalier recitals daily at 3, also Thursdays and Saturdays at 8:30.
October 26, November 9, 23, December 7. } Saturday Symphony Concerts at 3.
November 7. Ysaye-Busoni recital.
November 14, 21, 27. Ysaye-Becker-Busoni recitals.
November 29. Scotch concert.
December 25. Christmas Day concert.
December 26 to February 1. Christmas Promenade concerts nightly at 8.

1902.

January 1. New Year's Day concert.
January 18, February 1, 22, March 8. } Saturday Symphony Concerts.
February 8. Herr Hugo Becker's recital.
February 12. Ash Wednesday afternoon concert.
February 15. Ysaye-Busoni recital.
March 17. St. Patrick's Day concert.
March 28. Good Friday concerts.
March 31 to June 28. Chevalier recitals daily at 3, also Thursdays and Saturdays at 8:30.
April 28 to May 3. London Musical Festival.

The prominent artists in the list above have all been in our country, and some of them will return, among them Mark Hambourg, who is engaged for the season 1902-3. Some negotiations have also been afoot with Busoni, but they have not reached any definite conclusion.

Among new appearances—youthful, too—I may mention a young girl—Gertrude Peppercorn is her name—who is a pre-eminently gifted pianist and whose power to evoke tone from a piano without the application of force, but simply by means of a natural touch à la Rubinstein, makes her at once a piano player of unequivocal distinction. She has besides this the musical atmosphere, the buoyancy of enthusiasm with the equilibrium of matured judgment and the developed technic of the twentieth century pianism. She grasps the keyboard in both senses, the poetic and the scientific, and her

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD, Studio 6, 241 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO. CONCERT ORGANIST. Piano and Organ Instruction.

A. CLIPPINGER, THE ART OF SINGING. Conductor. 410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

CARL R. DRAKE, VIOLIN VIRTUOSO. Teacher. Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE. Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER, PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals. Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT, Teacher of Singing, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON, SOPRANO, 620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD, CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction. Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler. For terms and dates address 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN, BARITONE, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE. BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS. For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . . MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL, Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic. CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION. H. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist. (GODOWSKY.) Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers. ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE, SINGING MASTER. The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list. STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO. CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING. Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory. FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager. FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON, Basso-Cantante, 623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY, JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO. ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT. JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors. Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

interpretations are unique because they are always, at the proper time, dramatic without the slightest dynamic exaggeration. The young lady is on the tapis for the next period of piano playing, and is sure to be heard from. I heard her in a group of Chopin, the Brahms variations on the Händel theme, and a lot of modern morceaux, and she is no less than what we call in America a wonder. No doubt some manager has already secured an option for her American appearances.

I learn from our Florence correspondent, who is at the same time an impresario, Joseph Smith, that Duse has closed her contract for the United States and will give her performances during the approaching season in the large cities only. I met Duse in Italy in 1899 and have been instrumental, with the aid of Mr. Smith, in inducing her to give America once more the benefit of her exquisite art and the effect of her personal influence in directing the dramatic ideal in the proper channel. Madame Duse's extensive repertory will be drawn upon liberally this time and she brings a complete company along.

Montague Chester, the English and French general representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER, and whose headquarters are at the Hotel Cecil here, is one of the best known newspaper men in Europe, having traveled extensively for six years prior to his association with this paper in the interests of a weekly Paris publication. He is consequently personally known in the best and most progressive circles of European artistic and journalistic life. Mr. Chester has accomplished the unique task of placing THE MUSICAL COURIER in all prominent centres, and it can now be found all over Europe where music is cultivated. Mr. Chester is a musical connoisseur and critic, but is devoting all his attention at present to the general distribution and placing of THE MUSICAL COURIER side by side with the great weekly publications of Europe. There is no musical paper of Europe that has as great a circulation in its own country as has THE MUSICAL COURIER in that country, whichever it may be, and as for general circulation—no musical paper of Europe is to be found on any news-stands or in prominent places, as the editions of these papers are limited to the few subscribers and advertisers.

Under Mr. Chester's management of his special department musical artists will find an agreeable source of information on all subjects pertaining to musical, operatic and other engagements, the movements of artists in Europe and America, the production of musical works, the general musical movement, and Mr. Chester will be pleased to answer all questions within his power that may be suggested on this interesting problem of music in its practical relations to the development of the artist and his artistic pursuit. BLUMENBERG.

VIENNA ITEMS.

VIENNA, August 24, 1901

JOSEF HELLMESBERGER has resigned from the Conservatory of Music here on an ethical controversy, but it is hoped that upon the proper amends he will be induced to reconsider his step.

Moriz Rosenthal, the renowned pianist, is at present on a vacation at Gastein. He has his approaching season nearly booked completely.

The "Don Juan" performance at the Imperial Opera House to-night will have in its cast Mmes. Sedlmaier, Walker and Michalek, and Messrs. Nadal, Demuth, Hesch, Felix, and, of course, Grengg as Leporello.

The applications from America of students in music in this city are not as numerous as the teachers and musical institutions would like them. Vienna musicians have not learned the art of making themselves known outside of Vienna until after their death. B.

Musical . . People.

H. M. Bauer has been engaged for the new department of vocal music at the Colorado State Normal School.

Rocco Venuto has composed a march and named it after and dedicated it to the Kansas City (Mo.) Journal.

Miss Ann J. Routt, of Springfield, Ill., possessor of a rare contralto voice, is studying with Bouhy in Paris.

Mrs. J. T. McLain has been teaching in the summer music schools in Georgia during the months of July and August.

Miss Blanche Vignos has recently accepted a position as teacher of piano at the Wolfram School of Music, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. G. O. MacFarland, leader of the choir of the First Presbyterian Church, Butte, Mon., has returned to her home after several months' study in the East.

Miss Florence Hodge, a talented young woman from Murfreesboro, Tenn., has been engaged as organist by one of the Presbyterian churches of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Weeks, director and organist of the First M. E. Church, Duluth, Minn., have taken a studio in Rooms 306 and 307 Masonic Temple.

Miss E. Louise Russell gave an organ recital on August 22 at the Central Presbyterian Church, Summit, N. J. William E. Harper, basso, was the vocal soloist.

Miss Antoinette Harding, a contralto who is known in Pittsburg, is planning to give a concert during October, at which she will be assisted by well-known artists.

Miss Gertrude D. McBrien gave her annual piano recital at Canton, N. Y., on August 22. She was assisted by Mrs. Frances Dutton Wood, a Boston vocalist.

Miss Bertha Fisher, who studied at Chautauqua this summer with William H. Sherwood, opened on September 1 a studio in the Odd Fellows' Building at Springfield, Ill.

Director Llewellyn B. Cain, of festival choruses in the western part of Maine, has returned to his home in Waterville, after a vacation of several weeks at Martha's Vineyard.

The La Crosse (Wis.) Chronicle announces that Mrs. Sallie McKay-Ross, of that town, has composed a new list of stirring compositions which are being played by military bands in this country.

Miss Mary E. Cook, a soprano, gave a song recital at the Mount Everett House Annex, Great Barrington, Mass., on the evening of August 27. Miss Mae Howell, pianist, and Paul Robert, tenor, assisted.

Mme. Mabel Morton, dramatic soprano; Master Aubrey Nash, boy soprano, of Grace Church, New York; R. Shields, tenor; the Misses Everett, piano and violin, gave a successful concert recently at Stamford, Conn.

Miss Isabel McKinley White opened the musical season at Kalamazoo, Mich., with a concert at the People's Church, on the evening of September 4. Miss White is a soprano. In the program she was assisted by Miss Harriet Hasty, pianist, and William Wagenvoord, baritone.

A quartet composed of Mrs. Maude Gordon Ruby, first soprano; Mrs. Katherine Prescott Crafts, second soprano; Miss Anna B. Mosgrove, first alto, and Mrs. Una Cross-Brown, second contralto, gave a concert at the Congregational Church at Bristol, N. H., on the evening of August 28.

The pupils of Mrs. Edith Du Mond gave a song recital August 23 in the M. E. Church of Stroudsburg, Pa., in aid of the M. E. Sunday school. Miss Emma W. Bruen, a contralto from Philadelphia, and William H. Burkhardt, Jr., a violinist from New York, helped to make the program interesting.

Ernest Appy has issued a prospectus of his "School of Music" in the Miller Building at Carthage, Mo. The faculty includes Ernest Appy, piano, violoncello and harmony; Gerard Appy and Mrs. Appy-Edmonston, violin; Miss Cornelia Appy, violoncello; W. H. Leib, chorusmaster and voice trainer; Dr. Chas. Van Hoogeveen Sterk, lecturer on music and biography of composers.

MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF AND MUSIC.

THE new volume of Marie Bashkirtseff's journal and letters tells us much of her musical ambitions. When she had her fortune told in 1876 the fortune teller said: "The cards are good. You are a musician. As a singer you will arrive at great glory." She was, as Anatole France says, "more vain of her voice than of her beauty. Her voice, indeed, was two notes short of three octaves, and her earliest dreams were to become a great singer. When a brilliant marriage was proposed to her, "I sank back into my chair," she writes, "and said, 'Too much trouble, and, besides, I want to be a singer.'" In one of her anonymous letters to Guy de Maupassant she wrote, "Dare I ask who are musicians and painters?" And the great novelist replied, "You ask me who is my painter among the moderns. Millet. My musician? I have a horror of music?" Much we may suppose to her discomfiture. In 1884 she enters in her journal, "It is nearly 2 o'clock, and I am writing in bed after my return from the Italiens, where Massenet's 'Herodiade' was sung. The first act surprises by the novelty and largeness of its sonority. It resembles nothing I know. It is truly new, full and harmonious. All the opera is ravishing. It is music and poetry incorporated—no airs, no mere filling in work. It is large, magnificent, grandiose. Massenet is a great artist, and henceforth a national glory. They say that good music cannot be understood all at once. Nonsense! Here one understands at once that it is admirable and melodious, in spite of a very learned orchestration (but I do not know Wagner). Without doubt my Italian music cannot struggle against its splendor. Massenet is a melodious and French Wagner. Here is my comparison: 'Wagner is Manet, the incomplete father of the new school of those who seek talent in truth and feeling. There have always been new schools: it is only for the last hundred years that painting lost its way; it is now regaining the right path. So, Wagner is Manet.'" Marie remarks that it is a "stupid invention to make St. John in love with Salomé. I should prefer to see him as a prophet 'exalte,' and her, too, 'exaltée.' But love would be inevitable. I would have loved John! Massenet is an open air artist. He will have air in opera, and have his characters and melodies move in a musical atmosphere which envelops them and makes them live." She makes a very neat and true criticism of Alphonse Daudet—"a pizzicato without end."

DR. HENRY G. HANCHETT.—Dr. Henry G. Hanchett is enjoying a rest at the seaside, having closed his labors at his Tennessee Mountains Summer School. The work there included seven sacred concerts, seven church services and three miscellaneous concerts, all with chorus and orchestra; eight piano recitals, six of them being analytical recitals without assistance, and presenting the largest piano solos (such as Beethoven's "Appassionata" and last Sonatas, Schumann's "Symphonic Studies" and Fantaisie), three song recitals by M. W. Bowman, of New York (who was in charge of the vocal department), and many appearances of other soloists. Besides all this, there were given an average of twelve orchestral concerts a week during the six weeks of the session, the orchestra of nine men presenting a large variety of music, some of it particularly helpful to the music students. There were fifty of these in attendance, for whom classes in interpretation, musical analyses and harmony were organized, and to whom 262 private lessons were given. The chorus registered ninety-nine members. Altogether, the session was most busy, pleasant and profitable, and one of its results has been a largely extended demand for Dr. Hanchett's fascinating recitals during his projected tour, to occur next January and February.

DAVENPORT'S NEW STUDIO.—Warren Davenport has removed to his new studio, 140 Boylston street, Boston.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, September 7, 1901.

MISS ROSE CECILIA SHAY, of this city, is getting ready for her first American tour of English grand opera. She certainly occupies a commanding position in the musical world through her engagement to create the title role in the new American grand opera, "Priscilla, the Maid of Plymouth," of which an early presentation is promised in Washington, D. C. The score of the new opera is the work of Francisco Fanciulli, the distinguished conductor, and it is a tribute to the young American artist to have thus been honored.

Miss Shay will have good support in her company, named after her, which will open the season at Norfolk, Va., late in the fall. An extended tour has already been booked for the company through the principal Eastern cities.

While Miss Shay is a newcomer on the operatic stage, a great success is predicted for her. She has a wealth of personal endowments in addition to a magnificent voice to aid her to this result. Her personality is singularly charming and striking. And yet this seems but to be the natural sequence of one so gifted and well related. Her head is nobly formed and admirably poised on her shoulders. Her smooth, even, white forehead shaded by very dark hair, her eyes expressive of soul, all her features are significant of intelligence to a very extraordinary degree. She is perhaps slightly above the medium height and finely proportioned, moving with all the dignity of a veritable queen. Her magnificent carriage bears out the evidence that she is a superior woman of whom great and grand things may be reasonably expected. Possessed of a dramatic power that is wonderful in one so young, she seems to know the stage by intuition, as if she had been matured to its requirements by the study and practice of years. Thus in her acting she is able to express the strongest emotions without monotony and the most violent passion without harshness, holding herself under perfect control. There is no truer saying in the world than that "blood will tell," and back of Miss Shay's personality lies the foundation of talent inherited, and a distinguished ancestry.

The College of Music begins its twenty-fourth academic year on Monday morning, September 9. Already there has been a very good enrollment and the prospects for a large school the coming season are very favorable. The examinations of students entering under the clerical rate takes place at 3 p. m., Monday, September 9, and the scholarship examination on September 14 at the same hour. The talent of the candidates for admission this year is very much above the average.

The members of the faculty will all be on hand next Monday to welcome their old and new pupils.

Signor A. Gorno, head of the piano department of the College of Music, after a pleasant summer on the seacoast, has returned and will give every afternoon from 2:30 to 3:30 for receiving and examining new pupils for the piano department.

Signor Romeo Gorno, after a successful season of teaching and concert work at Winona Lake Summer School, after which he went East, is home, looking well and ready for his usual large class of piano pupils.

Signor Mattioli arrived in New York from Europe on August 29, much improved in health from his European trip and will greet a larger class of pupils than ever next Monday. He will have more than he can handle, and will be ably assisted by Miss Antoinette Humphreys, who has been added to the faculty this year.

Dr. N. J. Elsenheimer will have charge of the theory department and will also teach piano this season. Dr. Elsenheimer was formerly a member of the piano faculty, and taught this branch during the successful summer term of the college.

E. Hale will give his usual time to instruction and will also be heard in recital during the season.

F. J. Hoffmann is in Europe on leave of absence. Mr. Hoffmann is studying under Leschetizky.

Miss Dickerscheid, a valuable member of the piano faculty, who taught piano during the summer term, will again take up her duties with the opening of the college.

Mrs. Dexter, who will be remembered as the teacher of Miss Therese Abram, one of the Symphony soloists of last season, is expected to be on hand for her vocal work at the college this year.

Mr. Marien returns in a few days from Europe. He will have a large class in violin. The violin department is very strong, and furnishes much of the string material for the college orchestra.

Mr. Schliewen, teacher of violin, returns from Europe soon. Mr. Schliewen has been visiting in his old home, it having been sixteen years since he was there. He will have a good class.

Mr. Gantvoort will have charge of sight-singing classes, history of music lectures and the popular evening classes.

W. S. Sterling, dean of the faculty, after a successful season at Winona and a trip East, is daily in the office, from 9 to 12 a. m., to receive students and visitors, and will be glad to see anyone who wishes to acquaint himself with the college system of musical education, or who are desirous of studying music, but whose means are limited.

Mr. Sterling will have a large class in voice culture and will be assisted by E. A. Jahn and Miss Elizabeth Matthias, both former pupils of his. He will also supervise the organ department and be assisted therein by Adolph Stadermann.

E. A. Jahn, a pupil of Mr. Sterling, has been added to the faculty this season. Mr. Jahn was a soloist at one of the symphony concerts last season. He will be heard in recital.

Miss Humphreys is also a new member of the faculty. She is a pupil of Signor Mattioli and made a most successful appearance in the operas given by the opera class last season.

Miss Clara M. Zumstein, of the Americanized Delsarte culture department of the College of Music, has returned to her duties as dirctor of that department, after a most active and successful season at Chautauqua, N. Y. While at the centre of learning (the Chautauqua Assembly) Miss Zumstein was requested to give in person some "artistic" work from the Chautauqua platform at the annual exhibition of the great schools of physical education to an audience of 8,000 people in the Amphitheatre.

Miss Zumstein gave lesson-talks at the request of Mrs. Emily M. Bishop, author and head of the Americanized Delsarte system in the United States, and was publicly announced from the platform by Mrs. Bishop as her exponent in the West, and as one of the four persons in this country recommended by her as thoroughly competent to teach her work—in the words of Mrs. Bishop: "I desire to say publicly that she is one with whom I can safely trust the people."

After a trip to New York and the East Miss Mannheimer, director of the School of Expression of the college, is again in this city and ready for work. Miss Mannheimer has added a new dramatic organization to the school, the Odeon Players. With her usual energy, she is planning some excellent work for the season.

Special rates for class lessons in piano for those students in any department who wish to take piano as a secondary branch will be arranged for on application to Mr. Sterling.

Joseph Surdo, one of the most efficient music teachers of the public schools, made a few side trips during his summer vacation, and spent some time in a resetting of the Ninety-sixth Psalm for soli and chorus, which will be performed at the next High School commencement. At the recent Normal School exercises his playing on the violin was much admired.

Georg and Mrs. Krueger returned this week from their bridal tour of Europe, and Mr. Krueger returned to his duties in the piano faculty of the Conservatory of Music. They traveled through Germany, Holland, Belgium and England. In London they were delighted with the performance of "Otello" at Covent Garden. They also visited the National Gallery, where they had occasion to admire the paintings of Rubens and Rembrandt. They took in Brussels, Cologne, the Rhine region, Bingen, Ruedesheim, Wiesbaden, Mayence and Baden-Baden. At the latter famous health resort they spent several weeks and were greatly benefited his health. Subsequently they visited Hamburg, Altona, Kiel, where they saw the statue of Emperor William the Great, and the great warship, Hohenzollern. On their return tour they passed through Schleswig-Holstein, and next visited Osnabruck, where they inspected the ancient cathedral of that city. Their tour through Holland was a most pleasant one.

Mr. Krueger is looking forward to a most prosperous season. Several of his advanced pupils will appear in individual recitals, and he also will give several. Mr. Krueger is a teacher who deserves success.

Pier A. Tirindelli, head of the violin department of the Conservatory of Music, returned Thursday from a sojourn in Europe, where he has been for over three months. He left the latter part of May to fill the engagement of concertmeister at the Covent Garden opera season. Both as a violinist and composer his work was much admired. In London he had occasion to hear the great violinists of the present day, Maud Powell, Kubelik, Ysaye, Sarasate, Joachim, Sauret. Miss Powell played his violin Concerto in public, and was enthusiastic about it. She will play it during her concert tour next season in Germany.

Mr. Tirindelli heard many symphony concerts conducted by Richter and Wood. His impression is that in general the American orchestras are better than the English—they are made up of better material and play better. The Covent Garden season was very successful, and Mr. Tirindelli considers Mancinelli and Lohse most able conductors. "Manru" will be given next season, probably under the composer's direction.

After the London season, Mr. Tirindelli visited his wife's mother in Venice. He returned to America via Genoa on the steamer Hohenzollern. He was accompanied on his trip by his wife and child.

The Bellstedt-Ballenberg Concert Band returned from their summer tour this week. Under the management of Louis Ballenberg the band left Cincinnati the latter part of May. They played over four weeks at the Omaha Musical Festival, four weeks in Kansas City and after filling one week's engagements en route in different cities they began a five weeks' season in Denver, playing at

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
First American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
NOW BOOKING. Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

the Arlington Park, which had been made especially attractive for this engagement. In all cities their reception was a triumphant one.

A critic in the Denver Post thus speaks of one of the opening performances:

"The program last evening ran all the way from Wagner to—well, to Bellstedt—and, to be quite candid, the latter was much the more popular. His bright jingles, affluent in melody, usually given in waltz time, or as tripping two-steps with a gay gavotte effect, which he usually presented as encores, tickled the auditors, immensely, and upon one or two occasions last evening the bandmaster had to repeat again and again. Bellstedt is a capital director, and the man seemed to feel his decided musical skill. The band is admirable in its cornets, trombones and horns. The brasses were in excellent fettle, demonstrating the splendid qualities to be acquired by long association and continual study. It is with music as with all things else—perfection cannot be acquired unless by constant effort to improve. A ragged performace at first grows smooth and charming by persistent effort. Culture is at the bottom of all things satisfying. Thistles, brambles and sage brush grow out on our plains and noxious weeds rise up without effort, but the great red rose of the conservatory, which gladdens the eye and breathes its sweet fragrance upon the air, has to receive careful culture throughout its brief but beautiful life. Bellstedt's band has, in my opinion, reached the conservatory stage.

Prof. David Davis received a letter recently from Alberto Randegger, the eminent vocal teacher, of London, England, in which he expresses his pleasure in what he terms the pleasure of instructing Miss Bessie Tudor, of this city. Miss Tudor owes her musical education to Mr. Davis, and Mr. Davis has reason to be proud of her.

Max Grau, 'cellist, died a few days ago at his brother's residence in Pleasant View avenue, Evanston. Mr. Grau was a composer of some note and his compositions showed talent.

The Conservatory of Music opened the academic year last Tuesday. Among the members of the faculty who have been spending their vacation abroad are Mr. and Mrs. Theodor Bohlmann, Georg Krueger, Pier Adolfo Tirindelli and Frederic Shailer Evans. They all returned to their duties during the present week. Others who have returned are Miss Frances Shuford, who has been spending the summer at Holly Springs, Miss., and Mrs. Wickersham.

Adolf Hahn, one of Cincinnati's distinguished violinists, has returned from a five weeks' hunting and fishing tour in Northern Canada. He has resumed his work in the Piler Building studio and expects a very large class. J. A. HOMAN.

MAUD ROUDEZ.—Miss Maud Roudez was the chief attraction at a concert given at Atlantic City September 2. She sang Aria from "Le Cid," Massenet; "Elizabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhäuser"; an Aria from "Herodiade," and other well-known selections.

IRENÆUS STEVENSON.—Irenæus Stevenson, of the Independent and Harper's Weekly, was in Budapest a month ago after a visit to Transylvania. He is now in Hungary. During the month of October he will be in England, and in November he will be here for a few weeks.

RICHARD BURMEISTER RETURNS FROM EUROPE.

RICHARD BURMEISTER, the pianist and composer, returned from Europe last Wednesday on the steamer Barbarossa. He was accompanied by Mrs. Burmeister, and together they have enjoyed a delightful summer in Germany. The Burmeisters made an early start, leaving New York in May. After a visit to his mother in Hamburg Mr. Burmeister went to Berlin, where he witnessed the unveiling of the Bismarck monument. This monument, a marvel of beauty and strength, designed by the sculptor Begas, is erected in front of the Reichstag. The unveiling took place early in June, and was attended by the flower of German society, with Emperor William as the most conspicuous figure.

From Berlin the Burmeisters made a flying trip to Leipsic, and there Mr. Burmeister met Dr. Von Hase, the president and treasurer of the Liszt Monument Fund. The meeting proved mutually happy. Dr. Von Hase expressed to Mr. Burmeister personally his gratitude for the contribution toward the fund from America. As readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER will recall, Mr. Burmeister, who is Liszt's most distinguished pupil in this country, gave a concert at Mendelssohn Hall last November for the benefit of the Liszt Monument Fund, and the sum realized just completed the amount required to complete the monument.

The monument will be unveiled in Weimar next June, and Dr. Von Hase has already invited Mr. Burmeister to represent the Liszt pupils in America at the ceremonies. Hahn, the sculptor of the Liszt monument, also designed one of Von Moltke. He is a young man still. In Munich, which, by the way, Mr. Burmeister now declares to be his favorite city in Germany, he met an old Liszt pupil, Professor Kellermann, quite famous in that region because he was chosen the hero of a book entitled "Kraft Meier," by Walzogen. Kellermann, who is a man of wealth, made the first contribution, a large one of 5,000 marks, to the Liszt Monument Fund. He is a man distinguished for his amiability, and that is why the title of Walzogen's musical novel is amusing when applied to him. Liszt's pupils had a reputation for pounding. Many got over the habit, but in youth most of them were addicted to vehemence. In Munich Mr. Burmeister also met Max Schillings, the president of the Allgemeine Tonkunstler Verein, founded by Liszt. This is the society that performs modern works, and next summer Mr. Burmeister is to play his arrangement of the "Concerto Pathétique." While in Munich the Burmeisters visited the new Prince Regent Theatre.

After Munich they visited the old mediæval town Rothenburg, which has only recently been discovered by tourists. Through a book by Paul Heiser, "Das Glück von Rothenburg," several painters were attracted to the old town, and through their sketches other Germans were attracted thither. The old town stands unaltered, a striking illustration of the architecture of the Middle Ages. The old wall with its thirty towers, all of them different, remains a wonder to all visitors. Each summer there is a three days' festival at Rothenburg, annually commemorating some historical episode.

After a delightful sojourn the Burmeisters went to Bayreuth, and there attended "The Flying Dutchman." Mr. Burmeister's criticism of the opera will doubtless meet the approval of many other modern critics. He does not approve of the old, stilted style of acting, for instance. "At Bayreuth," he said, "the performance of 'The Dutchman' was not dramatic, and there seemed to be no correct conception of the part. The Spinning Song was the only scene and Mme. Schumann-Heink the only artist in the cast that could be accepted by an up to date standard."

The Burmeisters attended one of the receptions at Wahnfried, and there met many distinguished people, and one of the pleasant moments was the interview with Siegfried Wagner. The son of the great dramatic composer said he would like to visit the United States, but his duties will not permit him to take the journey in the immediate future.

Leaving Bayreuth the Burmeisters located for a period of six weeks at the Hermitage, an old castle occupied and built by Wilhelmina, a sister of Frederick the Great. The Burmeisters lived in a peasant's cottage an ideal life. Mr. Burmeister managed to secure a fairly decent piano, and he went to work, arranging regular hours for practice. Since then he has written a new orchestration for Weber's "Concertstuck" in F. Mr. Burmeister does not think that Weber is appreciated in this country as he should be. The fact that no less than six composers wrote arrangements for Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" ought to be an indication of the vitality of his wonderfully inspired music. "Der Freischütz," Mr. Burmeister declares, is one of the greatest dramatic operas ever written.

Mr. Burmeister resumes his work at once at his Park avenue studio. He has been engaged as soloist for the Worcester festival and for two concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will play in Worcester September 27, and in Boston October 25 and 26. At all three concerts he will play the "Concerto Pathétique," which Liszt wrote for two pianists, and which Mr. Burmeister arranged for the solo instrument and the orchestra.

While in Bayreuth Mr. Burmeister had several pleasant meetings with his friend Madame Schumann-Heink. The great contralto has his tone poem "The Sisters," written for contralto and orchestra. She expects to sing the work in New York this season.

Troetschel Organ Recitals.

HUGO TROETSCHEL, the organist of the Schermerhorn Street Evangelical Lutheran Church, Brooklyn was engaged for the inaugural recital on the new organ in the Evangelical Lutheran Bethlehem Church on Marion street, Brooklyn. The first public hearing of the fine new organ attracted a large congregation last Wednesday evening. Mr. Troetschel was assisted by Mrs. Gertrude Albrecht, soprano; Alfred Van Guelpen, basso; Joseph Zoellner, violinist, and the Bethlehem Church Choir, of which Heinrich Davids is the conductor. The following was the program:

Symphony Movement.....Widor
Melody.....Salom
Gavotte.....Thoma
Chorus, Du Bist's, dem Ruhm und Ehre.....Haydn
Church chorus (Heinrich Davids, conductor).
Soprano solo, Elsa's Dream (Lohengrin).....Wagner
Mrs. Gertrude Albrecht,
(Soloist of Schermerhorn Street Evangelical Church).
Toccata and Fugue in D minor.....Bach
Vision.....Rheinberger
Fanfare.....Lemmens
Violin solo, Concert Andante.....Mendelssohn
Prof. Joseph Zoellner.
Grand Fantaisie in E minor (The Storm).....Lemmens
Bass solo, An der Weser.....Pressel
Alfred von Guelpen,
(Soloist of Schermerhorn Street Evangelical Church).
Chorus, Benedictus.....Gade
Church chorus (H. Davids, conductor).
Selections from Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Pilgrims' Chorus.
O Thou Sublime Sweet Evening Star.
March.

J. JEROME HAYES.—J. Jerome Hayes, the vocal instructor has resumed teaching at his studio, No. 40 West Twenty eight street. A number of his pupils, who have been professionally engaged during the summer, will resume their studies with him. Heathe Gregory has been singing at many social events in Newport, and Miss F. M. Chase, also a pupil of Mr. Hayes, has accepted the solo soprano position at the First Congregational Church at Buffalo, N. Y. Two well-known teachers from the West are coming to New York to study with Mr. Hayes, and will bring several of their advanced pupils with them.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
126 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

2016 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, September 2, 1901.

FRISCO is in a delightful mood just now. After a spell of heavy fog and our regulation trade winds, we are having summer weather again, with warm sunshine, balmy air and our lovely bay, blue as Venetian waters. It has often been said that nowhere in the world is there ich a harbor and that the scenery right around San Fransco Bay could not be exceeded in beauty anywhere. This om people who have traveled and know. Certainly, it oks serenely beautiful to me this morning, as I see it om my window, with Alcatraz Island and its fortresses t like a jewel in the midst—but what has all this to do ith music? True, but the subject is fair enough to win rdon for me if I rave over it a bit.

This is Labor Day, too, and there is to be a mammoth rade. It is initiatory of the seventh week of the great rike, which has affected everything in our business cen-es, even music, and that seriously, though it does keep ngs lively, and between that and the circus this week e cannot complain that affairs in town have been dull.

I am glad to be able to record a more agreeable impression of "Mefistofele" through a second hearing. It s evidently the people, not the opera, that lacked proper rit. This week the improvement was more than ordiarily marked, both as to movement and interpretation. short, the people were more familiar with their parts, everything moved as it should. Mr. Steindorff had a ge undertaking before him when he determined to give Boito's heavy music-drama, but his success is measured the people who crowd the entrance nightly, and many whom are going a second time to listen to the lovely mes that one must study to appreciate.

This week the fine old Bellini opera of "Norma," which s been on the shelf for years, is to be given a hearing.

The Western Concert Company is the name of the ganization under the direction of Roscoe Warren Lucy hich has for its members Miss Grace Davis, soprano; Ms. Sedgeley Reynolds, contralto; J. F. Veaco, tenor; Van Lingrem, basso, and Roscoe Warren Lucy, solo pnist and musical director. This company, with the assistance of Mrs. Mary Carpaneto Mead, Miss Isobel Kerr, Miss Xena Roberts and Miss Elsie Arden, who comprise the Colonial Ladies' Quartet, and Walter C. Campbell, basso, and H. J. Jenkins, elocutionist, gave an interesting concert August 27 at the United States Naval Training Station, on Goat Island, before the naval officers and families and the naval apprentices. The latter were in white uniforms for the occasion, and made a festive appearance, adding much to the enjoyment of the occasion by their genuine appreciation of the program. Those who participated report a most enjoyable trip. The program is given below:

Quartet, Estudiantina.....Lacome
Miss Davis, Mrs. Reynolds, Mr. Veaco and Mr. Van Lingrem.
I'll Sing the Songs of Araby.....Clay
L. Van Lingrem.
Recitation.....Selected
H. J. Jenkins.
For This.....De Koven
Miss Grace J. Davis.
Quartet, Cuckoo.....Jensen
Miss Mead, Miss Kerr, Miss Roberts and Miss Arden.
The Armorer's Song (Robin Hood).....De Koven
Walter C. Campbell.
Oh! That We Two Were Maying.....Gounod
Mrs. Sedgeley Reynolds.
Quartet, Moonlight.....Eaton Faning
Miss Davis, Mrs. Reynolds, Mr. Veaco and Mr. Van Lingrem.
Though You Forget.....Tipton
J. F. Veaco.
Recitation.....Selected
H. J. Jenkins.
Quartet, Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes.....Mozart
Mrs. Mead, Misses Kerr, Roberts and Arden.
America, by Apprentices.

The question of singing in English undergoes a periodical overhauling and discussion. Of late the subject has again arisen among professionals, some arguing for Italian, others for any foreign language or tongue, but utterly tabooing their own. To anyone who has studied the proper method of tone production there can be no question about it. English is neither more difficult to enunciate nor, properly sung, is it less musical than any other language. I must confess that after arias and arias given in the never-so-melodious and tripping Italian, it sounds, as the darky said, "pow'ful sweet" to hear good, clean-cut English once in a while.

We may prefer Italian notes
And love the melody that floats
About the gay Venetian boats,
Half wild in our extolling.
But shall we then despise the sound
When some rude native harp unbound
Strikes up like cherries round and round,
With English fol-de-rolling?

There is in our town a woman, a native Californian, with a splendid voice, splendid stage presence, colossal ambition—and all that goes to make the proper equipment for the operatic stage, which she has in view, and she declares for English absolutely and decidedly. She intends, she says, to have written for her an opera in the English tongue, and it will be grand opera, too.

The first of the conservatory evenings at the California Conservatory of Music will be held to-morrow night, September 3. A short program will be rendered, in which none of the students are expected to participate, as this is the initial evening of the season.

Miss Helen Hagar, John R. Lewis and Lovell Langstroth, the latter but recently returned from study in Brussels, have formed a trio for the performance of high class ensemble work, and give their first concert on Tuesday evening, September 10, at the Unitarian Church, Oakland, when they will be assisted by A. H. Cogswell, baritone. A fine program has been prepared, embracing numbers from Raff, Locatelli, Gounod, Bazzini, Schubert and Schutt. Miss Hagar is a rising pianist, who has done good work in Oakland and is well and favorably known there. John Lewis, a favorite pupil of Sir Henry Heyman, last season gave promise of becoming a violinist of far more than ordinary ability. He is very young, but his artistic performances of last season fixed him in the public eye, and his career will be followed with interest.

Miss Dorothy Goodsell has returned from her vacation and resumed her classes in singing at her various studios in Alameda, Berkeley and Redwood City.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt is recovering rapidly from her late illness and is now able to use her hand a very little. The doctors think she will ere long recover its use entirely. Mrs. Mansfeldt's work among us is of an order that can ill be spared, and her friends will be glad when she is in a condition to give the recitals that had been planned to take place this fall.

From Across the Bay.

Miss Dorothy Goodsell, soprano, of this city, recently sang two solos at the vesper service of the Unitarian Church, Alameda, "I Mourn as a Dove," from Benedict's "St. Peter," and "Sancta Maria," Faure, with obligato by Richard Jose Ferrer, a pupil of Ysaye. Mr. Ferrer also gave two violin solos, the Andante from Mendelssohn's violin Concerto and the Largo from Händel's "Semele."

The date of Grace Carroll's recital is September 3, and it will be at the Oakland Unitarian Church. Miss Carroll is a pupil of Bjorksten, and has arranged a program of twelve songs, carefully selected from French, English and German composers, nearly all of them new here. Miss Ethel Bates will be her accompanist.

James Hamilton Howe has been appointed organist of St. Dominic's during Franklin Palmer's absence. Will have more to say in regard to it next week.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler.—Beginning early in November, Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler is to make an Eastern concert tour, playing a number of recitals, two of which she will give in this city and two in Boston. Her New York recitals will be on the afternoons of November 16 and 19, and those in Boston on the evening of November 20 and afternoon of November 23, under the management of Henry Wolfsohn.

New York College of Music,
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.
Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and all branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.
SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.
All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction in harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing and free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.
Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, September 7, 1901.

AN event which doubtless will afford music critics an opportunity for eloquence will be the opening of the rearranged and beautified University Hall, in the Fine Arts Building. The date has not as yet been announced.

The advisability of having the annual meeting of the Illinois State Music Teachers' Association take place at Christmas time, instead of during the month of June, has been discussed by a number of musicians, but as yet nothing regarding this change has been effected by the executive committee.

A meeting of the Amateur Musical Club is announced to take place in Steinway Hall on October 28, when talented performers, including Miss Mary Peck Thomson, soprano, will contribute an attractive program. Mrs. Burton Hanson is the competent president of this organization.

Dates of the Thomas Orchestral concerts for the season 1901-1902 are announced as follows: Friday afternoons, October 25; November 1, 15, 22 and 29; December 6, 13, 20 and 27; January 3, 10, 17, 24 and 31; February 7, 14, 21 and 28; March 14, 21 and 28; April 18 and 25; May 2. Saturday evenings, October 26; November 2, 16, 23 and 30; December 7, 14, 21 and 28; January 4, 11, 18 and 25; February 1, 8, 15 and 22; March 1, 15, 22 and 29; April 19 and 26; May 3. Artists engaged to appear at these events include: Pianists, Slivinski, Mrs. Ella Dahl Rich, Miss Augusta Cottlow, Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, Ludwig Breitner, Harold Bauer; violinists, Gregorowitsch, Kreisler, Miss Olive Mead, Leopold Kramer, Emil Baré; 'cellist, Bruno Steindel; vocalists, Madame Schumann-Heink, Gertrude May Stein, Ben Davies, Charles W. Clark; reader, George Riddle.

The following words, which formed a part of Amy Fay's recent retrospective article in Music, may well be reproduced in these columns: "Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler electrified us all with her piano recital in New York a short time ago, upon which occasion a large audience mostly composed of our best professional musicians gathered to hear her. She has made great strides during the past ten years, and is now among the few who stand on top of Mount Parnassus. I was most impressed by her rendering of Schumann's 'Symphonic Etudes,' of which her interpretation was very original and striking, but all of the program was splendidly done. It was a most taxing one to the powers of an artist. She is the 'Sarah Bernhardt' of the piano without doubt, as I christened her long ago."

Holmes Cowper, the well-known tenor, has returned from a pleasant vacation spent at Rat Portage, Lake of the Woods, in the western part of Canada.

Two acceptable additions are now being made to Grace Episcopal Church, in this city, a set of chimes having been donated by R. Floyd Clinch and a memorial organ by Jesse Spalding.

The American Violin School, Joseph Vilim director, opens its third season this week at Kimball Hall.

Miss Carolyn Louise Willard, pianist, who has returned from a successful summer session of teaching at Coldwater, Mich., has accepted a number of concert engagements.

The Spiering Violin School, in the Fine Arts Building, has issued an attractive prospectus for the season 1901-1902.

Miss Mary Peck Thomson's October engagements include a recital at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.

Frederick John Maguire, teacher of the Virgil Clavier method, has decided to accept pupils in Chicago. His studio is in Kimball Hall.

The many pupils of Mrs. Hess-Burr will be happy to learn that she has entirely recovered from a severe illness. This eminent musician will resume teaching at her studio in the Fine Arts Building on Monday, September 9.

Marie de Rohan, the exceptionally gifted dramatic soprano, has arrived in Chicago, having recently returned to America from a series of European engagements. So thorough an artist will be an acquisition to music in the West.

Miss Lelia Breed, vocal instructor, has returned to the Fine Arts Building from a summer vacation in Wisconsin. Already a number of her pupils have been successful in securing important concert and recital engagements for this season.

Charles R. Baker has received numerous complimentary letters concerning his unique circular, reference to which was made in these columns last week. Many persons are taking advantage of the statement that copies may be secured upon application.

Upon his return from Europe this week, John J. Hattstaedt, director of the American Conservatory, found in his studio a very handsome desk, the gift of members of his faculty.

Sydney Lloyd Wrightson will sing "Hiawatha" before the Evanston Musical Society on December 21. On the same occasion the baritone will give also a short miscellaneous program.

The artistic interpretations and sympathetic voice of Frederic Warren, of the Auditorium Conservatory of Music, are combining to make the baritone very popular, both as soloist and instructor.

Miss Hortense Mazurette, Miss Ooliata Zimmerman and Miss Delight Barsch, talented students of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, are touring with "The Serenaders," under the management of Clarence Drown. Other successful pupils of the same progressive and thorough institution are Josephine McGillan, a member of James O'Neill's company, and Florence Coleman, who is taking part in "The Girl from Porto Rico," at Warren Ohio.

The marriage of Hermann Walker, of the above conservatory, to Miss Jane Canfield is announced.

CHARLES R. BAKER'S ARTISTS.

Charles R. Baker makes the following interesting announcements concerning additional engagements of artists under his capable management, the importance of the events in question testifying in favor of the gifted soloists associated with him:

Electa Gifford, soprano, engaged with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Providence, R. I., December 18 and at Cambridge, Mass., December 26. These are in addition to her two appearances in Boston on December 20 and 21.

Esther Feé, the violinist, with the Mendelssohn Club, Chicago, for its miscellaneous concert, March 6.

Mabelle Crawford, contralto, with the Mendelssohn Club, Chicago, March 6; at St. Paul, with the Philharmonic Society, in "The Messiah," December 9, and at Minneapolis, in the same oratorio, on the following night.

Glenn Hall, tenor, in "The Messiah," Minneapolis, December 9, and St. Paul, December 10. It is probable that Mr. Hall will be secured for an appearance with the Pat Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901-2.
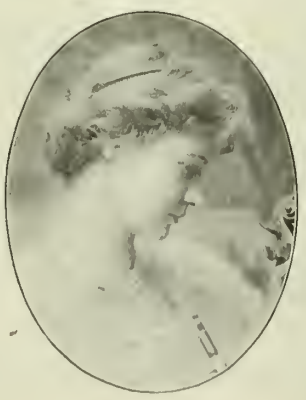
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.



LEONORA JACKSON
Assisted by HARRY J. FELLOWS, Tenor
WILLIAM BAUER, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: New York, 31 Union Square West. Chicago, 71 Monroe

ALMA STENCEL.

BERLIN, August 14, 1901.

IN January of last season Jan Kubelik gave his sixth recital in the Grosser Musikvereinssaal in Vienna, and on his program appeared the announcement that he would be assisted by Alma Stencel from America. This little girl of thirteen appeared as a total stranger before a Vienna audience of about 3,000 people, and played, with orchestral accompaniment, the Scherzo from the Litolff Concerto in D minor, followed by a group of solos by Liszt, Schumann and Chopin.

At the conclusion of the concert, Impresario Dunkel, of Budapest, sought out Alma's mother to arrange an early appearance of the little pianist in Budapest with the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Raoul Mader, and on the same evening Kubelik's manager, Alexander Rosé, secured Alma's co-operation for the seventh concert in Vienna of the said violinist, to occur two weeks later. The morning following Alma's début in the Austrian capital, the newspapers, without a single exception, praised the musical feeling, intelligence, power, delicacy and almost flawless technic of the young artist, and the Neues Wiener Tagblatt predicted that "aus der Kleinen Stencel wird eine sehr grosse werden."

In Budapest Alma's success became an ovation, and it was with difficulty that she was finally allowed to retire from the stage. Returning to Vienna, she appeared there twice again, always with increasing success, and on the last occasion the imperial family occupied their box and manifested great pleasure in the performance of this musical child. At the conclusion of the concert her Imperial Highness Maria Josefa, accompanied by her son, the heir apparent, came to the artist's room to compliment Alma personally. After this her services were eagerly solicited by Vienna's most exclusive circles, but not many engagements were accepted as Alma's mother soon brought the little girl to Berlin, where she has since pursued a course of uninterrupted study under Hugo Mansfeldt.

Alma's only appearances in Berlin have been thus far semi-private at the receptions of Hon. and Mrs. Andrew D. White, the American Ambassador.

It is not quite six years ago that Alma Stencel's musical education was begun, and her first public appearance was made at the age of ten, when she played a Mozart Sonata, Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillante, with second piano accompaniment, and a number of shorter solos. One year later she gave a recital of formidable dimensions, and in the spring of 1900 she gave in America eleven recitals, of which the following is a specimen program:

Rondo e Capriccio, op. 129	Beethoven
Sonata, E minor, op. 7	Grieg
Scheruglöckchen	Tschaikowsky
Etude, op. 10, No. 5	Chopin
Waltz, G flat, op. 70, No. 1	Chopin
Romanza, F sharp, op. 28	Schumann
Etude, op. 25, No. 9	Chopin
Valse, E minor, op. posthumous	Chopin
Etude, op. 10, No. 12	Chopin
Nocurne, F, op. 23	Schumann
Mazurka, B flat, op. 7, No. 1	Chopin
Galop de Concert	Emil Sauer
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 5	Liszt
Serenade, Hark, Hark, the Lark!	Schubert-Liszt
The Nightingale	Alabieff-Liszt
Venezia e Napoli, Tarentelle e Canzona	Liszt

On different occasions Alma has played privately for some of the most distinguished pianists of our day, including Sauer, Rosenthal, Paderewski, Carreño and De Pachmann, and has been complimented by them all. De Pachmann pronounced her talent colossal, and Paderewski was interested enough in her to ask her to play almost her entire repertory.

Under the management of Hermann Wolff she will make her Berlin début in Beethovensaal, on October 26, playing the Concerto in E minor, by Emil Sauer, and the Liszt E flat major Concerto, accompanied by the Philharmonic Orchestra. In the same hall on November 8 she will give a piano recital. Then will follow concerts in Vienna and Budapest. Upon conclusion of these concerts the little artist will sail for New York to concertize there, and in a few other large Eastern cities. Engagements are now pending for next spring in Paris and London.

The following are liberal translations of some of the criticisms taken from the various Viennese newspapers:

There appeared yesterday in Kubelik's concert a very graceful blonde personality, who created an extraordinary sensation. The little thirteen year old American pianist, Alma Stencel, conquered everyone, even with the first few measures. Her technic at this moment is simply astounding. From her little steel fingers, with which she performs everything but the impossible, roll passages like strings of pearls, with the greatest ease. Her touch is powerful and yet tender, her musical conception is healthy. The little Stencel will become a great one. Neues Wiener Tagblatt, January 8, 1901.

The program of Kubelik's concert offered a surprise, the first appearance of the thirteen year old piano virtuosa, Alma Stencel, from America. The beautiful blonde child, an exceedingly lovely personality, gave proofs of a charming art of delivery, supported by a truly marvelous technic and a powerful touch which was unusual for her age. The little one had stormy applause and had to play encores.—Neue Freie Presse.

In Jan Kubelik's concert we heard a wonder child, the thirteen years old pianist, Alma Stencel, from America. She played with charming fluency the brilliant scherzo from Litolff's Concerto Symphonique, accompanied by the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the efficient leadership of Karl Komzak, receiving at its conclusion a perfect ovation.—Illustrirtes Wiener Extrablatt.

The youthful Alma Stencel showed herself a pianist with a very promising endowment, who has received a thorough schooling and whose talent entitles her to look forward to a beautiful career.—Neues Pester Journal, January 12, 1901.

After Kubelik appeared the thirteen year old Alma Stencel. The little piano virtuosa displayed a remarkable talent; the difficulties of Schumann, Chopin and Liszt she conquered with ease. The graceful little personality may look forward to a highly promising artistic career.—Wiener Journal.

Last evening at the Concordia Club the performance of the thirteen year old American pianist, Alma Stencel, created a sensation. The little artist aroused liveliest interest; her astonishing technic called forth immense applause.—Neue Wiener Tagblatt.

A charming little American pianist made her début in Budapest yesterday. She performed her pieces, in spite of her thirteen years, in a manner that left nothing to be desired. The audience rendered her well earned, stormy applause.—Budapester Tagblatt.

A youthful American pianist, Alma Stencel, introduced herself most successfully. The little lady possesses an imposing technic, and Schumann, Chopin and Liszt are well within her grasp.—Wiener Tagblatt.

Wolfsohn's Artists.

HENRY WOLFSOHN has arranged for the following artists to sing at the coming Worcester Festival, which will be held at the end of this month in Worcester, Mass.: Miss Shannah Cumming, soprano; Mme. Clara Poole-King and Gertrude May Stein, contraltos; Evan Williams and Ellison Van Hoose, tenors.

A series of Sunday evening concerts are to be given in this city commencing the end of October, at which the most prominent concert attractions available are to appear, including Hofmann, Gérardy, Kreisler, Electa Gifford, soprano; Whitney Tew, bass, and Miss Estelle Liebling. The latter three are to be heard in this city for the first time at these concerts.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianist, who was successful when she was heard here last winter in a recital, is to give more recitals in this city in Mendelssohn Hall, during November.

In addition to such concert attractions as Hofmann, Kreisler, Gérardy, Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, Electa Gifford, Whitney Tew and Carl Ambruster, the noted Wagner lecturer, Mr. Wolfsohn will also have the sole management of the following well-known singers: Shannah Cumming, Dorothy Harvey, Marie Zimmermann and Mrs. Hissem De Moss, sopranos; Mme. Clara Poole-King, Isabel Bouton and Miss Gertrude May Stein, contraltos; Evan Williams, Mortimer Howard, Dr. Jackson, Mackenzie Gordon and Ellison Van Hoose, tenors; Gwilym Miles, Robert Hosea, Julian Walker, Heathe Gregory, Francis Rogers and Harry Girard, baritones. Among the instrumentalists are Augusta Cottlow, pianist; David Mannes, Franz Wilczek and Miss Anna Otten, violinists, and Leo Schulz, 'cellist.

CARBONE.—Signor A. Carbone, the distinguished artist, formerly with the Metropolitan Opera Company, and now a prominent teacher of the art of singing, has resumed his regular course in vocal instruction and opera at his new studio, 240 Fifth avenue. Signor Carbone looks forward to a very busy season, as he has already booked many new pupils for the coming year.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,

SOPRANO,

Dramatic and Coloratura.

CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.

Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.

Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

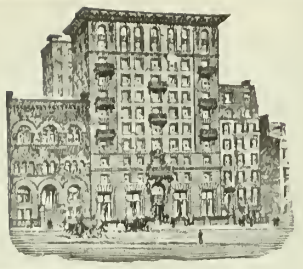
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

Boston Music Notes.



Hotel Bellevue,
17 Beacon Street,
Boston, September 7, 1901.

The two Boston singers who are to appear in the Worcester Festival this month are Miss Adelaide Griggs, contralto, and Stephen Townsend, baritone.

Miss Griggs will sing in "The Beatitudes," and also will give for the first time in Worcester Berlioz's great aria, "The Captive." This remarkable and charming composition has seldom been heard on the concert stage since the days of Annie Louise Cary.

Mrs. Helen Hunt, pupil of Mme. Gertrude Franklin, has been offered the position of soprano in one of the prominent New York churches, with a salary of $1,200. Owing to business matters Mrs. Hunt was obliged to decline this tempting offer, and will remain in Boston, where she will be heard in concert during the season, and where she has a large class of pupils.

H. Carleton Slack has returned to the city and resumed teaching. Mr. Slack is known as the exponent of the Sbriglia method, and has pupils from all parts of the country who know and admire the work done by Mr. Slack during the past few years.

Norman McLeod has returned from Europe, but does not open his studio for teaching until the latter part of the month.

Miss Clara Munger was in town for a day during the week, but will remain at Annisquam until the 20th of the month. Miss Priscilla White, who is at Annisquam with Miss Munger, will also open her studio about the 20th.

Madame Sargent-Goodelle resumes her work at her studio in Boston on October 1. She will be in this city on Wednesday and Saturday during the season. Mrs. Nellie Panchaud, one of Mrs. Goodelle's pupils, the soprano of the Clinton Avenue Church, Brooklyn, has been in Haverhill for her vacation, and will return to Brooklyn the last of September.

Frank E. Morse will open his studio on the 16th. Mr. Morse had a most successful season at the summer school, Bay View, Mich. All the concerts were most successful, a high grade of music marking the programs. John Manning, pianist, and Henry Eichheim, violinist, from this city, were well received. There were more teachers this year than ever who took advantage of the summer school. Among them were Miss Elizabeth Millspaugh, vocal teacher at Perdue College, Lafayette, Ind.; J. Burt Rogers, tenor, at the head of the vocal department in Ohio Wesleyan College, Delaware, Ohio, and Miss Clara Goodman, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mr. Morse has many applications from old pupils and others for the coming season.

Everett E. Truette gives three organ concerts at the Pan-American on the 6th, 7th and 8th.

Miss Mary Porter Mitchell was the contralto soloist at the Newport, N. H., festival in August, the other soloists being Shannah Cumming, Glenn Hall and Gwilym Miles. Miss Mitchell is a member of the quartet at the Presbyterian Church, Orange, N. J.

Homer A. Norris, the well-known lecturer on musical matters, recently spoke before the Greenacre conference, Greenacre-on-the-Piscataqua, at Eliot, Me. Mr. Norris, who will open his studio in the Pierce Building in September, has been a guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Kittredge at Little Boar's Head.

Eugene Caton has resigned his position as tenor of the Commonwealth Avenue Church, and will travel during the season.

Dr. H. J. Stewart, organist of Trinity Church, this city, who recently came here from San Francisco, has taken a studio in the Steinert Building, having the room formerly occupied by Mr. Baerman.

The Maine Musical Festival will take place this year at Bangor, October 3, 4 and 5, and Portland, October 7, 8 and 9, five concerts in each city, the list of artists including Mme. Suzanne Adams, Madame Maconda, Madame Schumann-Heink, Mrs. Jennie King Morrison, Mme. Isabelle Bouton, Willis E. Bacheller, Signor Campanari, Gwilym Miles, Miss Anna E. Otten and Miss Carrie Hirschman. The Maine Symphony Orchestra will render several great compositions. The choral music for the festival is of the highest order, and includes "The Redemption," by Gounod; "Hymn of Praise," by Mendelssohn; operatic selections and à capella numbers. Choruses from Aroostook and Washington counties will join the eastern division, and the western division will add recruits from Kennebunk, Bridgton, Mechanic Falls and Livermore Falls. The same artists will appear in the same program at Manchester, N. H. October 10, 11 and 12, and at Burlington, Vt., October 14, 15 and 16.

The Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, which enters upon its eighty-seventh season this fall, makes the following announcements, which include an innovation in the way of concerts, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the building fund: Two extra concerts will be given this year before the opening of the regular season for the purpose of starting the building fund. Verdi's "Requiem," which was the great artistic success of the society last season, will be given in Symphony Hall, Sunday evening, November 10. "Elijah" will be given in the same hall Monday evening, November 11. The regular concerts of the season are announced as follows: "The Messiah," Sunday, December 22 and Wednesday, December 25 (Christmas); "Gallia," Gounod, and "Stabat Mater," Rossini, Sunday, February 9; "Passion Music of St. Matthew," Bach, April 4 (Good Friday) "The Creation," April 6, Easter Sunday. The rehearsal of the society will begin Sunday, September 15, at 7 p. m. in Copley Hall, Clarendon street.

The twenty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the second in Symphony Hall, will begin on October 19. There will be the usual two separate series of twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals, and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts, each pair of performances with the same program and soloist. The orchestra will make the usual monthly trips of one week to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, its growing popularity requiring two series of concerts in New York and Philadelphia. To avoid Good Friday and at the same time allow the Handel and Haydn Society to give its usual concert on that day, the public rehearsal which would ordinarily be listed for Friday, March 28, will be given on the previous Thursday afternoon, March 27, at the usual hour. The method of admittance to the unreserved 25 cent seats in the second balcony on Friday afternoons so successfully tested last year will obtain during the coming season. The almost unanimous approval of the rule prohibiting standees justifies its continued enforcement. The tickets will be sold by auction the same as in former seasons, the sale taking place in Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, September 23, 24, 26 and 27.

Douglas-Powell.—Douglas-Powell, the English baritone is on a visit to Paris to see Saint-Saëns, as there is a project on foot in Canada to induce the French composer to visit that country to produce "Samson and Delilah." Charles A. E. Harriss, the Canadian manager, is interested in it.

To Study With Mme. Doria Devine.—Miss Emily Jessup, a niece of Morris K. Jessup, and a young singer from Salt Lake City, has come to New York for further study with Mme. Doria Devine. Miss Jessup's voice is a dramatic soprano of unusual beauty, to which she adds a very magnetic personality. Her singing was much admired at a musicale given at the Cornish House, Pine Hill, in the Catskills, August 22, when she was heard in the following selections: "Ouvre tes Yeux Bleus," Massenet; Gavotte from "Mignon," Thomas, and "La Serenata," Tosti.

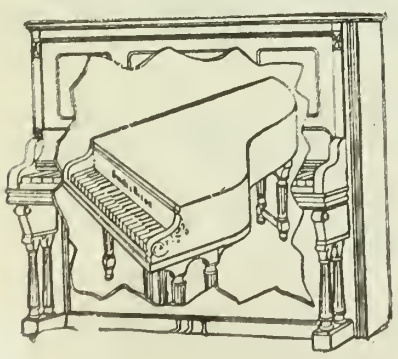
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production.
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nann, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Hu and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

LOUIS MOREAU GOTTSCHALK,

THE following is an account, taken from the New Orleans Courier of May 17, 1845, of the first public concert given by Louis Moreau Gottschalk, at Paris, in the Salle Pleyel, on the evening of April 2, 1845. As Gottschalk was born on May 8, 1829, it will be seen that the youthful artist was not quite sixteen years old when he played before a Parisian audience the compositions of Thalberg, Liszt and Chopin, receiving at the same time the encouragement and support of the foremost artists and critics of the musical world. The article reads as follows:

On April 2 about 1,200 persons assembled in the rooms of Pleyel at Paris. They belonged chiefly to the upper ranks of society, and awaited with impatience the appearance of a youth who has just commenced the thorny career of music. A studious youth always and everywhere finds sympathy. Young Moreau Gottschalk was at length introduced by Messrs. Chopin, Halle, Thalberg, Zimmerman, Berlioz, Halevy, Caraffa, Osborne Habeneck and Auber—all men of the highest eminence in the musical science. Geraldy, Franchomme, Marras and Mlle. Bernou were anxious to aid in the triumph of the young musician. All the elements, all the means of complete success, were united in the concert of which we are speaking. Young Gottschalk executed a fantasy on "Semiramide," another on "Robert le Diable," and a Concerto of Chopin, who, delighted with a performance so ample and so perfect, affectionately seized the hands of Gottschalk, drew him to his bosom and said: "I thank you, my child, for having interpreted my work in this manner." The young victor comprehended the value of such a compliment. The applauses that have attended his efforts are the omens of a glorious future. In truth, it is the voice of masters in the science—the homage of a select society—that have hailed the début of young Gottschalk.

This interesting young artist had put the name of his country at the head of the program. A Creole, he desired that New Orleans should partake of his first success. If he remembers us, we have not forgotten the studious child who so happily profited by the lessons of his first master, Mr. Letellier, and we look forward with pride and hope to the future success of this young and interesting child of Louisiana.

Our readers will be pleased to see what is said of their youthful citizen by the Paris journals.

From La Revue Musicale: A precious child who has passed at once from a lover of music almost into a perfect artist was heard on Wednesday, April 2, in Pleyel's rooms, under the auspices of his master, Mr. Stamaty. Mr. Moreau Gottschalk is a young American belonging to New Orleans. He made his first appearance in the E minor Concerto of Chopin, a very difficult piece, and, except in the rondeau, not very brilliant. The fantasy of Thalberg on "Semiramide" and that of Liszt on "Robert le Diable" gave young Gottschalk an opportunity to display his brilliant qualities—the neatness and elegance of his playing. When a more mature age shall have given him force and confidence—that sort of familiarity so necessary in all the arts—the talent to prepare, to make the most of everything, and, by hitting the proper moment, to make the inspired thoughts of another his own—then the fame of young Gottschalk as a pianist will equal that of any other.

From the Menestrel: "A pianist of very great merit was heard last week at the rooms of Pleyel. He played pieces from Chopin, from Thalberg and from Liszt, in such a style as to deserve to be placed in the first rank of our virtuosos."

The article in the Courier ends as follows: "Overwhelmed by thousands of applauses showered upon him by a most intelligent audience, the young artist threw himself into the arms of his mother, so happy, so proud of her son, and murmured with enthusiasm the names of two absent ones—the name of his father and that of his master, Mr. Letellier."

A year or two after the concert, Hector Berlioz, in concluding an elaborate criticism of Gottschalk, said: "Le jeune pianiste est a cette heure dans tout l'éclat de son talent et d'une célébrite bien acquise; tellement qu'il pourrait retraverser l'Atlantic avec la presque certitude d'être, au retour, prophéte dans son pays." The old aphorism, however, appears to have been carried out, inasmuch as Gottschalk has unfortunately and unjustly failed to receive the recognition so eminently earned in Europe by his genius, both as a pianist and composer.—W. L. Hawes, in the New Orleans Daily Picayune.

GERARD-THIERS.—Among the passengers on the new steamer Haverford, which is due on September 13, is Albert Gerard-Thiers, the celebrated voice specialist, who has been spending the summer abroad with his teacher, the famous Delle Sedie. Mr. Thiers will return to the city in vigorous health, and anxious to resume his work with his pupils, to whom he devotes his entire time and energies. Five of his last year's pupils have signed contracts with opera companies for the coming season. They are Miss Amy Forslund, Miss Edela Manstone, Miss Thelma Fair, Miss Mildred Reeves and Robert d'Armond. Many new students have already signified their intention of studying with Mr. Thiers, and hours of study are now being assigned by Mrs. Thiers.

DE PACHMANN.—De Pachmann, the Chopinist, arrived in London, August 29, and is back at his old lodgings in Soho. He is engaged for London and the provinces, beginning about October 1. He states that he is abandoning his mannerisms, and seems to be in earnest.

JOSEFFY AND THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY, the great pupil of a great master—Karl Tausig—is and has been head of the piano department of the National Conservatory for over a decade. Not only one of the most masterful of living pianists, he is also one of the greatest pianists that ever lived, and is the exponent to-day of a school that is fast vanishing. To supreme technical finish he unites a finish that is ethereal, a poetry that finds its fullest utterance in Chopin, its most brilliant eloquence in Liszt, and its reflective side in Brahms. Joseffy is a superb specimen of the eclectic methods of Tausig. He is a severe classicist, his purity of style, happy rhythmic sense and beauty of tone being alike admirable in Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, while the dash and unequaled spirit of his jeu lend to his readings of Tschaikowsky and other modern composers a peculiar charm. Master of all styles, impeccable as an interpreter, Rafael Joseffy is among latter day virtuosi unique because of his versatility.

As a man and a teacher he is that rare combination of magnetic mentor and amiable consellor; his teaching hours are indeed object lessons in the art of playing the piano beautifully. His ideal is beauty, he insists on a beautiful quality of tone and a beautiful manner of delivery. To the music world he is the great virtuoso, to his pupils he is the beloved friend and guide, Rafael Joseffy.

Mr. Joseffy teaches only at the National Conservatory.

FRITZ KREISLER.—Following are more of Fritz Kreisler's criticisms received last season in this country:

A great violinist is Kreisler—one of the greatest players of the world, by far the most notable since Ysaye, and in some respects superior to that master of the violin. He has a broad, strong, elegant tone, and, above all, a deep and potent something that stirs and thrills the emotions as no player of late has been able to do. He stands among the first in the world.—Boston Traveler, December, 1900.

Kreisler is a master of the violin. He is one of the violin colossi. His tone is powerful, true and very broad, and superbly authoritative.—Boston Times, December, 1900.

Kreisler is a technical wonder worker. Plays with great dash and assurance, and attacks alarming difficulties with a boldness that must astonish more cautious players. His tone is big.—New York Times, December, 1900.

He played upon his instrument superbly; he played with it—and his listeners like the audacious young wizard he is. Fritz Kreisler is a great violin virtuoso.—New York Sun, December, 1900.

He is a violinist out of the ordinary, a man of very considerable gifts and a most interesting artist.—New York Evening Post, December, 1900.

Twelve years ago Kreisler toured this country as a "wonder-child." To-day he reappears as an absolute wonder with his astonishing violinistic powers.—Pittsburg Post, December 1, 1900.

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

. . . Vocal Score of . . .

MANRU.

Opera in Three Acts by

I. J. PADEREWSKI.

Translated and Adapted for Performance in English

By H. E. KREHBIEL.

PRICE, ... net, $5 00.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Wednesday, Sept. 4, to Tuesday, Sept. 17,

INCLUSIVE,

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA EXPOSITION,

PITTSBURG, PA.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.)
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1120.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Frankliustrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Floreuce, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Buildiug, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leaveuworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Coutrolled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . . .	£1 5s.	Austria, ...	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

MUSICIANS all the world over, in common with other men, deplore the dastardly attempt to assassinate President McKinley. That the shocking deed should have occurred in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American while a sublime Bach number was being played on the great organ in the building seems all the more horrible. At this writing the bulletins from the sick chamber at Buffalo are most reassuring. If the united prayers of the whole world can save a man's life the President will recover.

THE London Week-End of August 31 publishes the following item of direct interest:

MELBA'S FAVORITE SONGS.—Following upon my mention of Madame Melba last week, I have, in response to numerous requests, persuaded the distinguished cantatrice to give me the following list of her favorite songs:

Ah! fors e lui.....Verdi.
Ardon gl' Incensi.....Donizetti.
Good-Bye .....Tosti.
L'Anero .....Mozart.
The Prayer from Tannhäuser.....Wagner.
Nymphes et Sylvanes.....Bemberg.

Outside of Melba there are very few women living to-day who can sing these songs and arias as Melba does, for it cannot be denied that great voices are extremely rare. When one travels through Europe one realizes how little artistic singing of the "grand" type is heard, and Melba is one of the few singers whose voice and style entitle her to the highest rank among the living vocalists. It were stupid to assume any other position. She is subject at times to criticism, but the principle is not thereby invaded.

IT is learned that the Moody-Manners Opera Company, of London and Great Britain, generously offer two prizes of £250 each for: (1) the best opera written by a British subject, and (2) the best opera written by a non-British subject. The prize winners will, in addition, receive 10 per cent. of all net profits made on the sale or representation by the company of their works. Fuller particulars of the conditions may be had from Mr. C. Manners, 44 Berwick street, Oxford street, W. It may here be mentioned that the gentlemen who have consented to act as judges are, for the English opera: Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Professor Prout and Mr. Joseph Bennett; and for the foreign opera, M. Colonne, Signor Mancinelli and Herr Lohse.

It will be observed that no American judge is included in the list, although should an English new opera become successful its greatest pecuniary reward would come from America. Probably the Moody-Manners Opera Company does not intend to invade our country, although it would find it interesting to do so—if properly managed.

WE are asked what particular advantage accrues to a piano when publicly played upon by artists. No particular advantage accrues to the piano except that the shrewd piano manufacturer, having magnificent opportunities at concerts and in large halls of observing what is done or accomplished on his pianos by various artists, learns exactly what the defects are and endeavors to remedy them, thereby improving his instrument. As there is no such thing on this earth as perfection there can be no piano made which is not susceptible of betterment, and if this is denied we may as well assert that the planet should cease moving, and that the limit of progress has been reached—a paradox, for progress has no limit; it would not be progress if it had.

A great advantage, however, accrues to the piano manufacturer because, as the artists playing his piano in their travels through the country play before thousands and thousands of musical people, these musical people become familiar with the name of the piano, and that aids the local agent of the piano manufacturer to sell his pianos to advantage or even better advantage. Piano manufacturers who have abandoned their support of the concert artists have thereby, to a certain extent, abandoned their support of their own local agents, and those piano manufacturers who have entered the field are sure to secure a large volume of trade that would have been retained by the local dealers, who have been abandoned by the piano manufacturer who does not support the concert artists. Besides this, the concert artists themselves will recommend only those pianos used by them, and that means a great prestige for the manufacturer. It is a reciprocal affair and works both ways.

SIEGFRIED WAGNER seems very much agitated because of the recent opening of the Prince Regent Theatre in Munich (according to the Daily News Berlin correspondent). He regards the new theatre at Munich as an undertaking calculated to weaken the power of attraction of the Bayreuth Festspiele. This view is strongly contested by the Intendant-General Posart. "There is no doubt," said Herr Wagner, in the course of an interview, "that the Prince Regent Theatre has been built to compete with our Festspielhaus. The building has been copied, the admittance fee of 20 shillings has been copied, in imitation of the Richard Wagner Verein. Naturally, we shall not let it come to a lawsuit about the righteousness or unrighteousness of the performances in a house which bears the name of our highly venerated Prince Regent, the patron of the Bayreuth Festspiele. But that we should say 'Yes' and 'Amen' to the existence of the Prince Regent Theatre, whose aim and end it is to get up 'Festspiele à la Bayreuth,' is more than can be expected." So much for Herr Siegfried Wagner. Naturally, quite another standpoint is taken up by Herr Posart, the Intendant-General of the Munich Theatre. "I never thought," he says, "of competition with Bayreuth. I know that Bayreuth is 'hors concours.' I was a personal friend of Richard Wagner, and as far as it was in my power I always showed my veneration and enthusiasm for the great master. For this reason Bayreuth is to me above comparison or competition. The new theatre is in the first place to be a Richard Wagner Theatre, and Richard Wagner's musical dramas are the only operas to be performed. At the close of the Wagner performances pieces by classic authors, like Goethe, Schiller and Shakespeare, will be performed yearly, from October till May, on Sundays and festal days, at low prices."

DISPUTATIONS ON WAGNER AFFAIRS.

Vernon Blackburn, in the London Daily Mail of August 26, predicts the decadence of Bayreuth from the date of the Munich opening. However there is nothing to be gained from all this except that there are many institutions all over the world that require commercial sustenance outside of the leading daily papers and THE MUSICAL COURIER although all of these also contribute to art, as Bayreuth says it does. Mr. Siegfried Wagner should visit the United States for a while in order to get rid of his pecuniary appetite.

PROF. HERMANN RITTER, of Wurzburg, has published some interesting reminiscences of the first performances at Bayreuth. It was a real pleasure, he says, to see Wagner as stage manager. He showed how everything ought to be done, and did so so clearly that it was at once understood.

EARLY BAYREUTH.

When Karl Hile, the Alberich after seizing the Rhinegold was hesitating how to come down, Wagner ran like a squirrel up the ladder and was back again from the height in a jiffy. He was very angr when any of the actors had not memorized his lines, for there was no prompter tolerated on the Bayreuth stage.

It was for such a reason that the once famous basso Kögel was dismissed and Liehr put in his place. The singer and actor whom Wagner most admired was Albert Niemann. "Look, what a figure!" he cried, when this actor came on as Siegmund with the words "Whose ever hearth this be, here must I rest," and fell from exhaustion. For Wagner the dramatic singer must also be an actor; the movements of the personages in his drama must be rhythmic. "Niering!" he cried when this actor came on as Hunding. "How you are walking! Don't you hear the rhythm of the orchestra?" After the rehearsals before he went home the maestro used to go to the so-called "Little Restaurant" and have a little Rhine wine in a circle of his friends. Here you began to know Wagner. Humor, satire, sarcasm, wildest extravagance, deep despondency changed in his mood and his ideas in rapid alternation. "Boys, be quiet; there's somebody there who is writing down everything that we say, and who will end by photographing us," he said when he found anyone outside of his comrades in the place.

One evening after a rehearsal of the "Götterdämmerung," Levi spoke about a horn passage, and asked: "Master, where did you learn that?" In a humorous, mocking fashion he replied: "You want to know that? I ought not to tell you. Well—on the Bruhl terrace at Dresden while drinking coffee when the band was playing." He once said to Liszt: "Franz, for us two there are so-called music Popes, one of which has his seat in every town at least, who would lock us up if they could," and he pointed at the lunatic asylum near by. It was a strange scene when he received King Ludwig. The King came by night and did not stop at his private train at the railroad station, but in the open country, whence Wagner conducted him to the Hermitage, where he passed the night which had such an influence on the master of Bayreuth. On the other hand, the reception of the Emperor William I. was imposing and stately. The Emperor, who arrived in the afternoon, after a brief greeting to some state dignitaries, turned to Wagner, who addressed the monarch about as follows: "Your Majesty, I thank you with all my heart, and am happy that Your Majesty's presence lends lustre to my work." The Emperor replied: "My dear Herr Wagner, it was not necessary; the sun was shining before, on my arrival, I saw your theatre. I have been instructed about your plan, and as I see that it is a national affair I cannot be absent."

In another column we publish the information regarding the prizes offered by the Moody-Manners Opera Company, and here we reprint the circular as issued by Mr. Manners, of London,

E OPERA RZES.

The London Outlook of August 17 gives an extended criticism of the project, and as it is written by E. J. Oldmeadow, one of those subtle and keen critics of the modern English school who knows not only what we are writing but what others write, we deem it interesting to reprint his ideas—for they merit the recognition that ideas always insist upon. It is one of the peculiarities of thought when it has peculiarities that it feels at once the influence and effect of things. But Macaulay says that even the most profound ideas are not worth much if we cannot utter them; we must be able to present intelligibly the ideas we feel we have, and then and then only are they worth anything. Our readers will observe that Mr. Oldmeadow knows how to relate to us his ideas and although we from our point of view may differ with him, we must accord to him the privilege of differing with us. Mr. Manners may differ with all of us, but he is ready to contribute his money, and we respect him for his motive, even if Mr. Oldmeadow differs again. As Englishmen differ on the Boer war they certainly can afford to differ on music. But let us go on with E. J. O.:

all on the right side. The further news that the company intended to proceed by way of a prize competition was not so satisfactory, illustrating as it did that unfortunate lagging of musicians behind their brethren of the other fine arts which has been a curse on music for 200 years. Even the architects are rapidly growing impatient of

ESTABLISHED 1897.

MOODY-MANNERS OPERA COMPANY, LIMITED.

At present the largest English Opera Company that has ever traveled Great Britain.

Being played for the first time in the Provinces to the Pitch that the Composers intended their Operas should be Played, viz.—

NORMAL PITCH.

Managing Director.....MR. CHARLES MANNERS Manager.....MR. EUGENE BERTRAM

REPERTOIRE

FOR

SEASON 1901-2.

SIEGFRIED,

TRISTAN AND ISOLDA,

FLYING DUTCHMAN,

TANNHAUSER,

LOHENGRIN,

DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT,

CARMEN,

FAUST,

TROVATORE,

LILY OF KILLARNEY,

MARITANA,

BOHEMIAN GIRL,

THE STAR OF THE NORTH,

THE JEWESS,

SATANELLA,

MARTHA,

PURITAN'S DAUGHTER,

MASANIELLO,

&c., &c.

TWO COMPETITIONS IN OPERA.

CONDITIONS.

1. The above Company have the honor to announce that they will give TWO Prizes of £250 each, together with 10 per cent. of all net profits made by the Company, for the two best original Opera submitted in competition and arising out of their sale or representation, such profits to be arrived at and paid at the end of each season.

2. One prize must be competed for by BRITISH SUBJECTS only, the other by NON-BRITISH SUBJECTS only.

3. In consideration of the said sums of £250 each and the 10 per cent. of the net profits derived out of each of the said operas, agreed to be paid as aforesaid, the composer shall execute an assignment to the Moody-Manners Company, Limited, and also obtain the execution of such assignment by the librettist of the sole entire and exclusive whole world copyright and acting right of the said opera, and the Company may after such assignment alter the title or make any reasonable alterations, and deal with the operas or sell or dispose of the same in such way as the Company may deem best. The assignment shall be in the form prepared by the Company's Solicitors.

4. The Opera must be scored for Principals, Chorus and a full Orchestra of (say) fifty to sixty at least.

5. A glance at the present repertoire of the Company for next season, which is printed at the side of this page, will give an idea of the class of Opera wanted.

6. Composers to send in their work under a nom de plume, and not later than May 1, 1903. The nom de plume of the successful British competitor will be advertised in the front page of the Daily Telegraph on June 1, 1903, and the nom de plume of the successful Foreign competitor will be advertised in the same paper, but on July 1, 1903. The winners then to communicate their real names and addresses to C. MANNERS, 44 Berwick street, Oxford street, London, W.

7. Competitors sending in work otherwise than under a nom de plume will be disqualified.

8. The libretto of the Foreign Opera can be written in any language the composer wishes. It will afterward be translated into English for the first representation, which will take place in the autumn of 1903 in England, and the prize publicly presented on the first night of the production.

9. The libretto of the Opera by the British subject must, of course, be written in English, and will be produced about the same time, and the prize publicly presented on the first night of the production.

10. Each competitor must inclose with his Opera a Post Office Order (in case of non-success) to pay for sending it back. It would be advisable to send sufficient for the Opera to be returned registered. Mr. Manners will not he responsible for the safe return of any MSS. submitted unless registered.

11. The nom de plume (and afterward the real name if desired) of the second and third best competitors of each opera will be published with the winner, but there will be no prize.

12. For the Foreign Opera both Librettist and Composer must be foreigners. For the British prize both must be British subjects.

13. Each Opera must not be in less than two acts. The Opera must play for an evening's entertainment, viz., three and a half to four hours, this to include intervals between the acts.

14. The selection of the prize work will be wholly and solely in the hands of the judges below mentioned, and their decision will be final.

15. A copy of the conditions can be obtained by sending a directed and stamped envelope to Mr. MANNERS.

The following gentlemen have most generously and kindly promised to be the judges:

For the English Opera—

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, PROFESSOR PROUT,
B. A., Mus. D., Professor of Music in the University of Dublin.
MR. JOSEPH BENNETT.

For the Foreign Opera—

MONSIEUR COLONNE, SIGNOR MANCINELLI,
Director of the Colonne Concerts, Paris. Conductor Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
HERR LOHSE, Conductor Royal Opera, Covent Garden.

In the event of any of the above named gentlemen failing to be able to act as judge, the Company may nominate any other person in his place.

Please address all communications to

C. MANNERS, 44 Berwick street, Oxford street, London, W.

PRIZE OPERA.

By E. J. OLDMEADOW.

When the right thing is taken up by the wrong man, or when the right man sets to work upon it in the wrong way, those who do not want to see the clock put back must speak out promptly and plainly. Time after time the Outlook has underlined three articles of musical belief—that music is coming more and more to mean music drama; that music drama is an art in which England might astonish the world; and that no great English composer can be expected till a national habit of music drama has established itself as strongly and pervasively as the old Victorian habit of oratorio. Whenever opportunity has offered of acknowledging the efforts in this direction of organizations like the Carl Rosa and Moody-Manners companies, it has been heartily taken; for it is no small thing to have proved that good operas can be well played up and down the country in the English language at a monetary profit. The enterprise of Charles Manners, for instance, in giving provincial audiences a chance of hearing works like "Tristan and Isolde" has received explicit praise in these columns, and it should therefore be plain that a protest against his latest proposal is made with reluctance, and only because the interests of English music exact it. For some months musical people have known that the Moody-Manners Company was determined to seek for some brand new operas, and when one recalls the meagre repertory, made up chiefly of threadbare and even bad pieces, which traveling companies have generally thought good enough, such a decision, as far as it goes, must be acclaimed as competitions and "premiated" designs, while the self-respecting and wise among painters and poets and novelists concluded long ago that such courses are as bad for art as they are undignified for artists. The battle for prizes is too often to the wily rather than to the strong, the race to the sprinter rather than to the swift. But, despite many general objections which lie against competitions, Mr. Manners' plan might still have deserved encouragement if the printed details which have just been made public did not bristle with vicious points. "A glance at the present repertory of the company for next season," says this unfortunate document, "will give an idea of the class of opera wanted." In the margin the repertory is set forth, headed by "Siegfried" and "Tristan," and including "The Lily of Killarney," "Satanella," "Maritana" and "The Bohemian Girl"—these apparently being six examples of a "class of opera." One can see what is meant; but the clumsy English in which the whole circular is written will hardly encourage a fine librettist to enter into rivalry with the hack purveyors of bad translations from worse Italian originals, the factors of "lyrics," and the pantomime scribblers whose sad stuff has hitherto quite satisfied English operatic managers. And without a good play, beautifully written for the voices to interpret and the orchestra to enrich, a fine music drama is put almost out of the question. As for the composer, he is to write for an orchestra of fifty or sixty at least, and though this is not an ungenerous allowance, and is, perhaps, the utmost a traveling company can offer, every musician knows that the "class of opera" of which "Siegfried" is an example demands at least a hundred instrumentalists for its adequate performance. The division of the strings, for instance, into very many real parts is a feature of modern scoring which has come to stay, and a numerousness of players is essential to secure the fusion into a lordly whole of what would otherwise be fussy and beggarly elements. If there is no intention or possibility of providing such a force of fiddlers, and if the woodwind and brass are also to be undermanned, this should be clearly stated and composers should be told the maximum as well as the minimum number of instruments they may write for. This is the more important in view of the company's claim to control the performances of the accepted opera throughout the world and to make alterations in it. Under such an arrangement it is conceivable that a work most nobly and exquisitely scored may win the prize on the strength of its plot and its tunes, and never be heard in all its orchestral splendor till the copyright is expired, the composer dead, and the day long over-past wherein it could say its full say to mankind. Indeed, the whole clause in regard to the creators' rights in this opera is of such a nature that, until it is altered, writers and composers will do well to leave the whole business severely alone. In consideration of the prize of £250 and 10 per cent. of the net profits, it is required that "the composer shall execute an assignment to the Moody-Manners Company, Limited, and also obtain the execution of such assignment by the librettist, of the sole and exclusive whole world copyright and acting rights of the opera, and the company may, after such assignment, alter the title or make any reasonable alterations, and deal with the operas, or sell, or dispose of the same in such a way as the company may deem best. The assignment shall be in the form prepared by the company's solicitors." No doubt several eager young musicians will press forward with their scores, whether Mr. Manners amends this indefensible clause or not, but it is to be hoped he will not frighten the others away by obstinacy in regard to it. As for the judges, it appears that Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Professor Prout and Joseph Bennett have consented to serve. Sir Alexander Mackenzie has written the best of modern English operas, and Professor Prout is the least pedantic of the great musical scholars, but they need a colleague very different from Joseph Bennett, if the aim of the competition is to discover and encourage new talent and to lead English music out of the chill shadow of cathedral festivals into the warm light of living art. The company is also offering a prize for a new opera by a "non-British subject," with Messrs. Colonne, Lohse and Mancinelli as judges. The prizes will be "publicly presented on the first night of the production," and altogether we are in a fair way to be bored at home and laughed at abroad. But if it is not too late to drop all this prize business, and to let it be known that he and his musical advisers are always prepared to consider new scores and to enter into businesslike agreement for their production, as book publishers and theatrical entrepreneurs do with novels and plays every day of their lives, Mr. Manners may work as much good for musical England as he now threatens to work evil.

After all, it may be from Covent Garden, and not from the traveling companies, that English opera is destined to receive its next great gift. The syndicate showed its friendliness to native art by the pains it lavished on Professor Stanford's "Much Ado About Nothing," and as soon as our younger musicians throw themselves boldly into the work of writing for the theatre and produce the right sort of thing, they need not fear that the door will be barred and bolted in their faces simply because they are Englishmen.

THREE weeks ago THE MUSICAL COURIER urged the self-respecting men in the musical profession to eliminate the word professor, an absurd and worthless title. Last Thursday the New York Sun published one of its characteristic editorials, inspired by the announcement from the Chicago University, that the professors in that institution will hereafter be addressed as "plain mister." Just how the Sun regards this all powerful matter may be gleaned from the following extract:

NO PROFESSORS IN CHICAGO.

"The dislike for 'professor' is confined to a pretty small number of people. It is a word which a great multitude of persons love to roll in the mouth. In common usage it belongs to the following professions especially:

"Acrobats, astrologers, astronomers, bandmasters, barbers, barkeepers, chiropodists, dog doctors, elevator men, fiddlers, geographers, gravel train conductors, hobos, hypnotists, 'Indian' doctors, janitors of schoolhouses, Kansas Populists, lung-testing machine men, musicians, negro minstrels, opticians, organists, pugilists, palmists, pill poets, choirmasters, rubberneckers, schoolmasters, Tammany trust smashers, umbrella menders, vegetarians, watercurists, watchmakers, writers of almanacs, xylophonists, yodlers, zoölogists.

"But the title 'professor' is by no means restricted to these persons. It is much more comprehensive. Every man who is not a colonel is a professor. Every man who is not a professor is a colonel."

With characteristic mirth the Sun writer referred to the "only Triggs," of the Chicago University, as the "Poet Killer." While our scintillating contemporary omitted to state that Mr. Triggs had belittled Shakespeare and Milton and demolished Longfellow, Whittier and Lowell, we understand that he has discovered a poet of his own. What a blessing that Mister Triggs was never taught to play the organ or piano! A man of his mind, if educated in music, would not hesitate to compare Johann Sebastian Bach and Ludwig von Beethoven with Reginald DeKoven and Victor Herbert. It would be interesting to hear from the courageous Mister Triggs who discovered and first used the term professor. He is an authority many of us would be happy to quote.

"BELOW the medium height." How many times has that expression been put into books by the industrious biographers of heroes and great men? While the vivid imagination in its first thoughtless impulse will admire the man with the Apollo physique, a deeper and more subtle research discovers that some very big men, especially if they be fat as well as tall, are the very antithesis of refinement, kindness and gentility. We associate brutality and coarseness with the prizefighter and big fellow whose business it is to kill our oxen. It is hard to convince anyone that the inner nature of such men is noble. "He is a big coward!" how that sudden exclamation fits many big men. The wife beaters brought into the police courts are invariably big, overgrown specimens of their kind.

GENIUS AND PHYSICAL GROWTH.

It is a source of much happiness to find that the master minds in music were, with very rare exceptions, small men. Most of the great composers were thin as well. Fat has ever been a foe to genius. Dear, lazy Rossini must be singled out, for he grew fat in his later days. Liszt was tallish, but he was thin, and that saved him. Wagner was short. So was Schubert. Chopin was delicate. Mozart was frail. Weber was thin and delicate, and like Schubert, Mozart and Mendelssohn, died young.

Dr. Louis Nohl in his biography of Haydn refers as follows to the appearance of the father of the symphony:

"Haydn was slender, but strong, and below the medium height."

In an old biographical sketch of Anton Rubinstein, by Alexander McArthur, the writer describes the great Russian melodist in the following graphic lines:

"In figure he is neither very tall nor of medium height, but something between the two, well formed and in proportion."

There was a striking resemblance between Beethoven and Rubinstein, and here is a thought for the believers in the reincarnation theory. Anton Rubinstein was born two years after the death of Beethoven, time enough for the ego of the latter to find rebirth.

A certain virile, commanding power made Beethoven appear taller than he was, and that is often the case where you find a man or woman with a noble soul. The late Queen Victoria measured only 4 feet 11 inches, yet she was "every inch a queen." The kindliness of her eye and sweetness and dignified bearing made her seem a head taller than she was. As men are measured physically, Napoleon, the conqueror and destroyer of the feudal system, was a small man. Ulysses S. Grant, the hero of Appomattox, was a small man. George Dewey, hero of Manila, is a small man. Lincoln was tall, but he was conspicuously thin, and that removes him from the category of big, fat men, with whom it is impossible to associate poetry, romance, heroism or art.

Most of the pianists of the day are little men. Joseffy, Rosenthal, Hofmann, D'Albert, Gabrilowitsch, Hambourg and Bauer are none of them over medium height. Paderewski, Burmeister and Slivinski are taller, but all three are thin, spirituel and poetical. When the man of genius grows taller than the medium height he must be thin, and ninety-nine times in the hundred he is lean and not inclined to sleep soundly "o' nights." The late Hans von Bülow was a little man.

Our women pianists are nearly all shining examples of the "Genius and anti-fat theory." Behold Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler at the keyboard and you hear and see a marvelous combination of grace, fire, poetry and power emanating from a frail, slender, womanly form. Jessie Shay, whom a German critic proclaims as a "second Bloomfield-Zeisler," is slender and girlish in appearance. Adele Aus der Ohe is thin and intellectual. Adele Margulies, petite and poetical. Madeleine Schiller the embodiment of womanly grace and dignity, and with the youthful symmetry of her figure, still the wonder of all. The women violinists of the day beginning with Maud Powell and Lady Hallé, are the personification of delicate femininity in art.

In recent years England and America have developed a figure that is truly admirable from the athletic point of view, and usually every manly attribute accompanies this type. Men of this build are slightly above medium height, broad shouldered and with a tendency to have their frames covered with firm, hard flesh. Fine heads, noble faces and a graceful carriage complete the outline of the typical modern Anglo-Saxon. If Vice-President Roosevelt were a trifle taller he would be a good illustration of this type, a type that does not belong to the poet or artist (although a few professional men may be classed in it), but to the man of energy, the man of business, the politician—in short, the man who is a force and who succeeds because he is—a man.

WOLLE RECITAL AT ALLENTOWN.—An organ recital given by J. Fred Wolle on September 2, at the Trinity Reformed Church in Allentown, Pa., stirred up much enthusiasm among the élite. He was assisted by Miss May Adele Levers, of Washington, D. C., whose fine soprano voice and pleasing personality made a lasting impression. The program was the following:

Fantaisia	B.
Aria	B.
Allegro vivace	B.
Pastorale	B.
Allegro	Lemm.
Fanfare	B.
My All	B.
Still wie die Nacht	B.
Miss May Adele Levers.
Allegretto	V.
Largo	Ha.
Gavotte	Th.
Andante Cantabile	W.
Scherzo	W.
O Mio Fernando	Don.
My Rosary	N.
Miss May Adele Levers.
Prayer and Cradle Song	Guilm.
Torchlight March	Guilm.

A recital by Mr. Wolle would not be complete without Bach selections.. Of these there were five numbers, played in the masterly manner which everyone has learned to associate with Mr. Wolle's interpretations. Not less did Miss May Adele Levers win approbation by her genuinely artistic work as a soprano soloist. She is the possessor of a finely trained voice of great range and power, which, under her perfect command, adapts itself to every demand of expression.

"POSITIVE, ABSOLUTE PITCH AS A POSSIBLE POSSESSION OF EVERY MUSICIAN."

THE Clavier Piano School will have, this coming season, as one of the faculty W. A. White, recently director of music in the Institution for the Blind, Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. White will be at the head of the auricular department and will drill classes in ear training which will be especially intended to develop the faculty of positive pitch. Mr. White claims that with very few exceptions all persons possess this faculty, and that a natural, logical development of this untrained faculty will give to all the ability to recognize tones.

In this claim Mr. White is supported by no less an authority than Dr. S. Jadassohn, professor at the Royal Conservatory, Leipsic, Germany, who has published a work upon this subject, from which the following is quoted: "Now, to those who have not this absolute pitch, let it be said that it can be acquired with no great amount of work, by systematic study and regular practice."

The ear and mind can quite easily be trained to correctly recognize sounds singly and in combinations, in the same manner as the eye and mind recognize colors and combinations of colors, letters, words and sentences. The one is mind addressed by ear, the other is mind addressed by eye.

Mozart said "Musicians must see with the ear and hear with the eye," but it is remarkable how few musicians really hear with the ear. They know all about harmony, progressions of chords and voices, musical form, &c., may even be able to write a fugue, but cannot tell from hearing whether a chord be inverted or not, whether it have three, four or more tones, which tone moves in a progression and how, and many times cannot tell simple intervals. There is absolutely no reason for this condition of affairs except that this form of mental activity has been very much neglected by nearly all teachers of music.

In addition to the ability to recognize pitch, the training of this faculty carries with it a full, practical knowledge of harmony and musical form, and the power to sing with purety all intervals and scales within compass of the voice.

This method of training is original with Mr. White, and well formulated, having been taught by him for the last two years. There is no apparatus, paraphernalia or go-between of any kind, but a simple, direct method from sound through ear to mind. Mr. White will speak on this subject on October 3, at Clavier Hall, and any one interested is invited to be present.

Mme. Eugenie Pappenheim.

MME. EUGENIE PAPPENHEIM returned to the city this week, after an absence of more than two months in the mountains. Madame Pappenheim spent part of her time at the Interlaken Inn, in Lakeville, Conn., and in the Catskills, and later made a tour through the Adirondacks. She traveled on the stage from North Creek to Blue Mountain Lake, which had been held up by a highwayman only a few days previously. Of course everybody was excited during the trip, especially because all sorts of rumors were afloat when the tallyho started.

From Blue Mountain Lake Madame Pappenheim went to beautiful Raquette Lake, where a stop was made at the Antlers. The trip from Raquette Lake to Fourth Lake (Fulton Chains) with a guide, in an open boat, was spoiled by rain. But even this experience was interesting, because the bad sides of such travels must be taken with the good ones.

On reaching the city Madame Pappenheim found plenty of work waiting for her. Her apartments at the Rutland had been redecorated during her absence, and it keeps her busy to put everything in shape about her studio and preparing for the opening of the season. Applications for lessons will now be received daily, and Madame Pappenheim will open her classes very shortly. Several professional pupils who are preparing for the coming season have already taken up their studies.

WHITNEY TEW ENGAGED BY HANDEL AND HAYDN.—The Anglo-American basso, Whitney Tew, has been engaged by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, to sing in an annual Christmastide performance of "The Messiah," on December 22. His manager, Henry Wolfsohn, has also arranged for him to sing the title role in "The Messiah," in Brooklyn, with the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, on December 17, and in St. Louis with the Choral Symphony Society on December 27. Mr. Tew has also been engaged to give one of his interesting song recitals before the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences in November. He will also give two recitals in New York at Mendelssohn Hall, the first of which will be on the afternoon of November 11, and two in Boston, singing there first on November 14.

KATHARINE PELTON ANNOUNCEMENT.—Miss Katharine Pelton announces that she will resume her vocal classes, after October 1, at 64 West Thirty-ninth street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, New York city.

Pupils may also arrange appointments for voice trial, by writing to her personal address, 240 West 104th street.

CARL IN THE MOUNTAINS.

AT his "Bungalow" in the Adirondack wilderness, William C. Carl has been spending the summer in rest and recreation, and also in preparing for the coming season. Mr. Carl had intended spending the summer holiday abroad, but decided to abandon the trip and instead go to the mountains, where he could combine work with pleasure. Lake Placid was chosen, and at the "Ruisseaumont" Mr. Carl secured a "Bungalow," where away from the hotel with his clavier he could get in readiness for the approaching concert season and work amidst the best of conditions.

Mr. Carl is now making a tour of the mountains, the Thousand Islands, &c., expecting to visit Quebec before returning to New York the latter part of September.

His concert season will begin at Bethlehem, Pa., on October 7, and this will be followed by three recitals at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, October 10, 11 and 12, at the completion of which he will return to New York for the reopening of the Guilmant Organ School on October 14.

This will be a busy year for the popular organist. In addition to his numerous concert engagements the Guilmant Organ School will claim a large amount of time, as he attends to all the details and arrangements in every particular. The course of work, as already announced in THE MUSICAL COURIER, is most thorough and comprehensive, embracing everything necessary for the equipment of an organist for both church and concert work. The enrollment of students bids fair to be a large one and a prosperous season is already assured.

CARL IN HIS "BUNGALOW" AT THE RUISSEAUMONT IN THE ADIRONDACK WILDERNESS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.

A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Reszké and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, volume or compass.
The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio.

MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAGO.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.
Re-engaged for New England Festivals.
(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

DRESDEN, FRANKLINSTRASSE 20,
August 15, 1901.

ON August 11 the Royal Opera opened the new musical season, "with full sails," one might say, for no less a work than "Tristan" formed the introductory number of the program. Wagner's love drama, this grand musical materialization of longing and desire, while "speaking the language which reason cannot understand," attracted a large audience, which forgetful even of the quite abnormal heat, threw itself body and soul into the enjoyment of the music and in the unfathomable depths of the composer's immortal creation.

The reproduction, it is true, with only one exception, was such as to make one ignore temperature, surroundings and all; it could hardly be surpassed, and it was not until the day after that one felt the relaxing effect upon the nerves. Malten was the Isolde. The large and sweeping vein of her irresistible verve displayed in the impersonation of Wagner's heroine made our flesh tingle in sympathy with the intensity of her passion. The artist never was in better form, her voice was vibrant and carrying. Not for one moment did she lose that intense hold on the house which is the divine right of her genius. A pity her partner, Forchhammer (Tristan), cannot compare with her artistically. He is a good, average opera singer in his class, possessing a throaty voice, and Tristan, strange to say, is his best part, though this role seems almost beyond his reach. Scheidemantel's Kurwenal is a thorough, artistic creation. The way he interprets the character, including the famous words "Nun bist du daheim im Heimathland," defies description; he stirs the very depths of our hearts. And what shall I say of Van Schuch and the orchestra? Both were simply supreme. The orchestra is Schuch's instrument—and a good one it is—upon which he plays as he chooses, and his "choice" is incomparable.

While speaking of Wagner I advise those of my readers who happen to spend some time in Dresden not to deny themselves the pleasure of visiting a remote little village, called Gross-Graupa, near the city, close by the royal summer residence Pillnitz, which village, through the accidental stay which Richard Wagner once made there, has gained historical significance. While spending my holiday in Pillnitz I happened to reach there, and I must say it impressed me in a way which I shall never forget. A marble plate fastened on the front of the quite insignificant looking peasant's house where Wagner lived informs the stranger of the importance of the place. It bears the following inscription: "In diesem Hause entwarf Richard Wagner im Sommer 1846 die Musik zum Lohengrin. Errichtet nach der ersten Lohengrin Aufführung in Bayreuth 1894."

Almost overcome with impressions and feelings aroused by the absolute solitude and the sombre woodland scenery in the background, I was almost led to believe the whole scene before my eyes might be a mirage, a stretch of my imagination, where I was to see before long Richard Wagner in person, the velvet cap on his head, the portfolio under his arm, come from within, through the humble door, shaded by the old, historical nut tree (Nussbaum) close by—to meet me, his ardent admirer. But nothing of the sort. There was, alas! only the house left, which, alive with suggestions of former glory, when within its walls the dreamlike serenity of the "Lohengrin" music first came to its creator—this very house, which in its silent way tells the traveler the story of suffering which the master endured before he, impatient and restless under the harassing annoyances of unbearable circumstances, took his refuge to the lonesome scenery of Gross-Graupa.

A letter to a friend of his (Gaillard), dated this place, illustrates his momentary mood. It begins as follows: "Thank God, here I am rusticating, hoping to forget all about such things as the city, the theatre, the opera and the royal general direction," &c. Nevertheless he there not only sketched, but even worked out the greatest part of "Lohengrin." The house is described by a Dresden friend of Wagner's, G. Kietz, who used to go out there on Sundays to see him. Several letters of the famous master are, I am told, dated Gross-Graupa, among others some to his mother, which latter communications are of a very touching kind.

Fearing that my report of the Suomen Laulu's (the Finnish students' male chorus society) recital on June 10—the letter dated June 23—may have gone astray, as it has not appeared in THE MUSICAL COURIER, I want to make another mention of it, at least by a few lines, to inform my readers here and in Finland that the concert in question was in every way a grand success. Features of their readings are the absolute ensemble, the purity of intonation, the precision of attack, the good breathing and the admirable tone gradations, their crescendos, decrescendos and pianissimo effects, rivaling the best results ever achieved in the line of chorus singing.

The program, being made up exclusively of Finnish authors' works—both words and music—and of national tunes, comprised compositions by Jean Sibelius, Oskari Merikanto, Järnefelt, Kron, Emil Genetz, and settings of folklores from Forsström and Faltin. Every number of the program—which was gone through under the artistical leadership of Herra Klemetti—had to be repeated. Quite an exceptional delight offered the songs from Jean Sibelius, a musician of unusual and original creative powers, possessing not only individuality, inspiration and musical invention, but technical ability as well. Jean Sibelius, to judge from the proofs given on the occasion and from his works brought out at the recent Heidelberg music festival (touched upon most favorably by Mr. Floersheim), certainly promises to be one among the noted musicians of the future. His two songs, "Wäinämäisen venematka" and "Saarella palaa," were samples of his talent, such as emanate only from the pen of a great artist, the third song (quite new) arousing as well immense interest. Järnefelt's "Sirkka," as presented by the chorus, was a virtuoso rendition almost unequaled in clearness of enunciation, in precision and in expression and swing, which actually carried the audience away. Merikanto's "Se kolmas" is a very fine tonal setting to Erkko's diction. "Hiljaa," by Kron, and "Nyt on mun mielestäni" (folklore strongly appealing to the emotions) gave one of the baritones of the chorus (Eino Rantawaara) an opportunity to appear as a soloist. Emil Genetz's "Karjala" closed up the program in a worthy fashion.

The concert, considering the late season, was well attended, brilliantly criticised, and very well managed by Herr Ploetner in Dresden (Wolff in Berlin), who certainly did their best in informing the public about the arrival of the foreign northern guests, whose existence and music were thoroughly unknown in the Saxon capital. Herra Klemetti, the capable leader, may look with just honor and pride on the results of his disciplinary endowments.

Fräulein Molly von Kotzebue's pupils' performance was also favorably mentioned in the last letter. Among her scholars Fräulein Schuster displayed an advanced "Vortrag," individuality and dramatic temperament claiming special note.

Further news about opera novelties which are now in preparation here will follow in my next. A. INGMAN.

VERLET IN BRUSSELS.

BRUSSELS, September 9, 1901.

Musical Courier, New York:

[BY CABLE.]

ALICE VERLET'S operatic début in "Lohengrin" last night, at the Théâtre Monnaie, a remarkable success. Litvinne's Elsa was sensational. B.

WHITNEY TEW.—The London, Eng., Daily Telegraph printed on May 23, 1901, the following estimate of Whitney Tew, the basso, who is shortly to visit America under Henry Wolfsohn's direction:

Mr. Tew is an artist who commands attention and deserves praise. Especially has he the gift of feeling and the power of conveying to others, while in point of intelligence he leaves but little to desire. Mr. Tew essayed last evening songs of widely contrasting kinds and of various countries, but the manner and spirit proper to each were easily revealed, and the result was a conspicuous success.

In October Whitney Tew will leave England, arriving in New York about November 1. At the conclusion of his American tour, of two months' duration, he will return to meet important English engagements.

WALTER JOHN HALL.—Another successful pupil of Walter John Hall is Miss Annie Wilson Arthur, soprano, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Of Miss Arthur's singing, the Royal Gazette, of Hamilton, Bermuda, in a criticism of a recent concert, says: "Undoubtedly the great treat of the evening was the singing of Miss Arthur. Her performance was very fine in point of enunciation, technic and expression. Especially was this latter noticeable in the last of the two songs."

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. A Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

OSCAR SAENGER,

Vocal Instruction,

WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.

Secretary New York State M. T. A.

Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.

TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

Mme. EVANS VON KLENNER

School of Vocal Music

Voice Culture, Style and Repertoire in Four Languages.

RESUMES TEACHING AT NEW-RESIDENCE STUDIO,

230 WEST 52d STREET,

SEPTEMBER 18.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

VAN YORX Tenor

6 E. 17 St. NEW YORK

Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

HAROLD BAUER.

HAROLD BAUER, the pianist, as announced in last week's MUSICAL COURIER, is soon to make a concert tour of Spain, playing in Barcelona, Valencia, Tarragon, Madrid, Valladolid, Saragossa, Bilbao, and San Sebastian. Early in November Bauer goes to Holland for a concert tour. He then visits England, playing with the Philharmonic Society at Manchester, and at Liverpool, and then in Scotland, at Glasgow and Edinburgh. He then returns to Paris to open the new Philharmonic Society of Paris, of which he is one of the founders. He sails for the United States about December 25.

News is just to hand that Mr. Bauer has been engaged to play at the Singakadamie in Berlin on December 12 and 19. These dates will all be features of the coming season, as Mr. Bauer has met with tremendous success and everywhere he has duplicated his American triumphs of last season. Press notices such as few artists ever received are legion and without end. These are taken from those appearing in the London papers after his St. James' Hall recitals last May and June:

Harold Bauer, the pianist, whose reappearance was one of the attractions of the recent London Festival, gave a most attractive recital on Wednesday afternoon in St. James' Hall, playing Schumann's G minor Sonata; Beethoven's Sonata in A, op. 101; Mendelssohn's Study in B flat minor; a little sonata of Scarlatti in A, and Brahms' G minor Rhapsody, with conspicuous intelligence and artistic skill. Liszt's "Gnomenreigen," Brahms' arrangement of a well-known gavotte of Gluck, and Balakirew's eccentric fantaisie, "Islamey," were also given with great effect, as well as a group of pieces by Chopin, among which the Prelude in C sharp minor was exquisitely played; the Study in C minor pleased the audience so much that an encore was with difficulty resisted, and after the Russian fantaisie the player consented to give Mendelssohn's Capriccio in F minor.—London Times, May 17, 1901.

Mr. Bauer's performance was altogether of a high class.—London Daily Telegraph, May 16, 1901.

Great interest was attached to the piano recital given yesterday afternoon at St. James' Hall by Harold Bauer, since his fine playing at the recent London Musical Festival had indicated that he was an artist of very great ability. Mr. Bauer is an Englishman, and was born in 1873. In 1892 he went to Paris, and made there such rapid progress that, in a twelvemonth, he was able to go on tour in Russia. Since then he has played with remarkable success in Continental musical centres, and has recently returned from a tour in the United States. He now comes back to us with a reputation as an executant of the first rank, and to submit himself to the severest criticism to which an artist can be subjected. It may at once be said, however, that he has nothing to fear from this, for his playing yesterday confirmed the most flattering reports received of his powers. There need be no hesitation in saying this after only a single hearing, for his program contained Schumann's Sonata in G minor, op. 22, and Beethoven's Sonata in A, op. 101, and each work demands the highest capacities for its due exposition, and requires individuality of treatment. It is rare that unqualified praise can be given to the artist who includes in his selection two compositions calling for such resource and versatility; but in this instance it is deserved. The first movement of Schumann's Sonata was magnificently rendered, the introspective tenderness of the slow movement beautifully expressed, and the conclusion of the work most brilliantly interpreted. The higher intellectual requirements of Beethoven's Sonata were met with no less conspicuous success, and the reading of the last movement, one of the most original Beethoven ever wrote, was similar to that of the late Von Bülow. Other notable performances were those of Chopin's Etude in C minor, op. 10, No. 12, and the Scherzo in C sharp minor, both of which were played with consummate mastery of the keyboard and poetical conception.—London Standard, May 16, 1901.

Harold Bauer gave a piano recital at St. James' Hall yesterday afternoon, and fully confirmed the excellent impression he recently created at the Queen's Hall Musical Festival. This young artist—he was born in 1873—has a veritably astonishing musical personality. He began his career as a violinist, and this, doubtless, enabled him to acquire the extraordinary power over his left hand which was exemplified yesterday in an astounding performance of Chopin's Etude in C minor. Mr. Bauer is not only an executant of very exceptional ability, but he has a soft, velvety touch, and plays with great feeling. His performance of Scarlatti's Sonata was delightfully crisp, and he fully realized the romantic spirit of Brahms' Rhapsodie in G minor. Liszt's "Gnomenreigen" was played with feathery lightness, and Chopin's C sharp minor Scherzo also showed the pianist at his best. The recital came to an end with Balakirew's fascinating and brilliant Oriental Fantasia, "Islamey," which was executed to perfection. As an extra piece Mr. Bauer added Mendelssohn's Scherzo in E minor.—London Morning Post, May 16, 1901.

HAROLD BAUER.

CHARLTON CONCERT COURSE.—That Pittsburg people respond promptly and cordially to the finest musical attractions is evidenced by the rapidly filling subscription sheets for the Loudon G. Charlton concert course to be given there this season. The course, under the efficient local management of R. P. Nevin, Jr., and C. N. Boyd, will be made up of five concerts, as follows: 1. Leonora Jackson, supported by Harry J. Fellows, tenor, and William Bauer, pianist, November 4; 2. Mme. Lillian Nordica, in recital, December 16; 3. Eduard Zeldenrust, the celebrated Dutch pianist, in recital, January 7; 4, Ethelbert Nevin's last song cycle, "The Quest," for double quartet of solo voices and baritone solo, January 20; 5. the Woman's String Orchestra, of New York city, Carl V. Lachmund, conductor, February 3.

Madame Eames Ill.

A DISPATCH from Worcester, Mass., dated September 9, says that Mme. Emma Eames, who was announced as the leading soprano for the Worcester Music Festival two weeks hence, has cancelled her engagement because of illness that makes it impossible for her to sing for several weeks. The festival committee received a cable message from her at Paris saying that she is suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis and that her physician has ordered her to refrain from using her voice before October.

The committee does not fear for the success of the festival, as the program is not based on the star plan. However, special efforts are being put forth to secure an artist to take the place of Mme. Eames. The committee is in communication with several well-known singers.

MISS HEYMAN WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY.—Miss Katherine Ruth Heyman, the distinguished young American pianist, has again been engaged as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for one of its November concerts. She will play the Beethoven Concerto.

A sprained ankle interrupted Miss Heyman's pleasure at the resort where she spent the summer, but her practice was not neglected. Although she had to work under serious disadvantages, with the lame foot propped up on a chair and the well one doing double duty—the heel manipulating one pedal, the toe the other—the plucky little artist conscientiously devoted certain hours every day to the piano. One evening a college professor among the guests for whom Miss Heyman was playing remarked with enthusiasm: "Your performance bespeaks genius, taste and study."

AMY ROBIE.—Miss Amy Robie, the violinist, has been playing at New England resorts this summer. She has also assisted at special musical services in churches. At an important service of the Unitarians at New Salem, Mass., her playing was reputed the feature of the musical program. The following extract from the Transcript, of Athol, Mass., is about a concert where Miss Robie played:

The work of Miss Robie on the violin was very fine, and the imprint of true musical genius was clearly shown in her enjoyable work. She rendered a number of beautiful selections, the one "Home, Sweet Home," being the sweetest of the evening. Miss Robie has received a brilliant musical education in Germany, having studied under four different masters, and is now actively engaged in her profession in New York. She owns several valuable violins, having secured them while abroad.

HOWE RECITAL AT BUFFALO.—Dr. Clarence O. S. Howe, of Montclair, N. J., gave an organ recital on the evening of September 4 in the Temple of Music, Pan-American Exposition. His work was well received. Dr. Howe is a young man of considerable ability and will doubtless ere long make his mark in the musical world.

NILSSON.—Christine Nilsson denies the report circulating as to her bad health, and writes from Sweden that she is enjoying herself, and has had no day of illness so far as she can remember.

Mme. Katharine Fisk.

FOREMOST CONTRALTO IN AMERICA,

WITH RECORD OF BRILLIANT EUROPEAN TRIUMPHS.

Transcontinental Recital Tour, Season 1901-1902.

ORATORIO, FESTIVAL AND

CONCERT DATES NOW BOOKING.

"Everywhere she appears the judgment is the same; unstinted praise for her rich, beautiful voice, dramatic intensity, vocal art, and musical intelligence."—PHILIP HALE in Musical Record.

Sole Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York

MR. WHITNEY TEW

In America

November and

December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene bein especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

Sole Representative:

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Street

NEW YORK

Los Angeles, September 2, 1901.

MOTHER NATURE does not draw sharp defining lines in laying out her seasons in this even-tempered clime, and the heat of midsummer and the cold of midwinter—at least along the coast—give the thermometer wondrously little work to do; yet we quite as faithfully follow the example of our Eastern brothers and sisters and each summer desert our professional vocations for recreative vacations, hieing ourselves to nearby mountain and seashore retreats. Thus music, where in evidence at all, hides its more serious qualities and speaks to the pleasure and recreation seeking multitudes through the noisy mouthed bands, leaving little of interest for the scribe to record.

While your correspondent found no available opportunity to attend this summer's Chautauqua at Long Beach, report has it that the music was a pleasurable and successful feature. It was under the direction of William James Chick, a prominent Los Angeles singer and musician. The Congregational Orchestra, under the direction of Morton M. Mason, of Pasadena, who conducted for William Mead, absent, and Mrs. Minnie Hance Owens, contralto, and Miss Mollie Adelia Brown, soprano, were notable program features.

Doubtless the best organized band in Southern California and the one that has delighted by far the greatest number of people is the Catalina Island Band, which discourses music nightly to audiences of from 1,500 to 3,000 people. It would be hard to conceive more ideal conditions for the enjoyment of outdoor music than prevails at Avalon, Catalina Island, probably the peer, as a delightful pleasure ground, of any resort in the world. Almost within a pebble's toss of the quiet waters of Avalon Harbor, and nestled under tall eucalyptus trees, are seats for probably 1,500 people, back of which is the broad tree lined street promenade, accommodating as many more. Facing this is the large sound-deflecting, arched bandstand, within which the band of over twenty pieces gives a one-and-one-half hours' program each evening, consisting of compositions ranging from modern orchestral classics—in brassy garb, 'tis true—and selections from grand, comic and light operas, to the popular descriptive pieces, and the St. Vitus dance "rag-time" distortions, which still so tickle the popular ear. The band has been organized over seven years. It is under the direction of E. C. Kammermeyer and under the business management of C. H. Porter.

The Catalina Island Band was banqueted at Hotel Metropole, August 30, by the Banning Company, the owners of the popular island resort. Thirty-five guests enjoyed the elegant menu and it was a late hour when the wit and humor ended which followed the repast.

Rehearsals have not yet been begun for the symphony concerts, but will be taken in hand in the near future by Director Hamilton.

Los Angeles is in need of a good string quartet or like organization, which would supplement the symphony concerts with chamber music concerts. The city has excellent talent from which material might be drawn, but the unfortunate disinclination of some of our really good violinists to serve art and "play second fiddle" is in no small measure responsible for our lack of such an organization now.

The Blanchard & Venter Lyceum and Musical Bureau has secured a long list of attractions for the coming season, for tour and local presentation—in fact, by far the most extensive single season's bookings ever made in Southern California under a single management. Local as well as foreign talent is represented. Among the musical offerings the following will be presented: During the early part of the season song recitals respectively by Forrest D. Carr, Miss Anna Virginia Metcalf and Mrs. Mary Weaver McCauley; in Indian lore and Indian songs, Nat M. Brigham; concerts respectively by the Aerial Ladies' Quartet (vocal) and assisting instrumentalists; the Euterpean Quartet (male), assisted by Miss Sibyl Conklin, contralto, and Miss Lottie Varnum, pianist, and recitals by Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop, soprano; during January a concert by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, of forty-seven instrumentalists, under the direction of Adolph Rosenbecker, and a concert by the Enoch Arden Concert Company; in March a concert by the Symphony Quintet (strings) and a concert by the Leonora Jackson Grand Concert Company, including, besides Miss Jackson, Harry J. Fellows, tenor, and William Bauer, pianist. In addition to the foregoing the Blanchard & Venter Bureau has a large number of other artists at its disposal for concert and recital work.

Among other artists who are to visit us the coming season will be Eduard Zeldenrust, the Dutch pianist; Gregory Hast, the English tenor; Mme. Charlotte Maconda, soprano; Miss Helen Niebuhr; Katherine Ruth Heyman, pianist; Emil Hoffman, baritone; George Hamlin, the well-known oratorio and concert tenor, and Miss Flavie van den Hende, violinist. F. N. B.

BRAHMS' WILL.

It will be remembered that after the death of Brahms, leaving property valued at a million of marks ($250,000), there was a long suit between his relations and heirs on one hand, and some musical societies in Vienna and Hamburg, which claimed the greater share of what he left. First one party, then the other had judgments in its favor, till it reached the Supreme Court. The case, after a partial compromise, has lately been decided by the Court of Vienna.

It may be of interest to read a copy of the will of the composer, which has not yet been published. The so-called last will and testament is an autograph letter by Brahms to his old friend Simrock, and gives a glimpse of his private relations, and further touches on the works he left, of which hitherto little has been heard. It disposes finally also of some valuable manuscripts of Haydn, Mozart, Schumann and others.

The document is as follows:

(Promulgated April 3, 1897, etc.)

Ischl, May, 1871.

Dear Simrock—Many years ago I made a kind of will, of which I kept one copy and deposited another with a friend. A little while ago I opened it and must destroy it. In such cases one is too prolix and wishes to go too much into detail.

I shall now try the simplest fashion, and beg permission to impart it to you in confidence. If the case arises, you can exhibit it as "my last will" and act thereupon, as far as you can. All costs arising therefrom will, of course, be taken from the property left. Nobody can make perhaps an objection, and if nothing else comes before the court, my simple wish will be held valid. As a preliminary, I say that I have no debts or obligations. Should it be found that anyone is in debt to me I declare hereby that it is extinguished and invalid.

All my property is in the Reichshauptbank, and you have been informed thereof.

I. I leave it in equal shares to the (Liszt) Pensions Verein in Hamburg for Musicians and the Czerny foundation of the same nature in Vienna.

II. Hereupon are to be paid as long as those in interest live in equal shares by the two societies:

(a) To my sister, Elise Grund, through Christian Detmering in Hamburg, 5,000 marks a year.

(b) The like to my stepmother, Caroline Brahms, or

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,
Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN
Distinguished American Pianist.
Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

LOUISE B. VOIGT
SOPRANO.
Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.
Address
RICHARD BYRON
Manager.
301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK

MRS. WEBB GARDNER
SOPRANO.
FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.
Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. VITTORIO CARPI,
Vocal Instruction.
ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

her son, Felix Schnock, watchmaker in Pinneburg (struck out later).

(c) To my housekeeper, Cölestina Praxa (in case she still lives), 5,000 marks (later struck out and 10,000 marks inserted) once for all. Moreover there belongs to this my housekeeper whatever I possess in furniture, clothes and linen, also pictures which hang on the walls, rugs, quilts, boxes, &c., except the medallion portrait of Schumann with inscription, an armchair with embroidery (Triumphlied!), concerning which see under IV. (later added presents of honor, diplomas, &c.).

III. My books and music I bequeath to the Society of Friends of Music in Vienna.

IV. Personally, however, I wish my nearer and more valued acquaintances and friends to choose from what I leave memorial tokens, concerning which not the directors of the Society of Friends of Music, but you and Herr Mandyczewski must decide—as you both had to choose some for yourselves.

Excepted herefrom are and given to the Society of Friends of Music, the manuscript of the G minor Sonata of Mozart, of the six quartets of Haydn and the entire printed or manuscript Scarlatti.

The memorials mentioned I wish to be taken in the most liberal sense, yet here those suggested are the pictures, engravings, diplomas, presents of honor, the Schumann double portrait with inscription, the above named armchair, and things of that kind. There is plenty suitable for this purpose, and Herr Mandyczewski can easily manage that no one chooses what can be of value for the collections of the society.

To specify particulars I refrain from doing, yet in the meantime I designate for J. Joachim the sketches of the three string quartets of Schumann.

For Christian Detmering my gold watch and chain (later struck out). Finally, what concerns myself, I wish particularly that my body be burned. Let it be done, and the costs naturally will come from my estate.

Likewise I wish that everything that I leave in manuscript (unprinted) shall be burned. For this I have now, as far especially as regards notes, as far as possible taken care myself. You will find little about which you cannot fulfill my wishes. Should, however, the letters of my parents and others quite personal be found, I beg you urgently to destroy the same without any reservation. Letters of others likewise as far as they cannot be returned to the sender.

Should I leave anything indisputably ready for printing hereby give it to you. I take care anxiously that nothing is left to lie useless. I make only the reservation, to supplement this writing, or even to recall it. Meanwhile would beg you to preserve it carefully for a long time, and am with cordial greetings your JOHANNES BRAHMS.

The will, however, did not remain in this original form. Brahms demanded it back after the death of his sister, Von Simrock, and made many erasions. Apparently he wished to make some other disposition of the part of his property left free. But that he never did. Death surprised him before he had outlined his last will. When the letter was found his relatives declared a will in which there were erasions was invalid, no other existed, therefore what was left belonged to them. The musical institutions, on the other side, maintained Brahms had only proposed the erasions in order to divert to them the portion in question left unappropriated. Before the final decision the Vienna societies agreed with the relatives on a compromise. The Hamburg society did not agree thereto, and its claims are now rejected by the Supreme Court.

GRAU HOMEWARD BOUND.—Maurice Grau is due here about the 25th of this month. Mr. Grau will arrive on the maiden trip of the new steamer, Kronprinz Wilhelm.

HARRY J. FELLOWS AT CAMBRIDGE SPRINGS.

HARRY J. FELLOWS, the tenor of the Leonora Jackson Company, is at Cambridge Springs, Pa., and will remain there until the opening of his tour. A number of pupils have followed Mr. Fellows from various cities, and the popular artist is the centre of quite a large and admiring musical colony.

HARRY J. FELLOWS.

HEINROTH AT THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

IT is just five years since Chas. Heinroth entered upon his duties at the National Conservatory and at the Church of the Ascension, Fifth avenue and Tenth street, so that a word or two in regard to him and his work may not be amiss. This young artist is continually increasing his following of admirers and friends.

"I have rarely heard anything like that before," is a frequent remark of professional musicians after attending one of Mr. Heinroth's Sunday afternoon musical services or organ recitals. There is nothing hackneyed in the methods of this leader. It is easy to perceive, however, that his originality is based on familiarity of fundamental law, and that music is with him emphatically an art.

Not until the age of seventeen did he adopt music as his profession, beginning with piano under Arthur Friedheim, and harmony under Max Spicker. A year later he took up the organ under John White, at the National Conservatory, with whom he remained three years. Five months after beginning his studies he secured his first position as organist at St. Paul's, Brooklyn, where he remained three years. This position he gave up in order to pursue contrapuntal studies with Rheinburger in Munich. While there he was offered the position of organist and choirmaster at the Church of the Ascension, which he accepted. Returning he was also offered the position as teacher of organ and harmony at the National Conservatory. The best evidence of his abilities is shown in the fact that he is regarded by his rector, congregation and a host of pupils as one of the finest workers in the cause of good church music to be found in New York.

As a recitalist he is in demand. One of his many criticisms in THE MUSICAL COURIER reads as follows: "Heinroth is always an astonishing executant to me. Why? Simply because of the amazing ease with which he tosses off and pedals the most intricate and complex compositions; and when he 'tosses them' they arrive in a finished state, too. Now this young man is far too modest for this workaday generation. He does unheard of things with perfect nonchalance; things which show him to be an organ genius, and this tribute is sure to be his from all sources by and by.

"Few of the organists of New York are destined to accomplish more and better work than this modest gentleman."

As a teacher also his success has been unprecedented, as witness the remarkable performances of the blind organist William Haden, pupil of the conservatory, whose musical education has been almost entirely in the hands of Mr. Heinroth. The entrance examinations for organ will be held on September 17.

THURSBY MUSICALE IN MAINE.—Miss Emma Thursby, assisted by a number of her pupils, gave a subscription musicale at the Eirenion, Eliot, Me., on August 30. Miss Thursby herself sang a group of songs by Haydn, Grieg and Raff, and 'My Heart Ever Faithful," by Bach, and the brilliant "Villanelle," by Dell' Acqua. The Thursby pupils who sang were the Misses Clare and Cornett. Clarence de Vaux-Royer, violinist, played two solos, and the piano accompaniments were played by E. B. Kinney, Jr., director of the music at Green Acre. Miss Thursby returns to New York about September 15, and soon after resumes her teaching at her Gramercy Park studio.

NEW YORK MUSICIANS AT LAKE GEORGE.—A number of New York artists appeared recently at a successful concert given at Pearl Point, Lake George. Mrs. M. J. Scherhey, contralto, wife of the well-known vocal teacher, and Miss Riesenburger, also a Scherhey pupil, sang. Mrs. Scherhey was in exceptionally good voice, and Miss Riesenburger gave promise of becoming a fine singer. The pianists of the concert were Louis Koemmenich, conductor of the Brooklyn Saengerbund; Miss Hall and Miss Emmie Wilhelms. J. A. Kimher, tenor, and William G. Rockwell, basso; C. B. Dolge, tenor, each gave a solo. Mrs. Scherhey's number was an aria from "La Favorita," and after singing it she was repeatedly recalled.

JESSIE SHAY'S SECOND RECITAL.—Miss Jessie Shay gave her second piano recital at the Kent House, Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn., and her program was enthusiastically received. The young artist has been engaged for a musicale to be given September 16 by Mrs. W. A. Parks.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN PUPILS
Mr. BOWMAN has returned to New York and may be consulted by appointment or by personal application at his Studio, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday Afternoons. 2 to 3. Private Instruction in Piano, Organ and Theory. Classes also of two or more for the study of Theory
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

Elsa Marshall,
222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON, CINCINNATI, OHIO.
Soprano.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

THE Guilmant Organ School
(COPYRIGHT)
RE-OPENS
Monday, October 14th.
EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....
34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

CONCERT RECORD OF WORKS BY SOME OF OUR BEST AMERICAN COMPOSERS.

George W. Chadwick.

Gay Little Dandelion.....Miss Ione Huse, St. Louis, Mo.
The Danza.....Mrs. Walter Reed, Spokane, Wash.
The Danza.....Miss Annette Tush, Des Moines, Ia.
The Danza.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.
Thou Art Like Unto a Flower.Mrs. Augusta Nieper, Schenectady, N.Y.
Thou Art Like Unto a Flower....Hugh McGibney, Terre Haute, Ind.
Thou Art Like Unto a Flower.....William Johnson, New York, N. Y.
Nocturne.....Miss Isabelle Banton, Newark, N. J.
Spring Song (part song for women's voices)..... } Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia.
Spring Song (part song for women's voices)..... } The Woman's Musical Guild, Des Moines, Ia.
Lullaby Trio (for women's voices)..... } Ladies' Literary Club, Salt Lake City, Utah.
The Rose Leans Over the Pool.Miss Shannah Cumming, Newark, N.Y.
The Rose Leans Over the Pool..... } Miss Shannah Cumming, Northampton, Mass.
Dear Love, When in Thine Arms..Miss Millie Flynn, San Francisco
Dear Love, When in Thine Arms..... } Miss Marion Barrington, New York.
Dear Love, When in Thine Arms.Chas. H. Miner, New Haven, Conn.
Sweetheart, Thy Lips Are Touched With Flame..... } Hallett Gilberte, Nantucket, Mass.
O Let Night Speak of Me....Miss Lida Frank Price, Brooklyn, N. Y.
O Let Night Speak of Me (song).....Steinert Hall, Boston, Mass.
O Let Night Speak of Me (song).....Frederic Martin, Troy, N. Y.
Before the Dawn... .. ..Miss Ida Mae Pierpont, Newark, N. J.
Lovely Rosabelle (cantata)..Englewood Choral Club, Englewood, N. J.
Allah.....Mrs. Kenneth C. Gross, Dallas, Ore.
The Rose Leans Over the Pool..Mrs. Kenneth C. Gross, Dallas, Ore.

Arthur Foote.

Irish Folksong.....Drake Conservatory, Des Moines, Ia.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. Mulford Hunt, Newark, N. J.
Irish Folksong.....Tourist Club, Delhi, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Clara Williams, Minneapolis, Minn.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Frances Dunning, Newark, N. J.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. F. D. Whiting, Ithaca, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Clara Williams, Duluth, Wis.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Laura W. Cowan, Syracuse, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. P. H. Adams, Topeka, Kan.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Hildegarde Hofmann, Troy, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Hildegarde Hofmann, Yonkers, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Florence Evans, Dayton, Ohio
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. G. E. Fellows, Chicago, Ill.
Irish Folksong..... } First Presbyterian Church Choral Society, Columbus, Ohio.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Cora Brobst, Burlington, Ia.
Irish Folksong..... ...Mrs. Georg Henschel, Colorado Springs, Col.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. Georg Henschel, Rochester, N. Y.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Carmela Carbone, Buffalo, N. Y.
Irish Folksong..... } Miss Blanche Duffield (with Sousa's Band), Symphony Hall, Boston.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Clara Williams, Minneapolis, Minn.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. Walter Reed, Spokane, Wash.
Irish Folksong.....Madame Wikstrom, Olean, N. Y.
Irish Folksong..... .....Miss Margaret MacDonald, Chicago, Ill.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. Carrie Brown-Dexter, Oakland, Cal.
Irish Folksong (for cornet, with band accompaniment) } B. B. Keyes and Salem Cadet Band, Salem, Mass.
Irish Folksong.....Miss Julia Agnes O'Connor, Buffalo, N. Y.
Irish Folksong...Mrs. Anna Colburn Plummer, Salt Lake City, Utah
Irish Folksong. .....Mrs. Evta Kileski, New London, Conn.
Irish Folksong.....Mrs. Evta Kileski, Lyme, Conn.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean..... } Heathe Gregory, Newport, R. I.
Song of the Forge..... } Heathe Gregory, Newport, R. I.
When Icicles Hang by the Wall..... } Heathe Gregory, Newport, R. I.
Song of Four Seasons..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
On the Way to Kew..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
O Swallow, Swallow, Flying South..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
Memnon..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
Love Me if I Live..... } Miss Carolyn Boyan, Salem, Mass.
Sonata for Piano and Violin, op. 20..... } Sigmund Beel and Miss Ada Wright, London, England.

J. H. Hahn.

Break, Break, Break!..... } Miss Ruby Katharine Harkness, Detroit, Mich.
Love Me if I Live..... } Miss Ruby Katharine Harkness, Detroit, Mich.
Concert Polonaise..... } Louise Unsworth Cragg, Music Teachers' Nat. Assn., Put-in-Bay, Ohio.
Concert Polonaise....C. von Sternberg, Mich. Music Teachers' Assn.
Concert Polonaise...Blanche Decring, Illinois Music Teachers' Assn.
Concert Polonaise...Agnes Andrus, Concordia Society, Detroit, Mich.
Love Me if I Live..... } Mrs. C. H. Clements, Music Teachers' Assn., Put-in-Bay, Ohio.
Break, Break, Break!..... } Mrs. C. H. Clements, Music Teachers' Assn., Put-in-Bay, Ohio.
The Proposal..... } Mrs. C. H. Clements, Music Teachers' Assn., Put-in-Bay, Ohio.
Come Again!..... } Mrs. C. H. Clements, Music Teachers' Assn., Put-in-Bay, Ohio.
Break, Break, Break!..... } Esther St. John, Michigan Music Teachers' Association.
Love Me if I Live..... } Esther St. John, Michigan Music Teachers' Association.
Love Thee, Dearest..... } Esther St. John, Michigan Music Teachers' Association.
Springtime (waltz song)..W. L. Blumenschein Concert, Dayton, Ohio

John W. Metcalf.

A Dream So Fair..... } Dr. Gilbert Fuller Graham, Oakland, Cal.
Sunrise..... } Dr. Gilbert Fuller Graham, Oakland, Cal.
A Keepsake..... } Dr. Gilbert Fuller Graham, Oakland, Cal.
Absent..... } Dr. Gilbert Fuller Graham, Oakland, Cal.
The Sunshine of Thine Eyes. } Dr. Gilbert Fuller Graham, Oakland, Cal.
Pastorale.....James F. Kutz, Oakland, Cal.
Ballet Air.....James F. Kutz, Oakland, Cal.

DOROTHY HARVEY.—Dorothy Harvey, the soprano, has returned to New York, having enjoyed a very pleasant vacation. Mrs. Harvey is busily occupied in preparing for the present concert season, her first engagement consisting of appearances with the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra, in Pittsburg, on November 7 and 9. After these dates the gifted vocalist will be heard in many cities, including Grand Rapids and Detroit, Mich.; Toronto and Montreal, Canada; Chicago, New York and other prominent musical centres. Undoubtedly Mrs. Harvey will repeat her successes of last year, which proved to be a notable series of events, under Henry Wolfsohn's direction. As a criterion of her merit it is sufficient to state that she was associated with such well-known artists as Plançon, Campanari, Fritz Kreisler, Dohnányi, Gabrilowitsch, Bloomfield-Zeisler and Gerardy, while on several occasions she was soloist at the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra's concerts. Her beautiful voice and fine stage presence have combined to make her a great favorite.

GOODRICH.—A. J. Goodrich and Mrs. Goodrich have returned to this city after a delightful summer at Lake George. Mr. Goodrich has completed his new work on modern counterpoint.

LATEST EUROPEAN NEWS.

LONDON, August 27, 1901.

ZELIE DE LUSSAN has been engaged by the Moody-Manners Opera Company until Christmas. After that she may go to the United States.

Clementine de Vere is singing in Australia with the Williamson Italian Opera Company.

Kubelik gives his only London concert on November 19 at Queen's Hall, and on November 20 he leaves on the Majestic for the United States, accompanied by his manager, Hugo Görlitz.

Esther Palliser, the dramatic soprano, leaves for the United States October 23 to give concerts in Boston and New York. She may tour for a while after those concerts.

Negotiations are pending for the engagements of Ben Davies, tenor, and Andrew Black, basso, for the May Festival at Cincinati. Schumann-Heink has already signed. Mr. Lloyd will positively not visit the United States. B.

BECKER RETURNS.—Gustav L. Becker returns on September 10 from a three months' vacation at Raymond, N. H. This is the fourth summer Mr. Becker has spent in this beautiful place, and he now plans to build a summer cottage on one of its hill tops. Another musician, who will build in Raymond next summer is Dr. Percy Goetschius, of Boston, the theorist. Mr. Becker's vacation was not all given to country life, for he has added considerably to an already extensive piano repertory, and produced several new compositions. The "Becker lecture musicales" begin their seventh season about the middle of October, at 1 West 104th street, where Mr. Becker begins to teach directly after his arrival. The feature of these affairs this year will be the presentation of some of Mr. Becker's advanced pupils, each in a short recital, with the assistance of well-known artists.

THE KLINGENFELDS RETURN.—Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Klingenfeld returned last week from a pleasant summer passed in Canada and at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. The College of Music and School of Elocution, which the Klingenfelds established last season at 108 Hancock street, Brooklyn, is in the heart of a fine residence section.

The new institution will reopen the end of the month. The work of enrolling the pupils is in progress, and a number will begin their studies at once. Recitals and musicales will again be a feature of the institution. The faculty assisting the Klingenfelds is composed of specialists who have their reputations made. Mr. Klingenfeld, the director, is at the head of the violin department, and Mrs. Klingenfeld leads the vocal instructors, and she is also a successful teacher on the piano.

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, MCCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.
Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.
Sole Direction:
London G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO
51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Sole Manager, Room 95 Carnegie Hall, New York.

BAILEY
THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.
If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.
Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.
ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.
A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by
R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,
Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.
EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

VOICE CULTURE.

By Eva B. Deming.

MISS DEMING, the well-known teacher of sight singing and choral music, has been in Europe for the past four months studying and visiting schools in England, France, Switzerland and Germany, as well as hearing music which it is impossible to hear in America. For the past seven years Miss Deming has been teaching with great success in Philadelphia and New York, and her aim has always been to raise the standard of vocal music by laying a thorough foundation and teaching pupils to read vocal music on the same principle that they read their language.

Many singers after years of work in voice culture find themselves hampered in their work because they cannot read music. The teacher of voice culture and interpretation has not time to teach pupils to read, as this is a separate branch of music. Many of the prominent vocal teachers are delighted to find a teacher so broad and thorough in her work as Miss Deming to whom they can send their pupils for this part of their musical education. Nothing is more trying to the teacher of voice culture than to have pupils who cannot read difficult music and must waste days learning that which should be mastered in a few hours.

In her studies in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and New York, as well as Europe, Miss Deming has sought for the highest methods of teaching sight singing, ear training, theory of music and choral singing. Her work is well known by many prominent musicians, who endorse it not only for vocalists, but for instrumentalists and students of harmony. The ability to think in tone or look at a piece of music and hear it mentally, as one would read a printed page in English, is something that is needed by students of every branch of music.

To one having this knowledge the study of all branches of music becomes comparatively easy. The highest musicians are realizing more and more that the true way to begin the music education is through teaching children to read and understand music by using the voice as a means of illustration without dependence upon an instrument. The person who can sing at sight and think tones, intervals and chords accurately will take up the study of the stringed instruments much more easily than one untrained in this line. It is a sad fact that the choral work in America is hampered by this lack of knowledge of reading music among singers.

Conductors find themselves obliged to teach the parts by having them played over and over again until the singers learn by ear; so, instead of bringing out many new choral works each year, they can only produce a very few. Every school in our country should have a teacher of sight singing and choral work, who is thoroughly trained for his work.

Having felt the great need for higher work in this line in America, Miss Deming has established a school where pupils have the advantage of private and class instruction in all branches of sight singing and ear training. The choral classes give pupils practice in part singing, and prepare them for church work and all kinds of ensemble singing. Great care has been given to the selection and grading of the material used in these classes, so that all may be taught and studied from the right basis. Some rare gems have been collected by Miss Deming, and the knowledge of music is greatly broadened through the study of these vocal works, beginning with the folksong of the various nations, and as the knowledge of reading advances, choruses from the oratorios and operas are studied. Special classes will be formed for children, where many original ideas which have proved very successful, will be used. When vocal music is taught in the right way it helps to develop concentration of mind in the child, and thus proves of help in all branches of the education.

Normal classes for teachers will also be formed for those prepared to take that work, where methods of teaching in the public and private schools, also choir and choral training, will be taught.

The needs of the individual are carefully considered in these classes, and the work of all is personally directed by the teacher.

All students of music should avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing the lectures given by Miss Deming at the opening of her school the first week in October. Cards for these lectures may be obtained by addressing Miss Deming at the school, 402 and 403 Carnegie Hall. Classes and private lessons will begin the first week in October, and pupils should register as soon as possible after September 15.

Photograph by Mr. Hugo Görlitz.

THE RESIDENCE AND VILLA OF PADEREWSKI,
RIOND BOSSON,
Near Morges, Lake Leman (Geneva), Switzerland.

Flavie Van Den Hende.—Mme. Flavie Van Den Hende, the 'cellist, is spending her vacation at Goshen Bridge, Va.

Gerardy Coming East.—Before the end of the week Jean Gerardy will be on his way to San Francisco; this past week he has given four 'cello recitals in the Honolulu Island, where he again won great success, and was most enthusiastically received. Gerardy will open his coming American tour earlier than was intended by his manager, Henry Wolfsohn. Before his opening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be about the middle of October. Gerardy will give several recitals in the Far West, all of which engagements were made for him after the announcement that Gerardy was coming to this country by way of California.

Felix Fox in France.—Felix Fox, the pianist, went abroad early in the summer. After a visit to London he went to Paris, and from there to beautiful Auvergne for a month to study and rest. Philippe Emile Bernard, the composer and former master of Mr. Fox, was also at Auvergne, and this gave Fox an opportunity of having his old teacher coach him in some of his own as well as other compositions.

Miss Shedd to Visit New York.—Miss Mary M. Shedd, of Chicago, will be at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, from the 16th to the 23d of September, her purpose being to hold interviews with prominent scientists, who are much interested in her American method of singing.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

...pearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time.
...ring July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE ...ADAMOWSKI TRIO.
MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.
...uring the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szum...ka and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio ...be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.
...der the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET
Fourteenth Season.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.
Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.
••••
Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.
••••
Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

...IE ...ILY
"LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
...ARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
...CHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
...REWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
...S RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Under the patronage of the Grand Prince Constantine, a committee has been appointed in St. Petersburg to erect a monument to Glinka. The statue will be unveiled in June, 1904, the centenary of his birth.

The cathedral of Würzburg possesses the first female organist in Germany, Frau Höller, daughter of the late organist.

The Meiningen Orchestra will give at Eisenach, next month, a grand festival devoted exclusively to Beethoven. It will comprehend four concerts, at which will be given the First, Third, Fifth and Seventh Symphonies and the overtures to "Egmont," "Coriolanus" and "Leonora." Fritz Steinbach will conduct, and Halir and F. Lamond give the two violin concertos.

Franz Blumenberg, well known in the musical circles of Cologne as a teacher and composer, has lately published a number of new and valuable works. Among them are pieces for piano, "Die schöne Sennerin," a ländler; "The Christmas Tree," fantaisie; a "Prince Carneval March" and others, and several lieder, with piano accompaniment, and three male choruses. All of these are worthy of attention. The ländler is in true Tyrolean style. Of the solo lieder the Kölner Volksfreund commends "Wanderung,"a cyclus of six songs; "Dem Kaiser Heil" and a "Wiegenlied." They are characteristic, full of delicate feeling and suit the text. The "Dem Kaiser Heil" is arranged also for one voiced chorus, with accompaniment of brass instruments and drums; it is full of patriotic enthusiasm.

Herbert Robinson, the American basso, who has been a resident of Berlin for over five years, has left that city for London, where he proposes to make his permanent home.

Gabriele Wietrowitz has been appointed teacher of the violin at the Royal High School of Music in Berlin. Other ladies occupying such a position are Lady Norman Neruda at the Stern Conservatory and Marianne Stresow-Scharwenka at the Scharwenka Conservatorium.

Siegfried Ochs, the director of the Berlin Philharmonic Chorus, has had an offer of the direction of the Porges Singing Society, of Munich. He declined the offer, but goes once a fortnight to Munich to direct rehearsals. Wherefore one journal asks, "Have not we quite enough traveling conductors?"

Concertmaster Bernhard Dessau is receiving offers from everywhere for solo appearances next season. The artist has accepted some of the more important engagements offered him, but intends to reserve most of his time for his pupils. This is an example that certain other well-known teachers of Berlin might follow, who think nothing of leaving their pupils for weeks and even months, in order to tour foreign countries. This is a practice little short of dishonesty.—German Times.

Benjamin Bilse, whose concerts at the former "Konzerthaus" in the Leipzigerstrasse form one of the most pleasing recollections of old Berliners, has just celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday at his home in Liegnitz. Among the members of Bilse's orchestra were such men as Halir, Hekking, Ysayé and Thomson.

The Lokal Anzeiger tells us that Frau Lilli Lehmann is resting at her villa in the Tyrol, and displaying her sylph-like figure in the native costume, short skirt and all.

The trouble at the Vienna Conservatory is not yet ended. At a meeting of the directors the Professors Hellmesberger, Rosé and Stoll, who had resigned on account of the appointment of Emil Sauer, were present. The first named was willing to recall his resignation if on any suitable occasion some external mark of honor was given him. Stoll, the stage manager, also was willing to withdraw his resignation if he received the title of Imperial Royal Professor and a salary equal to that of the teachers of instrumental classes. But Rosé would make no compromise, and although the prospect of a higher salary was offered to him refused to draw back.

The Conservatory of Dresden during the last school year had 1,286 pupils, of whom forty-six were from the United States. The proportion of the sexes was five male to eight female pupils.

Victor Charpentier, the 'cellist of the Paris Grand Opéra, will revive the grand popular concerts, and, for this purpose has formed an orchestra of ninety distinguished musicians. These grand symphonic concerts will be given Mondays and Thursdays from November to April.

Martin Klein celebrated at Stuttgart the twenty-fifth jubilee of his artistic career on August 29. From 1886 to 1889 he was active in Karlsbad, from that time till 1891 at Vienna, when he devoted himself to opera. After engagements in Dantzig and Cologne he joined the Stuttgart Theatre in 1896, and from 1898 to 1900 was a member of the Munich Court Opera. His versatility enabled him to play with equal effect such characters as Beckmesser, Mime, Vogelhändler, Eisenstein, Michel Bernhard, &c.

The death of Fritz Simrock, head of the famous publishing house of Berlin, is announced. The catalogue of the house comprises the names of Bohen, Brahms, Bruch and Dvorák. The price demanded by the firm for Brahms' works was extraordinarily high, in most cases prohibitive, and rendering productions of them very difficult. At least the Musikalisches Wochenblatt so states. Yet Brahms' testamentary letter was addressed to Simrock, and expresses warm friendship for him. Simrock, too, aided Eulenberg in publishing a cheap score edition of the symphonies and chamber music of the master.

Arnold Mendelssohn, in Darmstadt, is working on a new oratorio to be called "Samson."

Mozart was one evening at the house of Dolls, a musician in Leipsie, when his host asked him to write a few lines as a momento. Mozart pleaded that it was late, and that being obliged to leave at an early hour the next day for Dresden he was much more inclined to sleep than write. But as his host insisted, Mozart, after teasing him for what he called his sentimentality, asked for a piece of paper. They brought him a sheet, which he tore in two. On one of the scraps he wrote for five or six minutes. Then he wrote on the other, after which he gave the manuscripts to Dolls and his son.

The first sheet contained a three part canon on the words "Farewell, we shall meet again."

They read it through at once, and it proved to be a clever piece, with a pretty touch of melancholy running through it. Then they tried the second one. It was also a three-part canon on the remarkable words, "Don't whine like old women."

It was a comic piece. They nearly died with laughing. Then they saw that the two canons could be sung together, making a total of six parts. They began again. The effect was indescribable. The listeners could not praise it enough. And as they burst forth in wonder at his amazing quickness, Mozart cried out, "Good night, children." Then he took his hat and went away.

He was already some way off when Dolls and his family were crying "Bravo" after him, and he did not turn to reply to their compliments.

GERALDINE MORGAN RETURNS.—This well-known violinist is back from a six weeks' European trip, visiting Joachim and the Mendelssohns in Berlin, also going to Switzerland. The Joseph Joachim Violin School will continue with enlarged scope, and the Morgan Quartet will also be heard.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantagesas a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

JEAN GERARDY
December, 1901, to May, 1902.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau,
131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

ALICE E. JOSEPH.
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.
Wagner Lecture Recitals.
VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS:
Miss Pauline Cramer.
Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.
Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York

THE BOWMANS RETURN.

MR. AND MRS. E. M. BOWMAN and Miss Bessie Bowman returned last Thursday to their home, 281 Sterling place, Brooklyn, from a two months' sojourn at their villa, Grand View, on Squirrel Island. On Saturday evening Mr. Bowman held a souvenir reunion rehearsal with the Temple Choir and Temple Orchestra, which was attended by about 200 members. The choir is entering on its seventh year—jubilee year—and the souvenir of the reunion on this occasion was a miniature photograph of the popular director affixed to a figure 7 cut from gray cardboard and bearing his autograph and a bar of music. The evening previous Mr. Bowman's branch choir, in the Central Baptist Church, Williamsburg, held a similar reunion. The season opens well for all these organizations. Mr. Bowman will resume his private instruction in piano, organ and theory at his Steinway Hall studio next week, and has a busy season before him. He returns to his work in first-class physical health and a complexion that gives evidence of sea breezes and the athletic sports of which he is fond. By courtesy of the Brooklyn Eagle we present a picture of Mr. and Mrs. Bowman's beautiful summer home on the south shore of Squirrel Island, 3 miles out to sea and about 40 miles east of Portland, on the popular and unrivaled coast of Maine. It faces south, overlooking the sea, and is situated on the highest point of the island, directly in front of a beautiful grove of spruce and fir trees. The magnificent panorama of islands and ocean spread out before it abundantly entitle the cottage to its name, Grand View, while its unique architecture, especially the interior, has attracted more admiration and favorable comment than almost any other cottage along that part of the Maine coast.

E. M. BOWMAN'S SUMMER HOME ON SQUIRREL ISLAND.

The ground plan, 60x40, was suggested by the great rock on which the cottage now stands. The central or living room is open up to the timber roof. A gallery runs quite around it, and onto this the sleeping rooms, on the second floor, open. The great fireplace is constructed of large, round stones, from the beach, which have been fashioned by ages of water action. These are set in red cement, and the effect is at once striking and artistic. Billiard room, tower, vestibule and dining room all open into the living room by wide openings hung with Japanese portières, and all these rooms open by doors or French windows onto the wide veranda, which encircles the house. Nearly sixty windows opening outward, in the French style, let in light and air, and give one the impression of living almost out of doors. It was the owners' idea that their summer home should be artistic in character, suited to its site and uses; and so the rock was allowed to suggest the ground plan, the beach stones fashioned the fireplace, and cedar posts, with the bark left on, support the roof of the veranda. The color scheme is soft gray, like a weatherbeaten shingle, with a rich brown tone for the tower and trim. The view from the tower is one of great beauty and grandeur. The hospitality of Professor and Mrs. Bowman and Miss Bessie Bowman has made Grand View Cottage a popular place on Squirrel Island. The whole house is virtually one big music room.

Much of the life and general prosperity of Squirrel Island is due to the Athletic Association and Yacht Club, which Mr. Bowman, with others, organized some years ago and of which he has been president each year. He was unanimously re-elected for the season of 1901-1902. Senator Wm. P. Frye, A. H. Davenport, of Boston, and Edward Stanwood, editor-in-chief of the Youth's Companion, are the vice-presidents; Alexander Doyle, of New York, and Robert Treat Whitehouse, of Portland, are secretary and treasurer respectively. The island sports culminate in a fête week during August, in which the finals in golf, tennis, ball, yacht races, field and water sports are pulled off with accompaniments of boat parades, fireworks and illuminations.

MRS. ALVES.—Mrs. Carl Alves has returned from Europe, and will resume her lessons in voice culture, Monday, September 16 at her home studio, 1146 Park avenue, near Ninety-first street, New York city.

Mrs. Alves has had a delightful stay abroad, and returns to the city in the best of health and spirits.

SCHUBERT'S "ERLKING" AND THE CRITICS.

THE ballad of the "Erlking" was written by Goethe in 1781, as an air in the "liederspiel" which was given in 1782 in the "National Theatre of Tiefurth," as "Die Fischerin." It was sung by Dorothea, a character sustained by a lady celebrated in those days, Corona Schröter, who composed music for it, and therefore has the honor of being the first to set the ballad to music. Her music was published in 1786. Since that far off date some fifty-eight composers have attacked it, among them Beethoven, who (about 1805) wrote a sketch, the original of which is in the possession of the Society of Music Friends in Vienna, and which, worked over by Reinhold Becker, was published in 1887. Loewe, the well-known ballad composer, published a setting as his op. 1 in 1824. An English lady issued as her op. 12 "The Erlking," the words beginning thus (by W. Bartholomew):

"Who canters to-night through the storm and wind?
It is the father with his dear child."

If the lady's music is like the gentleman's words it must be a marvel. Another bold English composer named Alfred R. Gaul, took Walter Scott's translation for his text. In 1865 Josef Koch, of Vienna, composed is as a "Faschingschwank," as thus:

Basso (anxiously)—Wer reitet?
Tenor (astonished)—Reitet wer?
Basso—Wer reitet so spät?
Tenor— So spät reitet wer?

Schubert's world famous work was written at the end of 1815 or the beginning of 1816, and was sung publicly for the first time in Vienna, January 22, 1821, at a small music society's evening, by August Ritter von Gymnich. It was engraved in February of the same year and published at the cost of his friends as Op. 1, on April 2 of that year. In Paris there appeared, year unknown, "Le Roi des Aulnes," musique de François Chubert, the text beginning:

La bas sur l'etrier
Quel est ce cavalier?

In 1869 Edward Weber produced at Strassburg "Le Roi des Aulnes, opera comique, en un acte," which survived till 1885, although or because neither the libretto nor the music was published.

Schubert's music at once gave work to the critics. The Allegemeine Musikalishe Zeitung, of Leipsic, declared that everything that the king said was untrue, that to such melodies no child would die of terror in its father's arms. In the eighteenth number of the paper (May 2, 1821) appears the report from Vienna, "Goethe's 'Erlking,' by Schubert, sung by Herr Vogel, a piece full of fancy and feeling, had to be repeated." Seven years later the Berlin correspondent of the paper reports, "Franz Schubert's composition 'The Erlking,' which in the opinion of your critic is not equal to the setting by Reichardt or Zeiter, although abounding in modulation and bizarrerie, was sung by Herr Bader to a (Fertig and Kraftroll) piano accompaniment by the young Mendelssohn Bartholdy, whose comic opera, 'Don Quichotte,' was once given, ought now to be awakened from its lethargy." Mendelssohn may have inspired this criticism, as he was a pupil of Zeiter, and in 1831, in a letter to Frau Von Pereira, describes Reichardt as "still the best." H. W. Riehl, in the preface to his "Haasmusik," says: "Because Schu-

Frieda Siemens
THE EMINENT GERMAN PIANISTE.
American Tour October to April.
UNDER DIRECTION OF
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Carnegie Hall, New York.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

ELECTA GIFFORD
SOPRANO.
Dates Booking for Concert, Recital and Oratorio.
WEST:
CHARLES R. BAKER,
Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.
EAST:
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Manager,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK CITY.
Has the honor to announce the following distinguished Musical Artists:
LIZA DELHASE-WICKES,
The Brilliant Belgian Pianiste.
GERTRUDE VON BETZ,
Pianiste. (First Prize Leipzig Conservatory.)
ALFRED DONALDSON WICKES,
Violinist.
HENRIETTA WEBER,
Pianiste and Accompanist.
FLORENCE SAGE, Pianiste,
In Historical Recitals.
MINNE HUMPHRYES,
Soprano.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

If you love your children buy them a
"KINDER" Adjustable Foot Rest.
Don't be cruel and make them practice at the piano from one to four hours a day with their feet dangling in the air.
Send for Booklet. All first-class piano houses or
W. MARKS,
WITHOUT. 568 Jefferson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. WITH.

Frederic Mariner,
TECHNIC SPECIALIST,
Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,
— NOW —
Director of the Bangor Piano School,
BANGOR, ME.

bert has made out of Goethe's poem a dramatic declamatory concert phantasie, which, while of high musical value, is yet no setting of Goethe's 'Erlking,' why should not another write another setting in full sympathy with the simple, folksong ballad tone of Goethe's verses?" Riehl tried it himself, as he told Wilh. Tappert. Lobe, in his "Consonances and Dissonances" (1869), declares that a singing Erlking is impossible; a poet may describe spooks, but music cannot make them sensible to our ears. "Schubert, by the genius of that part of his composition in which he describes the ride through night and wind, and the feelings of the father and child, makes us overlook the total untruthfulness of the Erlking's song. Schubert's melody does not come from a mysterious appearance in a stormy night, but from a coaxing lover in some flowery arbor. To such sweet melody perhaps dies female virtue, not a child in its father's arms, from terror." This effusion appeared originally in the above named Leipsic paper in August, 1846, as a fragment of a romance.

The Cologne Musical Society in 1865 listened to three "Erlkings," by Bernhard Klein, Karl Loewe and Schubert. In an article to the Niederrheinische Musik Zeitung, Ludwig Bischoff points out that Goethe did not lay special emphasis on "rides," or "father," or "child," and hence could gradually strengthen the action up to the catastrophe, and thus augment the effect, while Schubert from the very first forebodes evil, and deprives himself of any heightening of effect by making the second line uttered with a high voice, as if it was surprising to meet a father riding home with his child at night. "We have never heard a singer," he adds, "who succeeded in giving this line as simple narration, the high G and F making it impossible."

Bischoff replies to those who object to the coaxing melodies by reminding them that the child speaks of the Erlking, making his promises in a low tone (leise), but adds that Schubert misses the threatening expression in the words, "so brouch' ich Gewalt."

Max Friedländer at a meeting of the Berlin Music Teachers' Society asserts, "Schubert's 'Erlking' has false scenery. In place of the cloudy and cold north, he lays his scene in a rich, southern landscape." The same writer in January, 1898, returned to the charge in a lecture in which he spoke of the "Thoroughly misconceived 'Erlking,'" which he describes as sinning by transferring the action to Italy, making the scenery a pine forest in an orange grove, and the time a warm August night, instead of a cold November night. A previous writer in 1874 finds no Italian color in Schubert's music, but rather a Northern fairy tale of gnomes, while he calls the increasing anguish of the child a masterpiece, the father unfeeling and the Erlking inconsistent.

Well, Schubert's "Erlking" is good enough for most of us, while the rest prefer Loewe's.

CHARLTON'S PITTSBURG BOOKINGS.—Manager Charlton announces the following bookings of his artists with the Mozart Club, Pittsburg: George Hamlin, the well-known tenor, for November, when Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" are the works to be given; Mme. Charlotte Maconda, the soprano, and Gregory Hast, the English tenor, for "The Messiah," in December, and Madame Webb-Gardner, the lyric soprano, for one of the early spring concerts.

The John Church Company's Music in England.

THE John Church Company's music has been used very extensively in England lately. Here is a partial list of composers whose songs have been sung there during the month of July, with date, places and names of singers:

Her Rose.....Gerrit Smith
Miss Marguerite Hall (2d).....Bechstein Hall

The Sweetest Flower.....C. B. Hawley
The Japs (2d).....Knightsbridge
Miss Pryce Crewe (2d).....Ilfracombe
The Japs (3d).....Henley
Miss Blanche Gordon (3d).....Regent's Park
Miss Evelyn Stuart (3d).....Leatherhead
The Japs (4th).....Henley
Miss Marguerite Saunders (4th).....Acton
Miss Pryce Crewe (4th).....Ilfracombe
Hugh Peyton (4th).....Belgrave square
The Japs (5th).....Henley
Miss M. Saunders (5th).....West End
Miss M. Saunders (6th).....Enfield
Tom Child (6th).....Roundhay, Leeds
The Japs (9th).....Carshalton
Miss Evelyn Stuart (10th).....Banstead
The Japs (11th).....Park lane
The Japs (11th).....Maidenhead
The Japs (15th).....Gravesend
Miss Moncrieff (15th).....Bognor Pavilion
The Japs (16th).....Fairford, Gloucester
Miss Moncrieff (16th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Edith Luke (16th).....Wisbech
The Japs (17th).....Esher
Miss Moncrieff (17th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Edith Luke (17th).....King's Lynn
Miss Edith Luke (18th).....Kensington
Miss Moncrieff (18th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (19th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (20th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (21st).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (22d).....Bognor Pavilion
Wilson Bamber (25th).....Ilfracombe
Mme. Marian McKenzie (29th).....Blackpool
The Japs (30th).....Ranelagh and Regent's Park

Eyes of Blue.....Oley Speaks
The Japs (2d).....Knightsbridge
The Japs (3d).....Henley
Miss Francine Dewhurst (3d).....Park lane
The Japs (4th).....Henley
The Japs (5th).....Henley
The Japs (9th).....Carshalton
The Japs (10th).....Ranelagh
The Japs (11th).....Regent's Park
Miss Dewhurst (11th).....Rutland gate
The Japs (11th).....Park lane
The Japs (11th).....Maidenhead
Percy Oakley (12th).....Margate
The Japs (15th).....Gravesend
Miss Moncrieff (15th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Dewhurst (16th).....Earl's Court
The Japs (16th).....Fairford, Gloucester
Miss Moncrieff (16th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (17th).....Bognor Pavilion
The Japs (17th).....Esher
Miss Moncrieff (18th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (19th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (20th).....Bornor Pavilion
Miss Dewhurst (20th).....Brighton
Miss Moncrieff (21st).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (22d).....Bognor Pavilion

All for You.....G. d'Hardelot
Miss Pryce Crewe (2d).....Ilfracombe
Miss Pryce Crewe (4th).....Ilfracombe
Miss Monica Stowe (4th).....Kensington
J. Lyon (6th).....Royal Music Hall
Percy Oakley (13th).....Margate
J. Lyon (16th).....Hotel Cecil
Miss J. McLeod (17th).....Bromesberrow place
Percy Oakley (25th).....Margate
Miss Grainger Kerr (28th).....Brighton
Miss Grainger Kerr (30th).....Kensington

It Was a Lover.....Reginald De Koven
Miss Dewhurst (2d).....Park lane
Miss Dewhurst (10th).....Rutland gate
Miss Dewhurst (16th).....Earl's Court
Miss Dewhurst (20th).....Brighton
Madame McKenzie (26th).....Blackpool

Where the Bee Sucks.....Reginald De Koven
Madame Esty (4th).....Devonshire place

The Lark Now Leaves.....Horatio Parker
Madame Esty (4th).....Devonshire place
Miss Frederika Taylor (23d).....Guilford

Polish Miniature.....Liebling
Herr Liebling (4th).....Portland place
Herr Liebling (10th).....Hotel Cecil

My Love Nell.....Fox
David Bispham (9th).....St. James' Hall
Gabriel Thorp (11th).....Cavendish place
Gabriel Thorp (11th).....Marlborough Rooms

Denny's Daughter.....Willeby
David Bispham (9th).....St. James' Hall

Molly's Eyes.....C. B. Hawley
Percy Oakley (12th).....Margate
Miss Moncrieff (15th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (16th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (17th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (18th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (19th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (20th).....Bognor Pavilion
Percy Oakley (20th).....Margate
Miss Moncrieff (21st).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (22d).....Bognor Pavilion

Sleep, Sleep.....C. B. Hawley
Miss Moncrieff (15th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (16th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (17th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (18th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (19th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (20th).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (21st).....Bognor Pavilion
Miss Moncrieff (22d).....Bognor Pavilion

Endymion.....Lehmann
Mme. Ruth Lamb (21st).....Eastbourne
When First I Saw Thee.....Lassen
Miss Taylor (23d).....Guilford
Necklace of Love.....Ethelbert Nevin
Madame McKenzie (26th).....Blackpool
Miss Grainger Kerr (28th).....Brighton
Miss Grainger Kerr (30th).....Kensington
O Mistress Mine.....Reginald DeKoven
Mme. Marion McKenzie (29th).....Blackpool

SINGER DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER.—Miss Annette Flannagan, a contralto singer, died last Sunday after a six weeks' illness from typhoid fever. The singer lived with her uncle, John Healy, at New Rochelle. She was solo contralto in the choir of St. Gabriel's Roman Catholic Church.

BERN. BOEKELMAN.—Bern. Boekelman will resume his teaching on October 1 at his residence, 53 West Ninety-second street. Mr. Boekelman's instruction days at this address are Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays of each week.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL.
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

McCALL LANHAM
BARITONE.
OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS.
Opera, Concerts and Oratorio.
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
Care AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUSIC,
212 West 59th Street, New York.

MR. FRANK MORSE
and Assisting Teachers.
Vocal Training for Soloists and Teachers.
30 and 32 Steinert Hall.
162 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

CAROLINE MABEN,
Teacher Piano, Harmony and Virgil Clavier.
Studio, 81 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER L. BOGERT,
Musical Lectures. Song Recitals, Conducting.
Instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint and Song Interpretation.
72 Lawrence St., Flushing, New York City

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 146 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CHARLES FRANK,
BASS-BARITONE.
Vocal Instruction.
Opera, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 226 East Sixty-ninth Street, New York.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN.
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC.

OF THE UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

"THE MUSIC OF PARSIFAL," BY JAMES HUNEKER.

MUSICAL COURIER

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 12. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1121.

JOHN C. WEBER

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL,

201 West 81st Street, New York.
LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS, concert pianist and teacher of piano and theory, director. Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. M. Virgil; certified teacher of the Virgil Clavier Method of Technic. Private and daily class instruction.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music, Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall,
New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH,

Virgil Method. Pupils in Piano and Harmony. Six years instructor at the Virgil Piano School. Pupil of Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. Classes in Sight Reading, Ear Training and Time Keeping. After October 1, Studio: 132-133 Carnegie Hall, city.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera
13 West 34th Street, New York

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
248 West 45th Street, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING.

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

Pianist.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method.
Studios: 1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

MRS. M. PRICE, Director, 2105 Seventh Ave., corner 125th Street. Special daily class. The only one in New York where the pupil has a lesson and practice every day under the care of competent teachers. Terms reasonable. Virgil Clavier used.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Illustrated Lectures on Music.
Piano instruction. Classes in music-study.
Residence-studio: 17 West 103d Street, New York.

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director.
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS.
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH.

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "New Method of Memorizing." 131 Fifth Ave., New York

DEM KÖNIGLICHEN FREUNDE!

O König, holder Schirmherr meines Lebens
Du höchster güte wonnereichster Hort!
* * * * * * * * *

Was du mir bist, Kann staunend ich nur fassen.
Wenn mir sich zeigt, was ohne dich ich war.
* * * * * * * * *

Du bist der holde Lenz, der neu mich schmückte, Der mir verjüngt der Zweig' und Aste Saft.

—RICHARD WAGNER.

"PARSIFAL" AND BAYREUTH.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

II.

THE MUSIC.

ONE is filled with admiration at Wagner's deft use of thematic material in the score of "Parsifal." Despite the exegetical squirming of Von Wolzogen, Heintz and Kufferath, a very few motives suffice the master for his polyphonic skill in development. And they are principally in the prelude—now unhappily a familiar concert room number. I say unhappily because no composer's music is less adapted to concert than Wagner's. Divorced from the context of gesture, speech, scenic display, his music becomes all profile. One misses the full, rich, significant glance of the eye. Wagner is a weaver, not a form-maker. He can follow a dramatic situation, or burrow deeply into the core of morbid psychology, but let him attempt to stand alone, to write absolute music, music without program or the fever of the footlights—then he is the inferior of several men, the inferior of Liszt, Tschaikowsky and Richard Strauss; not to mention Beethoven, Schubert or Chopin. I know that this opinion ill accords with the belief of many critics, yet I do not think it can be disputed. His preludes and overtures, containing as they do the leading motives of his dramas, are of interest only for that reason. As specimens of absolute music they are not noteworthy, notwithstanding the coloring and the grandiose themes. So is it with "Parsifal"—even more so. The work preeminently smells of the lamp. It lacks spontaneity. Its subject is extremely undramatic. Nothing happens for several hours, nothing but discourses, philosophical and retrospective. Never has Wagner so laboriously built a book. It is a farrago of odds and ends, the very dust-bin of his philosophies, beliefs, vegetarian, anti-vivisection and other fads. You see unfold before you a nightmare of characters and events. Without simplicity, without lucidity, without naturalness—Wagner is the great anti-naturalist among composers—this book, through which has been sieved Judaism, Buddhism, Christianity, Schopenhauer-ism, astounds one by its puerility, its vapidity, its blasphemy—the latter, of course, if you are a believer in the doctrines of Christ. Yet because of his musical genius, Wagner is able to float this inorganic medley, and at times makes it almost credible. It is an astounding feat of the old hypnotist—for hypnotist he is in "Parsifal" as in no other composition. By sheer force of his musical will, this Klingsor of Bayreuth hypnotizes his hearers with two or three themes not of themselves remarkable, as Charcot controls his patients with a shining mirror.

Nothing is more amusing than to read the stupidly profound French and German commentators on "Parsifal." Wagner always selected books that threw up a lot of dust for the erudite. His "Tristan" demands much delving, and with the "Ring" and its complementary literature we shall never finish. The plain fact in the case is this: "Parsifal," despite all its wealth of legend, its misty, poetic allusiveness, its manufactured mysticism, is just simple old-fashioned opera. And its verse quâ verse is very bad. The Wagnerites reject this as does the devil holy water. Supposing you enter the Wagner theatre your brain cells unencumbered with the memories of Perceval, Parzival, Parsifal, Fal-Parsi, and the rest of the philological flub-dub, what would you see?—and remember that the ideal drama should set forth without previous knowledge or explanation its dramatic content.

You would see an old-fashioned and very tedious opera—setting aside some of the music, and there is throughout an abuse of the tremolo that sounds suspiciously Italian. You would see a lot of women-hating men, deceiving themselves with spears, drugs, old goblets, all manners of juggling formulas, and yet being waited upon by a woman—a poor, miserable witch. You would see a fat and silly youth treated as if he had murdered a human being because he shot a swan—John Runciman swears that it is a stuffed duck. You would see this same dead duck borne away on a litter of twigs, to noble, impressive music like a feathered Siegfried. Surely Wagner was without a sense of the humorous; or was he parodying his own Death of Siegfried, as parodied Ibsen Ibsen in "A Wild Duck"? You would see a theatrically imposing temple, modeled after the Dome of Sienna, wherein a maniacal King raves over an impossible wound, and performs silly ceremonies, themselves a parody of the Roman Catholic communion service. In Act II. you will be transported to the familiar land of Christmas pantomime. There a bad magician seeks to destroy the castle of the noble knights, and evokes a beautiful phantom to serve his purpose. There are spells, incantations, blue lights, screaming that makes the blood run cold, and the whole bagful of tricks that Weber, Marschner and even Mozart delighted in. Follows fast the magic garden, and the sirens with rose petals on head. The fat boy still eludes temptation. Even the beautiful witch cannot lure him. All is fairy play, pantomimic transformations, castles that crumble, thunder-riven gardens and the whizzing of a malignant lance. Even that old Gounod ruse, the sign of the cross, is employed, and with overpowering effect. Now what possesses a generation which knows Darwin, has read Herbert Spencer and can follow with delight the unerring logic of events that unroll themselves in the Ibsen plays—what possesses this generation of ours to sit enthralled by all this rubbish?

The third act is but a faint replica of the first—without its vigor or novelty. Here the librettist is in sore straits. So he lugs in Magdalen washing the feet of Parsifal—Christ—which would be revolting were it not offensively puerile. We again see the scenery acting, pantomimic scenery, and once more we are transported to the Hall of the Holy Grail, where the music of Allegri, Palestrina and Vittoria is marvelously mimicked. Wagner not being an original music-maker always borrowed, borrowed even from Wagner—and his borrowings are often greater than the originals. In a beatific blaze of glory—after Parsifal has healed the King—this sacred pantomime ends, and the spectator, drugged by the music, confused by the bells, chanting the tortuous story, and his eyes intoxicated by feasts of color, staggers away believing that he has witnessed a great work of art. So he has—the art of debauch in color, tone and gesture. "The highest perfection of an art," says Ehlert, "is not always and necessarily the greatest massing together of forces. It depends upon entirely different conditions. The flower of an art arises only when a positively artistic individuality creates that particular work for which it possesses the most marked and exclusive vocation." Now Wagner heaps up one art, one idea upon another. He little cared for the dramatic proprieties or the feelings of his audience when he composed Kundry, a ridiculous hag, an Astarte, a Herodias, a Meg Merrilies and a Mary Magdalen in one. She is Azucena when she reveals to Parsifal his parentage—perhaps Wagner had heard of "Il Trovatore"!—and she becomes a Potiphar's wife with this effeminate, man-loving lad. She is of the opera operatic. And Klingsor—is he a creation, this savage old eunuch who sings bass—is it not remarkable that Wagner, so realistic in matters of this sort, should have made such a woeful physiological slip?—this hater of men and women—why he is nothing else but any giant or any enchanter in any fairy tale! Parsifal, when he is not Christ in white baptismal robes, is a peculiarly foolish bore. Without Siegfried's buoyancy Wagner tried hard to dower him with Siegfried's youth. But he is only an emasculate Siegfried. The corpse of Titurel is a horrible idea—yet it fits in this Bogie-man's play. Wagner, after all, was the creature of his century, an incurable Romantic, with all the love of the Romantics for knights, mediæval mysteries, maidens in distress—in this case a callow boy—magicians and dead men who tell tales. Amfortas is more complicated. I shall reserve him for later discussion. The flower-girl episode, which looks so well on paper, always falls flat in the performance. You can't find so many pretty girls in Germany who are at once slender and singers. The scenery, too, never comes up to one's realization, and as usual Wagner oversteps the mark by surrounding his capon-hero with too many women. The duo with Kundry is much more effective. The eye and the ear can grasp the situation—a stirringly dramatic one, despite the morbid imagination of the poet who could in his search for voluptuous depravity mingle a mother's with a courtesan's kiss. Here Paris itself is surpassed in the piquant and decadent. By the magic of his mother's name, Kundry evokes a maudlin filial passion, and with his mother's name on her lips she kisses the youth into the first consciousness of his virility—or a semblance of it, for at no time is Parsifal a full-blooded young man. His act of renunciation denies life. Its purity is doubtful—as we shall see later on.

Again I ask, What is the lure that gathers multitudes to witness this most nonsensical, immoral of operas? The answer is, The music, always the music. Not Wagner at the flood-tide of his musical passion, not the composer of "Tristan and Isolde" or the "Ring" or "Die Meistersinger," yet an aged wizard who had retained his old arts of enchantment, and so great are they that at times he not only makes one forget his book, but even the poverty of his themes—"Parsifal" is not musically original; rather is it an extraordinary synthesis of styles, an unique specimen of the arts of combination adaptation and lofty architectonics. Let us glance at the score—one made familiar to New York by Seidl and the Oratorio Society.

Never has Wagner been so bald in his exposition as in the prelude. But its simplicity is deceptive. The Love theme—in A flat, by Von Wolzogen named the Love Feast motive—the Graal Hope theme, the Dresden Amen, and the Faith theme—these and a subsidiary theme, the Saviour's Lament, about comprise this overture. And the figure of the Saviour's agony contains a few of the most poignant bars Wagner ever penned. This short episode is infinitely more sincere than the Faith motive—"What expression would a man like Wagner find for such an experience?" asks Ehlert. The Speech of Promise, i. e., the prediction "Durch Mitleid wissend," is charmingly prophetic, but the first section of Act I. drags both dramatically and musically. I am never disappointed in the Kundry music, for I have long known it in Liszt's B minor Sonata. There is much Liszt in this score. The trick of the twice repeated modulation into the upper diminished third, as in the case of the Faith theme, is an old Liszt-ian device. Kundry's chief motive is to be found in the B minor Sonata. It is not very characteristic, nor is the evocation of Arabia. Kundry enters on Valkyrie-pinions, and the best thing she does is her shuddering screech—that same yelp of distress so cleverly utilized by Massenet in "Le Cid." Wagner draw heavily upon the second act of "Die Walküre." Indeed "Parsifal" is full of Wagner quotations. "Lohengrin," "Tristan and Isolde," "Die Meistersinger"—there is much in Gurnemanz's bars—and even "Götterdämmerung"—the Rhine daughters music, heard in the garden scene. Amfortas' suffering motive is not very convincing, nor are we impressed by the Forest Murmur with its canonic appoggiaturas. Ever this essential turn! As in the Good Friday magic spell the composer echoes "Siegfried" and "Die Meistersinger"—the first fine careless rapture of his wood-music he never recaptured. And this is quite natural. An old man, Wagner had reached the end of his ammunition. Many blank cartridges are fired in "Parsifal." The Sorcery motive with its Chopin-like chromaticism has meaning; but I confess I do not care for Parsifal's motive, beautifully as it is developed. It lacks the bold, lusty, clean-cut vigor of his young Siegfried's horn call. Wagner musically was always true to himself. He unconsciously divined the effeminacy of Parsifal's nature, and his music is a truer psychological barometer than all the learned pundits who write reams about the purity of "Parsifal." Kundry's Service theme—in "helpful" thirds—is by no means so exquisitely musical as the Mitleid motive in "Die Walküre." And what could be more blasphemously absurd than the use of the Saviour's Lament motive as the dead swan is reverently carried away—that is if all this simulacrum of a drama, this make-believe religion, means anything at all! The Herzeleide motive is lovely music, especially when it is thrown into high relief during the next act by Kundry's blandishments. The fleeting appearance of the Lohengrin Swan motive is a very happy idea, but when, oh when, did "Der Reiner Thor" Parsifal forget Amfortas and beget Lohengrin?

We have now reached the last part of the first act with its astounding Glockenthema, its laments of Amfortas—here the accents of woe are genuine—and the magnificent tonal panorama of boys' voices, bells, choral music. Here, not without reverence, the composer has successfully emulated the service of Rome. The tripartite choral divisions recall both Goethe's "Faust" and the spherical order of voices, and the antiphonal choirs of mediæval cathedrals. The effect is indescribable, especially when the pure, sexless boys' voices are heard à capella. The consummation of this mystical ecstasy is reached when the Grail vase is slowly waved aloft. One realizes that Wagner's genius, which so often gravitates pendulum-wise between the sublime and the ridiculous, here approaches the former.

Act II. in which the ruling key seems to be B minor—as A flat predominates the preceding act—naturally introduces fewer new motives. The Klingsor theme, first heard in Gurnemanz's slightly tedious recital, and Kundry theme are most in evidence in the stormy prelude. To be quite frank I always find the flower girls music banal. The Caress valse is common, and only Wagner's polyphonic skill lends the music some dignity. The evocation of Kundry by Klingsor in the opening scene is full of demoniacal grandeur. Wagner is nothing if not operatic, and here he shows that his old Weber skin has not been completely shed. Kundry's galloping motive, also employed for "Parsifal," is the familiar Valkyrie figure modified. I heard the Erl-King storm through several bars, and the triplet figuration of the Flower Girls is from a trio in one of Schumann's symphonies—the B flat, if I remember aright.

The crowning scene of this act, one is tempted to say of the entire work—for Wagner spreads his butter thin over a wide surface—is the duo of Parsifal and Kundry. Herein the entire gamut of passion, maternal, exquisite, voluptuous, is traversed by a master hand. And never has Wagner's touch been so sure. I find a reserve in all this ardor which perhaps indicates the cooling of the blood. Intellectually nothing could be more complete than this delineation, morbid and morose as it occasionally is. In a dramatic sense it saves the opera. We hear the Parsifal, the Herzeleide motives—and a supplementary Herzeleide theme. The outburst of Parsifal after the kiss with its memories of Amfortas' suffering is wonderful. The Saviour's theme, Kundry's yearning theme and Self-Abandonment motive, are all made up of familiar material. Here the spinning of the web into something strange and touching is the principal virtue, not the themes themselves. Klingsor's sudden appearance and the hurled lance which is carried out in the score by harps glissandi through two octaves, the mourning cries of the pretty girls and Parsifal's final words—all these kaleidoscopic effects impress one considerably; action is paramount. Parsifal's music in "Es startt der Blick dumpff auf das Heil'sgefäss" may arouse the indignation of the purist with its direct succession of the G flat major and D minor triads, page 187 of the vocal score; but to modern ears his scheme of harmonization is as normal as the book is abnormal. In a Wagner opera, or if you will, a music-drama, everything must be accepted, dissonantal harmonies as well. This composer follows every curve of his poem, and when a situation demands jarring ugliness he freely offers it. Who to-day shall say what is or what is not ugly music?

The music of the last act presents little novel thematic material. In the gloomy prelude we find epitomized the wandering of Parsifal in search of the Grail domain, in conjunction with the funeral music of Titurel. Again the static and contemplative forms a contrast to the rapid action of the preceding scene. The very pauses seem pregnant with music. One is reminded of Uhland's "Die Verlorne Kirche":

A wind adown the forest blows,
A sound of sweet bells lighty ringing,
Yet whence it cometh no man knows,
Nor what the message they are bringing.

It is in this scene, with its sun smitten meadows, its worshipping knight and mournful penitent, that I agree with those commentators who perceive the profound influence exerted upon Wagner by early German and Flemish religious pictorial art. Parsifal's attitudes here would suit a Gothic triptych—as M. Charles Tardieu so happily expresses it. There is little movement, all gesture has been transferred to the orchestra, and the spectator seems to be participating in one of those miracle plays or viewing the stiff pictures of a Cimabue or a wood cut after Dürer. The moving forest and the final scene lose because of repetition. But what was the poet to do? Only in Act II. does he escape the lack of variety. For instance, in Act I. Parsifal stands for a long time immobile, with his back to the audience, while Kundry, in the last act, utters but two words. She is a pantomimic lay figure kept on the stage to emphasize the resemblance between Jesus and Parsifal. And the feet washing episode is dragged in by the hair—if I may indulge in a Celtic bull. It does not help the story. Nowhere but in Germany would all this mish-mash of gospel narrative, mediæval romance and Teutonic philosophy be tolerated. Yet the Wagnerites sit through it all as if listening to a new evangel of art, philosophy and religion. Perhaps they are. In America, where new religions sprout daily as do potatoes in a dark cellar, slighter causes have led to the foundation of a religion—witness the rise and growth of Mormonism. If religion, revealed and otherwise, ever becomes moribund, perhaps in Wagner's "Parsifal" will be found the crystallation of many old faiths, presented in a concrete, though Wagnerized, form. "I know of but one thing more beautiful than 'Parsifal,'" wrote Alfred Ernest, and approvingly quoted by M. Kufferath, "and that is any low mass in any church." And in this sentence the French author puts his finger on the weak spot of "Parsifal"—its lack of absolute sincerity. No matter how great an art work it may be, it yet lacks the truthful note that is to be found at any low mass in a Roman Catholic church—about the most unadorned service I can remember. With all its grandeur, its pathos, its conjuring of churchly and philosophical motives, its ravishing pictures and marmoreal attitudes, "Parsifal" falls short of the one thing—faith, a faith you may find in any roadside Bavarian cabin. We have seen that it is weakest musically in the Faith motive of the prelude, and ethically it suffers from the same sterility. All the scholarly efforts to make the work a significant, ethical, philosophical and artistic message are futile. "Parsifal," even if it will "enjoy a small immortality," must remain an opera, a cunning spectacle devised by a man of genius in the twilight of his powers. It is Wagner's own Götterdämmerung, the sunset music of his singular career.

III.

THE ESOTERIC MEANINGS OF "PARSIFAL."

But if this "Parsifal" music lacks the virile glow and imaginative power of his earlier music it is none the less fascinating. Over all hovers, like the dove in the temple, a rich mellowness, a soothing quality that is the reverse of his stormy, disquieting, youthful art. It really seems as if Pity, pity for the tragedy of existence, for the misery of all animated beings, had filled parts of the score with a soothing balm. The muted pauses, the golden stream of tone, and the almost miraculous musicianship, fill the listener with awe. Never before has Wagner's technical mastery come to such a triumphant blossoming. And the partition is covered with miniatures that excite admiration both for their workmanship and their musical meanings. It was Nietzsche who first called critical attention to the liliputian delicacy of Wagner's music. A fresco painter, he yet finds time to execute the most minute and tender jewel-like bits, that are lost sight and sound of at the first hearing. Never has Wagner's instrumentation been so smoothly sonorous, so well mixed, so synthetic. It recalls richly embroidered altar cloths or Gobelin tapestry. Weaving similes force themselves upon the hearer when describing this marvelous and modern polyphonic art. But how tell of the surge and undertow of his melting, symphonious narrative! It flashes with all the tints of a Veronese, of a Makart, and then appear in processional solemnity the great flat spaces and still figures of some mediæval, low-toned, distemper painter. Painting and weaving—always these two arts! And there is not the same passionate excess in decoration, the same tropical splendor, we find in the earlier Wagner. Venus wooes Tannhäuser in more heated accents than does Kundry the "stuffed Christ"—as George Moore calls Parsifal. But Kundry's quiver of temptations is more subtle, more decadent. She plays with mother love and modulates it with deadly skill into the burning passion of a depraved woman—the depraved woman of art!

It now behooves us to boldly ask a question. What is the nature of the Pity which impels Parsifal to deny his manhood and rescue Amfortas? At first this act seems identical with the voluntary expiation on Calvary of the Saviour. Wagner endeavored to make it such. But is it divine pity, or abnormal? It must not be forgotten that "Parsifal" was, if not exactly inspired by, at least written for Ludwig of Bavaria—emulation as it also was of the Ober-Ammergau Passion Play. We all know the peculiar life of this unhappy monarch. An unfortunate love affair made him a misogynist, and he soon became a pathological case—the kind one may read of in Kraft-Ebbing, Raffolovitch and Havelock Ellis. He selected as his companions men with sonorous voices, just as did Frederick the Great giants for his bodyguard. Wagner, artistically speaking, was a sonorous man. He made the most sonorous music the world has yet heard. Ludwig loved him—recall their love letters. Also do not forget the idiosyncrasies of the older Wagner, the extravagant female attire he donned when composing "Parsifal," and the famous litigation with Adéle, dressmaker, of Vienna. If Ludwig longed for an ideal friendship—and that is all it ever was—Wagner, too, was ripe for such a psychical experience. Read the poem he addressed to Ludwig, which I reprint to-day. Besides, he needed money, encouragement, badly. So it is not difficult to conceive of him playing up to every romantic extravagance of the young king—"le seul vrai roi de ce siècle," as Paul Verlaine poetically called the monarch, whose madness would have admirably matched his own. Public opinion in Munich exiled the composer from that city, for he was charged with corrupting the king and having designs on the municipal treasury. This latter is credible. Wagner was desperate for the want of money, and Bayreuth loomed up in his vision, a beautiful, hopeless dream.

It is easy to see then how the musician came to shape "Parsifal" so as to flatter the king's abnormalities. Wagner after a life peculiarly unbridled—I refer to his real history; not to the cooked-up lives of his panegyrists—fell in love as did Tolstoy with the doctrines of Pity, of Renunciation. It is the usual ending of men who sin no more because they cannot, and perforce become saints. But Tolstoy's later life is without the abnormal motive which resounds through Wagner's. Nietzsche knew all this and refers to it in a veiled manner in his "Wagner Case." He calls Wagner a Socrates who would corrupt the youth of any modern Athens—Bayreuth or Paris, London or New York. It was the true cause of the rupture between the two men, for Nietzsche—himself a spiritual psychopath—had a horror of homo-sexualism, even in its most intellectual and artistic aspects. And "Parsifal" is nothing else but a magnificent glorification of homo-sexuality. Dr. Oskar Panizza in 1895 set all this down in the pages of Gesellschaft, a Münich review now edited by Dr. Arthur Seidl. He considered, in an article entitled "Bayreuth and Homo-Sexuality," Wagner's relations with Ludwig and the persistent degradation of the feminine idea in the drama. Kundry's love ruins Amfortas, Kundry's love would ruin Parsifal, but for the pity he felt toward Amfortas. Gurnemanz's words should be quoted: "ihm hilft nur eines—nur der Eine," "but one man." What is this help? Is it not the pity and the love of a young man for an old man wounded by a woman's love? Surely the parable is not difficult of comprehension!

The ancient fathers, zealous monks and anchorites of the early Christian church did not hold women lower than does Wagner in "Parsifal." In his other dramas it is feminine love, it is Goethe's "eternal womanly," that draws his heroes upward to a higher life. Here it is the denial of the very principle of life, the denial of the Will to Live—for love is the chiefest affirmation of that Will—that the old dramatist preaches. His days were drawing to a close. Life no longer seemed desirable. Love is a curse—though certain manifestations of it may be permitted. The case is simply this—Ludwig was the Parsifal who came to the rescue of Amfortas-Wagner. It must not be forgotten that Wagner put himself in every one of his operas from "The Flying Dutchman" to "Parsifal." He is Tannhäuser, he is Lohengrin and Tristan—several women remembered all their life long his Tristan days!—and the autobiographical details of Walther in "Die Meistersinger" are known to every student. So in the course of time, when his own decadence asserted itself, he symphonized the Parsiphallic episodes of his exalted friendship with Ludwig II. of Bavaria. Read in this new light much that is dark and dubious in the poem becomes clear. Parsifal is a personal document. St. Paul, Origen, Gregory, Basil and Augustine would have sympathized with the debasement of Kundry as an unclean animal only fit to serve the homo-sexually chaste knights of the Grail. It is quite natural for Houston Chamberlain to tell us that Wagner but preached a cardinal doctrine of the Christian church—chastity. He is a special pleader for Wahnfried. But Christianity, modern Christianity, is clean, not morbid-minded. It exalts the family, the reverse of the Pauline misogynists. So Parsifal's renunciation, unless it be viewed as an expression of personal taste, is hardly to be construed into a virtuous action.

The institution of chivalry, like all earthly orders, degenerated in the course of time. Readers of Lecky and Hallam and Buckle may remember that the pope had to suppress the Knights Templar for certain practices. Several of their Grand Masters were burned at the stake, one of them in London. All these Grail-worshipping, women-hating knights were homo-sexualists; so Wagner happily places the scene of his play on Montsalvat—the Mountain of Salvation. That is, salvation from women. As students of symbolism well know, the "black stone" of the Grail, supposed to be of celestial origin, was a phallic symbol, as were the lance and the cross. The lance plays an important part, and justly so, in "Parsifal." "Parsifal" is a highly idealized expression of this symbolism. It was written for Ludwig II., and it sets forth in terms of mystic exaltation the precious love of comrades and the detestable sin of loving a woman. It is this denial of nature—a theme obsessing much latterday art and literature—that caused the French poet Alfred de Vigny to write lines that prophesy the ultimate consequences of universal egotism—such as is the celebration of sexless virtue in "Parsifal":

Bientôt, se retirant dans un hideux royaume,
La femme aura Gomorrhe et l'homme aura Sodome;
Et, se jetant de loin un regard irrité,
Les deux sexes mourront chacun de leur côté.

IV.

THE PERFORMANCE.

The performance, the last of the Bayreuth season of 1901, occurred Tuesday afternoon, August 20. The first signal sounded by brass instruments at 4 o'clock was the A flat theme of the Love-Feast; the second at 6:30 was Parsifal's motive, and the third at 8:30 was the Redemption motive. Dr. Karl Muck, of Berlin—who does not look unlike a thin youthful Seidl—conducted the work, bringing the first act to a close at 5:53, the second at 7:35, the third at 9:35—almost Anton Seidl's tempi. But Dr. Muck, who is a cerebral conductor, does possess neither the magnetism nor the authority of Seidl. He seemed to avoid weighty emotional climaxes, and in spots he was decidedly tame. His big orchestra was by no means letter perfect. Slips were frequent, false entrances were not unusual, and the reed choir indulged in doubtful intonation. All this surprised me exceedingly. But my surprise modulated presently into open-eyed astonishment when the stage management showed its practiced hand. Things happened that afternoon and evening for which there was no excuse—and accidents are sometimes excusable. I missed seeing Siegfried Wagner's face when a segment of the stage refused to properly close in the magic garden scene. The flower girls skated skittishly about the chasm, endeavoring to hide it from view. But there it was, an ugly black hole at the bottom of Klingsor's terrace, and a vivid commentary on the way the stage is handled in the impeccable Wagner theatre. I suppose some fanatics assert that Cosima Wagner intended this—for every crack and seam of this stage is symbolical! Then by the same token the rude noises and voices of the stage carpenters must have had hieratic significance also. We distinctly heard them. Things have changed with a vengeance here since 1896.

The singing was mediocre. Van Dyck is a rontineer, and while his enunciation was clear he is too mature in figure to perfectly simulate Parsifal. I need not allude to his voice and its production. Many here assert that his is Wagner singing. Hans Schütz was an excellent Amfortas. He carried off his two scenes in Acts I. and III. with much credit. Paul Knüpfer, the Gurnemanz, was capable in the first act, in the last he became hoarse. His part is an ungrateful one—the long speeches in the first scene are very trying, despite the infinite variety of the orchestral commentary and the eloquent interludes. Robert Blass, of New York, was a capital Titurel—oh! why is that hoary corpse exposed in the last act? The Klingsor of Berger was sufficiently brutal, though far from being subtle. Marie Wittich, the Kundry, gave pleasure to many, for she is a buxom woman who sings very much like a German singer. Need I say more? Wittich is, I believe, from Dresden, and is said to be a strong Sieglinde. The esquires were only fair—fancy the heavy-jowled Hans Breur as a Grail squire!—and the flower girls not very graceful. The difficult choral singing was moderately successful, better in the first than in the last acts. The music allotted to the knights is decidedly commonplace, and their partaking of the sacramental blood becomes dangerously realistic. One cannot be a German and a beer drinker with impunity. The costumes were pretty, though the tinpots on the heads of the community were a blot on the scene. And that kiss of peace, is it not as Teutonic as the continual allusion to "Mutter!" in the score! Wagner, too, had his sentimental moments!

"Parsifal" will long remain a rare and stimulating artistic spectacle to those for whom religious feeling must be dramatized to be endurable. For such the stern simplicities of doctrinal truths have no attraction. Wagner, luxuriously Byzantine in his faiths, appreciated the correlation of erotic and religious emotions. So he erected a lordly pleasure drama in which the mystically inclined, the admirer of theatrical pomps and the esoteric worshiper could all find solace, amusement and consolation. Yet Parsifal's pale virtue can never stir us to higher issues, as do the heroic sacrifices of Tannhäuser or Senta. Parsifal is the predestinated one, predestined to save the life of the King. Lacking freedom of will, he is not a human being that provokes our sympathy—but why demand logic, even dramatic logic, of Wagner? He was first a musician, then a poet and a philosopher; and in the last of these three was least. "Parsifal" is his final offering to the world. It is the work of a man who had outlived his genius. Let us accept it as such.

J. H.

BAYREUTH, August 25.

ZELDENRUST.

OSTEND, September 3, 1901.

THE Dutch piano virtuoso, Eduard Zeldenrust, has been playing with his usual successful results at Scheveningen, the Holland summer resort which is known as particularly frequented by an artistic set from all parts of Europe. He recently was "commanded" to play before the Princess Stephanie, daughter of the King of the Belgians, formerly the widow of the Crown Prince Rudolf of Austria and now a Belgian countess, who presented him subsequently with a cigar case embellished with the regal insignia and monogram in gold. The princess is a gifted amateur musician herself, and arranged an ultra classical program, in which Zeldenrust exhibited some of his special qualities as an interpreter of the choicest piano works.

Zeldenrust leaves for America on October 17 on the steamship Potsdam, via Boulogne, and is due in New York about October 27. He will travel with Baron Gevers, the Holland Ambassador to the United States, and will be his guest in Washington. A special soirée will be given in his honor in that city under the auspices of the Ambassador.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor of the Leipsic Gewandhaus Orchestra and the orchestra of the Berlin Philharmonic Society, is stopping here with his family. Mr. Zeldenrust and Mr. Nikisch were on the strand here together on Sunday, listening to the sounds of the sea.

The Kursaal concerts are attended by immense audiences, and as the season is one of the flourishing sort that periodically strikes Ostend, the audiences are even larger than ever.

THEODORE HABELMANN.—Herr Theodore Habelmann, who it was announced would be in this country during the winter season, arrived on the Barbarossa from Bremen, September 4, and proceeded the next day to the rooms of the American School of Opera, where he is to take charge of the department of grand opera, and with whose quarters he expressed himself as highly pleased. He will be busy up to the 15th of the month trying voices, and arranging with William G. Stewart, the director of the school, plans for the coming season. The other members of the faculty are as follows: Maurice Hageman, director of light opera; Madame Saracco, instructor in stage dancing and pantomime; Louis Senac, fencing master and assistants.

KATHARINE FISK.—Mme. Katharine Fisk, the distinguished contralto, after a delightful summer at Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, is at Norwalk, Conn., for a few weeks before returning to her winter apartments in the Hotel Netherland, New York city. Manager Charlton announces a long and active season for Madame Fisk, beginning with recital engagements in the South and East, a date with the Chromatic Club, of Troy, N. Y., to be followed by a transcontinental recital tour, which will extend into the early spring.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

The seventeenth scholastic year begins September 3 and ends May 1. Annual entrance examinations: Piano and Organ—Sept. 17, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and All Other Orchestral Instruments—September 18, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Singing—September 19, from 10 A. M. to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M. and 8 to 10 P. M. Children's Day—September 21, Piano and Violin—10 A. M. to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

August Hauser has been selected as the conductor of ie New Symphony Orchestra in Vienna. He has secured ie violin virtuoso Michael Drucker as his concertmaster.

Notwithstanding all reports to the contrary there ex- ts no misunderstanding between the management of the erlin Opera and Mme. Schumann-Heink in reference to er American engagement.

Our contemporary, the Signale, of Leipsic, has again mourn the loss of an editor. After the death of its under, Bartholf Senff, in 1900, the composer Richard lemmichel assumed the editorial chair, and since his la- ented death on August 21 Max Steuer will provisionally ssume the direction.

The directors of the Kurhaus at Scheveningen, in Hol- nd, are negotiating for the purchase of a site for a the- re in the style of Bayreuth, in which will be given model epresentations of Wagner operas. Bayreuth, Munich, cheveningen; now Newport wake up, or Coney Island ill get the start of you!

Hamburg next season will have a "spoken opera," amed "Pictures of the North Sea," music by Theodore erlach. It is a drama in which the words and action e underlined by music and song; that is, it is a piece ith incidental music highly developed. The same com- oser published "Spoken Lieder," which had no success, nd the world wonders what will be the fate of "spoken pera."

The lyric and dramatic artists of Rome, desirous to elebrate the centenary of the death of Cimarosa, the com- oser of the still popular "Matrimonio Segreto," offer a rize of 1,000 francs for an "opera giacosa," and 500 francs r the best libretto independent of the value of the music. ll works to be sent in before June 30, 1902.

D'Annunzio's new drama, "Francesca da Rimini," has important musical part which will be confided to the mposer Antonio Scontrino, and comprises an overture, ur intermezzi and four choruses of some development.

The Paris municipality has signed a contract with guer Leoncavallo, the brother of the composer, ceding him the site of the old Cirque des Champs Elysées, in hich he purposes to erect a lyric theatre essentia ly in- rnational, whatever that may mean.

Martha Remmert, the piano virtuosa, has left Berlin and me to Gotha, where she will establish an academy for gher piano playing.

Lamentations are heard at Berlin that the Summer pera has not kept its promise to produce Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord." The opera, a writer in the Signale re- inds us, is a revision, to please the taste of Paris, of his Camp of Siberia," which has unfortunately vanished from e Berlin stage, where it figured for years on all gala or festival performances. It is the only German opera of Meyerbeer, and is full of charm; moreover, it would be in- teresting to compare it with the Frenchified piece, which a distinguished English visitor to Paris refused to see as he labored under the impression that the scene was laid in the Hotel du Nord.

Carl Goldmark has given the last touches to his opera, "Götz von Berlichingen," which will be produced in Vienna next February. The Kaiserstadt will also enjoy two new ballets, one a Spanish piece, composed by Frl. Irene Sironi, the solo dancer of the court opera, music by Joseph Boyer, Jr.; the other, name as yet unknown, has its music setting by Zemlinsky, the composer of the fairy tale opera, "Once On a Time." The Young Vienna Theatre will open about the middle of November. A new poem by Otto Julius Bierbaum, "Die Tanzhexe," music by Thuille, has been accepted and will be given for the first time at the Young Vienna Theatre.

"Maria Dulcis" is the name of a new three-act opera, the first work of the Roman composer Bustins. The scene is laid in Rome; the personages are artists and models, and the action begins merrily but ends tragically.

There is great trouble in theatrical circles in Paris. A history of the Conservatory has just been published, from the year 1809 to the present time. It is very interesting and beautifully gotten up. Unfortunately in giving the names of the pupils who gained prizes the compiler gave the birthdays of the ladies. Hence many a rising star is wringing her hands, especially as the author has given to the great artists, the "fruits secs" as their less favored sisters style them, the privilege of remaining sweet nine- teen for a dozen years.

The Manskopf Museum, of Frankfort, has acquired a portrait of the Italian singer Saporita, the first Donna Anna in the first performance of "Don Juan" at Prague, October 29, 1787. This lady died in Milan, March 17, 1869, at the age of 106. She was born 1763, seven years after Mozart, and was twenty-four when she appeared as Donna Anna.

Elsa Marshall in New York.

MISS ELSA MARSHALL, one of the accomplished singers from the West, passed most of her summer in the East, singing with pronounced success both in Boston and New York churches, and at several resorts. During the month of August Miss Marshall substituted for the solo soprano at the First Church of Christ (Scientist) in Boston, this being the Mother Church established by Mrs. Eddy herself. The congregation attending this church is remarkable for the number of wealthy, cultured and influential people, and from many of these Miss Marshall received congratulations upon her artistic sing- ing. Her reception in Boston was most cordial and doubtless should she return there again she will find that the people remember her beautiful voice.

Miss Marshall gave a recital at the Hotel Pemberton, Hull, Mass., which attracted a large audience. Her pro- gram included groups of song of different schools. Par- ticular comment was made of her fine singing in Mas- senet's "Elegie" and Weil's "Spring Song," for which violin obligatos were played by Fiedler, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Marshall sang also at a re- cital at Rock Island, the summer home of a number of leading Massachusetts families. Last Sunday Miss Mar- shall sang at the First Church of Christ (Scientist), on West Forty-eighth street. Her solo number, "The Earth is the Lord's," by Schnecker, aroused the appreciative people who heard her to speak of the charm, distinction and individuality of the singer's style. Miss Marshall is a young woman of handsome address and evidently a singer who thinks.

SINSHEIMER.—Bernard Sinsheimer, the well-known violinist, has returned to New York from an extended vacation in Europe.

Musical Clubs.

The Birmingham (Ala.) Choral Society, organized last June, has a subscribing membership of 200.

Last month the Beethoven Maennerchor, of Bethlehem, Pa., celebrated the tenth anniversary of the society.

Miss Louise Melink, of Bedford avenue, Evansville, Ind., entertained at her home recently the members of the Petite Musical Club of the town.

The Arion Singing Society, of Brooklyn, passed several days very pleasantly at Buffalo and Niagara in the early part of September.

Edward Taylor, a popular Western musician, will re- sume the directorship of the Monday Choral Club, of La Crosse, Wis., for the second year.

The other three concerts in the jubilee course will be given at the Pabst Theatre and will consist of a part song concert on February 6, and two regular concerts on the evenings of April 10 and 11, 1902.

The United German singing societies of New England held their fifth annual Saengerfest at Manchester, N. H., early this month, under the auspices of the Manchester German Glee Club, the Maennerchor and the Beethoven Maennerchor societies.

Handel's "Messiah" was sung September 1 at the Cliff Haven (N. Y.) Auditorium by the Champlain Choral Union. The soloists were Miss Bertha Clary, of New York; Miss Margaret Brenan Heffernan, of Schenectady; Edward Le Bell and Ellsworth Duquett.

By the end of this month the secretaries of the majority of musical clubs will issue the expected announcement to members regarding the rehearsals. From all over the coun- try we read of proposed activities for this season. Par- ticularly the choral societies promise to be busy.

The Old Stoughton, Mass., Musical Society, which is the oldest musical organization in the United States, having been in active continuous existence since November, 1786, held its annual outdoor singing meeting at Highland Park last month. Many very old people united in singing the choruses.

Following are the officers of the Caecilian Club, of Lewiston, Idaho, for the season 1900-1901: President, Elizabeth W. Barnett; first vice-president, Gertrude K. Roos; second vice-president, Emma G. Osmers; recording secretary, Bessie Vollmer; corresponding secretary, Nellie M. Lecper; treasurer, Melina Saux; librarian, H. May Wildenthaler.

The Arion Club succeeded the Philharmonics. The charter members of the Arion Club were A. W. Hall, Francis Hinton, W. H. Starkweather, Dr. William Thorn- dike, W. W. Colvin, W. E. Furlong, C. H. M. Tobey, Eltinge Elmore, Walter W. Wallis, M. H. Brand, W. L. Sherman, William Brooke, George L. Richards, J. G. Steever, James Leedom and L. B. Benton.

The Arion Musicale Club, the oldest musical society in Milwaukee, is planning a brilliant series of concerts for its silver jubilee year. At the first of these concerts, "The Mes- siah," will be given in the Exposition Building on Friday evening, December 27. The quartet is composed of Mme. Eleanor Meredith, soprano; Miss Mabelle Crawford, alto; E. C. Towne, tenor, and W. A. Howland, bass.

The Afternoon Musical Club of Bedford, Ohio, held its last meeting at the home of Mrs. Pierce Metzger. The program was as follows: Paper, "Gypsies and Their Mu- sic," written by Mrs. John Freeman, president of the Ladies' Musical Club, read by Miss Ingersoll; song, "Gypsy Countess" (Glover), Misses Marble and Black; mandolin solo, "Bohemian Girl" (Balfe-Bowmann), Miss Blake; song, "Lily and Nightingale" (Herbert), Miss Benedict; Gypsy (Meyer-Helmund), Miss Glidden; song, "Ah! I Have Sighed to Rest Me" (Verdi), Miss Marble; Gypsy rondo (Haydn), Miss Black; Gypsy lullaby (Mes- sick), Miss Gould; Hungarian Dances (Brahms), Misses Ingersoll and Taylor.

Pears'

No soap in all the world is so cheap.
No soap in all the world is so good—none so lasting.
Sold all over the world.

Pears' soap is a luxury for toilet, bath and shaving.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

September
sixteenth
Nineteen Hundred and one

Have you read
the latest European press comments of the first truly great violinist America has produced?
If not then please read those of William
Worth
Bailey
the phenomenal blind
violinist

Young
Bailey returns to America
the latter part of October
and starts at once on his first American tour:
The supporting artists are Elizabeth
Northrop
Soprano
and Edwin
M.
Shonert
pianist

Sixty five concerts are already sold
and more than three hundred engagements are now pending
There have been more than one thousand applications up to date for Bailey
and his company

This is a great showing for a new attraction
I therefore deem it unnecessary for me to worry.
Yours merrily
R.
E.
Johnston
One fifty four Fifth Avenue
New York City

FROM PARIS.

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 4, 1901.

ALTHOUGH people are returning to Paris, and the different theatres are opening, or preparing to open their doors, nothing as yet is doing in the world of music.

At the Opéra they are busy with the rehearsals of "Les Barbares," of Saint-Saëns, which will be one of the first of the novelties to be produced at the Académie Nationale de Musique. This work contains an overture, developed in symphonic form, in which is shadowed forth the story of the opera. It is expected that after its performance at the Opéra this overture will form a part of the program of many symphonic concerts to be given during the coming season.

In the third act a grand sacred dance is performed during the propitiatory sacrifice to the deities. Saint-Saëns, whose musical erudition is well known, has curiously introduced into this ballet some quaint rythms, that of the "farandole" being, of course, characteristic of Provence.

The director of the Opéra has arranged a novel stage setting for the work, in which barbaric chariots, harnessed after the Teutonic manner, will be one of the novel features. While writing of Saint-Saëns I may say that there is no foundation in the rumor current that he has accepted or consented to set to music a German libretto. The composer has definitely denied the rumor in these words: "It is my opinion that in order to set successfully any foreign text a composer should be perfectly familiar with the language, its accents, its diction. If not he runs a great risk of making a mess of it. Besides just at present I do not feel in the mood for writing an opera to a German or any other libretto."

The yearly competitions at the Conservatory are over and the decisions of the jury made public. It appears that the past year has produced excellent results, more particularly in the classes of violin and piano. Indeed, the opinion of competent judges is that the work in all the instrumental classes has been of a very high order. The singing classes do not seem to have been so productive. As I was present at the competition in the opera and opera comique classes, I can certainly say for one of the first conservatories of the world, supposed to be a sort of nursery for the two subventioned lyric theatres of Paris, the results were certainly not satisfactory. It is a curious thing, but the singing classes at the Conservatory of Paris always seem fair game for the attacks and abuse of the press, and although reforms are constantly being introduced and investigations made into the absence of adequate results in this department of the institution, no one seems as yet to have solved the difficulty. The causes of the inadequate proportion of capable singers turned out are said to be various. One of the most current is the selection for professors of ex-artists of the Opéra and Opéra Comique, who, it is contended, may have exhibited a certain amount of talent as executants, but who are not possessed of the necessary qualifications to warrant them training successfully that most difficult of all instruments—the singing voice. However, be the reasons what they may, every one is agreed that for the quantity of pupils admitted and the cost to the Government, the number of available artists for the two opera houses is very disproportionate. One journal is very severe, commenting on the competition for opera. The writer says:

"And so finishes the examinations for this year. It was high time. These are the results: Directorate non-progressive and stupid; professors for the most part mediocre and unsatisfactory, producing pupils also mediocre ond unsatisfactory. One or two of these pupils may perhaps in time become artists. Deplorable institution, lamentable total."

These words are of course strong, but they are not mine, but those of the Patrie's critic in his account of the Opéra examination. Gailhard, the director of the Opéra, who was a member of the jury and an ex-pupil of the Conservatoire, did not hide his views on the matter. According to his idea the teaching of the institution is excellent so far as the stage work is concerned, but quite insufficient from a vocal point of view, hence the absolute penury of singers of a high class. I give you his ideas as published in the Matin, without either indorsing or offering an opinion on them for the present: "I do not think that music of the Italian school, or that written and composed expressly for the voice, is sufficiently studied at the present day. This school is really the only one to form singers, as these composers occupied themselves exclusively with what was known as the bel canto. My own professor, Revial, exacted from all his pupils, male and female, serious and prolonged studies for technic and flexibility before taking up the classics, such as Gluck, Beethoven, Sacchini, &c., and the works of the more modern composers. Nowadays one hears pupils attack the grand declamatory airs at the different examinations, a thing it is impossible to do unless one has gone through such a preliminary course of study as that I have indicated. It is impossible to sing the music of Gluck, Beethoven, &c., or of the modern great composers, adequately without having gained complete control of one's vocal forces on the lines laid out." Two of the successful competitors, Mlle. Huchet, who gained a second, and Mlle. Asbron, who carried off the first prize, have been engaged by Albert Carré for the Opéra Comique. The latter will make her début as Charlotte in Massenet's "Werther," which is to be revived during the coming season.

DE VALMOUR.

JOHN C. WEBER.

WITHIN the past five years the John C. Weber Military Band has grown in public favor with such rapidity that it now ranks as among the best bands in America. The director, John C. Weber, has worked persistently and hard to perfect his organization, of which he is now so justly proud. It has been against his policy to have a few first-class artists and fill in the second and third instruments with mediocre material. The result of this course by Mr. Weber has been gratifying to him and a host of friends throughout the country. He has one of the best paid bands in the country.

It is only this year that the Weber band has sought outside engagements. For several years Mr. Weber has been kept at home by the demands made upon his services in Cincinnati and vicinity. He has furnished the music at the various parks and summer resorts which are so numerous in that city. He has been able to keep his band intact, which accounts for the precision and excellence with which they play. This band accompanied the Cincinnati Enquirer excursion parties for several years and created a furore wherever they appeared. They played to 16,000 people at one concert in Denver, and made such a hit at Salt Lake City that the management of the famous Salt Air Beach offered a big sum for the band to remain there during the season.

During the last week in August Mr. Weber's band was the official musical organization of the Knights Templar Conclave in Louisville. The newspapers of that city unanimously agreed that this band was incomparably better than any one of the eighty-nine bands in attendance, and they did not except the well-known United States Marine Band, of Washington, D. C.

It was through the solicitation of some of his most prominent admirers among the leading business men of Cincinnati that John C. Weber was induced to seek an engagement at the Pan-American Exposition. In spite of the fact that hundreds of bands were bidders at a much lower figure than Mr. Weber he was given a two weeks' contract to play at the Exposition, beginning September 16. The programs will be of a character to suit all tastes.

While Mr. Weber, in common with all the bandmasters of the country, does not favor rag-time music, he realizes that there is a public demand for it, and no director can be successful who ignores or treats with contempt the wishes of the public. Last fall at the Cincinnati Zoological Garden the Weber band drew to a single rag-time concert more than 9,000 people. The attendance was the more remarkable because the weather was cool, the outdoor attraction season was over and all the theatres were in operation. John C. Weber is an exception to the rule that "a prophet hath honor save in his own country." He is popular at home. A short time ago some of his

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.

A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Reszké and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, volume or compass. The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio. Until September 23d Miss Shedd will be at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, where persons interested in singing may consult with her.

MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAGO.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
Address all communications to
613 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building, (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

friends presented him with the most magnificent bandmaster's badge ever made in this country. A week later another coterie of friends gave him a second medal as a token of their esteem and in recognition of his services to the cause of music in Cincinnati. The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Frank Van der Stucken, contains a large number of Weber's men, who are permitted to play with Mr. Van der Stucken through the courtesy of Mr. Weber. In various other ways has John C. Weber contributed to the musical fame of his native city.

He was born forty-five years ago. His father was a musician of ability. His brother, Adam Weber, whose untimely death several years ago cast a gloom over the community, was one of the most brilliant orchestral leaders of his time and a fine violinist. Another brother, George Weber, is an artist on the flute and piccolo, but has left the profession for business pursuits. The instrument on which John C. Weber is a master is the clarinet. He has played with Thomas, Schradieck, Michael Brand and other noted directors. In his methods of interpretation and directing, Mr. Weber is strictly legitimate. But Mr. Weber does not go to the extreme of playing merely the ultra classical creations that appeal only to the tastes of a few. He tries to please all classes with all kinds of music. That he has mastered the secret of satisfying everybody will be shown when his band begins at Buffalo September 16. All of Cincinnati is interested in the success of the Weber band, for if there is one thing that the city on the Ohio is jealous of it is her musical reputation. She may have lost her renown as a hog killing centre and she may no longer be famous as a produce distributing centre, but she will not concede for one moment that any city in America is comparable with her in a musical way. Musical Cincinnati looks to John C. Weber to still further strengthen her well earned fame in that regard, and the entire community has an abiding faith that he will do it. Mr. Weber will give some of the most difficult and brilliant numbers that are written for military bands, such creations in fact as but few military bands will attempt to perform. The bandmaster has a library of more than 6,000 selections. He is constantly adding to it regardless of cost. He has his agents in Europe and the various publishers are given carte blanche in furnishing him with the newest and most attractive compositions. Mr. Weber invites criticism. He would be pleased to have all the critics in the country hear his band and pass their honest judgment upon its merits. He has the utmost confidence in his ability to make a decided impression among those who know and appreciate real music artistically and scientifically performed. The first impression of an Eastern man would be that a band in an inland city could not attain to the degree of excellence that some of their own organizations have reached. Here is an opportunity for them to be surprised. With the numerous encomiums passed upon him and the seemingly extravagant claims made for him by his friends, it will indeed be necessary for Mr. Weber to prove by the splendor of his performances that his band stands the equal if not the superior of any in the United States.

LACHMUND CONSERVATORY REOPENS.—The Lachmund Conservatory at 132 West Eighty-fifth street was reopened on September 12. Carl V. Lachmund, the director of the institution, passed his vacation in the wilds of Maine, where deer, moose, fox and wild duck were the only "calling acquaintances." Mr. Lachmund says he saw 118 of the graceful deer while out canoeing one day. His family, particularly the children, enjoyed the close contact with the wild animals.

A POTPOURRI.

OUR department stores are not up to date. They have elevators and escalators and pretty girls and free lunches, but they have no sense of art, and, except selling some copies of "Good Morning, Carrie," they do nothing to promote music. Now in quiet, domestic Germany, the Hausfrau when she has completed her purchases can listen to such a concert as the one of which we subjoin the program, which we owe to the kindness of an esteemed correspondent, who found it in the columns of a Berlin newspaper:

PROGRAM OF THE DEPARTMENT STORE CONCERT OF RUDOLF SCHMOLLER.
Saturday, April 28.

La Paloma, Spanish Serenade.....Gradier
Carrotés, 2 lb., 55 pfgs.
Fantaisie, from Lohengrin.....Wagner
Sweet Young Peas, 1 lb., 36 pfgs.
The Mill in the Forest (idyl).....Herold
Beetroots, 1 lb., 19 pfgs.
Waltzes, from Frau Luna.....Linke
Lima Beans, 1 lb., 30 pfgs.
The Fledermaus Medley.....Strauss
Baby Carriages, 5 to 10 marks.
Chorus from Carmen.....Bizet
Honey, glass, 46 pfgs.
Czardas, No. 1.....Michiels
Fish, canned, 275 pfgs.
Overture, Oberon.....C. M. Von Weber
Washbowls, 59 pfgs.

Eugene Speyer, to whom we owe this information, adds that unfortunately the colonel of the regiment, the band of which had been engaged to play, refused his consent, and made offensive remarks about "advertising purposes" and "military honor," forgetting the great maxim that business is geschäft.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE.—Mme. Helene Maigille has returned from her vacation, passed at Atlantic City and Cape May. She begins this week to enroll pupils at her studio in Carnegie Hall. A number of promising young singers will resume their studies with her.

GENEVRA JOHNSTONE-BISHOP ON THE PACIFIC COAST.—Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop has returned to Los Angeles for this season. She is to open a studio at Blanchard Music Hall, and is booked for the entire coast for recitals, concerts and oratorio work.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

HANNAH & HAMLIN Dissolved June 1st.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY

DIRECTORS OF CONCERTS AND MUSICAL ARTISTS.

514-517 KIMBALL HALL
CHICAGO.

LOUIS EVANS, President.

CABLE ADDRESS, LINARK, CHICAGO. LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE, HARRISON 2255.

REPRESENTATIVE AGENCY OF MIDDLE STATES

EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION

GENEVIEVE CLARK WILSON—Soprano.
SUE HARRINGTON FURBECK—Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN—Tenor.
CHARLES W. CLARK—Baritone.
AUGUSTA COTTLOW—Pianiste, and others.
LEON MARX—Violinist.

WE WILL NEGOTIATE FOR ALL HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD
Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
CONCERT ORGANIST.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Address: 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
'Phones: Harrison 1910 and 1736. Unsurpassed Faculty Teaching.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC.
Stage Training, Elocution, Languages and the Fine Arts. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, September 8, 1901.

'FRISCO has been in a very unsettled and saddened frame of mind during the past few days, owing to the shocking news of the assassination of our beloved President, who won all hearts to himself on his recent visit to our coast by his gentle dignity and many lovable qualities. The bulletin boards are daily scanned by crowds of anxious watchers in hopes of the news of prospective and ultimate recovery. It is, indeed, sad that so noble a character, the voluntary choice of the people, should meet so terrible a fate at the hands of an assassin.

Still the world moves on, and pleasure is sought by the many. "Le Roi est mort—Vive le Roi" is sounded in one breath. People listen with bathed breath to some tale of horror, then pass on to their accustomed occupations, forgetful of what has gone before.

The Tivoli is nightly crowded with music lovers, and as the season goes on the work improves materially. During the past week "Norma" has alternated with "Mignon" to full and enthusiastic houses. In the latter Collamarini had the title role, and played it with an abandon that gives one a somewhat new idea of the character, but one on the whole not at all out of keeping with the gipsy training of Mignon.

Collamarini makes her tempestuous, wilful, rebellious, impetuous. Emma Abbott, who was coached in the part by Ambroise Thomas himself, showed in the character an inherent refinement and delicacy suggestive of one nobly born, with ineffaceable instincts, and marks of that nobility. Collamarini is a veritable gipsy, and while her interpretation is her own, she makes of it a very reasonable and acceptable Mignon. Her voice is gorgeous—full of faults for which one feels unutterable regret, as with a proper training and consistent tone production her voice would be something inexpressibly beautiful.

Repetto was a dainty and ideal Filina, her pure, flexible soprano fulfilling every requirement of the part and winning for her repeated applause. Lia Politini's Frederic was very good and the dainty gavotte her best work of the season so far. Russo was an acceptable Wilhelm Meister. Nicolini's Lothario was good, and Cortesi's Laertes a suggestion of what he is really capable of doing, given the opportunity. The cast for "Norma" included Barbareschi as the title role, Politini as Adalgisa, Castellano as Pollio, Cortesi as Flavius, Fannie Kruger as Clotilda, and Dado as Oroveso, the arch Druid and father of Norma, which is decidedly the best work he has yet given us, his voice coming out rich and full in every number. The part is evidently particularly well adapted to his voice. Politini's "Hear Me, Norma" was beautifully done, and I have seldom heard her voice sound so sympathetic. Barbareschi's Norman was a splendid dramatic conception, and her voice, which is a big dramatic soprano, well fitted to represent the character. She won repeated applause all through. Castellano was laboring under the effect of a bad cold, and did not appear to advantage. I should have spoken particularly of Barbareschi's "Casta Diva," which was rendered with telling effect, and was as fine a piece of vocalism as anything she did. This week we are to have Gounod's "Faust" and "Carmen," in which Collamarini is the bright particular star. Paul Steindorff is doing good work here, and should be commended highly for the repertory he has selected for this season, embracing as it does many things of merit not heard in 'Frisco before for years past.

On Tuesday evening last, at the California Conservatory of Music, Otto Bendix, the director, entertained the pupils and friends of the school, to the number of about seventy, with a choice program on the piano. It was a delightful evening and highly enjoyed by all present. Once a month from now on Mr. Bendix will give an analytical program, which he will play himself, on piano literature, embracing the foremost works. Also once a month a pupils' recital will be given at the Conservatory, which will prepare the pupils for the series of public concerts to be given later on in Sherman & Clay Hall. Mr. Bendix is an accepted authority on music, its literature and history, and it is a matter of congratulation to those fortunate enough to be present at these recitals that he is giving the public the benefit of his knowledge, as it is well known how interesting a subject can be under his treatment. These evenings are being anticipated with much pleasure by all concerned.

Word comes from Europe of the rapid advancement and attaining of honors by a San Francisco boy studying abroad. Master Xavier Mèfrét is now considered one of the most promising pupils in the National School of Music in Tours, France. Young Mèfrét was a pupil of Sir Henry Heyman some three years ago, and went directly from his tutelage to the Ecole National de Musique, where he took the examinations. There were some fifty-eight applicants, but only eight were considered. Of these young Mèfrèt was No. 1, and was admitted to the superior class. Since then he has been steadily climbing the ladder of progress. The first year he obtained second honorable mention. The following year he gained a first honorable mention, and this year he came off with flying colors, having won the first second prize and medal, which is considered a very rare honor for so young a boy. Young Méfrèt's progress in the school at Tours reflects much credit upon the tuition he received under Henry Heyman, and his honors are also honors for his former teacher. The young man has cut out his pace musically, and future accounts will doubtless contain something interesting. The young violinist is a son of Prof. X. Méfret, of this city.

James Hamilton Howe, the well-known musician of this city, has been engaged as organist and director of St. Dominic's Church, at Bush and Steiner streets, and with a largely augmented chorus choir is preparing Gaul's "Holy City" for the third Sunday of this month. He also announces in preparation parts of oratorios, and for October 6 Haydn's "Imperial Mass." Mr. Howe entered upon his new duties Sunday, September 1.

The first concert at Mauzy Hall is announced for Thursday evening, September 19, and will be given by the pupils of T. D. Herzog, from the violin department of the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, and will be assisted by the conservatory orchestra. An interesting program is promised.

At the same hall, on September 26, William Piutti, the well-known pianist, will give a piano recital. Mr. Piutti's programs are always well selected and artistically rendered.

The Taylor Street Synagogue, under direction of Cantor Davis, is preparing an elaborate musical program, with the addition of an orchestra and with greatly augmented choir. The soloists will be Miss Millie Flynn, soprano; Miss Ella V. McCloskey, contralto; F. Lenau, tenor; F. G. Mills, basso, and Henry Bretherick, organist.

Fraulein Lotte Siegel has returned from her vacation, and has resumed her vocal teaching at her studio, 1096 Post street. Miss Dorothy Goodsell has also returned, as well as Miss Ella McCloskey, the contralto; Miss Alyce Gates, and many others. Work has fairly begun in the studios, and only a few laggards are still out of town.

Thursday evening, September 12, is the date of an invitation recital to be given by Herman Genss, pianist, and Harry Samuels, violinist, at Sherman-Clay Hall. It is a good combination and should be an interesting recital.

To-morrow evening the ensemble concert by Miss Helen Hogan, pianist; J. R. Lewis (pupil of Sir Henry Heyman), violinist; Mr. Loveli Langtroth, 'cellist, lately returned from study in Brussels, will be given, with the assistance of A. Horatio Cogswell, baritone. The concert will take place in the First Unitarian Church of Oakland, and a very choice program is promised, with selections from Raff, Locatelli, Gounod, Bazzini, Schubert and Schutt.

At the opening recital of the California Conservatory of Music on Tuesday evening Mr. Bendix gave the following program:

Sonata, op. 57	Beethoven
Fantaisie in F minor	Chopin
Nocturne in D flat	Chopin
Ballade in G minor	Chopin
Minuet in E flat	Beethoven
Barcarolle in A minor	Rubinstein
Etude, Will o' the Wisp	Liszt

I had the pleasure one day this week of listening to one of Alyce Gates' star pupils, Miss Logan Toohy, while she

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
First American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
DATES NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

sang a number of songs, all diverse in character, at Miss Gates' studio. Miss Toohy, who is contralto at Central Methodist Church, has a voice of exceptionally beautiful quality, rich in coloring and warm in tone. Miss Gates considers her a perfect model of the work she is capable of doing through the method she teaches, which she herself acquired through many years of study with George Sweet, of New York. Salassa, our Tivoli star singer—who, by the way, should be with Grau by virtue of the highly artistic work he does—studied with a master who was also a pupil of the same Italian school studied by George Sweet; their voices are said to be marvelously similar. It appeals to one's sympathy and one's intelligence at the same time. Miss Gates is an ardent disciple of Sweet, and an enthusiast. She is possessed of a beautiful voice of her own and is her own best exponent of the art she teaches. We shall probably hear more of her work in a recital in the near future. Certain that it is that it stands alone, and this California girl is a missionary in her line. She aims high—but more of this later on.

The end of this week inaugurates the Jewish new year, with its high festival celebration, and all the synagogues are preparing exceptional music for the occasion. The Temple Emanu-El, which has the wealthiest congregation of any Jewish synagogue this side of New York, under the very efficient direction of Cantor Stark, is preparing something unusually fine for the festival music. Cantor E. J. Stark has established himself in 'Frisco as a man of attainments musically, and has done much fine work with his choir in Temple Emanu-El in the past, so this festival may easily be anticipated pleasantly. The whole festival music, with one or two exceptions, has been composed by Cantor Stark, who has been working upon it for the past three months. He has carefully preserved the Oriental character of the music, but has clothed his themes in gorgeous holiday habiliments, suitable to modern rendition, with the most happy effect.

Another feature of the Saturday morning service will be a soprano solo and chorus composed by Louis von der Mehden, Jr. Cantor Stark will conduct the services, and his well-known baritone voice will be heard in the traditional chants as well as many of the concerted numbers. An elaborate program has also been prepared for the Day of Atonement, ten days later.

A string orchestra, including harp, which will be played by Mme. Inez Carusi, will assist in Mr. Stark's version of the ancient Kol Nidrei melody, also in all the musical numbers during the memorial service. The choir of Temple Emanu-El on the festival days will consist of the following voices: Mrs. F. Wright, Mrs. W. Taafe, Miss Bayley, Madame Bernardi, Mrs. J. Driscoll, Miss E. D. Brown, Mrs. M. Wilbourne, Chester Rosecrans, S. Hopcraft, T. G. Elliot, J. Sandy, L. Van Lingham and Hiram Page. The soloists of the choir are Miss Daisy Cohn, soprano; Mrs. H. Kelly, contralto; Manloyd Jones, tenor; S. Homer Henley, basso. W. A. Sabin is the presiding organist. An orchestra of twelve pieces will assist.

Two leading Boston papers recently received certain flattering notices with portrait of H. J. Stewart, with an account of his accession to the choir of Trinity Church. The people of Boston have evidently given Dr. Stewart a kindly welcome and are prepared to do his capabilities the justice they deserve. MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

LAMBERT'S FIRST CONCERT.—Alexander Lambert will give his first concert this season at the New York College of Music on October 8.

CINCINNATI, September 14, 1901.

THE musical activity in the schools has begun, and the enrollment, both at the College of Music and Conservatory, is unusually large.

In connection with the fall festival, which begins on Monday, September 16, to be continued for two weeks, a sacred concert will be given on Sunday evening, September 22, in Music Hall. The great Music Hall organ is to be overhauled for this occasion. The program will be of interest:

Overture, Stabat Mater.....Rossini-Mercadante
Orchestra.
Praise the Lord.....Randegger
Fall Festival Chorus.
Contralto solo, Ave Maria.....Mascheroni
Mary Naomi Chapman.
Andante, Fifth Symphony.....Beethoven
(Arranged by Andrew J. Boex.)
Solo Quartet, Chorus and Orchestra (Mabel Dufour Flinn, Joseph Schenke, Dell Martin Kendall, A. F. Maish).
Tenor solo, Beyond the Gates of Paradise.....King
Joseph Schenke.
The Palms.....Faure
Fall Festival Chorus.
Solo for mezzo-soprano, Madre Pietosa (La Forze del Destino).....Verdi
Dell Martin Kendall.
Agnus Dei (Sixteenth Mass).....Haydn
Solo Quartet, Chorus and Orchestra (Joseph Schenke, Mary Naomi Chapman, A. F. Maish, Mabel Dufour Flinn).
Coronation March.....Svendsen
Orchestra.
Gypsy Life.....Schumann
Fall Festival Chorus.
Soprano solo, Cavatine, from Queen of Sheba.....Gounod
Mabel Dufour Flinn.
Amoroso (a vocal nocturne).....Boex
Female Chorus.
Bass solo, The Two Grenadiers.....Schumann
A. F. Maish.
Spring Song (The Blue Danube).....Strauss
Chorus and Orchestra.

Under the direction of H. T. Hanmer, manager of The Cable Company, the soirée musicales which were made so attractive last season were resumed in the beautiful warerooms of the firm, at Seventh and Elm streets, on Tuesday evening, September 10. Mr. Hanmer himself contributed two songs, which were much enjoyed. He has a genuine tenor voice, true to the pitch, and of uniformly musical value. The program was as follows:

Overture, Zampa.....Herold
Simplex Piano Player.
Tenor solo, The Everlasting Light.....Witt
H. T. Hanmer.
Soprano solo, Who Is Sylvia?.....Schubert
Miss Anna Karl.
(Pupil of The Oscar Ehrgott Vocal School.)
Recitation (selected).
Frank W. Cady.
Contralto solo, The Bird and Rose.....Horrocks
Miss Mayme Ellis.
(Pupil of The Oscar Ehrgott Vocal School.)
Tenor solo, Adieu, Marie.....Adams
H. T. Hanmer.
Soprano solo, Springtide.....Böhm
Miss Anna Karl.
Recitation (selected).
Frank W. Cady.
Contralto solo, Love's Sorrow.....Shelley
Miss Mayme Ellis.
Quartet from Rigoletto.....Liszt
Simplex Piano Player.
Sig. P. F. del Campiglio, musical director.

Frank Van der Stucken writes from Hanover to Mr. Sterling that he will sail from Bremen on September 28, bringing his daughter with him, who will spend the winter here. Under his direction the opera department of the College of Music will give two operas, one, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai, the other, not yet named, Mr. Van der Stucken will bring with him.

A class for the thorough study of the Gregorian Chant will be organized by the College of Music under the direction of Dr. N. J. Elsenheimer.

Two masses and twenty-four motets of the latter are now in press.

Some very interesting features will be brought out in the violin department the coming season. Mr. Marien, the head of this department of the College of Music, has a large class, and is arranging a violin concerto for four violins, and the soloists will be Mrs. Gisela Weber, Miss Bertha Roth, Ralph Wetmore and Fred Gerrard. The concerto will have the assistance of the college orchestra.

Signor Romeo Gorno and Dr. N. J. Elsenheimer, of the piano department of the College of Music, have been engaged for a series of duet concerts for two pianos. The tour will extend through the Southern and neighboring States.

Signor A. Gorno is to be congratulated on his pupils who have been successful in getting with the great teacher Leschetizky. Among those who have recently gone are Fred J. Hoffmann, Miss Aline Fredin, Miss Genevieve S. Lincoln and Miss Corneille Overstreet; the latter has been already a year in Vienna.

This reflects great credit on Signor Gorno, as it is no easy matter to get with the great piano teacher Leschetizky.

Signor Romeo Gorno also has the honor of having had a pupil, Miss Clara Gotthelf, accepted by Leschetizky.

Georg Krueger, of the Conservatory of Music, will bring out several of his talented pupils this season in individual recitals. J. A. HOMAN.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
126 East 83d Street, - NEW YORK CITY

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, September 14, 1901.

It will not be until October 1 that the teachers will all have returned and studios get settled into the regular winter routine. Quite a number of leading teachers are in the city, but every advantage is taken of half holidays and early or late hours to remain away from their business places.

Arthur J. Hubbard was at his studio early in the week, having returned from Munsonville, where he has a summer home. During the warm months Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have entertained many of their friends, among them Miss Ruby Cutter and Paul Savage. Miss Cutter has not yet returned to the city, but will be here early in the coming week.

Mr. Savage has been spending the summer in this country after a season's study in Italy with one of the most noted masters. He leaves to-morrow for Paris, where he will spend this season and will probably appear in concerts. Mr. Hubbard is delighted with Mr. Savage's progress, and is congratulating himself that when he retires from the ranks as a teacher he will have a successor in Mr. Savage, who can carry on the work as laid out by Mr. Hubbard.

Mr. Savage has much that is interesting to say of the condition of music in Italy in its relation to American singers, but it is a deep and serious question, the solution of which cannot now be foreseen.

Miss Bertha Johnson, authorized teacher of the Yersin system in French, will return to Boston about October 1 and resume her work. Singers have found great benefit from diction lessons with Miss Johnson, whose thoroughness as a teacher and perfect understanding of the Yersin system is so well known. During the month of September Miss Johnson will visit the Yersin sisters at their home in New York.

After October 1 Mrs. Anne Gilbreth Cross will receive pupils at her studio in the Pierce Building.

Arthur Beresford arrived in the city last week from an extended European tour. Already he has many dates booked for the coming season.

George W. Chadwick has set to music eight songs by Arthur Macy. "Thou Art to Me" is the one specially mentioned by author and composer as the favorite. They will be issued early this autumn. Mr. Macy's lyrics are well known, his verses of much delicacy and beauty, with charming sentiment. "The lines lend themselves to composition" has more than once been said of them.

An Aeolian and Pianola recital will be given this afternoon at the M. Steinert & Sons Company's warerooms in the Steinert Building. Theodore Schroeder, baritone, will be the soloist in the following program:

Tannhäuser Overture.....Wagner
Æolian Orchestrelle.
Recollections of Home.....Mills
Pianola.
Baritone solo, Bedouin Love Song.....Pinsuti
Mr. Schroeder (pianola accompaniment).
Silver Spring.....Bendel
Polka de Salon.....Kirchner
Pianola.
Solo, The Rosary.....Nevin
Mr. Schroeder (pianola accompaniment).
Traumerei.....Schumann
Serenade.....Schubert
Æolian Orchestrelle.
Valse, op. 34.....Moszkowski
Pianola.

The Cecilia Society has secured the rights from the composer and publishers to perform Massenet's new oratorio, "The Promised Land," and it will be given early in December.

H. J. Stewart, the organist at Trinity Church, will, following out his custom in San Francisco, play a short program on the organ for half an hour after the afternoon service. Last Sunday, when this was inaugurated, a goodly number of the congregation availed themselves of the opportunity to hear the music.

It may not be remembered that Dr. Stewart is the composer of "Crossing the Bar," a song that has had an unusual amount of compliments bestowed upon it.

Under the direction of Frank O. Nash, the operetta, "Trial By Jury," was given at Hingham on the 11th. Miss Leveroni took the principal part, others in the cast being well-known summer residents of the town. The performance was successful in every respect.

Owing to the inability of Emma Eames to appear at the Worcester Music Festival the auction sale of tickets for the season was not up to last year's mark. The first choice was bid off to Col. Samuel E. Winslow for $10, and Hon. Stephen Salisbury and Hon. Joseph H. Walker paid like amounts for choice. The premium then fell to $7.50, and finally to 50 cents. Eight hundred season tickets were offered for sale and 513 were disposed of, against 780 last year. The total premiums received were $1,378.76, against $2,011.07 last year.

LEONARD CORDES DEAD.—Leonard Cordes, an old violinist and teacher, died at his home, 321 East Eighty-eighth street, last Wednesday morning, after a lingering illness. He was seventy-two years old. A delegation from the Aschenbroedel, to which Mr. Cordes belonged, attended the funeral.

Titiano.

MARIE TITIANO, who will be heard in concert this season, is very well known to Boston music lovers. She was a pupil of Mrs. Gertrude Franklin Salisbury, of that city. She became prominent as a singer at private concerts, and made her début before the public at the Symphony concerts in 1897. She appeared nine times with the Boston Symphony concerts, until she went abroad in 1899. Mlle. Titiano gave song recitals in Boston under the patronage of Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Roger Wolcott and others of equal social prominence, and sang continually in different parts of the country from that time until she went abroad to study language and dramatic action. She knew the music of seven operas when she went to Italy, and inside of a week after her arrival in Florence was offered an opening, but she declined in order to perfect her dramatic studies. Mlle. Titiano made her début at Varese, and appeared with marked success in "Faust," "La Traviata," "Rigoletto" and "La Sonnambula." Her voice is of wonderful range, having four Cs in it. She sings C in altissimo above Melba's high D. Mlle. Titiano will give forty concerts during the season, beginning in November, and her tour is being rapidly booked.

CLARA POOLE-KING.—Mme. Clara Poole-King, who is to be one of the soloists at the Worcester musical festival, is reported to be in fine voice. During the summer she sang at several concerts, and one particularly successful event was given at the Congregational Church at Bayshore, L. I. In the report of the concert published in the Bayshore Journal, Madame Poole-King was referred to as the "star attraction." Following is an extract from the criticism in the Journal:

Of Mme. Clara Poole-King, the contralto, little need be said. She has so long held a prominent place in the affections of music lovers that praise can be little less than repetition. Her rendition of "Habanera," from the opera "Carmen," revealed the wonderful scope and elasticity of her voice. But its sweetness was more evident in the choice encore which the audience demanded, while both her voice and that of her pupil, Miss Fox, showed perhaps to the best advantage their sympathy and tenderness in the duet. All would gladly hear her in the great music festival at Worcester, Mass., render the contralto solo parts in the "Requiem" and other oratorios to be given there in September. She is to be congratulated upon her success with her pupil, Miss Fox.

Miss Grace Fox, the pupil of Madame Poole-King, is a soprano, and in her singing at the concert she showed evidences of excellent training.

LOUIS V. SAAR.—Mr. Saar returned from the Catskill Mountains last week and resumes his instruction in piano, musical theory and repertory.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

CLARA POOLE-KING,

Prima Donna Contralto

SEASON 1901-1902.

WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

Elsa Marshall,

Soprano.

222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

THE Guilmant Organ School
(COPYRIGHT)
RE-OPENS
Monday, October 14th.
EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....
34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, September 14, 1901.

THREATENING clouds often arise suddenly to hang heavily over great Western cities. In like manner tidings of President McKinley's assassination came, darkening Chicago.

To-day the cloud has burst. The final news is here. And now the heavens seem to sympathize with a human sympathy, for in reality a gentle rain is falling, and the responsive flags, at half mast, quiver in the wet.

Everywhere the deplorable deed and its disastrous results have been the chief topic of thought and conversation. But through it all there has existed no desire on the part of the people to neglect home, studio or office. For a life like the President's teaches other citizens to make their lives better worth the living.

To the musician it seems to say: "Work—study Bach, Beethoven, Chopin or anything else that is good and inspiring. For, remember, to-morrow we die."

What is the attitude of the true artist? Where must he stand?

Though this emotional world, with rapturous acclaim, fondly may place him on Fame's fair pedestal, striving ever for the unattained, he is not "Patience on a monument."

Said the great Beethoven: "Freedom and progress are our true aim in the world of art, just as in the great creation at large."

The promotion of this "freedom and progress" of music, in West and East alike, has been and still is the aim of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

To confine journalistic developments to one State or one section of the country were to limit qualifications.

And who courts limitations?

Authoritative Westerners long have realized that the scope of this paper is national. Also, international.

While the above is true, the fact still remains that "details make perfection." Thus all items which touch the interests of music in this vicinity are welcomed at these offices in the Fine Arts Building.

"The dull period which music journals must experience in Chicago" is the topic discussed this week by an eminent Eastern manager.

But when does this dull "period" occur? In vain does THE MUSICAL COURIER look for even semicolon or comma.

It is not generally known here that Miss Clémence Van den Broeck, a gifted artist whose paintings have been exhibited in Europe and America, is visiting Chicago this week. She is the daughter of the late Pierre Van den Broeck, a sculptor who occupied the position of inspector and commissioner general of fine arts under the Belgian Government. Miss Van den Broeck has received many honors. In London her work won two medals, presented by the Prince of Wales, while in 1894 she was elected a member of the Academy of Arts and Sciences by the French Government.

Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler has returned to Chicago from her summer home in Wisconsin.

Louis Francis Brown, manager of Studebaker and University Halls, in the Fine Arts Building, announces a number of interesting events. At the Studebaker Hall the Sunday "Four o'Clocks" will begin early in the fall, "The Daisy Chain" and a miscellaneous program being given at the first of these recitals by a New York quartet consisting of Shannah Cumming, Gertrude May Stein and Messrs. Howard and Miles. Here Burton Holmes will be heard in an able series of lectures, and Madame Lehmann probably will give a January concert.

Artists whom Mr. Brown has secured for University Hall are Josef Hofmann (two recitals), Fritz Kreisler (one or two recitals) and later in the season Plunket Greene and Ben Davies. University Hall's attractions will include George Grossmith, Seton Thompson and the Cushing illustrated lectures on travel, while among other well-known persons who may come are Sarah Grand and Sir Robert Ball, the English lecturer on astronomy.

Frederic Grant Gleason, having returned from his vacation to the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, of which he is president, is now busily engaged in teaching his many pupils. The interior of the conservatory is being redecorated, and the effect will be very attractive.

Esther Feé, the brilliant young violinist, has gone to Dieppe, France, where she will enjoy the sea bathing, and incidentally give several recitals. Great interest is centred in the coming American tour of this exceptionally promising artist.

News has been received that William H. Sherwood, the pianist, was invited to play at Buffalo with John Lund's Symphony Orchestra, but the sad tragedy of which the President was the victim occurred just previous to the expected concert.

The American Conservatory of Music's catalogue, just issued, is a work of art which will interest all lovers of music.

Miss Mary M. Shedd leaves here this week for a short visit at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York. Among the most promising singers who are studying with Miss Shedd at her studio in the Auditorium Building are Miss Louise Miller, Miss Irene Briggs and Miss Anna Rosengreen.

Miss Louise Neilson, soprano, who formerly was a member of the Swedish Quartet, has recently been engaged in organizing a philanthropic club in this city. An effort will be made to place this "Neilson circle" on a firm financial basis.

Mary Dennis Manning, who for seven years occupied the chair of oratory and elocution at the Nebraska State University, has been engaged to direct a similar department at the Sherwood School of Music.

Electa Gifford, soprano, and William H. Sherwood, pianist, having been engaged to give a recital at Newton, Kan., early in December, it is expected that their appearance will constitute the most notable feature in an important series of concerts to be held there during the coming winter.

The Apollo Club's admirable program for the present season is as follows:

"Samson and Delilah," December 2, 1901.—Mme Josephine Jacoby, Charles Gauthier, Herman DeVries, H. W. Newton and Walter Root.

"Messiah," December 25, 1901.—Mme. Eleanor Meredith, Miss Mabelle Crawford, E. C. Towne, W. A. Howland.

Part Songs, February 17, 1902.—Mme. Schumann-Heink.

"Damnation of Faust," April 28, 1902.—Miss Helen Buckley, C. W. Clark, Claude Cunningham. (The tenor

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.

LEONORA JACKSON
Assisted by HARRY J. FELLOWS, Tenor,
WILLIAM BAUER, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: New York, 31 Union Square West. Chicago, 71 Monroe St role has not yet been filled, Edward Lloyd having decided not to appear.)

LOUIS EVANS, PRESIDENT.

Louis Evans, the well-known secretary of the Chicago Apollo Club, has become president of the Hamlin Company, George Hamlin, the tenor, having resigned, owing to the pressure of his professional engagements. Mr. Evans has had experience in musical matters both in England and this country. Of the Englewood Musical Club, Englewood, Ill., he is choral director. His many friends wish him every success as the Hamlin Company's new president.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

It is satisfactory to know that many hundreds of students are arranging to take special courses this season at the far famed Chicago Musical College, whose representatives and influential faculty now includes the following names:

Board of Musical Directors—Dr. F. Ziegfeld, Hans Von Schiller, Bernhard Listemann, Rudolph Ganz, Dr. Louis Falk, William Castle, S. E. Jacobsohn, Charles Gauthier, Herman Devries and Hart Conway, director of School of Acting.

Piano—Dr. F. Ziegfeld, Hans Von Schiller, Walter R. Knüpfer, Hermann Klum, Adolf Brune, Arthur Rech, Bessie E. Ayres, Alma W. Anderson, M. Eleanor Turner, Rudolph Ganz, Maurice Rosenfeld, Karl Reckzeh, Lillian M. Reid, Eizabeth G. Saviers, Maud Jones, Gena Branscombe, Viola E. MacLean and Maybelle Lewis.

Vocal—William Castle, Charles Gauthier, Mrs. O. L. Fox, Vernon d'Arnalle, Mabel F. Shorey, Herman Devries, John R. Ortengren, Mary Forrest-Ganz and Beatrix Mizer.

Violin—Bernhard Listemann, Joseph T. Ohlheiser, S. E. Jacobsohn, Felix Borowski and William Konrad.

Organ—Dr. Louis Falk.

Violoncello—Franz Wagner.

Harmony, Counterpoint, Canon and Fugue—Dr. Louis Falk, Adolf Brune, Louis Campbell-Tipton and Bessie E. Ayres.

Composition—Felix Borowski.

Ensemble Playing—Franz Wagner.

History of Music—Felix Borowski.

Sight Reading and Public School Music—Louis Campbell-Tipton.

Clarinet—Eberhard Ulrici.

Flute—Curt Baumbach.

Cornet—Emil Kopp.

School of Acting—Hart Conway, Mrs. Hart Conway and Clifton L. Payden.

Elocution and Physical Culture—Lillian Woodward Gunckel.

Foreign Languages—Italian, Enrico Alfieri; French, Mercedes Devries; German, Eduard Hobein, and Spanish, Candido Rosi.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Charles W. Clark and George Hamlin have been engaged by the Mozart Club, of Pittsburg, Pa., for its concert on November 26. The works to be presented on this occasion are Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

Charles W. Clark has also been engaged to sing with the Chicago Orchestra, on December 13 and 14, and with the Dominant Ninth Club, of Alton, Ill., on April 30. The many inquiries received for his services indicate that this artist will have one of the busiest seasons of his successful career.

Holmes Cowper will sing at the Tarkio, Mo., Festival on October 23 and 24.

Mrs. Sue Harrington Furbeck, contralto, will appear at the Y. M. C. A. concert, Chicago, on February 27.

Miss Augusta Cottlow, pianist, has been booked with the Chicago Orchestra for January 24 and 25, with the St. Louis Choral Symphony Society for March 20, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for April 17 and 18, and in Brooklyn, N. Y., for March 7.

Arthur Dunham, organist, and Miss Elaine DeSellem, contralto, have returned from abroad. M. H.

MCCALL LANHAM.—McCall Lanham, the baritone, returned to New York from a successful concert tour in Texas and Tennessee, on August 1, to take charge of the summer vocal work at the American Institute of Applied Music. Since his return he has been very busy with his pupils, and has also been booked for a number of engagements for the coming season. Mr. Lanham returned from Paris in February, after a three years' course of study under Sbriglia, the great voice teacher. He was also with Granier, the well-known teacher of interpretation and diction at the Conservatory. M. Sbriglia was most enthusiastic over his pupil's singing, and predicted a great career for him. Lanham's voice is a high dramatic baritone, full of resonance and power, and his art is paramount in everything he does. He has a big range from low G to high A, and as one critic says, "His voice has that admirable quality—sympathy—that always reaches the hearts of his hearers." His repertory, which includes ten operas, is large and varied. Mr. Lanham has had considerable experience as a church singer, having sung at some of the best known churches in the city, before going to Europe. He is also a good organist, as the fact that he plays at Calvary Baptist Church, Fifty-seventh street, during the summer goes to prove.

He is now associated with Tom Karl as one of the instructors in voice at the American Institute of Applied Music. His first recital in the institute will be given the latter part of September. The exact date will be announced in a later issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.—Mrs. Stella Prince Stocker has returned from Europe, and is now busy planning for her lecture recitals here this autumn and winter. While abroad her lectures were received with enthusiasm, and her compositions, especially an overture for full orchestra, received favorable notice. Besides her lectures, Mrs. Stocker will teach piano and other branches in a musical education. She is also prepared to direct her own operettas. Two of these compositions, "The Queen of Hearts," in one act, and "Beulah," for children's voices, are especially adapted for performance by amateurs.

Mrs. Stocker's residence and studio are at 17 West 103d street, New York city.

Frederic Martin, Basso.

LAST spring and during the summer Frederic Martin, of Boston, sang at a large number of music festivals in different parts of the country. Everywhere his success was an assured one and a few of his press notices are reproduced here:

A new singer made his appearance at this concert in the person of Frederic Martin, whose profound bass tones were heard with much pleasure. His voice is of the deepest and darkest hue, besides possessing a distinct individuality, and his singing of the dual parts of Abimeleeh and An Old Hebrew gave evidence of thorough study and comprehension.—Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal.

Mr. Martin was heard in two groups of songs. I enjoy him thoroughly. His voice belongs to the old school basso cantante of the Italians, and throughout its whole great register is of beautiful even quality, truly a "singing bass." I could have wished to hear him in some of the favorite arias of the old masters, who knew so well how to write for such voices as his, but his songs were capitally done, one and all, and enthusiastically received and encored.—H. P. A., in Boston (Mass.) Transcript.

Mr. Martin is an artist and a most satisfactory one. His singing was received with great favor by all present. He also knows what to sing as well as how to sing.—Troy (N. Y.) Daily Press.

His performance was one of the notable vocal events of the season in Bangor; his voice has smoothness and power and mellowness to a degree which is not often found, and besides he has a range which is uncommonly high for a voice of his depth. Not the least pleasing of his qualities is his freeness. At no time, even on his highest notes, did he show any signs of effort.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL.—The Morris Piano School, at 201 West Eighty-first street, of which Mrs. Lucille Smith Morris, the well-known concert pianist, is the director, will open on September 23.

A unique feature of the school will be the daily individual instruction and daily practice under the supervision of the teacher, which make rapid progress certain and effectually prevent the pupil from neglecting practice, falling into error and committing faults which, under the old method of one or more lessons per week take a good portion of the hour to correct.

The course of instruction embraces technical work for the Clavier and the piano according to the Virgil method, sight reading, time beating, ear training, rhythmic studies (written and played), memorizing, interpretation of musical compositions, musical analysis, definitions and history, the writing and playing of harmony (elementary and advanced) and ensemble and concert playing. Mrs. Morris has written a book on harmony for beginners, which will be used in the school.

Although much of the work of the school will be done in classes, Mrs. Morris will continue her private lessons in harmony and piano.

S. C. BENNETT.—Mr. Bennett will during the coming season attend strictly to the work of private instruction at his studio in Carnegie Hall, and will not conduct any operatic classes outside his studio. Mr. Bennett has so many singers who apply for instruction in his special line, "correcting all faulty tone production," that he has thought best to give his whole attention to this line of work.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,

SOPRANO,

Dramatic and Coloratura.

CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.

Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.

Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.)
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1121.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Frankliustrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from Loudon Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Aveuue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . .	£1 5s.	Austria, . . .	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00
Special rates for preferred positions.
One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

TO-MORROW, Thursday, will be a legal holiday. The mortal remains of the martyr President are to be conveyed to their final resting place in Ohio.

THE city is slowly clothing herself in mourning. Every building seems to have put aside noisy business and changed to black and purple robed mausoleums for the body of the dead President. The mournful clang of the tolling bells enhances the gloom and helps to make a scene which will always be distinct in the minds of New Yorkers when the name of William McKinley is recalled.

MANY Americans will favor the plan to make the Temple of Music at the Pan-American at Buffalo a permanent building. Nothing could be more beautiful than to erect around the spot a memorial to the beloved President whose death from the bullet of a vile assassin the whole world mourns.

President McKinley loved music. According to the authentic newspaper reports he repeated lines from a hymn as he lay dying. He died as he lived, a man of serene magnanimity, a firm believer in the immortality of the soul. Such a deathbed scene is a lesson of hope and faith to all men. Throughout the land last Sunday the church choirs and congregations united in singing that grand hymn by the late Cardinal Newman, a favorite with President McKinley:

"Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom, Lead thou me on."

THE hymn was the cause of a memorable scene in Cincinnati last Saturday night. The great festival chorus of 1,000 voices, practicing for the fall festival of next week in Music Hall, almost broke down in trying to sing "Lead, Kindly Light."

It had been arranged to sing this hymn in the concert, when it was thought the President would recover, the first verse by the great chorus, the second by a quartet and the third verse by chorus, quartet and the audience.

The chorus began the first line of the song at the raising of Director Boex's baton, and instantly the thought of the dying President came home to every singer. Voices quivered and eyes grew moist, and as the second line echoed through the great auditorium the mighty chorus shook with emotion, and it was only by a supreme effort that the verse was carried through. When the hymn was finished there was not a dry eye on the stage.

COULD there be anything more discouraging to the lover of the drama than the plays presented at the reopening of the theatres? There is apparently little choice to-day between the exciting, old fashioned melodrama, vulgar musical comedies and the milky, mushy romantic play written with an eye to reconcile the matinee candy eating girl to her stage hero. Dramatically, we are living in sad days.

FRANCE is rejoicing to see the work of artistic decentralization going merrily on. A rival to the Roman theatre at Orange has been found in the Arenes of Beziers, where for four years performances have been given. This year it is a ballet, "Bacchus Mystified," the music composed by a young prix de Rome, M. Olonne, who conducted in person and received warm applause. Next year a piece, "Parysatis," words by Madame Dieulafoy, music by Saint-Saëns, will be given. "Parysatis" is a name deeply impressed on the minds of all schoolboys who have struggled with Xenophon's "Anabasis," and as M. Dieulafoy is the famous explorer of Persepolis the world will have a thoroughly Persian spectacle.

THE coming season does not promise to be one rich in novelties, at least not in New York. Conductors of our leading German singing societies, like the New York Arion and Liederkranz and the Brooklyn Arion and Saengerbund, are generally concerned with the production of new works, but outside of their endeavors nothing of importance is being planned. Over in Brooklyn the Institute announces two oratorios—Händel's "Messiah" and Verdi's Requiem—for performance during the season. "The Messiah" will be sung a few days before Christmas and the Requiem the end of March.

THE La Scala, of Milan, is in the hands of a liquidator. The syndicate of the Duke Visconti di Montroso and other wealthy amateurs which undertook to run the theatre for three years is dissolved by lapse of time. It was not a financial success and the members decline to renew the agreement. The liquidator appointed at the meeting where this resolution was adopted is M. Gazzaniga. What will become of La Scala? Last April the municipal council proposed a referendum to the people of the question of a subsidy by the city, but at present matters have gone no further than the appointment of a committee to study the question of a referendum and how it is to be organized. Meanwhile time presses and nothing is done.

THE German Times in writing of the coming season at Berlin says:

"What marvelous sights we shall behold, when this season's crop of new American students, fresh from the States, shall find the haunts of the music makers, and display themselves in all the glory of the latest Transatlantic fashions. What weird 'hair cuts,' what skin-tight trousers, what Lilliputian overcoats, what short skirts, what pretty faces we shall see! Yesterday there appeared a new student in golf suit of amazing cut, and stockings of appalling pattern. His head was bedecked with a small cloth covering resembling something between a jockey cap and an Arabian turban. We have seen this type of student before. It usually takes from four to six weeks to civilize him. After that he strikes an attitude of self-defense whenever the subject of the golf suit is mentioned. Why must Englishmen and Americans rig themselves like guys when they go a-traveling?"

"WANTED, an Opera Text." This cry, heard everywhere to-day, is a pretty old one. The Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung in the year 1813 contained the following: "Wanted—The undersigned wishes as soon as possible to come into possession of a good opera text, which he will set to music and pay a fair price for. He hereby requests the poets of Germany, who are willing to accept the work, to send in their manuscripts as soon as possible, while he undertakes that in case of not being employed they will be returned to the author without the slightest misuse. Prague, March 1, 1813. KARL MARIA VON WEBER, Capellmeister Director of the Opera of the Royal Bohemian Theatre, Prague."

Weber had been in Prague from the beginning of January, and remained there till September 1816; but was not successful in finding a text. I 1817 he became capellmeister at Dresden, and there he made the acquaintance of the poet Friedrich Kind, who handed in the text of "Der Freischütz" on March 1. Weber began the work by composing on July 12 in that year the duet "Schelm halt' fest," and on May 13, 1820, completed the overture. "Der Freischütz" was performed for the first time in May, 1821, at Berlin.

AN old newspaper paragraph about the last concert tour by Christine Nilsson in this country is interesting when the numbers in the Swedish singer's repertory are contrasted with the concert selections of great singers in our day. "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," from Händel's "Theodora," was named as the first number in Nilsson's list, and she sang the same aria in all of the cities in her tour. Her rich, full, mellow and sympathetic voice was suited to legato singing, and what noble examples of that style of singing she gave.

THE birthday of Dr. Antonin Dvorák, the Bohemian composer, was celebrated on September 8 at Prague, where in honor of this sixtieth event in his life the administration of the Czech National Theatre presented his oratorio "St. Ludmilla," and a cyclus of his operas is in progress. A festival concert also took place at his birthplace, Mühlhausen, near Kralup, Bohemia. There were no celebrations here in honor of the composer of the "New World" Symphony, but then there is no record of his birthday, and his residence here is very nigh forgotten by this time.

THE Frankfurter Kurier tells a story about Wagner that places him in a new light. When the composer was struggling with dire poverty he sold to the Stuttgart Theatre the right of playing "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin" and "The Flying Dutchman" for the ridiculous sum of 50 florins a night. When he had composed his "Tristan," Stuttgart, like all the rest of the world, wanted to hear it, Gunzert, the intendant of the Royal Theatre, was approached by Herr Batz, the business manager of Wagner, with a proposal to cancel the old agreement, and make a new one by which Wagner would receive the usual 10 per cent. royalty. Gunzert had never been in a theatre until he was appointed intendant, and had only one idea of management, that is, economy. So at Batz's first words he exclaimed: "What? Wagner has already sold me three of his operas and now wants me to buy them over again at a higher price! Tell Herr Wagner that he may write all the operas he likes, but they shall never be played at Stuttgart." Still, the good folk of Stuttgart clamored for "Tristan," and when they remonstrated with Gunzert he replied: "Do you want me to mount a new piece by this Herr Wagner? He writes operas so long that they cost the theatre far, far too much for gas, and rents, too, 10 per cent!"

WAGNER AS A SOLDIER OF GAS STOCK.

One day Lautenschläger, the machinist of the theatre, received a telegram: "Wagner arrives tomorrow. He wants to go to the theatre; get two places for him." Gunzert was asked for them. "This is too much!" he cried; "this fellow burns all my gas, wants to sell me his operas twice over and dares to ask for complimentary tickets!"

"But, your Excellency, it is a great honor for us that Richard Wagner wishes to hear us."

"An honor! It is an honor to the theatre when His Majesty deigns to come, or the princesses or the ministers; but what is the good of the visit of this Herr Wagner to us?"

The intendant's secretary then put in a word to support his comrade.

"Well," said Gunzert, "I'll give you two seats in the amphitheatre."

"Your Excellency cannot think of that. Wagner in the upper gallery!"

"Do you suppose I am going to give him a box, like a king, or a princess, or an ambassador?"

The machinist turned to leave, when Gunzert called him back.

"Here are two orchestra stalls. But they are for you."

Next day Wagner arrived. The tickets were handed to him. "Whom did you get them from?" he asked. "From the intendant Herr von Gunzert." "It is a pity," said Wagner, "for I shall have to call on him, and I do not want to do so."

Wagner went to the theatre; the opera was "Ondine," and he admired the scenery very much. Next day he called on the intendant, with the hope that he would not be admitted. But Gunzert was at home, and received him ceremoniously. Wagner praised the theatre, the orchestra, the singers, and Gunzert thought he had a good opportunity to discuss the question of royalties. "Oh, your Excellency," interrupted Wagner, "I never look after these things. You must see my man of business."

"But you must know," continued the intendant, "that they want me to mount 'Tristan.' Tell me, Herr Wagner, is it as long as your other works?"

"I fear it is."

"Well, now, let us come to terms, Herr Wagner; your operas cost me a terrible sum for gas. Cut half an hour out of each of your pieces, and I shall mount 'Tristan' and give you 10 per cent. of the receipts. With what I shall save in gas I can do that."

"Very sorry," replied Wagner, "that is quite impossible. Not only will I not make any cuts, but I am obliged to forbid you to omit a single note in any of my works."

"Why so?" cried Gunzert.

"I'll tell you Herr von Gunzert: I am a large shareholder in the gas company."

When Wagner had taken his departure, the intendant turned to his secretary. "This Herr Wagner is perhaps making fun of me!"

IT'S an old story, this discussion of the support of a summer orchestra in New York, but so long as the hopes of many music lovers are deferred schemes and plans will be talked over. There is no law yet in this country prohibiting people from talking. We published a four column editorial bearing on this matter in the issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER for July 24, and nothing new can be added at this time. The conditions remain the same. In our July editorial we stated that 1,000 people, ready to pay 50 cents per night, would support a summer orchestra and a good conductor without any philanthropic aid or assistance from human "angels." That 1,000 persons nightly cannot be reached in a community of over 4,000,000 to carry on this sort of enterprise is a reflection upon the artistic taste of New Yorkers. Such a statement can only offend persons ignorant of conditions.

SUMMER ORCHESTRAS AGAIN.

The associations, corporations and individuals who in the past have undertaken to give orchestral concerts during the summer in New York have all experienced about the same drawbacks. To begin with there is the deadhead nightmare. All sorts and conditions of persons, for one reason and another, claim the "courtesy" of free admission. There is no need to quote the list, but it looms up with each returning summer. Here in itself is a small community of pretended music lovers, and yet they seem unwilling to pay the paltry admission of 50 cents. The well dressed and prosperous looking man or woman constantly scheming and planning to gain access into the concert hall without paying for the tickets must excite our pity, and, more than that, the petty beggars merit contempt as well as pity.

There is some talk "in the air," and very much "in the air," of forming a society for the support of concerts in New York during the months of June, July, August and September. "It can be done" exclaim a few enthusiasts. Yes, it can; but it most likely will not be accomplished. So far as our knowledge goes the Summer Night Orchestral Association organized some years ago has not disbanded. True, conferences were held, and some of them were lively conferences, too, but the good ladies got no further than raising a small subscription, which was in time returned to the generous contributors.

A certain woman, who, by the way, was not a member of the aforementioned association, but in her way a clever and well meaning woman, approached one of New York's rich men in behalf of a fund for the support of a summer orchestra. This man was reputed to be generous and a lover of the arts. "Yes," he said, "I will gladly give toward the support of such concerts." Then as the woman unfolded her plans, and the man realized that drinks were to be sold in the auditorium, he at once withdrew his offer of aid. This rich man, generous and a music lover, was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and he declared he could not consistently aid any enterprise accompanied by the selling of beer, whisky and wine.

There are members in the Summer Night Orchestral Association that would also have opposed the sale of drinks at concerts under their auspices. Can this be one of the causes why no concerts were attempted? We, on the other hand, who recall the delightful concerts given on the Madison Square Roof Garden, and more recently at the St. Nicholas Garden, recognized, of course, that the sale of drinks contributed almost as much to the success of the entertainments as the music itself. The freedom to smoke and the privilege of ordering liquid refreshment certainly attracted men who would not have gone otherwise. To the credit of these men, they conducted themselves as becomes gentlemen, and, so far as we know, the managers of the concerts experienced no unpleasantness on account of the bar and smoking privileges. And the women—and what fine women were seen at these concerts!—appeared rather to enjoy the liberty which in our American communities is regarded as unconventional and in some quarters wicked. The audiences, particularly at the St. Nicholas Garden, were remarkable for their refinement and general air of prosperity, and, in spite of the rush out of town, gave evidence that many fairly well to do people could not get away. Among the great middle class the summer vacations extend from one week to one month, and so there will always be in the summer time in New York a great resident population that can afford to support an orchestra, provided that sort of entertainment is wanted. A society, it would seem, could do no more for music than such a population, and here again we come to our original argument of the 1,000 persons for each seven nights in the week eager to pay the paltry admission of 50 cents. Nightly this would amount to only $500, a trifling sum surely for a metropolitan place of amusement. When these figures are reached at the box office the summer orchestra will become a fixture.

A CHEAP, fourth rate musical comedy opens the season at the Metropolitan Opera House, the supposed home of grand opera in this country. But after a chicken show, what can New Yorkers expect? Certainly the metropolis cannot boast one building devoted to art that has not been desecrated at some time. Carrie Nation, in one of her vulgar, maudlin harangues, was permitted on a recent Sunday night to appear at Carnegie Hall, the home of the symphony concert.

CONCERT RECORD OF WORKS BY SOME OF OUR BEST AMERICAN COMPOSERS.

Paul Ambrose.

A Spring Song.....Mrs. B. H. Kilduff, Boston, Mass.
Crown of Love.....Harold L. Butler, Valparaiso, Ind.

Mrs. H. H. A. Beach.

The Night Sea, vocal duet.. } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles' pupils' recital, Van Buren Hall, Boston.
Scottish Cradle Song..... } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles' pupils' recital, Van Buren Hall, Boston.
Fairy Lullaby. Song..... } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles' pupils' recital, Van Buren Hall, Boston.
Ecstasy, with violin obligato.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.
Spring.....Miss Helen R. McDevitt, Boston, Mass.
My Star..... } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles, Southbridge, Mass.
Wandering Clouds Aria, from Schiller's Mary Stuart..... } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles, Southbridge, Mass.
The Night Sea, vocal duet.... } Misses Gertrude Creedon and Harriet E. Dougherty, Southbridge, Mass.
Menuet Italien, piano.....Arthur Foote, Salem, Mass.
The Years at the Spring.... } Mrs. Alice Holmes Owen, New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association, The Weirs.

Charles Dennée.

I Love Thee. Song.....Mrs. B. H. Kilduff, Boston, Mass.
Danse Humoristique..Detroit Conservatory of Music, Detroit, Mich.
Good-Night.....Blake H. Ozias, Valparaiso, Ind.
Good-Night.....Emma Damrosch, Valparaiso, Ind.

Arthur Foote.

The Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold..... } Mrs. Fish Griffin, Boston, Mass.
To Blossoms.....Ralph H. Davison, Springfield, Mass.
The Roses Are Dead... .Mrs. Van Valkenburgh, Birmingham, Ala.
Sweetheart.....Mrs. J. Franklin Thacker, Chicago, Ill.
Bedouin Song (men's voices).....Apollo Club, Minneapolis, Minn.
Bedouin Song (men's voices) } The Galveston Quartet Society, Galveston, Tex.
O Swallow, Swallow, Flying South..... } Miss Bostwick, Auburn, N. Y.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean.....David Bispham, New York, N. Y.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean.....David Bispham, Chicago, Ill.
I'm Wearin' Awa'. Jean.....Mrs. Walter Reed, Spokane, Wash.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean.....Mrs. Harry Reed, Springfield, Mass.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean.....Miss Lena Little, New Orleans, La.
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean..... } Mrs. Anna Colburn Plummer, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Come Live With Me (two-part song, women's voices) } The Cecilia, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Come Live With Me (two-part song, women's voices) } Ladies' Musical Club, Seattle, Wash.
Into the Silent Land..... } Ladies' Musical Club, Seattle, Wash.
Loch Lomond (arranged)... } J. Melville Harner, New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association, The Weirs.
On the Way to Kew.....Miss Grace Allen, St. Paul, Minn.
The March Wind.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.
The Night Has a Thousand Eyes...Wm. W. Walker, Boston, Mass.
Love Me if I Live.....Miss Bessie Munsey, Valparaiso, Ind.
My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose..... } Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Boston, Mass.
The Wanderer's Song.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.
The March Wind.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.

Jules Jordan.

A Life Lesson.....Miss Marie Steinkamp, Cleveland, Ohio
A Life Lesson.....Mme. Evta Kileski, New London, Conn.
A Life Lesson.....Mme. Evta Kileski, Lyme, Conn.

Margaret Ruthven Lang.

Irish Love Song.....Detroit Conservatory of Music, Detroit, Mich.
Irish Love Song.....Frederick Warren, Chicago, Ill.

Frank Lynes.

A Question.....Heathe Gregory, Newport, R. I.
When Love Is Done..Miss Harriet E. Dougherty, Southbridge, Mass.
Sweetheart, Sigh No More.. } Miss Gertrude Creedon, Southbridge, Mass.
Sweetheart, Sigh No More...Miss Gertrude Griffith, Valparaiso, Ind.
If All the Dreams.....Margaret Caas, Valparaiso, Ind.
Thy Picture.....Harry Goodhue, Cambridge, Mass.
Thy Picture.....Miss Lucy L. Hayes, Wollaston, Mass.
Thy Picture.....Stanton Hill, Cambridge, Mass.
Tell Her.....Robert G. Fraleigh, Everett, Mass.
My King.....Miss Marie Steinkamp, Cleveland, Ohio
My King.....M. A. Metcalf, Winter Hill, Mass.
My King.....Mrs. Walter C. Bailey, Somerville, Mass.
My King.....W. H. Stedman, Boston, Mass.

Edna Rosalind Park.

The Nightingale and the Rose..... } Mme. Evta Kileski, New London, Conn.
The Nightingale and the Rose.....Mme. Evta Kileski, Lyme, Conn.
The Nightingale and the Rose....Mrs. B. H. Kilduff, Boston, Mass.
Love.....Mrs. B. H. Kilduff, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Clara Kathleen Rogers.

The Clover Blossoms..... } Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles, Van Buren Hall, Boston.
Jennie Kissed Me (from Folksongs)..... } Mme. Evta Kileski, New London, Conn.
Jennie Kissed Me (from Folksongs)..... } Mme. Evta Kileski, Lyme, Conn.
Irish Love Song..... } Mme. Evta Kileski, Lowell, Mass.
Jennie Kissed Me (from Folksongs)..... } Mme. Evta Kileski, Lowell, Mass.
The Years at the Spring.... } Miss Esther B. White, Lyceum Theatre, Morristown, N. J.
Ah, Love, but a Day.....Hallett Gilberte, Boston, Mass.

Thomas G. Shepard.

The Lass that Loves a Sailor..... } Galveston Quartet Society, Galveston, Tex.
Me, a Cycle of Songs, from A Child's Garden of Verses..... } Mr. and Mrs. Ericsson Bushnell, New York.

MADAME DE VERE IN AUSTRALIA.—The criticisms from far away Australia about the singing of Madame De Vere are all sincerely enthusiastic. Here are three additional reports:

"AIDA" AT HER MAJESTY'S.

A remarkably fine performance of Verdi's opera was given at the above theatre last night, and the large audience present was quick to show its hearty appreciation. Madame De Vere, who for the first time impersonated the heroine, sang most artistically, and acted with great power. Her agonized supplication, "Numi Pieta," which concludes the first scene of Acts I. and II., was most feelingly delivered, and in the solo of Act III., "O Cieli Azzuri," her cultured and sympathetic style came into delightful evidence, while the exquisitely melodious music of the closing scene was given with fine effect.—The Age, Melbourne.

A truly magnificent performance of Verdi's great work met with an enthusiastic reception from a crowded house in Her Majesty's Theatre last night. The event of the evening was the first appearance in the name part of Madame De Vere. Her conception of Aida must be praised as highly poetic; sympathetic in appearance, graceful and passionate in action, and artistic in singing. Her voice was equal to all the requirements of the very exacting part, ringing victoriously over the clamorous ensembles, yet sweet and melodious when plaintive or caressing As it should be, all through the opera the interest centred in her impersonation of Aida, and she scored a great and undisputed success.—Herald, Melbourne.

"Aida" was given by the Italian Opera Company last night at Her Majesty's Theatre, with two important changes in the cast. Madame De Vere, in the title role, made a remarkable success; her singing was refined, her voice pure and constantly correct in intonation and her acting and comprehension of the part were bright and intelligent.—The Argus, Melbourne.

Madame De Vere is the prima donna of the J. C. Williamson Italian opera company.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY.—J. Armour Galloway, the distinguished vocal teacher, has returned to the city after a ten weeks' rest in the White Mountains, and is already a busy man with his classes.

The recital given at Carnegie Hall last season by his pupils will be remembered for bringing out so many brilliant singers. In order to give his advanced students more of an opportunity to be heard this season, Mr. Galloway will give a series of three public recitals, as well as one private musical each week. It is safe to say that their concerts will be looked forward to with pleasure by music lovers.

Richard Strauss' new opera "Feuersnoth" is in trouble in Vienna. The censor thinks that there is a risky scene at the finale which reminds him of sundry French vaudevilles. Vienna is a very moral town.

E. M. BOWMAN WINS HONORS IN MAINE.

CAPTURES PRIZE AT "SPELLING BEE," AND GETS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE S. I. A. A.

IT is well once in a while for the musician to forget all about his music and go in for the enjoyment of other intellectual pastimes.

Among the musical people who have summer homes at Squirrel Island, Me., is Edward M. Bowman, organist-pianist, teacher and conductor of the Temple Choir, Brooklyn, who, as announced last week, has returned to the city. Many interesting musical events were planned by Mr. Bowman during the vacation, but as he is a wise and all-around educated man he receives and accepts invitations for other forms of entertainment and instruction. The Lewiston Journal, in a recent letter about summer festivities on Squirrel Island, included an interesting paragraph about a "spelling bee," at which Mr. Bowman carried off one of the prizes. A musician who is a good speller is a wonder.

To the friends who afterward congratulated Mr. Bowman the musician explained that he was born in Vermont, where they were raised to such things. Mrs. Brooks was the winner of the other prize.

The experience was a pleasant renewal of Mr. Bowman's boyhood days. Professor Thomas, of the University of Ohio, gave out words for two hours and the fun was great.

The same letter, published in the Lewiston Journal, referred to the memorial service to the late Mrs. William P. Frye, at which Miss Bessie Bowman sang beautifully.

Mr. Bowman also takes an interest in athletics, and at the third annual meeting of the Squirrel Island Athletic Association, held at the Squirrel Island Casino, a fortnight ago, he was elected president. The other officers chosen at the same time are: Secretary, Alex. Doyle, New York; treasurer, Robert T. Whitehouse, Portland; vice-presidents, Hon. W. P. Frye, of Lewiston; A. H. Davenport, of Boston; Edward Stanwood, Sr., of Boston.

TO ASSIST MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER.—Mrs. Stella Hadden-Alexander is making a short concert tour before reopening her studios in Carnegie Hall, October 1. Tomorrow (September 19) she will play at Lebanon, Pa., and from there she will go on to Ohio, where she will spend a week at Catawba Island, Lake Erie, her parents' country place. As her assistant teacher this coming season Mrs. Alexander will have Miss Mary E. Dickson, who has been for several years one of the leading teachers in the Illinois College of Music, at Jackson, Ill. Miss Dickson has in the past been a pupil of Mrs. Alexander, and during this past summer has been having special advanced work with Mrs. Alexander, all in preparation for her labors at the Hadden-Alexander studios this autumn and winter. Miss Dickson has taken the complete Clavier course at the Clavier Summer School under Mr. Virgil himself. Miss Dickson is a thoroughly trained teacher, and is prepared to give the Hadden-Alexander pupils their foundational work in technic.

MME. DORIA DEVINE RESUMES TEACHING.—Mme. Lena Doria Devine, after a few days spent in Buffalo, concludes the summer's vacation spent delightfully among the most noted health resorts of the West. Madame Devine, one of New York's busiest vocal teachers, has invariably taught here throughout the entire season. This year her health necessitated a complete rest. With her husband she has traveled extensively, with the best results. She will return to her numerous pupils entirely recovered and ready to resume lessons, Monday, September 23, at her studio, 136 Fifth avenue.

By the advice of his physicians, August Wilhelmj will discontinue his teaching in London, where he has been successfully engaged for some years past.

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Musical . . People.

Michael F. Lambert, Jr., a 'cellist, has become a member f the faculty of the Detroit Conservatory of Music.

Mrs. Mark Helm will teach harmony this season in the usic department of the Eastern Indiana Normal School.

Marion B. Green, a basso cantante, of Dubuque, Ia., has eturned to his home after an interesting recital tour in his tate

Mme. Kitty Berger, the harp-zither virtuoso, gave a re-ital at the Tappan Zee House, Nyack, N. Y., on Au-ust 26.

Miss Mary Carroll, a young violinist, whose home is at Vaterloo, Ia., has played at a number of concerts at Vestern resorts this summer.

Miss Rosa Wiedhorn, a well-known musician from ienna, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Morse, of rident avenue, Winthrop, Mass.

Mrs. Hamlen-Ruland, contralto soloist at the Lafayette venue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, sang recently at concert given at Falmouth, Mass.

Miss Alice Ladue, a daughter of A. Y. Ladue, of 126 afayette avenue, Detroit, has just arrived in Paris, where he will study with one of the vocal teachers.

A new operetta, "The Lovers of Provence," by Robert . Barnet, of Boston, and Charles Eugene Hamlin, of angor, Me., is soon to be presented at Bangor.

Frank M. Church is preparing to assume his duties as e new musical director of Mrs. Ball's finishing school Chattanooga, Tenn.

Miss Emily Elliott, a violinist, of Dorchester, Mass., has layed at summer resorts in New York and Massachusetts uring the months of July and August.

Mrs. Mary Dean Jarvis, Miss Anita Rio, Mrs. Sarah ickey-Sampson and Frederick Martin were the soloists at e Hampton Beach (N. H.) Music Festival.

H. P. Ecker, the organist of Carnegie Music Hall at llegheny, Pa., is planning some interesting features for e recitals to be given during the autumn and winter.

The pupils of Miss Cecile Louise Castegnier gave a usicale on September 10, at the home of Mrs. Albert ymington, at Monmouth Beach, N. J., for the benefit of e Monmouth Memorial Hospital.

Miss Mabelle Monaghan, assisted by Miss Jane Marple cKellar, violinist; Mrs. Effie Conrey Betts, pianist, and eorge Byron Heath, dramatic reader, gave a concert on ugust 22, at the Owen Hotel, Campobello, N. B.

Three Americans have won vocal honors in Paris and l three will sing in grand opera. Their names and cities are Miss Lucie Lenoir, of Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Elizabeth Parkinson, and Miss Margaret Clair, of Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Marie Frances Whitney has returned to her native town, Kansas City, after completing her musical studies abroad and also in Chicago. Miss Whitney is a violinist, and a daughter of B. R. Whitney, of Kansas City, Mo.

After seven years the Detroit Institute of Music closed its doors, and the director, Miss Kate H. Jacobs, accompanied by her sister, Miss Isabella Jacobs, will sail for Europe. They expect to spend a year in travel and study.

Miss Kate Vannah, a musician, author and composer, of Gardiner, Me., has recently made a musical setting for a poem by Mrs. Emily Selinger entitled "O Night Unforgotten." The song has been dedicated to Miss McGregor, of Portland, Me.

The Utica, N. Y., Conservatory of Music has issued a handsome prospectus for the season 1901-1902. Edward B. Fleck and Robert J. Hughes are the directors of the institution. Alfred H. Jay is the secretary. The institution is finely equipped with an up to date faculty and methods of instruction.

A series of violin recitals were given this summer at Green Acre, Eliot, Me., by Clarence De Vaux-Royer, at which he was assisted by Edward B. Kinney, pianist; Edward H. Brigham, baritone; Miss Grace Mae Clare, soprano, and Miss Reba E. Cornett, soprano. The Misses Clare and Cornett are pupils of Emma Thursby.

KARL DOERING.—Karl Doering, the well-known instructor in voice culture, reopens his studio at Steinert Hall, 162 Boylston street, Boston, on Monday, September 30, and his time will be quickly filled up by those who want to study and prepare themselves for opera and oratorio. Herr Doering sang recently at the Saengerbund concert in Manchester, and the New England Staaten-Zeitung and Manchester Mirror published the following criticisms of his work:

Among the soloists Mr. Doering, the tenor from Boston, took first place. He possesses a most excellent voice, and the interpretation of his selections was exemplary. Mr. Doering is a true Wagner singer, and it would be a source of greatest pleasure to us to see and hear Mr. Doering as Siegfried or Lohengrin on one of the finest stages here or in Europe. He was the favorite among the public as well as the singers of the New England Saengerbund. New England Staaten Zeitung.

The success of the concert was also due in part to the excellent work of the soloists. Karl Doering, tenor, of Boston, won his audience by his dramatic and forceful renderings of the delightful German songs. He sang with intense earnestness and his enunciation was so clear and his interpretation so natural that one unfamiliar with the German language could fully judge the sentiments expressed. His voice was correct as to pitch and capable of much variation, this power being called out in his different selections. It was of great strength also, but never lost its pleasing quality.—Manchester Mirror.

JESSIE SHAY RETURNS HOME.—Miss Jessie Shay returned to her New York studio yesterday (September 17), and at once begins her work. This young pianist expects to do her share of recital and concert playing. Miss Shay passed her vacation at Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn.

MUSIC IN BROOKLYN.

THE Claassen Musical Institute, at 341 Jefferson avenue, reopened on Monday, the 16th, with Miss Gertrude H. Wagner, the first assistant, in charge. Arthur Claassen, the director of the institute, did not return from Europe until the day after, which was yesterday. Mr. Claassen will form a class in harmony in October, also classes for ensemble playing. Students from the Claassen Institute will play this season at the concerts in Brooklyn by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will again be given under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Institute and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. Ensemble numbers, of course, will only be played by the students from the Claassen Institute, and this educational feature is likely to prove interesting as well as stimulating to other ambitious piano pupils.

Miss Minnie Topping, the pianist and teacher, has returned to Brooklyn from Canada, where she passed the summer at her old home at Galt, teaching in summer classes and resting. This young artist has her eye turned Manhattanward. She at once resumes her advanced studies with Richard Burmeister. She played before a manager last Saturday, and now announces several appearances in joint recitals. Coaching for singers and accompanying and her teaching will keep Miss Topping fairly busy during the autumn. Her Brooklyn home is at 527 Putnam avenue.

Hugo Troetschel, the organist and choir director of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church on Schermerhorn street, returned two weeks ago from his vacation, passed with his family up in Sullivan County. To Mr. Troetschel belongs the honor of giving the first musical event of the autumn season in Brooklyn—an organ recital reported in THE MUSICAL COURIER last week. Mr. Troetschel has already begun his teaching at his studio. A large number of piano pupils are enrolled. Later on he will announce his series of organ concerts, which in the past seasons have been enjoyable and instructive musical evenings. The church where Mr. Troetschel plays reopened with regular musical services on Sunday, September 8.

Mme. Berta Grosse-Thomason has returned from the Adirondacks and is busy enrolling classes at her piano school at 340 Fulton street. W. E. Bassett will again direct the instruction in theory, harmony and composition. Madame Thomason will receive a limited number of pupils at her residence, 61 Tompkins place, and once a week she will go to Morristown, N. J., where she has a

Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

AMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
emporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
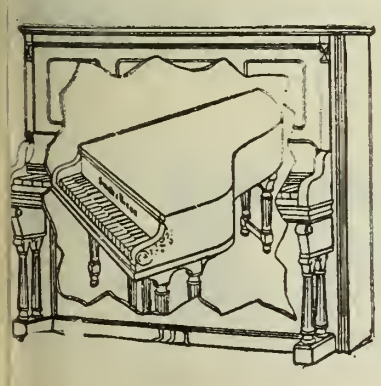
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production.
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

fine class of advanced pupils. Madame Thomason will give a number of concerts this season.

Mrs. William E. Beardsley will reopen her studio in the Knapp Mansion the first week in October. She is now in the Adirondacks with her daughter Constance. The Beardsleys spent the month of July in the old summer home of the family at Milford, Conn. Then they went to Canada, and returned to the United States by the way of Niagara Falls. They visited the Pan-American at Buffalo, and on these travels Mrs. Beardsley and her daughter were accompanied by Dr. Beardsley.

Louis Koemmenich has returned from his vacation up at Lake George. He is back at his work, and with his teaching and conducting of the weekly rehearsals of the Brooklyn Saengerbund and other societies is as busy as a man should be.

Carl Venth is back into harness again. He is enlarging his violin school at 14 Seventh avenue, an excellent location for such an institution. Concert work will also engage some of Mr. Venth's time this season.

Many of the singers and instrumentalists who are popular in Brooklyn will again appear at the concerts of the Brooklyn Institute this season. It would be unfair to make adverse criticisms of the prospectus issued by the music department, as programs are only announced in outline, when at all. Among the artists who are to make their first appearance before the Institute are Harold Bauer, the pianist, who will be the soloist at the third concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Miss Estelle Liebling, soprano, will sing in "The Messiah" at the Christmas concert with the Brooklyn Oratorio Society. Whitney Tew, the baritone, will sing in "The Messiah," and also at a violin recital with Miss Anna Otten. Miss Helen Niebush sings with the Kneisels in November. Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the Boston pianist and composer, will play with the same quartet in December. Mrs. Louise Scherhey, the contralto, will sing at the concert of the Brooklyn Saengerbund to be given at the Academy of Music on December 9, under the auspices of the Institute. Electa Gifford, the soprano, will sing at a song and 'cello recital in November. Gregory Hast, the tenor, and Mme. Suzanne Adams will appear in joint recital. Miss Augusta Cottlow will play at one of the concerts in the Young People's Symphony series. Mme. Milka Ternina is announced as the soloist for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn. The date is November 8.

Some of the well-known artists who have again been engaged by the Institute include Mrs. Katharine Fisk, contralto; Gwilym Miles, baritone; Avice Boxall, harpist; Paul Dufault, tenor; Herbert Witherspoon, baritone; Mrs. Hissem de Moss, soprano, and Theodore Van Yorx, tenor. Dr. Henry G. Hanchett will give two series of analytical piano recitals before the Institute. Verdi's Requiem will be sung at the spring concert by the Brooklyn Oratorio Society. The Brooklyn Arion, Arthur Claassen conductor, will give a concert before the Institute in the spring, and that will make the fourth time the Arions have sung under Institute auspices.

Miss Bessie May Bowman resumed her lessons in voice culture and piano at 281 Sterling place on September 16. Miss Bowman has issued neat cards referring applicants to her vocal instructors, Mme. Luisa Cappiani, Oscar Saenger, Mme. Alice Garrigue Mott and John Sauvage, and also to her piano instructor, E. M. Bowman.

AUDRAN'S OPERAS IN NEW YORK.

EDMOND AUDRAN, who died in Paris recently, was the composer of two operas that were especially successful in New York and of four that found more or less favor everywhere. In this city both "Olivette" and "The Mascot" acquired a popularity that almost equaled the vogue of some of the more famous Gilbert & Sullivan cycle, and their enduring hold on the public was by no means confined to New York. They were liked all over the country and they are regularly sung to this day by what are called the repertory or cheaper priced touring or summer companies which do not go to the expense of buying new works on which there are royalties to be paid.

Both of these operettas have had in the local theatres more or less interesting histories, and some of their original interpreters have been famous. Later works by Audran were tried here and found less favor, although two were heard under circumstances that made them interesting. In "Miss Helyett," Mrs. Leslie Carter, who had begun her career the year before as a serious actress, tried her hand temporarily at comic opera. In "La Poupée," which had met with some success in Paris and which became a furore in London, Anna Held, who had previously been a singer of couplets in the music halls, made her first more ambitious step. In neither case was the experiment entirely successful. Mrs. Carter returned to the drama to find her real triumphs there, while Anna Held found that musical farce was more suited to her talents than out and out operetta.

It was with "Olivette" that Audran's American fame began, and the opera was more successful in this country than in any other. It never enjoyed the same vogue in Paris or in London. The version used here first was made by the Englishman Farnie for D'Oyley Carte in London. The Comley-Barton Opera Company had been formed to sing "Lawn Tennis," a musical farce by the late Benjamin Wolf, of Boston. In the company were John Howson, an admirable comedian now dead; Digby Bell, Hetty Tracey, a beautiful, incompetent, and a thin, black haired girl, who had studied singing abroad and was named Marie Jansen. The company was singing at the Bijou, and in December, 1880, the work originally produced at the Park Theatre, had about exhausted its popularity and it became necessary to provide some successor.

Audran's "The Wedding of Olivette" had just been sung with success in Paris and an English version had been made by Farnie for the use of D'Oyley Carte in London. That was offered to Comley & Barton, who accepted it and who engaged Catherine Lewis to sing the leading role. She had made her greatest previous success in an adaptation of Genee's "Der Seekadet," acted at Daly's Theatre as "The Royal Middy." She went to the Bijou and on Christmas Eve, 1880, "Olivette" made the muse of M. Audran known here.

The operetta was an immediate success. The lithe, black haired girl from New England could sing, so in the part of a cabin boy she took the air in the first act that should have been sung by the Countess, as Hetty Tracey, who was acting the part, was very pretty but had no voice whatever. In the opera nothing else made such a success as Catherine Lewis' dancing of the farandole in the second act. She gave an exhibition of athletic abandon such as had never been seen here before, and has indeed been equaled only by Carmencita. The town went wild over that dance, and the fact that she was compelled to repeat it several times every night did not in the least diminish her enthusiasm. She was then in the prime of her talents and beauty, and the success she made was readily comprehensible.

The opera was an experiment and had not been mounted with any great outlay; now its managers saw that it was certain to last the winter at least. So it was transferred to the Fifth Avenue on January 31, 1881, and there was a great expenditure for costumes and scenery. Then the operetta started on a new lease of life. It ran for the entire season, and the rival performance given at the Bijou after the original company withdrew to the Fifth Avenue did not apparently interfere with its success. Both companies played to large houses, and Selina Dolaro, who was the Olivette at the Bijou, found her admirers, although her performance was never comparable in spirit or humor to Miss Lewis'. In the production at the Bijou, Fanny Wentworth, who came here as a monologue performer and had previously been at Tony Pastor's, sang the Countess.

The opera was not copyrighted. All that could be protected was Farnie's English version. As a consequence there were productions on all sides, although both of those given first in this city were excellent. The English text was dull enough, and it was not difficult to improve on the intensely British humor of Farnie's puns; but in spite of its stupidity, some of the phrases from "Olivette" survive to-day. Still heard are "Bob Up Serenely" and "Now Is the Time for Disappearing," both taken from a song of Coquelicot sung by Digby Bell in the first performance and later made irresistibly droll by James Peakes.

For two years the Comley-Barton Company sang nothing long but "Olivette," although an attempt was made with "Madame Favart" to repeat the same success. Dora Wiley, Richard Golden and again Mr. Howson, now became Miss Lewis' companions. Burlesques and condensed versions of the opera were given, and at Tony Pastor's it was Lillian Russell who impersonated Olivette. The ease with which the opera could be presented increased the number of companies so rapidly that the whole country soon heard "Olivette." The work has been revived here from time to time, and was last heard here when Dorothy Morton took the part several years ago at the Herald Square Theatre. Lillian Russell was a slim girl when she wore the jersey costume of the last act at the old Tony Pastor Theatre down on Broadway. None of

A NEW DEPARTMENT.

The Oliver Ditson Company has instituted a new department in which music teachers generally will be very much interested. Realizing the fact that much of the so-called teaching music of to-day is practically worthless, and that a discrimination is necessary in the choice of material which can only be had by an examination of a mass of music that many teachers are too busy to give, this house has established, under the direction of a teacher of twenty years' experience, a Teacher's Department, which will be entirely devoted to searching out, preparing, and supplying every want of all classes and grades of teachers. It purposes aiding the teacher in securing such music and other teaching helps as he may need. Preparations for its establishment have been making for the past four years and it is already supplied with unusual helps.

A feature which will be given particular attention is the answers to inquiries. Questions relating to teaching problems are welcomed and a long teaching experience will be drawn upon in their answering. The immense resources of the Oliver Ditson Company will be at the disposal of the department and the result cannot fail to be advantageous to the teacher. "Teaching Pieces and How to Teach Them" will be sent to all who send a request to the department. It is a series of ninety-six page graded selections of teaching music so described as to give the teacher a clear idea of the value of each piece for teaching purposes.

Write to the Teacher's Department, Oliver Ditson Company, Boston, Mass., for any information you may desire.

A436

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, McCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John J. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. EVANS VON KLENNER
School of Vocal Music,
Voice Culture, Style and Repertoire in Four Languages.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
RESUMES TEACHING AT NEW-RESIDENCE STUDIO,
230 WEST 52d STREET,
SEPTEMBER 18.

VAN YORX Tenor
6 E. 17 St.
NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

her successors in the role ever approached Catherine Lewis.

There was naturally great competition for the next operetta from Audran. This was "The Mascot," which was even more popular than its predecessor. It came the next year. Unlike "Olivette," it was a success all over Europe with the single exception of London. Here it was sung by the Wilbur Opera Company, an organization that is still in existence in the smaller towns, at the Bijou Theatre, on May 5, 1881. It had been given previously in Boston by the Norcross Company, which hurried to this city in an effort to produce it before the Bijou performance. But the attempt failed.

The last move to prevent the Bijou performance was the arrest or rather restraint of one of the actors, who was kept from playing because the managers of the opposition company declared that he was under contract to them. This move almost accomplished its purpose, and it looked for a while as if there would be no singer for the restrained actor's part. But luckily an amateur who had attended some of the rehearsals thought that he could get through the part of Frederick and he did it after a fashion. In spite of this drawback the opera was a complete triumph. The graceful, melodious music charmed the audience and the fate of the play was never a moment in doubt. In the cast were Harry Brown and Lilly West, his wife. Mr. Brown appeared here last with the Bostonians. He was the first of a long series of famous Lorenzos. In the list were Nat Goodwin, Henry Dixey, Mézieres and some less well known to fame.

The list of Bettinas, which ended so far as this city is concerned two years ago at the American Theatre with Cissy Loftus, included Selina Dolaro, Paola Marie, Sadie Martinot, Camille d'Arville, Theo and Louise Searle. The as succeeded in the role Emma Howson, who sang the part here at the first performance. Emma Howson was the original Josephine in "Pinafore" in England, and came back to her own country just before the production of Audran's opera. She retired from the stage soon after, and is now a successful music teacher in this city. She was a sister of John Howson, who was the first De Merrimac in "Olivette." Lilly West, as she called herself at that time, was the Fiammetta.

John Brand was the Beppo. A later performer who became popular in this role was William Carleton, who sang it at the Star Theatre in a later revival with Dora Wiley as the turkey tender. A Bettina who never got to New York, although she was liked on the road, was Fay Templeton, who used to sing the part in the performances given by her own opera company with her mother as Fiammetta.

When the work was sung by a company at Tony Pastor's the climax used to come in the final act, when an actress named Maggie Dugan used to kick her slipper into the gallery. Susie Kirwin, who made her first appearance at the Bijou during the opera's original performances, afterward became the owner of the Wilbur Opera Company, and one of her favorite programs on the road used to be "The Mascot," with living pictures between the acts.

As Audran did not write comic operas rapidly enough to supply the demand created by the success of his two noted works, some of his older compositions had to be drawn upon to supply "new" operas by him. One of these was "The Snake Charmer," sung first at the Bijou Theatre, with Selina Dolaro and a young woman from a downtown variety theatre in the leading roles. This young woman was known as Lillian Russell, and had attracted attention already by her voice and her beauty when she sang in burlesques on "Patience" and other operettas. The work was sung on October 29, 1881, and announced as new. But, as a matter of fact, it was the first of the composer's operas to meet with favor, and was performed at Marseilles in 1878. Besides the two women mentioned, there were in the cast Blanche Chapman, who had been playing in previous performances of "The Mascot," and Louise Paullin.

Miss Russell's real career began with her appearance as the snake charmer. She wore a gown beautifully embroidered with bead serpents and delighted the audience by her fresh voice. After that October night, twenty years ago, she was always a dominating figure in her profession. At the first performance she quite took the honors from Miss Dolaro, but there was evidently no hard feeling between the star nearing the end of her career and the young beginner.

"The Snake Charmer" ran for several months, but it was not a great success, and when the company returned to "Olivette" Miss Russell was the Countess and sang her waltz song in the first act beautifully. She sang in those days with more taste than is found usually in comic opera, and she could have attempted more ambitious work and succeeded as well as some of her countrywomen who have sung in grand opera, but it was perhaps better to have made such a career as she did in comic opera. "Le Grand Mogul," as this opera was called in French, was afterward sung at the Star Theatre in French by a company that Maurice Grau had imported.

It was not until Audran wrote "Serment l'Amour" that another of his operas was heard here. This was presented as the others had been with two simultaneous performances. The McCaull Company at Wallack's gave the work on May 29, 1886, with De Wolf Hopper, Signor Perugini, Bertha Ricci and Mathilde Cottrelly in the leading roles. Two nights later Roland Reed, Laura Clement and Augusta Roche appeared in the same opera at the Bijou. At Wallack's the work was called "The Crowing Hen," while "The Bridal Trip" was its title at the Bijou. The McCaull Company had a better version; but there were no elements of popularity in the piece, which soon dropped out of sight. In May, 1887, Audran's "Gillette de Narbonne" was sung at the Terrace Garden in German, and in the cast was Adolfine Zimaier Modjeska.

The latter works of the composer given here are recent enough to be familiar. "La Cigale," which was a London success and had little vogue in Paris, was sung at the Garden Theatre with Lillian Russell in the leading role in 1892, and the only other productions of importance were "Miss Helyett" and "La Poupée."—New York Sun.

SOUSA'S FAREWELL.

Concert Next Sunday Night—The Band to Sail for Liverpool Next Wednesday.

IN the Metropolitan Opera House next Sunday night John Philip Sousa and his band will make their last appearance for many months before a New York audience. This will be a grand farewell concert on the eve of the band's departure for England. The following specially arranged program will be presented:

Overture, Sakuntala.....Goldmark
Duet for cornets, Introduction and Polacca.....Eilenberg
Messrs. Clarke and Rogers.
Suite, Three Quotations.....Sousa
The King of France went up the hill
With twenty thousand men;
The King of France came down the hill,
And ne'er went up again.
And I, too, was born in Arcadia.
Nigger in a woodpile.
Trombone solo, Love Thoughts.....Pryor
Arthur Pryor.
Grand Scene and Ensemble, Andrea Chenier.....Giordano
Fourteenth Rhapsody.....Liszt
Soprano solo, Linda di Chamounix.....Donizetti
Miss Blanche Duffield.
Serenade, Rococo.....Meyer-Helmund
March, The Invincible Eagle (new).....Sousa
American Fantaisie.....Herbert

The soloists next Sunday night will be Miss Blanche Duffield, soprano; Herbert L. Clarke, cornet; Walter B. Rogers, cornet, and Arthur Pryor, trombone.

Next Wednesday Sousa's Band will sail for Liverpool on the St. Louis.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR., RESUMES.—Mr. Buck has issued the following:

MR. DUDLEY BUCK, JR., has resumed his lessons
at his vocal studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York City, and also at 34a Sidney Place, Brooklyn
(Mondays and Thursdays).

Mr. Buck will be pleased to meet those contemplating vocal culture on Tuesdays and Fridays in New York, and on Mondays and Thursdays in Brooklyn, between 3 and 5 o'clock.

Miss Emma Thursby has just returned to the city, and for the next two weeks will be busy selecting pupils for the season, which will begin October 1.

New York College of Music,
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.

Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and all branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.

All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction in harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing and free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.

Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

Mme. Katharine Fisk.

FOREMOST CONTRALTO IN AMERICA,

WITH RECORD OF BRILLIANT EUROPEAN TRIUMPHS.

Transcontinental Recital Tour, Season 1901-1902.

ORATORIO, FESTIVAL AND CONCERT DATES NOW BOOKING.

"Everywhere she appears the judgment is the same; unstinted praise for her rich, beautiful voice, dramatic intensity, vocal art, and musical intelligence."—PHILIP HALE in Musical Record.

Sole Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. WHITNEY TEW

In America
November and
December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

MOZART AND HIS MANUSCRIPTS.

A VERY interesting chapter could be written, says Charles Malherbe, about the autographs of great composers. Why are some preserved, some destroyed? How many works have entirely disappeared! When a piece has been engraved, the manuscript on which it was traced by the composer has no value except that of a souvenir or curiosity, or, if the author is famous, of a relic. But when the piece has not been engraved or published, then the loss of the manuscript is an irreparable loss. Great masters like Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert, Mendelssohn, how many have died, leaving unpublished a third, a half, even three-fourths, of their labors!

Certain artists have been more unfortunate than others. Who would think that not a line exists from the hand of Lully? Why should Molière and he suffer the same fate? Not a verse of the former, not a note of the latter survive. Colasse and Lalouette, his pupils, worked on the scores of the master and are accused of occasionally inserting in their own work airs which he had disdained. Did they destroy them purposely to hide the theft? Who knows?

J. Sebastian Bach locked up his manuscripts in a cupboard, which must have been a great one, so numerous are they. Only a few were published during his life. After his death they were divided between his sons Philip Emanuel and Wilhelm Friedmann. The former, a man of order, kept them carefully with his own, and at his death they were sold by auction at Hamburg, most of them passing into the possession of the Library of Berlin, of which they are not the least treasure. On the other hand Wilhelm Friedmann, a scamp, a gambler, a drunkard, a debauchee, dissipated his paternal heritage; he sold for a glass of wine a cantata or a fugue, and if the purchaser had no scruples he could inscribe it with his own name, and, destroying the original, exhibit the copy as his own. This is a probable explanation of the disappearance of some of the great cantor's works.

Händel left his manuscripts to a friend, who left them to the library of the King of England. Hence we never find on the market a page by the author of "The Messiah."

Cherubini and Mendelssohn were careful, fastidious men, and their papers were not neglected; they have come, in almost perfect integrity, to increase the wealth of the Library at Berlin, those of Mendelssohn presented by the family; those of Cherubini purchased after they had been refused by France, who declined to pay out a few thousand francs for them. The families of Hérold and of Auber preserve the most part of the manuscripts of their ancestors. Boieldieu possessed scarce one of his works. Rossini distributed his among his friends. Meyerbeer buried his unpublished works in a chest that had to remain unopened a certain number of years; when the time expired his heirs found it more simple not to open it. Beethoven lived in the midst of incurable disorder; when one of his pieces was published he cared little for the autograph, the manuscript remained in the hands of the publisher, or of the person to whom it had been dedicated, or the pupil who had played it to Beethoven's satisfaction. He left many school exercises and youthful pieces, which, forgotten in some corner of his abode, were saved by the little value he set on them. His still unpublished works, heaps of note books to which he confided his ideas, precious testimonials of his daily labor, all were dispersed after his death by public auction. And at what prices. One could buy a sonata for a hundred sous or a symphony for 15 francs.

The manuscripts of Mozart owe their preservation to his poverty; they represented all his fortune. Mozart, it is known, lived and died poor. He might have made some money when he appeared as an infant prodigy in France, England or Holland, but the receipts of these performances went into the paternal pocket. Later he defrayed with difficulty the expenses of his household; he gave concerts (called in those days "academies"), and he gave lessons. For his works, while they gave him some notoriety, did not bring wealth; they were usually badly paid; they were diffused rather by copies than by engraving; the copyist and the impresario had an understanding by which each of them gained more than the author.

It is heartbreaking to read the correspondence of Mozart during the last two years of his life. He is ceaselessly asking his friend Puechberg to lend him money, and his repeated requests, made in a tone of supplication, betray the needs that were pressing him. The banker Puechberg generously advanced him 25 florins at a time, about $12; he inscribed the sum carefully on the debtor's letter as a kind of memorandum, and by a strange irony of fate these letters to-day are worth ten times as much as the sum lent. Let us recall the death of Mozart, the funeral by torchlight during an icy December night, the flinging into the common pit for want of a few crowns to buy a grave, the tempest of snow beating down on the city of Vienna and covering the earth for days with its white mantle, the death of the grave digger, lastly the impossibility of finding the place where the corpse had been laid. Thus of what was Mozart, at least of what was the material part of his being, all had disappeared, all had vanished in the nameless dust of the cemetery.

Mozart's widow quitted Vienna for Prague where recollections of her husband remained vivid and where she could find support. At first she was assisted on many sides. At Vienna, in 1795, there was organized for her benefit at the Burg Theatre a performance of "Titus," where her sister, Alosia Weber, played the role of Sextus, and where, during an entr'acte, Beethoven played a concerto by Mozart. At Prague in 1796 she gave a concert, where, as the "clou" of the program, the first air of Papageno in the "Magic Flute" had for its interpreter her FRAGMENT OF THE PIANO SONATA, OP. 2, NO. 1, COMPOSED AT THE AGE OF SEVEN.

Mon très cher Père!

Vienne ce 10 d'avril 1784.

Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — tu ne peux pas croire combien j'ai à faire avec mon temps. — Depuis mon séjour à Vienne, j'ai fait trois souscriptions académiques. Elles m'ont rapporté beaucoup d'argent. — Mon académie au théâtre a été très bien remplie. — J'ai donné 2 grands concertos et un quintette qui a été applaudi jusqu'à l'enthousiasme; — j'ai joué moi-même le premier, et pour le dernier j'ai improvisé; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. — Je te prie, ne me sois pas fâché que je ne t'ai pas écrit depuis si longtemps; — j'ai aussi joué 1 oboe, 1 clarinette, 1 cornet, 1 fagotto, et le piano forte; — j'aurais voulu que tu fusses et que tu entendisses! — et combien j'ai regretté que tu ne fusses pas là! — Du reste, je suis très satisfait de mon séjour ici. — Je suis sûr que je gagnerai beaucoup d'argent. — Je crois que tu as reçu la lettre que je t'ai écrite. — Et n'oublie pas de me donner bientôt de tes nouvelles. —

Votre fils
Mozart

TRANSLATION.

VIENNA, April 10, 1784.

MY VERY DEAR FATHER—I beg that you will not be annoyed at me for not having written for a long time. You know how much I have to do with my time. I did myself a great deal of honor by my three subscription academies; my academy also in the theatre was very successful. I have written two grand concertos and a quintet which won extraordinary applause. I myself regard it as the best I have written in my whole life. It consists of one oboe, one clarinet, one horn, one bassoon and a piano. I wished that you could have heard it! And how well it was performed! For the rest, I am ashamed to confess that, at last, I was tired of merely playing, and it is no little honor for me that my hearers never are so!

With respect, MOZART.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals.

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

very happy in selling in 1796 to the music publisher André, almost all the autographs that she possessed for the sum of 1,000 ducats or $2,400, a mean price if one thinks that it involved not only the manuscripts themselves but the property of the works represented by these manuscripts. The collection was without doubt incomplete. Already some pieces were wanting, those of his whole youth.

Das Traumbild (Vision), Composed at Prague in November, 1787.

Marie Anne Mozart, afterward Frau Von Sonnenberg, related that her brother cared little for them as he grew up in years and fame; besides he had begun to catalogue his works on a little note book till February, 1784, thus neglecting 400 pieces, more or less important. Finally, his sister adds, there was little order in his musical papers, which he left lying all around and on the piano, papers often taken by his friends and kept by copyists. After this first loss, the mass of papers was no less than 280 numbers, which were then classed and authenticated, often with an approximation to the date. It was a regular inventory of which André took advantage, for he published for the first time a good number of pieces previously completely unknown. In his turn André, beneficiary of the glory that radiated from the name of Mozart, offered for sale all his manuscripts, of which he prepared a thematic catalogue with pieces attached. The two numbers with the highest quotations were "Don Juan," $1,600, and "The Magic Flute," $1,200; all the rest vary from $4 to $50. A symphony is put down at 5 louis. The total amounted to 69,480 francs ($13,896), which, after forty years' possession, would have shown a very profitable return, but no buyer for the whole presented himself, and only a few numbers changed hands.

André died and his three sons divided the heritage. Then the real dispersion of the manuscripts began, for each strove to realize in cash down the value of the papers comprised in their lot. Thus "Don Juan" was offered in turn and vainly to the museums of Vienna and Berlin; from 8,000 francs it fell to 4,500 francs, and at this price Madame Viardot bought it in London in 1855, and the middleman, to induce her, gave her into the bargain a sonata for the piano for four hands. We know that this great artist wished to assure to France the possession of this autograph, which the Germans to-day are ashamed to have had slip through their hands; she generously gave it to the library of the Conservatory, where it will ever remain its most precious jewel.

In 1860 one of the André brothers tried to sell at Berlin, through the bookseller Stage, a lot of fifty-two pieces. The prices marked on the catalogue were rather high, but how little after all! One could have a symphony for 250 francs and a concerto for 100 francs.

In 1875 the indemnity paid by France after the war enabled Germany to richly endow the German Museum. Thus the Library of Berlin acquired for 45,000 francs 131 numbers, which remained in the hands of the André family. It was about the sixth of the works written by Mozart. Henceforth no library can compete with it on this point. Here, writes Charles Malherbe, are some figures derived from personal investigation: "The authentic works of Mozart, complete or incomplete, amount to 727. The manuscripts of 167 are unknown, and eighty-one have changed hands without our knowing exactly where they are to-day. Of the 479 known to exist Berlin possesses more than half. The rest are scattered mostly in Germany and Austria. Such are the collections of Herr Cranz, of Hamburg, and of Julius Marshall and Plowden in England. For my part I possess twenty-three, which one day will go after me to join the 'Don Juan' and increase the riches of the Conservatory. Just let us look at hazards of fortune and the increased value of things! I spoke lately of Mozart's poverty. Well, at the actual price of the last public sales a page of his handwriting in music is never sold for less than 100 francs. And he must have inked 10,000. Make your calculations, and we shall have to say with sad irony that Mozart died a millionaire without knowing it."

There autographs have, for every lover of music, the value of souvenirs, and it is not without emotion that one touches the leaves on which the hand of a great man has rested. But they are still more precious for another reason; they reveal certain peculiarities; they let us surprise the creator in the midst of his work; they show the precision of his thought and the sureness of his pen. In appearance they are much alike, in the sense that Mozart always employed, with very rare exceptions, paper of an oblong form, called Italian, ruled for ten or twelve staves. In his operas, where he had need of a greater number, he wrote the part of wind instruments on another sheet.

Mozart tells us himself how he composed. "When I find myself well disposed, in good humor, as when driving in a carriage or taking a walk after a good dinner, or at night when I cannot sleep, then ideas come to me in crowds. Those which please me I remember, and even hum them over, as people tell me at least. When I do this then here and there come bits which one can use to make a good dish, according to the necessities of counterpoint, sonority, instruments, &c. This warms up my soul and increases when I meet with no interruption. I develop it more and more, and really the work is completely terminated in my head. However long it be, a glance embraces it all in spirit, as when one contemplates a beautiful picture. The combinations, the facture all passes like a dream before me. What is done in this manner is not easily forgotten, and it is perhaps the fairest gift which God has bestowed on me.

"Afterward when I begin to write I have only to take from my brain pocket all that is gathered there. Hence the writing is done rapidly and, reproduces without any change, or at least very rarely, everything lodged in my spirit. Anyone can interrupt me while I am writing. I can even converse, talk of hens and eggs, of Margaret, of Babette. I write all the time."

The aspect of the manuscripts confirms this declaration. Erasures are very rare. He never uses a knife. His

A Rough Fragment of Mozart's Quintet for Piano and Wind Instruments Written in 1784.

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

finger serves him instead; he rubs out, when he does rub out, before the ink has had time to dry. He repairs a mistake almost at the same time that he commits it. And this the case not in clean copies, for his sketches even present the same infallibility.

Mozart rarely had recourse to notebooks unless he was engaged in long and complicated work, and then he presented it in an abbreviated, schematic form. Thus I possess, in its two states, the quintet for piano and wind instruments. For the definitive state the autograph is complete in all its parts, written with comparative slowness, almost caligraphed. In the primitive state the autograph contains only the parts for the wind instruments on two staves; it is a memorandum hurriedly written down, the piano part is entirely wanting. It remained in the composer's head to come when called for.

THE FINISHED MANUSCRIPT OF THE QUINTET.

His handwriting changed a little with years. At ten years old one cannot handle a pen as when one is thirty, and yet, even in his childhood, there are peculiarities which are not afterward modified. In my collection of autographs I have one of the sonatas which he wrote after his first journey to Paris. He was then seven years old, and the assurance of the little hand is astounding. At the age when others are still children Mozart was already a man. When he was about fourteen his writing preserves a certain coarse, round aspect; at sixteen its character assumes almost its definite form, and the writing appears fine, elegant, orderly, luminous, with all the characteristics of the feeling and movement: it is a heart full of tenderness and a spirit full of gaiety.

A material detail, which has an æsthetic reason, is reproduced throughout and always. He writes the bass at the same time as the chant, vocal or instrumental. The rest, the filling-in parts, the complement of the harmony, he did not touch till later, sometimes days or even months afterward, when he returned to complete his work. Certain of his manuscripts have thus remained unfinished, but unite in their primitive simplicity the two extreme parts, the low and the high, which he deemed indispensable, and form, in a fashion, the skeleton of the piece. This method enables us to reply to the objection formulated regarding his quartets and the slight interest manifested in the 'cello part. This apparent defect can be explained away: the 'cello there only plays the part of the contrabass in the orchestra; it is the foundation stone on which the harmony reposes. To-day other formulas or principles are held in horror. Musicians no longer occupy themselves with figured bass, as in the last century; they would be, moreover, often embarrassed by it, for originality seeks to manifest itself in the unnamed chords. One can plunge gladly into an unknown world and dream more or less of erecting a pyramid point downward. Mozart intended that the "bass" should be the "base"; he demanded order and logic. These qualities, those of a prudent man, I would take as a text to preach against a modern tendency, against a mental disposition of which we see every day around us the deplorable effect. I would (what shall I say?) give you the courage to admire Mozart. Yes, his apparent simplicity makes him disdained by those "esprits forts" who admire the more the less they understand. When we hesitate before certain modern works, or manifest the slight pleasure they give us, the answer comes, "You have not penetrated far enough; you stop at the surface, you do not know how to see that which, beneath this obscure exterior, escapes your intelligence." And so they give themselves a certificate of intelligence and clairvoyance. Well, let us take up their argument and apply it to the work of Mozart. "They do not please you because you also stop at the exterior, which seems to you too easily mastered; your spirit does not rise high enough to measure the degree of perfection which results from the equilibrium of the parts and from the harmony of the whole. The secrets of eurhythmia are not revealed to all the profane. The strange, the violent, the colossal impress at first, more than the simple, the double, the measured. Masters like Rubens, Victor Hugo and Wagner are more open to the vulgar than Leonardo da Vinci, Racine and Mozart; they speak at least stronger emotions, and consequently produce more immediate effect. The enormous mass of a Gothic cathedral impress every eye; to enjoy in all their splendor the lines of the Parthenon there is needed a higher culture and a more refined taste.

In conclusion, says M. Malherbe, "let us be proud of loving Mozart, and pity those who affect to ignore him. In keeping guard over his glory the society which bears his name is doing a work of justice and of art. It recalls the attention, for a moment diverted, to works which have been and always will be incomparable models. Mozart is one of those whom one can follow without fear of losing our way; he is a sure guide, for he climbed the summits whereon stand the 'templa serena' of which the poet speaks; he has penetrated into the sanctuaries, whose doors open only to the elect; he has gazed on the sacred altar where, eternal and pure, burns the flame of ideal beauty."

MADAME VELTRINO.

MME. MARIAN VELTRINO, the voice specialist, principal of the Anglo-Italian Studio, New Bond street, London, England, who has many times lectured in various public halls and drawing rooms on the subject of physical, scientific, natural voice culture, has just been trying her elocutionary powers in the open air in Worcestershire, where in the slack London season she fulfills numerous professional engagements. By kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Grosvenor she gave a lecture on the subject last month in the beautiful grounds of Broome House, Stourbridge, and succeeded in being most distinctly heard in every word by a large and interested gathering of the country people.

A platform and piano were arranged in one shady corner of an extensive and ideal tennis lawn, one of its four summer houses forming the background. Vocal items, including songs by Madame Veltrino and some of her Worcestershire pupils, were given with great effect and were much applauded. These were intended to serve as illustrative of the remarks made by the lecturer and to show the results of the system of voice culture she is so successful with in her teaching. The weather proved perfect, and in another part of the garden, among lovely trees, overlooking the ornamental lake, tea and coffee were afterward served. So far as we know a lecture on this subject "al fresco" was an original idea on the part of Madame Veltrino, and we hear it is not to be her last.

EUGENE BERNSTEIN.—Eugene Bernstein, the pianist and teacher of this city, who has been spending the summer in Europe, returned this week to New York. Mr. Bernstein's trip was one of pleasure only.

On the Columbia, which left this port June 27, a very fine concert was given, in which Mr. Bernstein assisted. 1,600 marks was raised.

He arrived in London too late for the regular musical season, but heard Kubelik, the violinist. In Paris, at the Conservatoire, he met Pugno and Thibaut, the violinist. In Berlin he met various members of his family who met there by appointment, some of whom he had not seen in nine or ten years. From Berlin he went to Vienna, then to Salzburg to attend the Mozart Festival, and after a short stay in Switzerland he started for New York.

Mr. Bernstein expects a very busy season, and this year in addition to his teaching and public performances he will give eight historical concerts, which will be of interest to music students.

MAX KNITEL TREUMANN.—Max Knitel Treumann has reopened his vocal studio in Carnegie Hall. Accompanied by Mrs. Treumann and their two children, Mr. Treumann passed his summer at Block Island, the Berkshires and the Pan-American.

FRANCIS STUART REMOVES.—Mr. Stuart, whose pupils last season did so well here at their every appearance, has removed from his downtown place to "The Montevideo," Seventh avenue, near Fifty-fourth street.

JEAN GERARDY
December, 1901, to May, 1902.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.
Wagner Lecture Recitals.
VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS:
Miss Pauline Cramer.
Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.
Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

RARE OLD VIOLINS
Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

ALICE E. JOSEPH
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recital
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Complete Bookings for the Season of 1901-1902.

THIS is the twenty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the itinerary is as follows:

ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, October 18, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, October 19, at 8.
Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, Wednesday afternoon, October 23, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, October 25, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, October 26, at 8.
anders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, October 31, at 7:45.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, November 1, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, November 2, at 8.
cademy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday evening, November 4, at 8:15.
Music Hall, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, November 5, at 8:15.
cademy of Music, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, November 6, at 8:15.
arnegie Hall, New York, Thursday evening, November 7, at 8:15.
cademy of Music, Brookyn, Friday evening, November 8, at 8:15.
arnegie Hall, New York, Saturday afternoon, November 9, at 2:30.
nfantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, November 13, at 8.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, November 15, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, November 16, at 8.
nders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, November 21, at 7:45.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, November 22, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, November 23, at 8.
cademy of Music, Fall River, Tuesday evening, November 26, at 8.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, November 29, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, November 30, at 8.
nders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, December 5, at 7:45.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, December 6, at 2:30.
ymphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, December 7, at 8.
cademy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday evening, December 9, at 8:15.
usic Hall, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, December 10, at 8:15.
cademy of Music, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, December 11, at 8:15.
arnegie Hall, New York, Thursday evening, December 12, at 8:15.
cademy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday evening, December 13, at 8:15.
arnegie Hall, New York, Saturday afternoon, December 14, at 2:30.
fantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, December 18, at 8.
mphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, December 20, at 2:30.
mphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, December 21, at 8.
nders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, December 26, at 7:45.
mphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, December 27, at 2:30.
mphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, December 28, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, January 3, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, January 4, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, January 9, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, January 10, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, January 11, at 8.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday evening, January 13, at 8:15.
Music Hall, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, January 14, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, January 15, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday evening, January 16, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday evening, January 17, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Saturday afternoon, January 18, at 2:30.
Infantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, January 22, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, January 24, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, January 25, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, January 30, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, January 31, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, February 1, at 8.
Coliseum, Hartford, Wednesday evening, February 5, at 8:15.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, February 7, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, February 8, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, February 13, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, February 14, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, February 15, at 8.
Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Monday evening, February 17, at 8:15.
Music Hall, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, February 18, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, February 19, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday evening, February 20, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Friday evening, February 21, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Saturday afternoon, February 22, at 2:30.
Infantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, February 26, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, February 28, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, March 1, at 8.
Music Hall, Troy, Monday evening, March 3, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, March 7, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, March 8, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, March 13, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, March 14, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, March 15, at 8.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday evening, March 17, at 8:15.
Music Hall, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, March 18, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, March 19, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday evening, March 20, at 8:15.
Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday evening, March 21, at 8:15.
Carnegie Hall, New York, Saturday afternoon, March 22, at 2:30.
Infantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, March 26, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Thursday afternoon, March 27, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, March 29, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, April 4, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, April 5, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, Thursday evening, April 10, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, April 11, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, April 12, at 8.
Infantry Hall, Providence, Wednesday evening, April 16, at 7:45.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, April 18, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, April 19, at 8.
Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Thursday evening, April 24, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, April 25, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, April 26, at 8.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, May 2, at 2:30.
Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, May 3, at 8.

William Worth Bailey.

ELSEWHERE in this issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER an impressive announcement is made by Robert E. Johnston, the manager of William Worth Bailey. Young Bailey's first American tour promises to be long and successful. The engagements already secured guarantee this. There is a demand for the remarkable blind violinist in all parts of the country, and he will travel from ocean to ocean before filling all the dates booked by his manager.

A high reputation has preceded young Bailey, who has been warmly praised by some of the Old World music critics. They lay greater stress upon his musicianship and fine, poetic feeling than upon his virtuosity. They commend his pure intonation, correct phrasing, refined taste and intelligent interpretation. All judges who have heard him concur in estimating the blind violinist as an artist. Already his forthcoming tournée in the United States has aroused a good deal of interest among violinists and lovers of the violin.

MANAGERS of attractions of the rank of Paur, Sousa, Schumann-Heink or Clementine DeVere who can offer half hour of sacred music afternoon of September 29 or any Sunday following are asked to communicate with Rev. S. EDWARD YOUNG, chaplain of the Actors' Church Alliance, Pittsburg, Pa., who is arranging meetings in the New Exposition Music Hall, Pittsburg.

TUNING SITUATION WANTED.—An extra reliable and long experienced tuner and voicer, who has been three years with present employers, desires a change of location; can tune organs also; factory or wareroom. Salary but moderate. R. W. Welles, 313 Fountain street, Providence, R. I.

Frieda Siemens

THE EMINENT GERMAN PIANISTE.

American Tour October to April.

UNDER DIRECTION OF

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Carnegie Hall, New York.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

JEANNETTE

DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

Frederic Mariner,

TECHNIC SPECIALIST,

Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,

— NOW —

Director of the

Bangor Piano School,

BANGOR, ME.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER.
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., September 13, 1901.

RECEPTION TO MRS. MCKINLEY AND PARTY.

AT the reception given by the Board of Women Managers in the Women's Building, Miss Bessie Greenwood, coloratura soprano, of Hornellsville, with her tutor, Dr. La Frone Merriman, furnished some delightful music.

Miss Greenwood, an attractive brunette of graceful figure, sang Dell' Acqua's "Villaneile," Proch's Air and Variations, part of Muldner's Staccato Polka and the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria." The ease and facility with which she sang the runs, trills, high notes and general coloratura made nothing less than a sensation; and she was repeatedly congratulated and urged to sing again, the McKinley party saying: "She must certainly sing at the White House."

Miss Greenwood's voice is extremely high and clear, and she sustains a G in alt with power and ease. Much of her execution is due to the superior method of Dr. Merriman, the early teacher of Della Niven (Metropolitan English Opera Company) and others who have made their mark. Merriman is doing a noble work in his important section of the Empire State.

All the Buffalo papers made much of Miss Greenwood's singing and below we quote several. Dr. Merriman also played a mazurka by Wieniawski in fine style, and wore his honors as tutor of Miss Greenwood and as as solo violinist modestly.

Miss Greenwood had been engaged to sing at the fateful reception to President McKinley, and with her party stood but a few feet distant when the shots were fired.

She was on the point of singing, had her music before her, when this startling interruption occurred. Of course, all was confusion and the day's doings were abandoned. And so Miss Greenwood became an unexpected spectator of the dramatic scene. Here are some Buffalo press notices:

* * * A delightful feature of the luncheon was the singing of several solos by Miss Bessie Greenwood, of Hornellsville, who was heard yesterday for the first time in this city. Miss Greenwood has a beautiful soprano voice, and her rendering of the "Ave Maria," by Gounod, was artistic in the extreme. Miss Greenwood will sing in the Temple of Music to-day.—Buffalo Courier.

A very enjoyable feature of the occasion was the singing of Miss Bessie Greenwood, of Hornellsville, N. Y., a soprano possessing a beautiful voice of high range. Miss Greenwood was accompanied by her tutor, Dr. La Frone Merriman, on the violin, and Prof. F. W. Riesberg, of New York, formerly of this city, on the piano. Miss Greenwood is a charming young lady as well as singer. She sang Dell' Acqua's "Villanelle," the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" and Proch's Aria, with variations, with excellent effect. The "Ave Maria" especially was admirably sung, being notable for the high range attained by the singer. Mr. Merriman played the Mazurka, by Wieniawski, charmingly upon the violin.—Buffalo Evening News.

A fine musical program was arranged for after the luncheon, Miss Bessie Greenwood singing several selections. She has a charming manner, and together with her pure, sweet and well trained soprano voice delightfully entertained the audience of distinguished personages.—Buffalo Enquirer.

Prominent among the younger organists of Buffalo may be mentioned William Gomph, organist of Lafayette Church. His future, of course, is in no wise problematical, but is a matter which must necessarily be considered most promising. When the directors of the Pan-American Exposition selected Mr. Gomph as the official organist they could not have chosen a better one for the work. He is ever courteous to visiting organists, helpful at all times. A week ago, when Mr. Sterling, from Cincinnati, was taken suddenly ill, Mr. Gomph filled the three days' recitals allotted to Mr. Sterling finely, and this on one hour's notice. Some weeks since Buffalo was visited by a fearful storm. Dr. Falk, the organist for that evening, had scarcely begun to play when the electric current became disconnected. Ladies and children became hysterical. It was then that Mr. Gomph suggested playing popular airs, in which the vast audience joined, thus averting what might have become a panic. Both organists played in total darkness for two hours. Mr. Gomph's program for September 1 was selections from Widor, Bach, Lemare, Hesse. "Meditation," by Lemare, and March and Chorus, "Tannhäuser," were rapturously applauded. All these numbers he played with musicianly interpretation not to be excelled. September 6 Mr. Gomph had just finished playing an andante from a Bach sonata at the reception held by President McKinley when the tragic event of the attack on the President's life occurred.

BESSIE GREENWOOD.

Mr. Gomph was ably assisted by the soprano soloist of his church, Mrs. Marie Hoag Haughey. She sang "Ave Maria" ("Cavalleria Rusticana") and "Save Me, O God!" Randegger. After repeated recalls she sang the last number again. She has a sweet, sympathetic voice. Much of her superior enunciation and style is due to the training she has had while studying with that excellent teacher, Mrs. Anna Groff Bryant, of Chicago.

Miss Mary F. McConnell gave an organ concert at the Temple of Music on President's Day, September 5. A born musician, a deep thinker and indefatigable worker, she is as much celebrated for her correct interpretations as for her abilities as an executant. Her program was admirably selected, being represented by Guilmant, D'Evry, Wolstenholme, Saint-Saëns, Bach and Liszt. The "St. Cecilia" Offertoire, Batiste, and Andantino, Lemare, won the highest approbation from the audience. Her trumpet accompaniment to one of her sister's solos,

WILLIAM GOMPH.

"Let the Bright Seraphim," "Händel, was exquisite Miss McConnell is assistant supervisor of music in the public schools of Buffalo, musical editor of the News, and has been the correspondent of THE MUSICAL COURIER. She has been organist of Central Presbyterian Church, St. Paul's Church and St. Joseph's Cathedral, where she played the Centennial organ for many years. She has been accompanist for the Orpheus concerts during the past six seasons, and for many of the orchestra concerts given in Buffalo. Miss McConnell was assisted by her sister Mabelle. She has a pure, sweet, soprano voice on the high coloratura order. She is yet in her 'teens, but we predict a promising future for her. Miss Mabelle McConnell sang "Let the Bright Seraphim," Händel, and "May Morning," Denza.

It was with deep interest that we watched for Miss Gertrude Sans Souci's two organ recitals at the Temple of Music. Her reputation had preceded her from St. Paul, where she is organist at St. Paul's Catholic Cathedral and a member of the faculty of the Western Conservatory of Music, Minneapolis. She was educated in Berlin by Moritz Moszkowski, Oscar Raif and Pylleman.

Right from the start of her concert the vast audience applauded heartily, and afterward many remained, begging a repetition of some of her numbers. Musicians present praised the musical feeling, intelligence, power, delicacy and flawless technic of the young artist, who was chosen from among many older organists of St. Pa to give her concert at the Pan-American Exposition Miss Sans Souci's program was among the most a tractive and popular given at the Temple; brilliancy an dash characterized her work and inspired her audienc to tumultuous applause. Assistants for her concerts we E. S. Timmons, flutist, and Bert Brown, cornetist, the Chicago Marine Band. Mr. Timmons playe Chopin's Nocturne, and gave an encore, which won hearty approval.

GERTRUDE SANS SOUCI.

The three organ recitals given by Gaston M. Dethier, of New York, proved most enjoyable in every sense. He played compositions ranging from the ancient classics to the modern German and French schools, also including some of his own effective compositions. Chief among these latter was the ancient "Christmas Carol," with variations, and at the close of this he received a veritable ovation from the large audience, among whom were many of Buffalo's leading organists.

THE MUSICAL COURIER expects soon to refer again to the Dethier recitals and print fuller comments on them.

Mrs. Rathfon was the soprano soloist for the first concert. She sang "Farewell, Have Faith, True Hearted," by Thomas; "Inzano," Tosti, a a richly dramatic number, so well given that she was compelled to repeat it. She also sang "Annie Laurie" in her own arrangement. Her voice is high soprano, with a remarkable range and quality.

Miss Grace Carboni, contralto, sang at Mr. Dethier's second recital "God Shall Wipe Away All Tears," Sullivan, and an Italian melody by Marcello. She has a dramatic way of singing and a promising future before her.

In the evening Master Henri Gagnon, of Quebec, played a program of ten numbers, containing works of Dubois, Bach, Boëllman and others. Surprise was written on every countenance when the talented boy played the whole program from memory with a skill far beyond his years.

Everett E. Truette, of Boston, gave two fine organ recitals, holding the close attention of the audience. At one of his concerts, "Largo," by Händel, and "Festival March," Blaeesmann, aroused the audience to high enthusiasm. We hope to hear Mr. Truette again.

Harry L. Vibbard, of Syracuse, N. Y., gave an enjoyable concert September 9. As a pupil of Mr. Kaffenberger he has adopted from that excellent teacher many good qualities in organ playing. His program was fine and the applause of the audience hearty.

Walter Heaton, of Reading, Pa., gave two enjoyable concerts. He was assisted by Miss Caroline Cramer, of Rochester. In another number THE MUSICAL COURIER will print a full resumé of her singing.

Samuel Warren, of New York, failed to appear at the Temple of Music for the organ concert assigned him, and John W. Durham was selected to fill his place, and no one could have done so more effectively. He held his audience marvelously and carried out tonal effects with delicate shading that imparted the utmost refinement to his interpretations. His program was a well selected one, Bach, Guilmant, Widor, Borowski and others were represented. The two selections from E. d'Every, "Benediction Nuptiale" and "Vision," op. 156, No. 5, have never before been played in this country. In fact, copies of these two gems cannot be obtained. Mr. Durham's groundwork in organ and theory was laid by S. N. Penfield; after this he studied with Dr. Gerrit Smith, and finally with M. Alex. Guilmant in Paris. Mr. Durham has been playing in church since he was fifteen years of age. He now holds the post of organist and choirmaster at the South Congregational Church (Dr. A. J. Lyman's), Brooklyn. He is a successful teacher, several of his pupils holding responsible positions.

JOHN W. DURHAM.

Adelbert Wilner, Pittsfield, Mass., gave a fine organ recital September 10. His program was well selected, and he had apparently mastered the intricate possibilities of the big organ on very short notice and little practice. He was ably assisted by Mrs. Laura Dietrich Minehan, solo contralto of the Lafayette Church, Buffalo. Her splendid deep voice charmed the vast audience, and she was recalled again and again. Mrs. Minehan sang "The Lost Chord," Sullivan; "The Three Singers," Tours, and gave as an encore Tosti's "Good-Bye."

September 14, 1901.

Our beloved, honored President McKinley is dead! The Temple, where joyous strains of music have been heard all summer, is now the spot in history where a great and good man has lost his life by the hand of a dastardly assassin.

MRS. KATHERINE RIESBERG.

THE VIOLIN CLASSES AT THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

THE violin classes at the National Conservatory are, owing to the loving attention of President Jeannette M. Thurber, one of the features of that institution. Headed by the name of Leopold Lichtenberg, they are modeled after the style of the famous conservatories of Vienna, Berlin, Paris and Brussels. Frederick William Ortmann is a pupil of Halir and a good teacher. The preparatory department is looked after by Miss Josephine Emerson and Henry Klein, both graduates of the National Conservatory and pupils of Mr. Lichtenberg. The most thorough and strenuous course is insisted upon, and a pupil with talent may enter the conservatory with no knowledge of the noble art of violin playing and later emerge a finished executant.

An American born and certainly one of the most gifted violin virtuosi that America has thus far produced is Leopold Lichtenberg, the principal of the violin department of the National Conservatory. Lichtenberg is one of those wonder children who has outlived the prodigies of his childhood, who has more than verified its golden promise. This San Francisco boy ravished the heart of one of the greatest violinists in the annals of music, Henri Wieniawski, who, after hearing the lad, at once elected him as a prize pupil, and during the Polish artist's American tour the little Lichtenberg played at all his concerts and enraptured his audiences by the boldness and brilliancy of his performances. Three years of hard work in the Brussels Conservatoire transformed Lichtenberg to a master, and he often played before royalty and made a tournée in Belgium as a substitute for Wieniawski, and with astonishing success.

His subsequent career is history. He returned to the United States and appeared as solo violinist at all the principal concerts and in all the large cities. After a residence in Boston and a membership in the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra he accepted an invitation from Mrs. Thurber to conduct the violin classes of the National Conservatory, where he has been ever since.

As a virtuoso Lichtenberg is distinguished by impeccable intonation, a big, beautiful, liquid, sonorous tone, a fabulous technic, a rare sympathy and acumen in interpretation. His interpretative powers are not limited to any one school, for to the broad classic style of the German he unites the dash, fire and resiliency of the Belgian.

President Thurber has every reason to feel satisfied with the violin classes of the National Conservatory.

WALTER JOHN HALL.—The Los Angeles Daily Times in a criticism of a concert by the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, refers as follows to Mrs. Minne Hance-Owens, contralto, who has recently returned to her home in Los Angeles, Cal., after a three years' course of study exclusively with Walter John Hall, of this city: "The soloist of the occasion was Mrs. Minne Hance-Owens, whose beautiful contralto voice was heard with fine effect in the selections on the program. The lovely tones of this artistic singer, her pure enunciation and technical power won the warmest favor. She received a second encore and many gifts of flowers."

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,

Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN

Distinguished American Pianist.

Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS. WEBB GARDNER

SOPRANO.

FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.

ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.

Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B. VOIGT

SOPRANO.

Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.

Address RICHARD BYRON Manager. 301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK.

M. VITTORIO CARPI,

Vocal Instruction.

ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.

Elizabeth Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals | Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

THE ETHICAL ASPECTS OF MUSIC.

(Queen Victoria Lecture, delivered at Trinity College, London, by Professor Niecks, Mus. D., on Thursday, June 20, 1901.)

(Continued from August 28 issue.)

Views like those of Pythagoras, Plato and Aristotle were not exceptional individual views, but views which up to the appearance of the Sophists, in the fifth century B. C., seem to have been universally held and subsequently to have largely preponderated. Owing to the scarcity of documents that have come down to us, especially documents referring to the opposite views, it is, however, difficult to dogmatize. On the side of the Pythagoreans, Academies and Peripateties, there were also the Stoics, whereas the Epicureans ranged themselves on the side of the Sophists. At least some of the most notable proclaimers of the ethical powers of music after Aristotle ought to be specially mentioned—two of his disciples, namely, Aristoxenus, the most important writer on Greek music, called by the ancients "the musician," and Theophrastus, who described the effect of music as a rhythmical moving of the soul; the Stoic Diogenes of Seleucia, of the second century B. C., who looked upon music as a powerful moral instrument little inferior to philosophy in usefulness and thought, to quote from Dr. Hermann Abert's recently published book on "The Ethos in Greek Music," that "music impels our will to definite positive manifestations, yea, even acts directly on our body, and is thus enabled to express both good and bad characters"; the Eclectic Aristides Quintilianus, of the first and second centuries of the Christian era, who sums up as it were the teachings of the schools of Pythagoras, Plato and Aristotle, and expounds the correlation of the soul and music, the expressiveness of melodies and rhythms, the importance of music in the education of the young, its purifying power and its influence on the life of states and nations; Claudius Ptolemy, of the second century, an outstanding writer on music as well as a great astronomer, who explained the ethical effect of music by the connection between musical and psychical motion, and pointed out that the smaller the intervals employed the more effeminate the ethos, chromaticism, for instance, being more effeminate than diatonicism, and, in conclusion, Boëthius, executed in 524, of whom Gibbon says that he was "the last Roman of any note who understood the language and studied the literature of Greece, the last of the Romans whom Cato and Tully would have acknowledged for their countryman," Boëthius, who in the first chapter of the first book of his "De Musica," declares that music is connected not merely with speculation but also with morality, and in the further discussion of this declaration refers frequently to Plato.

The Anti-Ethical Views of the Ancients, and a Criticism of These and the Ethical Views.

As I have already said, these views did not remain unchallenged. This may have first been done in the fifth century B. C. by the Sophists. Unfortunately extremely little of early contemporary information exists, and for an account of some adequacy we must come down to the first century B. C., to the Epicurean Philodemus of Gadara, in Syria, who wrote a book on music, of which, however, only fragments remain. The ancient antagonists in matters musical of the Pythagoreans, Academics, Peripatetics and the Stoics were the exact prototypes of our nineteenth century æsthetic formalists. In reading their objections and declarations we seem to be reading quotations from Hanslick's "On the Beautiful in Music." According to Philodemus, melodies and rhythms unconnected with words are meaningless, are mere formal combinations destitute of a content. This being the case they cannot in any way affect the states of the soul, cannot in any way exercise an ethical influence either for good or evil. In fact, Philodemus goes so far as to maintain that music has as little to do with the soul life as cookery, that it is a mere luxury, serving no useful purpose, except that of affording relaxation and lightening toil, that, in short, it has no other object than amusement.

The mistake of those who think differently arises, we are told, from two causes—from attributing the meaning and effect of the words which generally accompany music to the music itself, and from our readiness to accept as authoritative what has been believed by our forefathers, and what is told us by our elders. The formalists declare that the teaching of the philosophers whom they oppose consists solely of assertions. If this accusation were true, it could be effectively met by the question: "What else but assertions do you proffer?" But is the accusation true? Not quite. Although there may be more assertion than proof, and the proof not scientifically set forth, it cannot in fairness be denied that there is observation as well as assertion in statements such as those about the correlation of the soul and music, the connection between musical and psychical motion, the effect of music as a rhythmical moving of the soul, and the different character, the different expression, of different melodies and rhythms. For the different expression of different melodies and rhythms, support may be found in the teaching of the rhetoricians and grammarians. Some of the rhetoricians laid great stress on the importance of melody and rhythm in speaking if persuasion was aimed at, and the grammarians never wholly lost sight of the ethos of rhythms in their treatment of verse. As many of the rhetoricians and grammarians were formalists, and many ignorant of or indifferent to music, their procedure is so much the more significant. Cicero and St. Augustine, too, are valuable witnesses, for they are not only great intellects but also are disinterested, that is, not preoccupied by the theory in support of which they, unintentionally as it were, bear testimony. Cicero, although in one place he calls music a puerile amusement, says in another place that "every movement of the soul (animi) has a certain face, sound and gesture of its own." This remark, it is true, contains nothing about music as a moral instrument, but it points to how music can be expressive, and consequently also educative. St. Augustine's similar remark is even more interesting. After confessing that the holy words sung move him more deeply than the same words spoken, he writes: "All the states of my spirit have in accordance with their diversity their proper modes in voice and song, by which they are stirred through I do not know what secret familiarity" or, as we may also translate, "through I do not know what secret sympathy."

The opinions of the Greek philosophers as to the ethical powers of music are by many moderns regarded as mere fancies, and not infrequently are freely ridiculed. I am therefore prepared to have addressed to me the following two questions: (1) "Did Greek music really do all that Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle and others claimed for it?" (2) "Do you look upon their utterances as proofs of your assertion that our music can exercise an influence on the manners, morals and character of its cultivators?" My answer to both questions is "No." We know far too little of Greek music to form an opinion of its powers, far too little to test the opinions of the ancients. It is no impossible that the philosophers may have been mistaken on some points, or that they may have indulged in exaggerations. I do not say that it was so, but say only that it may have been so. On the other hand, it seems to me that the sceptics overlook and misunderstand various things. They ask: "How could such great effects be produced by so simple a music as that of the Greeks?" The answer to this is that in those early times simple musical combinations may have made deeper impressions on the hearer than the complicated modern combinations make on our jaded ears. Is not youth more impressionable than age? But although ancient Greek music was comparatively simple, it had more means of expression than are usually taken into account. They had a greater number of modes; they had three genera (diatonic, chromatic and enharmonic, not to mention other modifications of their scales); they had modulation, and they had a very highly developed system of rhythm. Adverse critics laugh at the ascription of different qualities by different writers to one and the same mode. Most of these contradictions, however, arose not from the stupidity of the Greeks but from the ignorance of the mediæval musicians, who misunderstood the Greek nomenclature, and confused the names of the modes. Some of the supposed contradictions are in reality reconcilable differences. In short, be our estimate of the prevailing Greek view ever so low, we cannot get rid of the fact that it represents the belief of the large majority of a pre-eminently intellectual and artistic race. Such a belief ought not to be ignored; on the contrary, it ought to be carefully noted and pondered.

Mediæval Views.

In the literature of the middle ages there is hardly anything to be met with in regard to our subject that may not be described as an echo of the utterances of the ancients or rather as an echo of echoes of them. Nevertheless there are differences between the later and earlier writers. The characters of these differences will be understood if we remember that the mediæval writers were for the most part Christian churchmen thinking of Christian Church music and subjects of states whose governments and social conditions were as unlike those of the Greece of Plato and Aristotle as anything could be. This explains, among other things, the drawing of examples from the Old Testament as well as from Greek sources, and the absence of discussions of the influence of music on the state. Acquaintance with the references to the ethical aspects of music to be found in mediæval treatises wholly concerned with music, or in which music is dealt with incidentally cannot but lead us to think that there is no original thought and observation in them. Chapters on the utility of music and in praise of music occur frequently in musical treatises, and in them we find retailed not only the old judgments, but also accounts of the attitudes of famous men to the practice of music, tales of medical feats achieved

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Sole Manager, Room 95 Carnegie Hall, New York.

American School of Opera
Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.
WINTER SEASON NOW OPE

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera,
Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

by means of the art, and even fables such as those of Orpheus and the listening wild beasts and following rocks and trees, of Amphion and the moving stones with which the walls of Thebes were built, and of Arion and the dolphin. A few quotations will suffice. The first shall be a sober and brief one from the pen of St. Isidore, the learned Bishop of Seville, who died in 636. He writes in his "Twenty Books on Origins and Etymologies" that no training is complete without music; that music calls forth diverse kinds of emotion, softens the character and calms the excited spirits. Less sober and more elaborate are the remarks of John Cotton, an English monk, who probably flourished on the Continent about the year 1100. He held that music has a great power to move the soul and delight the ear, that it uplifts the ruined and despairing, comforts travelers, disarms robbers, appeases the angry, gladdens the sad and anxious, pacifies the contentious, drives away vain cogitations, and tempers the fury of the mad. Having different powers, as it makes use of different modes, music can even by one kind of melody provoke lasciviousness, and by another induce continence. As illustrations of one of the points, Cotton mentions David mitigating by his singing to the harp Saul's madness, and the physician Asclepiades curing by his singing one suffering from insanity. As illustrations of another point, he mentions Pythagoras recalling by means of music a young man from libidinousness, and Guido making with a young man an experiment of the same kind.

I shall not unnecessarily multiply quotations like these, but at once leap forward a few hundred years, to the excellent Netherlander Tinctoris, who died in 1511, when the art of counterpoint had been perfected. Tinctoris enumerates no less than twenty effects of music—the first is that it delights God; the ninth, that it puts the devil to flight; the seventeenth, that it allures love, and the twentieth, that it beautifies souls, or, in other words, that it suscitates compunction, and through compunction leads to salvation.

Renaissance Views.

A much more valuable contribution to our subject is made by the learned Venetian Zarlino, a great composer and a still greater theorist, in his famous book, the "Institutioni Harmoniche," published in 1558, which contains chapters on the origin of music, in praise of it, on the end in learning it, and on its usefulness. Starting from the proposition that a well educated person ought not to be ignorant of music, Zarlino asks what end we ought to propose to ourselves in learning it. He does not agree with those who have the vulgar and gross notion that music ought to be learned for the solace and delight of the ear, and for no other reason, except that of perfecting the sense of hearing as the sense of sight is perfected by the viewing of beautiful and well proportioned things. Nor does Zarlino agree with those who wish music to be nothing but one of the liberal disciplines in which noblemen exercised themselves—a discipline that inclines the mind to virtue and regulates its passions, accustoms it to rejoice and grieve virtuously, and disposes it to good habits; in short, does for the mind what gymnastics do for the body, and, further, a discipline by which speculation about different kinds of harmony may be reached, and the intellect taught the nature of musical consonances. But, however right and estimable this end may be, Zarlino does not consider it enough. He who learns music, says our illustrious authority, learns it not only to attain the perfection of the intellect, but also to be able, when laying aside cares and business, be it of the body or the mind, to pass the time and amuse himself virtuously, so that shunning idleness and living uprightly and commendably, he may in that way become prudent and get to do better and more praiseworthy things. This end is not only estimable, but it is the true end.

Notwithstanding his high opinion of the art and his belief in the many excellent things it can do, Zarlino keeps free from one-sidedness and exaggeration. Music, he emphatically declares, if its usefulness is to be as great as it can be, must be cultivated temperately; man is made for much more excellent things than singing and playing on instruments for the sole satisfaction of the ear, and abuses his nature if he neglects to provide food for the intellect. The chapter entitled "In which way Harmony, Melody and Rhythm can move the Soul and dispose it to various affections, and can induce into Man changed habits," throws no new light on the question. The author's explanation, which in our time can only raise a smile, is that the passions of the soul, being placed as they are in the body, consist of certain proportions of hot and cold and humid and dry, and as similar proportions of qualities exist in music, it can, owing to this similarity, act upon the soul.

The citation of so many Greek and Latin authors by Zarlino, not in a vague, second-hand way, but with indication of chapter and verse, reminds us that the revival of learning begun in the fourteenth century, and vigorously prosecuted in the fifteenth, was in the sixteenth, when Zarlino wrote, at its height. It reminds us also that with it there arose a new spirit, a new way of thinking and a wider and clearer outlook. To the man of the earlier middle ages the ancient art and literature were, in so far as they were not forgotten, a dead tradition; to the man of the renaissance they became alive again and fruitful. Moreover, the intellectual interests spread and stirred up classes that till then had been content with a vegetating existence.

It is impossible for me to resist the temptation of alluding to that characteristic renaissance work, Count Baldassare Castiglione's "Book of the Courtier" ("Il Libro del Cortegiano"), of the early sixteenth century, in which is a lively discussion on the question whether a courtier ought to be musical. One of the interlocutors thinks that music, like other vanities, is fit only for women and effeminate men. The prevailing opinion of the company, however, is that the courtier ought to understand and practice music; that music is to him not only an ornament but a necessary; that the spirits of him who has no taste for music are indisputably discordant with each other; that music not only sweetens human minds, but often even tames wild beasts; that no repose from fatigue, no medicine for drooping spirits can be found more becoming and praiseworthy in leisure than music. Of course the principal speaker does not forget to reinforce his opinions by references to Plato, Aristotle, Themistocles, Chiron and Achilles, and to Lycurgus, the legendary lawgiver of Sparta. But not to them alone; he reinforces his opinions also by references to the toiling laborers in the fields and to the peasant girls at the spinning wheels.

Not only of a much greater but of the utmost interest and importance to us are the discussions and achievements of a set of amateurs, poets and musicians at Florence in the last quarter of the sixteenth century, who brought certain tendencies of the century to a head and thereby revolutionized the art, changing it from one chiefly of harmonic proportion to one chiefly of expression, substituting instrumentally accompanied one voice music for instrumentally unaccompanied many voice music or, to use technical terms, substituting the monodic for the madrigalesque style. These men—more especially the Counts Bardi and Corsi, Vincenzo Galilei, Peri, Caccini and the poet Ottavio Rinuccini—were the founders of the musical renaissance, which came in the rear of that of the formative arts and of literature. But this renaissance was not a renaissance in the sense of being a revival of ancient Greek music, although the founders believed it to be that. They had, no doubt, been inspired by Plato, but the realization of the ideas thus obtained led to very different results. It could not be otherwise, for there were no ancient musical monuments to study, the imperfectly understood theoretical treatises could not make up for the lack of art works, and it was impossible to ignore and forget the harmonic acquisitions of the later middle ages. Count Bardi divided music into counterpoint and the art of singing well. The former he and the rest of the reformers rejected, because it seemed to them a hindrance to the latter. The moderns, like the ancients, Bardi remarked to Caccini, should aim first of all at intelligibility of the words, for as the soul is greater than the body, so are the words nobler than counterpoint, and then they should aim at correspondence between the character and mode of the music and the meaning of the poem. It is the stanch belief in the expressive power of music and the institution of a style that favored the development of this power which makes this Florentine reforming brotherhood of the last quarter of the sixteenth century so interesting to us.

It would be waste of time to continue in detail our survey in modern times. We should not find anything new or even anything in any way satisfactory. Generalities and echoings of the saws of the ancients form the staple pabulum. With what expectations one opens, for instance, the chapter "On the Utility of Music in the State," in the famous Mattheson's famous book, "Der vollkommene Capellmeister" (1739), and with what disappointment one closes it! But it is not only musicians who refer to the ethical aspects of music in their treatises of a more general nature, also many laymen refer to them in their publications, and even write whole books on the subject. The curious may be advised to consult Forkel's "General Musical Literature," where an extensive, although, of course, not complete enumeration of books is given under the headings, "Beauty and Utility of Music," "Nature and Object of Music," "Moral Effects of Music" and "Physical Effects of Music on Men and Animals."

Luther's View.

Before proceeding to a general consideration of the question in modern times, we have to turn our attention to a man very different from those who have hitherto come before us, a man unique in this way as in so many others. I mean Luther. In looking back from the sixteenth century after Christ to the fifth century before Christ, we cannot but perceive that we have traveled a long distance not only in time, but also in other respects. Christianity had introduced and evolved new modes of thinking and feeling, and music had become a different art. And what could be more unlike than the speculative pagan philosophers and the perfervid Christian reformer! Luther, although he knew probably more of the art than Plato and Aristotle—who, be it said to their credit, make no pretense to superior knowledge—does not come before us as a philosopher, but simply as an ardent lover of music and a thorough believer in its ethical powers.

Again and again Luther says that in his estimation the place of music is next to theology, the one as well as the other producing a calm and serene mind.

"The usefulness of music is so great that no one, be he ever so eloquent, can say enough of it. * * * Music is a mighty ruler of all movements of the human heart, by which, nevertheless, men are often governed and subjugated as by a master."

"Music has of necessity to be retained in schools. A schoolmaster must know how to sing, otherwise I won't look at him."

"Music is a semi-discipline and instructress; it makes people milder, gentler, better behaved and more reasonable."

"Music is the best comfort of a sorrowful man, by which the heart becomes again contented, strengthened and refreshed."

Modern Views.

It is inexplicably strange that in modern times, and even in quite recent times, so little has been said about music as an educational power, so infinitely less than in ancient times when music, compared with what it is at the present day, was in its childhood, and in many respects rudimentary. Then harmony hardly existed at all, the contrapuntal interweaving of parts was undreamt of, the compass of sounds in use very restricted, the executive technic (as proved by the structure of the instruments) insignificant,

Just Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
. . . Vocal Score of . . .
MANRU.
Opera in Three Acts by
I. J. PADEREWSKI.
Translated and Adapted for Performance in English
By H. E. KREHBIEL.
PRICE, ... net, $5.00.
Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

The Walker-Severn Conservatory of Music, New York.
FRANCIS WALKER, Singing.
EDMUND SEVERN, Violin and Theory.
EDMUND SEVERN, Piano and Singing.
ARTHUR SEVERN, Violoncello.
Open October 1st, 1901.
For terms write to the Secretary,
MR. FRANCIS WALKER, 836 Seventh Ave., New York.
Homes for Students. Special Course in Accompaniment Playing, by Mrs. Severn. Class-lessons in Italian for Singers, Mr. Walker. Ensemble Playing, Mr. Severn.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
Office: Astor Court Building, New York.
Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.
Sunday, September 22,
NEW YORK,
Grand Farewell Concert, Metropolitan Opera House.
FOLLOWED BY SECOND ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOUR.
Sailing Wednesday, September 25, per U. S. M. S. "St. Louis."
Opening at Royal Albert Hall, London, October 4.

and even melody and rhythm undeveloped. This last statement will surprise many and shock some, but I cannot stop to prove it. The eminent musician, Gevaërt, an undoubted admirer of ancient Greek music and the weightiest authority on it, describes it thus: "A melodic design, sober in outline and expression, indicating the general sentiment by some exquisite traits of a supreme simplicity, and accompanied by a small number of harmonic intervals." Suppose we accept this estimate, the most favorable I conceive to be possible; still, what an immense superiority the music of our time presents in the variety and amount of means, and, consequently, of expressiveness! But the more expressive the art, the greater must be its power of influencing us, not only momentarily, but also permanently, not only by rousing and soothing our emotions, but also by molding our character. That music has become more and more expressive, especially since the latter part of the sixteenth century, when accompanied solo song and the musical drama began to be cultivated, is a fact too obvious to stand in need of proof. Not to go further back, who can doubt the expressiveness and impassioned nature of the music of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Wagner? Not he who is musical. I repeat it is inexpressibly strange that with the increase of the power the recognition of the power has decreased. Instead of hearing of it as a mighty instrument of education, we hear of music only as an elegant accomplishment, by which we can make ourselves agreeable in company, while away weary hours and keep ourselves out of mischief. Beyond this we hear of nothing that is not extremely vague. There is, for instance, a vague idea that music may have a refining influence, but how it has this is not explained. Even the books and pamphlets written with the object of recommending the study of music in elementary schools, at home and in conservatoriums, fail to make it clear why they recommend it. You will search in vain in Pestalozzi's and Fröbel's works for a true perception of the powers of the art and an adequate utilization of them. J. J. Rousseau, a musician as well as a philosopher, one who composed music and wrote on music, forgets the art in his treatise on education, "Emile, ou de l'Education." And, strangest of all, Herbert Spencer, than whom no one has shown a deeper insight into the nature of music, writes a book on education and hardly alludes to the art that can be made so powerful a factor in it. Moreover, the allusion is solely concerned with æsthetic culture and its pleasures.

It is high time to reconsider the question of the ethical aspects of music, and to examine it earnestly, carefully and thoroughly. What is wanted is not assertions as to the powers of music in this respect, but expositions of their nature and workings. In the next lecture I shall make an attempt at such an exposition, in the hope of thereby rousing the attention and curiosity of educationists and the public.

The Prussian National air, "Ich bin ein Preusse, Kennt ihr meine Farben," celebrated this summer its seventy-fifth birthday. The words were written in 1826 by Bernard Thiersch, the brother of the philologist Frederich Thiersch, and the music composed by August Neithard, director of the Domchor, Berlin. It was first publicly sung at a meeting of the Brandenburg Gesellschaft, April 11, 1830, and it soon drove out of the field Spontini's "Borussia," with Duncker's text.

E. PRESSON
MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

THE LIMITATIONS OF MUSICAL ART.

By Silas G. Pratt.

So frequently have I heard the remark, "Music can express everything," and so often have I seen young composers, especially, choose subjects that were utterly impossible to set to music, or poems entirely incapable of musical expression, that it would be well to consider some things which cannot successfully be borne up on the "wings of song." That music idealizes all that it touches will not be denied. When one places a tone to any word it lifts it at once out of the rut of common usage and gives it wings to soar away into the lofty realms of imagination.

It must then at once be clear that an abstract proposition which cannot be so idealized cannot possibly be raised up by music, no matter how beautiful.

In fact, the more beautiful it may be under such circumstances, the more incongruous and contradictory it becomes. For example, nobody would endeavor to idealize the multiplication table. It is abstract fact and cannot be so clothed that it means anything except figures.

It is this peculiarity of the art which would render absurd a musical expression of "How are you this morning?" And the answer, if given in music seriously, "I'm pretty well, thank you," would at once awaken the risibilities of the listener. The parading down Broadway of your friend John Smith in a Roman toga would not be more inconsistent or ludicrous.

Therefore, in order to make that greeting subject to musical treatment, the idea must be so expressed out of the ordinary that when touched by the magic of tone idealism it does not appear as a caricature but as a beautiful creation of art. For instance, the greeting might be symbolized as the Oriental or native Indian would do upon especial occasions, thus: "Does the eye of morning shine brightly on my friend?" to which the reply, "Ah, yes! the eyes of the dawn greet me with smiling radiance" might be made. The great masters evidently felt this limitation, for we find that while Beethoven in his great "Coriolanus" overture, depicted, in the halting, syncopated movement, the approach and pleading of his mother, wife and boy, neither he nor any other musician has endeavored to etherealize the beautiful lines of Shakespeare with which he greets them, from which the following sentences are gleaned:

> But out affection!
> All bond and privilege of nature break!
> Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.
> * * * * * * *
> My mother bows;
> As if Olympus to a molehill should
> In supplication nod.
> * * * O, a kiss!
> Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
> * * * * * * *
> * * * Your knees to me?
> Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach fillip the stars.

When Berlioz wrote his "Romeo and Juliet" he gave to the orchestra the task of telling Mercutio's story of "Queen Mab." Why could it not be sung just as well? perhaps someone asks. Well, while the thought is the most fanciful possible to conceive, it is expressed in such perfect and definite speech, each detail is so clearly defined, the imagery is so clean cut, that it is like a cameo or a magnificent engraving, to which coloring would be an abomination. Think of anyone singing:

> And she comes,
> In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
> On the forefinger of an alderman,
> Drawn with a team of little atomies
> Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep.

Berlioz evidently felt the paucity of music to express the thought or heighten the definite descriptions of the speech, and so properly bent his efforts to an instrumental fantasy which produces a suggestive atmosphere and a movement which indicates to the cultivated mind (only) rapid flittings of creatures of the imagination. Thus on the sea of tonal imagery one may spread the sails of his wildest and most untrameled ship of fancy and each, according to the compass of his desire or knowledge, sail on to the ultima thule of his happiest conceits.

The limitations of music as a means of expressing definite thought must be plain to any thoughtful mind when we remember it took three Frenchmen to change and twist Goethe's "Faust" into a subject for musical dramatic treatment, and Ambroise Thomas in his "Hamlet" is compelled to eliminate all the brightest jewels of Shakespeare's divinest inspiration in order to treat it ever so inadequately, musically.

Imagine if you can anything more absurd than a musical setting to Polonius' advice to his son Laertes, which still stands as an unapproachable example of perfection in literature and logic.

You may eloquently express in music the undefined madness and passion of the unhappy Dane, the modest shrinking love and sorrow of Ophelia, and her wild fancies as she becomes crazed, but no amount of art can idealize such lines as these:

> Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
> For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
> And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

You may call upon the divine muse to portray the love of the Moor, his fearful and consuming jealousy and furious hatred, or the cunning knavery of Iago (the most loathsome character ever created by man's imagination), but the greatest and most lavish musical art could not add to or detract from this gem of pure thought:

> Good name in man or woman, dear my lord,
> Is the immediate jewel of their souls.
> Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
> 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him,
> And makes me poor indeed.

It is a pearl of abstract logic, a diamond cut on the wheel of truth and polished with the most perfect definiteness of speech. All the beauty of its radiance depend

THE TRAVELERS
INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employers Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JULY 1, 1901.

Total Assets, (Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)	$32,198,504.44
TOTAL LIABILITIES (including Reserves),	27,499,719.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,698,785 19
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$44,469,462.48
Total Insurance in Force,	$199,260,653.00

GAINS: 6 months, January to July, 1901.

IN ASSETS,	$1,270 172.92
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	4,739,625 00
INCREASE IN RESERVES (both Departments),	1,165,244.44
PREMIUMS, INTEREST and RENTS, 6 Months,	4,538,683 18

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Secretary
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON, General Manager of Agencies
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

ELECTA GIFFORD
SOPRANO.
Dates Booking for Concert, Recital and Oratorio.
WEST:
CHARLES R. BAKER,
Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.
EAST:
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Manager,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK CITY.
Has the honor to announce the following distinguished Musical Artists:
LIZA DELHASE-WICKES,
The Brilliant Belgian Pianiste.
GERTRUDE VON BETZ,
Pianiste. (First Prize Leipzig Conservatory)
ALFRED DONALDSON WICKES,
Violinist.
HENRIETTA WEBER,
Pianiste and Accompanist.
FLORENCE SAGE, Pianiste,
In Historical Recitals.
MINNE HUMPHRYES,
Soprano.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Ston
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russi
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., Engla

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YO
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

upon those sharply defined edges which music would only mar or dim.

Wagner felt this characteristic of musical impotence, and therefore resolved to make his own librettos, so that he thought would be expressed in such uncommon phraseology as would admit of idealization.

Now, while music can lend enchantment to a song of night in which the pale moon and the stellar splendors are praised, and the milky way, like a girdle about the loins of the universe, is spoken of; yet it halts and becomes silly when it tries to sing the fact that the moon is 200,000 miles distant from the earth, or the sun is 91,430,000 miles from it, or the unthinkable immensity of distance which our planetary system is from the nearest of the fixed stars, viz., two and a half light years. (Light traveling at 200,000 miles a second.)

Thus while musical art instrumentally and chorally may express ponderosity, it is an exceedingly limited immensity when measured by the material standard; but when it appeals to the emotions, especially the loftier emotions, it is limitless as the universe itself.

For, while music cannot express the bigness even of a Mount Everett, let alone this little planet, when an inspired mind touches it to an invocation or a song of praise, its flood beats against the starry gates of heaven itself, and the willing listener is borne up to the very heart of the Almighty. Thus the art o'erleaps the material universe and annihilates all space.

Who that has listened to the andante of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, and also its final movement of triumphant victory over death, that has not been borne away to realms where dwell the saints, and felt the breath of God upon his brow?

I might mention other works which awaken the secret fountains of the soul, for every earnest effort in art is, in its essence, an invocation; but this suffices to illustrate the point that music cannot express philosophy, logic, abstract reasoning or scientific fact.

In instrumental music a sylvan "atmosphere" may be suggested, but not a single tree indicated.

How distinguish an oak from an ash, or a locust from a maple? Yet the murmuring of the leaves is so musical in itself that it can easily be represented.

So, too, the gallop of a horse is represented perfectly with a certain rhythmical movement and accent, but the horse itself cannot be even remotely outlined.

The revelry of a company can be portrayed successfully, but if it is in a saloon, a barn or a palace, music cannot tell.

Wagner in his music drama "Siegfried" characterizes Mime with deep, flabby tones in the tuba, but this after all indicates the movement of the Wurm rather than its picture. For who would be so foolish as to say music could indicate the form of a monster or its color? Can music paint a dragon's tail, its mouth, nose or eyes; or body which is a cross between a hedgehog and a python?

In "Tristan and Isolde" the drinking of the fatal potion is accompanied with a rippling figure in the 'cellos which quite appropriately indicates the swallowing of the liquid; but this is one of the menial uses of the art; certainly not its loftiest purpose, for the nearer one comes to representing a material fact in music the less and less ideal does it become. And musical anatomy is to be avoided, lest it bring one down to the dissecting table while one should be mounting Pegasus for empyrean flights.

Thus it must be apparent that while action, motion and emotion can be expressed, animate and inanimate things cannot be portrayed; otherwise what artist would not give us in music the "father of his country," and the rugged, suffering, honest savior of it, Lincoln?

The voices of nature, the wind, the brook, the storm and murmuring leaves, music can eloquently represent. The emotions of love, hate, tenderness, terror, devotion, patriotism, the martial spirit of the soldier, and the timid trustfulness of modest maidenhood; in fact, the entire gamut of human feelings, retrospective joys, future hopes and present longings, music portrays far beyond the power of speech; but when it attempts the functions of the brush and easel or the chisel it is degraded.

Music must be the chariot on which the muse is borne aloft to heaven; not a truck with which to carry material things through the streets. Would you require Apollo, in his chariot of gold, with wheels of light and horses of fire, to deliver a load of furniture or bric-à-brac at your door?

Emerson most truthfully says in his wonderful "Essay on Art" that "there is a higher aim in art than art," and that "to pursue beauty for its own sake alone (without its utilitarian purpose of love, religion or patriotism) is degrading."

In quoting this subtle thought lately to an artist friend, he exclaimed, after reflection:

"That explains the apparent contradictions which the lives of some great artists exhibit. Their art is as impure as their lives."

"Yes," I added, "and, it seems to me, that it is this degrading worship of beauty for itself alone which has given us the present decadent French school, where immorality, vulgarity, immodesty and indecency are often exhibited in the royal robes of art, and the foulness of a degenerate mind is sometimes masked behind a cowardly screen labeled art."

Therefore, if the composer would bequeath to posterity some imperishable benefit, let him use his art consistently to lend wings to fancy where speech is impotent; and soaring beyond the dark ocean of materialism, bear upward on the symphonic waves of beauty the purest emotions of the soul, to break in a language universal upon the shores of immortality, and murmur there the hopes and longings of the human heart.

ARENS IN HIS NEW STUDIO.—F. X. Arens has returned from his vacation, passed in the Adirondacks. He will resume teaching Monday, September 23, in his new studio, 261 West Fifty-fourth street. Voice examinations will be held this week, Friday and Saturday, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Free tuition is offered to the students during the month of June who begin their work on the first week of the first term and continue the same uninterruptedly to the end. Monthly students' recitals will be given, in which all the advanced students will participate.

Georg Wilhelm Brandes, famous as a baritone in Marschner roles, Vampire, Templar, Hans Heiling and also in William Tell, Don Juan, Telramund and Hans Sachs, late director of the Breslau Theatre, died lately, aged sixty-five.

GREGORY HAST AND BRAHMS.—To so interpret Brahms' songs as to make them perfectly intelligible and especially enjoyable as well, may be considered a high test of a singer's art. Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor whom Loudon G. Charlton will introduce to American audiences this coming season, is a Brahms apostle, so to speak, and he has made a specialty of some of the great composer's songs, notably "Die Meinacht." Of his interpretation of this number the English press is unanimous in its terms of high praise.

The Manchester Guardian says: "To those listeners, however, who had the good fortune to understand German the rendering of the song 'Die Meinacht' (Brahms) must have been a delight. It was sung in a manner that fully revealed the beauties of the music."

Another authoritative critic says: "The strains which haunt my memory of that evening are those of Brahms' 'Meinacht,' which Gregory Hast sang by special request. Surely 'Meinacht' is one of the most inspired of all Brahms' songs, and when sung as it was the other evening would bring immortality to its composer had he never written anything besides."

CHARITY CONCERT AT ATLANTIC CITY.—Some of the advanced pupils of the Broad Street Conservatory, Philadelphia, gave a concert in aid of the Atlantic City Hospital at the Brighton Casino, Atlantic City, Thursday evening, September 12. Those who contributed to the program were Miss Louise De Ginther, pianist, who played the "Liebestraume," by Liszt; a Nocturne by her teacher, Gilbert Raynolds Combs, and a Capriccio by Mendelssohn; John K. Witzeman, the violinist, played the "Legende," by Wieniawski, and "Souvenir e Bade," by Leonard; Miss Ellellee Tuttle sang songs by Rubinstein and MacDowell, and the Sinfonia String Quartet, under the direction of Mr. Witzeman, played two quartets by Haydn.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN
Mr. BOWMAN has returned to New York and may be consulted by appointment or by personal application at his Studio, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday Afternoons. 2 to 3. Private Instruction in Piano, Organ and Theory. Classes also of two or more for the study of Theory
PUPILS
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.
Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.
MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.
During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET
Fourteenth Season.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.
Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.
Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.
Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts. At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

Mail for Artists.

Mail matter addressed to the following is at THE MUSICAL COURIER office:

R. Hutchinson.
Francis Stewart.
Miss Clara L. Kellogg.
S. P. Warren.
Emil Fischer.

DOROTHY HARVEY RE-ENGAGED.—Dorothy Harvey, the young Canadian soprano, has again been engaged as soloist with the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra this season, opening November 7 and 9, in Pittsburg. Already Henry Wolfsohn, her manager, has booked for her some of the best engagements of the coming season in the principal cities here and in Canada. Mrs. Harvey's musical career, in such a short time, has been and continues to be remarkably successful. Last year she was associated with such artists as Mme. Schumann-Heink, Madame Mantelli, Campanari, Plançon, of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Fritz Kreisler, Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, Gerardy, Gabrilowitsch, Hugo Becker, Dohnanyi, Ffrangcon Davies and others.

NEW PUPILS TO STUDY WITH SCHERHEY.—After a thoroughly enjoyable summer M. J. Scherhey has returned to the city, and by this time has resumed his teaching at his studio, 780 Park avenue. Many new pupils have already sent in their applications, and from the looks of things Mr. Scherhey predicts a very busy season. While at Lake George Mr. Scherhey gave a number of successful concerts, at which his wife, a charming woman and good contralto, contributed solos. After the sojourn at Lake George Mr. and Mrs. Scherhey visited the Pan-American at Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

A PITTSFIELD CONCERT.—Mme. Anita Lloyd, the dramatic soprano, assisted by Miss Georgiana Smith, violinist; Frederick T. Francis, baritone, and Clarence A. Waugh, accompanist, gave a concert at Central Hall, Pittsfield, Mass., on August 29. Madame Lloyd expects to be heard later in Lenox.

MAUDE RAMEY.—Among the promising young singers of the Castle Square Opera Company, now playing at the Broadway Theatre, is Miss Maude Ramey, who comes from a distinguished Southern family. She has a fine soprano voice and is a woman of refinement and personal attraction.

ROSA GREEN.—Miss Rosa Green, an American singer who has appeared in minor parts at the music festivals in Maine, was married recently to Telemaque Kessauly, a London newspaper man. The home of the bride was at Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Kessauly will live abroad.

JACOBY.—Mme. Josephine Jacoby, the contralto, has been engaged by the Chicago Apollo Club to sing Delilah this coming season. She has also been engaged by a Washington society to sing in "The Messiah."

BLAUVELT HONORED IN ROME.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT was recently honored in Rome by the Order of St. Cecilia, which conferred a degree upon her. The Bangor Daily Commercial of September 3 printed a detailed account of Blauvelt's success in Rome, and it is here reproduced in part:

BAR HARBOR, September 3.

Many institutions there are whose members represent most that is highest in science, music, art and literature, but, as in the royal diadem, the crown jewel shines forth conspicuously from among its fellows, so certain honorary institutions are pre-eminent for their exclusiveness and the great honor attached to their degrees, and so become regarded by the members of the professions that they represent as the veriest holy of holies.

Such is the Royal Academy of St. Cecilia at Rome, which has

LILLIAN BLAUVELT.

but a few months since conferred a degree upon Lillian Blauvelt, the soprano.

Founded in 1585, the institution commenced its existence, known as the Order of St. Cecilia, and to make certain that the degree of the order should be coveted to the utmost and recognized as standing alone in its exclusiveness, its creators ruled that the number of degrees conferred by the order should never exceed fifty, of which twenty-five should be conferred upon Italians and twenty-five upon foreigners. More than three centuries have now rolled by since the foundation of the Order of St. Cecelia, and in that time but eight foreigners have even received the degree, Blauvelt being the eighth to be thus honored, and the first English speaking person and the first of her sex to receive this most signal recognition of her talents.

The events leading up to the presentation will prove of interest. Blauvelt was studying in Rome a few years ago, in 1897, when a great musical event was announced, the singing of the Verdi Requiem under the direction of the Royal Academy of St. Cecelia. In the quartet was Marconi, the tenor; Nannetti, the basso; Madame Falchi, contralto, but to find a soprano seemed impossible.

It was at this time that Blauvelt was told of the difficulty by her teacher, and she stated that possibly she could help out. In four days she learned the whole part, music and Latin, and then in the mass sang her part so gloriously that musical Rome was at her feet in an instant. So wonderful was the performance that it was generally believed that Count San Martino, the president of the academy, had arranged it for a surprise.

The American soprano was summoned to the palace and presented to Queen Margherita.

Last February Verdi died and the academy wished to give the Verdi Requiem in memoriam. Telegrams were sent to Blauvelt asking her to participate. She was not able to leave London until April 1, but the ceremony was postponed awaiting her coming. It was a second triumph, and of the quartet the most distinguished honors went to the American singer. Then it was that the academy conferred the degree, while at the same time the name of the singer was carved on a marble slab in the academy.

English Opera Opened.

THE Castle Square Opera Company opened its second season at the Broadway Theatre on Monday night with Puccini's "La Bohéme." Last night "Aïda" was sung, and it will be repeated to-night and Friday night. "Trovatore" and "Martha" will be staged next week.

MANTELLI.—Here are three more Mantelli press notices. More news of this well-known artist will be given later:

The Mantelli was the heroine of the night. She performed the leading part with equal dramatic talent and effect, being applauded with real enthusiasm in the musical passages of importance. The attention of the public was concentrated on this distinguished artist, and in the second act she was the object of an enthusiastic ovation.—La Tarde, July 4.

Goethe's creation found in The Mantelli a profound, real, touching echo. When she asks, "Know'st thou the Land?" her song was impregnated with the very flowers, the murmur of the woods and the rustic scenes of the country. The song in Filine's boudoir was given with enchanting grace. The final scenes, all was admirable in her.—El Figaro.

The representative of Carmen had to-night a grand success. The opinion expressed in the foyer between the acts was that such a superb performance had never been heard in Santiago. From Mantelli's first appearance on the stage the public demonstrated its sympathy, bestowing on her warm and enthusiastic applause. A better Carmen cannot be demanded.—La Tarde, July 4.

ELECTA GIFFORD.—The bookings for Electa Gifford have been so numerous that her season is already well filled. In October she will sing in Milwaukee, Madison, La Crosse, Rockford, Janesville, Elgin, Belvidere, Menominee, Eau Claire, Chippewa Falls, Green Bay, Oshkosh, Racine and Muskegon.

She will then return to the East, where she will fill important engagements during November and December including four concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

AMERICAN SCHOOL OF OPERA.—The opening exercises of the American School of Opera were held at the Berkeley Lyceum, on Monday, September 16. An outline of the work to be done by the school was given by Mr. Stewart and Messrs. Habelmann and Hageman made some remarks relative to their departments.

The school enters upon its second year with every prospect of continued success.

ZELDENRUST.—In addition to bookings already announced for Eduard Zeldenrust with the leading orchestral organizations, Manager Loudon G. Charlton has just arranged for an appearance of the celebrated Dutch pianist with the Pittsburg Orchestra at Cleveland in February with the Fortnightly Club, of that city. Zeldenrust has also been booked for concerts in New York and Boston with the Kneisel Quartet.

Mrs. Van Houten, of Newark, N. J., announces the marriage of her granddaughter, Miss Lulu Augusta Potter, to Percy Wiley Rich, on Monday, September 2. Miss Potter, who is a prominent vocal instructor in Altoona, Pa., has for some years been one of Madame Von Klenner's most capable and enthusiastic pupil representatives.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation. Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI.
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MR. EVERETT E. TRUETTE,
Organ, Harmony and Piano.
Large three manual organ in studio.
218 Tremont Street, Boston.

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 141-143 Fifth Avenue, New York.

McCALL LANHAM
BARITONE.
OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS.
Opera, Concerts and Oratorio
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
Care AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUSIC
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAGO.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN.
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC.

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK · LONDON · PARIS · BERLIN · CHICAGO · BOSTON

VOL. XLIII.—No. 13—Whole No. 1122.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1901.

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR.

Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

Copyrighted by K. Pragnell, London Eng.

AMY SHERWIN

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL,

201 West 81st Street, New York.
LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS, concert pianist and teacher of piano and theory, director. Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. M. Virgil; certified teacher of the Virgil Clavier Method of Technic. Private and daily class instruction.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: The Montevideo, 7th Ave., near 54th St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus.
The Albany, Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Loucila," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue, and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH,

Virgil Method. Pupils in Piano and Harmony. Six years instructor at the Virgil Piano School. Pupil of Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. Classes in Sight Reading, Ear Training and Time Keeping. After October 1, Studio: 132-133 Carnegie Hall, city.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE.

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO.

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed, Style—Opera
43 West 34th Street, New York

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
172 West 79th Street, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

VOCAL CULTURE, TONE EMISSION, VOICE BUILDING, STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH.
128 East 64th St., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
80 Washington Square East, New York.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

Pianist.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method.
Studios: 1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

MRS. M. PRICE, Director, 2105 Seventh Ave., corner 125th Street. Special daily class. The only one in New York where the pupil has a lesson and practice every day under the care of competent teachers. Terms reasonable. Virgil Clavier used

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Illustrated Lectures on Music.
Private instruction. Classes in music-study.
Residence-studio: 17 West 103d Street, New York

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director.
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOIST
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory and Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "New Method of Memorizing"
141 Fifth Ave., New York

MUNICH THE ARTISTIC.

BY JAMES G. HUNEKER.

FAREWELL Bayreuth! Addio, but not auf Wiedersehen! Never again shall I view your stony-hearted streets, your green meads, your flower-envisaged canals, over which the stinking and the picturesque dispute for precedence! And let it be recorded here that Bayreuth without the profane mob is as pretty a place for holiday leisure as one may find in all Germany—always excepting Munich and its environs.

What I wrote of ticket speculating within the sacred enclosure of the Wagner Grail is quite true. Many complaints reached me before I left Bayreuth. In the Bayreuther Tagblatt I found this announcement: "Holländer und Parsifal! Ein guter platz für 19 und 20 August zu verkaufen. Offerten unter H. P. 224 an die Expedition ds. Bl." Now you will say that all this is quite legitimate business, that any Yankee would do the same thing, only more so. Quite true. But the Yankee is supposed to be a combination of the shrewd and heartless, while the esthetic, music-loving German—perish all idea of the pecuniary! And that is why tickets for "Parsifal" fetched $25 apiece in the Wagner-haunted precincts of Bayreuth.

As might have been expected a large deficit is announced by the Bayreuther Tagblatt, the organ of the Wagner family. In the issue of August 26 the ingenuous editor of that ingenuous journal explains to his readers how the thing happened. Eighty thousand marks is the sum mentioned. About 20,000 marks were taken in for the twenty performances. Aber mein gott the expenses! One hundred and sixty thousand marks for the solo-ists—vile word!—120,000 marks for the lighting and other little things; 100,000 marks the 83 men who run the stage, electric plant and machinery; 100,000 marks for the orchestra and chorus; and 70,000 marks for the new scenery of "Der Fliegende Holländer." This last item knocks me out completely. For the carpenters and help that worked about the dressing rooms, swept out the theatre during three months—rehearsals must be remembered—50,000 marks were expended. In a word, about 600,000 marks was the sum paid out by the direction, thus leaving a deficit of exactly 60,000 marks. This matter pains me excessively. To see the proud and prodigal Wagner family stripping itself of all its possessions for the love of art is a stupendous spectacle in this materialistic age. I tremble to think of what Frau Cosima will say when she can no longer take a special train to Paris, to that Paris where once her husband starved in company with the first faithful wife! And what will become of those Italian winter journeys, of the luxurious villas wherein Siegfried first jets upon virginal paper mighty musical ideas for his grand comic operas—or comic grand operas? My God! who will pay for Siegfried's pen, ink and Humperdinck when the last penny of the Wagner estate shall have been wasted on those terrible Bayreuth performances? It is a shame. Legal interference should be invoked to stop this self-imposed ruin. Only that I suspect the official figures I would write to His Imperial Majesty imploring protection for the melomaniacs of Bayreuth!

Unfortunately for sympathetic persons, the above figures smell suspiciously of Mime's cooking motive—and there is always a Mime in every Wagner camp. I have already referred to my doubts touching upon the outlay—singers' salaries, scenic productions and the rest. Practical stage managers hoot at the notion of the "Flying Dutchman" scenery costing as much as is announced. So we are therefore dubious as to the deficit. Naturally all this is the affair of the Wagner family, this doling out of statistics, and is really no one's business. But because of the annual bewailing, because of the continual asseverations of poverty, of the cry "Art for art," the world has grown skeptical and cold in the matter, so next year's festivals have no significance. They are supposed to recoup Wahnfried for its outlay this season. Let us pray!

No wonder Wagner originally planned to make Munich the home of his colossal dreams! I have never lived in a city where the artistic thrives so naturally, so gracefully, and without the aid of hot-house forcing processes. Munich is a jewel. I would relinquish without a sigh New York and its electric atmosphere, its dirty, narrow, noisy streets, and all its money making, for the city that sits so easily upon the winding river Isar. Why, the very name Isar is an evocation! Little wonder painters and sculptors swear that outside of Italy there is no place like Munich. I arrived here August 27, and experienced none of the sinking sensation that occasionally assaults the pit of travelers' stomachs when a strange city is reached on a starless night. Munich has a welcoming face on a summer evening. It is a town of lights and rejoicing. The cafés are thronged, no one seems in a hurry to jostle you off the sidewalk, while the world wears a face free from carking care.

And the picture galleries, the glorious miles of pictures, the broad avenues of sculpture, the almost numberless rooms in which are cloistered miniatures priceless and unique, enamels, jewels, and the rare cunning of the goldsmith's art! What shall I say about all these! Lift up my voice in uncritical, enthusiastic speech, or forever after hold my peace? For a week I forgot music and its aural tyrannies, and walked, stared, limped over the shining floors of the New Pinakothek, the Old Pinakothek, through the chilly spaces of the Glyptothek, and through the many chambers of the Glass Palace, wherein are displayed the pictures of the International Exhibition for 1901. The "Secession" holds forth there, and in the lordly Art Exhibition Building, on the Königsplatz, there is a remarkable loan exhibition, also under the auspices of the "Secession," of masterpieces of the Renaissance. Besides this bristling forest of art there are many semi-private exhibitions, such as Count Schack's house, with its collection of Böcklins and Lenbachs, and the Phalanx, with its youthful extravagances. The list is a much longer one.

Is it any wonder, then, that the American boaster becomes subdued and chastened, that a great silence settles on one after witnessing such outpourings of genius? And then the streets of Munich, its architecture, its palaces, museums—its soft, blue Italian skies! Nothing is more ennobling to the vision than a sunset behind the Propylææ, viewed from the Briennerstrasse. It roots your feet—feet sad with the slippery floors of the galleries—and paints in your brain a picture not to be forgotten until the eyes close forever. Fancy the sweeping vistas of the Konigsplatz; on one side the Art Exhibition Building, with its Corinthian exterior; on the other the Roman Glyptothek, and facing you the Propyläen gate, with its massive Doric and Ionic columns! All this floating in the haze and sweet blue of an Italian sky and sunset! Wherever you go the streets make pictures—not the gnarled, Bach fugues that abound in old Nuremberg, but pictures that reflect a gleam of classic Athens. Nuremberg is mediæval, romantic; Munich is classic Greek, sometimes rococo classic, yet fascinating ever.

The palaces with their gaudy interior frescoes interested me less than the churches, St. Boniface's, for example. No one, however, can withstand the appeal of the Nymphenburg, with its miles of imperial landscape, its Italian gardens, swans, lakes, arcades, fountains and glimpses of green Edens framed by tall poplars with Claude Lorraine skies. I saw Madame Nordica there feeding the swans August 30. The English garden, too, has its charms. It is lonelier, and one may escape the public, that chattering, polite, thirsty and hungry mob encountered in all public places. This recalls to me the fact, a comical one for Americans, that wherever you go in Germany, indoors or out, the table, with food and drink, and the stout man, woman—the former with an opera glass swinging from his shoulders—and children are to be found.

The story of the neglected German wife is a myth manufactured by the Woman's Page of American newspapers. German wives go everywhere. Nor do they walk submissively behind their masters, dragging by unwilling arms, offspring. Not a bit of it. The man usually pushes the baby carriage while the Lady of the House (capitals, please) marches with equal sovereignty by the side of her mate. I am free to confess that often the male looks henpecked. However as this may be, I am convinced the crushed hausfrau is a figment that originated in the overheated imaginations of Yankee ladies hankering after "pants" and equal rights of franchise.

Eat! Everyone lives to eat in Munich, despite its urban æstheticism. It must be the climate, which comes down in alternate streaks of cold and warm from the Bavarian highlands. You hunger and thirst about every two hours here. This accounts for the numerous restaurants and cafés. I have clung mainly to the famous Café Luitpold on the Brienner Strasse. This establishment is a vast Beer Cathedral. It recalls the Hall of the Holy Grail, being modeled also after the Dome of Sienna. In it daily and nightly sit multitudes of men, women, children—and dogs—sipping coffee, beer, wine. And the murmur of voices suggests monastic enclosures, so subdued are they. I wish some of the Carrie Nations of Western America and New York could see this army of intelligent people reading, smoking, drinking, talking. The axe of fanaticism would be forever hung up behind the door of oblivion. Even a genteel thirst might be induced. Intoxication is unknown here among the natives.

Having solved the problem of eating, drinking and housing themselves sensibly, the Münchener, with the aid of art loving princes, built a city that is the pride of Germany. This leads me back to the pictures. After a hard season of music, the lust of the eye should also be gratified. When I reached Munich I planned an optical debauch. Sick of Wagner and his posturing interpreters, I determined to hear no more music. I knew that there was a new Wagner theatre on Prinz Regent strasse, that many came thousands of miles to attend its representations; but the smoke and smell of Bayreuth were in my nostrils, and I longed for color, for paint and marble. Over a week I indulged this caprice to the top of its craving, and saw things on canvas and in clay until my eyeballs almost burst from fatigue. My plan of campaign was this: At 9 o'clock I was in a gallery; at 6 I left it, ate my supper, and went at once to bed, there to discuss in dreams, sometimes chromatic nightmares, the miles of pictures I had viewed. Finding after a few days of this galley slave toil that I was harvesting no permanent impressions, I reverted to my original scheme—a thorough study of certain masters or isolated groups. This scheme broke down after I had spent three hours in front of a Whistler, so I said to myself, "You can't hear all the music of the composers in a life time, nor do you care to, therefore why attempt the impossible with paintings?" Having said this I turned my back on acres of Rubens, passed the Raphaels at a military pace, and confined myself to the masters I most admired. But for this proceeding I should not have been able to tell you anything of Munich and its art.

Place for the moderns. In the Glass Palace is now being held the International Art Exhibition. Arnold Böcklin, Nicolaus Gysis and Wilhelm Leibl, three men who died recently, are honored by special galleries. All Europe, Great Britain and America are represented in various sections. I didn't count the pictures, and only propose to mention those that pleased me—for I am not an art critic in the technical sense. Therefore it was not surprising that I eagerly sought the fantastic productions of Arnold Böcklin, the Swiss dreamer; Franz Stuck, the powerful Munich painter of brutal imaginings, and Edvard Munch, the Norwegian, whose psychology is so distressingly real and morbid. I found plenty to ponder. Franz Stuck is the pride of the town. He is its Richard Wagner on canvas. A new Stuck canvas is as much discussed as a new music drama. The man's work grips one, albeit its unhealthy and feverish romanticism. Stuck is the painter of a world in which roam satyrs seeking slim dryads, sphinxes that murder men with their kisses, classical landscapes through whose remote glades are caught glimpses of lunar maidens, bacchantes and centaurs. But all these things are modern in feeling. When he treats a single motive this artist becomes veritably dangerous. There is a loathsome quality about the now celebrated "Sin" which hangs the property of the kingdom in the New Pinakothek. And anyone who has seen that awful picture "War," at once an allegory and a political satire, feels crushed in the presence of such extraordinary power. While he lacks the sympathetic insight of Lenbach in his portraiture, Stuck paints with all sorts of brushes. He is a versatile man, and therein lies his danger. He would attempt all things, even sculpture. Naturally a colorist, he has fallen to experimenting. In his new Sphinx you can detect the influence of Henner, but Henner's luscious coloring transposed to a more morbid key. Then there is a sea-scape with an explosive sunset, which recalls Munch at his most violent. Decorative in the extreme are his portraits—especially those in which he improvises all manner of variations on his subject. The true Munich painter never quite escapes the decorative—always excepting Lenbach and the wonderfully straightforward work of Leo Samberger. So Stuck is at his best when he gives the reins to his imagination. His color scheme then is like rich wine. His "Young Bacchus" revels in hues that evoke the flesh tints of Tiziano. Yet there is nothing in this present exhibition to equal for daring his "Devil's Daughters," "Krieg," or the Beethoven mask, the latter the best head of the composer in existence.

Stuck, who is married to an American wife—a Cincinnati lady, the widow of a wealthy Munich doctor—has built himself a villa on the Prinz Regent strasse, near the Wagner theatre. It is an artist's dream become stone, gold and marble. I have never seen any place so beautiful, although because of its bareness it lacks the poetical solitude of the Lenbach villa, which is almost shrouded by trees and vines.

The interior of the Stuck villa contains a millionaire's collection plus the exquisite taste of a great artist. It is one of the sights of the town for those who are lucky and honored enough to secure a card of invitation.

As with the Stuck so with the Böcklin rooms. The representative specimens of this original master are to be seen in the new Pinakothek, though there is a goodly collection here in the Glass Palace. In the former are hung the fantastic and astounding "Das Spiel der Wellen," with its wealth of emerald green water and its comedy of mermaid, merman and big-bellied sea-horse. I missed, too, "Die Insel der Toten"—a production as profoundly significant as the "Marcia Funebre" of the "Eroica" Symphony—but was consoled by "Heiliger Hain," a composition as serene as a nun's evening prayer, yet not lacking the symbolic undertones of this painter's art. Arnold Böcklin, with all the riotous imagination of a Stuck, preserves, however, a classical repose in his work which the younger master misses. And he is never as brutal. A cooler, saner spirit pervades his canvases. As a colorist, despite the richness of decoration, his textures, his marbles, the warmth of his green woods, he must rank below Stuck, who is a man of the Renaissance, a Pagan born too late. Böcklin is a poet who happened to paint. He is at his highest in scenes where he sounds the note of imaginative awe, as in the "Felsenschlucht," with its primordial dragon, gloomy ravine and terrified, fleeing wayfarers. His portrait painted by himself, with Death gleefully fiddling behind him, is another example of an imagination that wavered between the classic serenities of Greece and the wayward landscapes of a Salvator Rosa or the macabre extravagances of a Callot. For his portraiture I care little. The much belauded "Flora" is but a Botticelli freely paraphrased. The Centaurs quarreling, the "Charon," the "Triton" and many others of the sort show the range of one of the greatest painters of modern times.

I admit that I now reluctantly approach the subject of Edvard Munch, a painter, designer, engraver and lithographer of Christiania. He was first introduced to such of the American public as had the good fortune to read Vance Thompson's eloquent exposition of the artist in a vanished number of M'll'e New York. In Munich Munch has a slim following after the manner of most geniuses. As disordered, farouche and bizarre as he is, every medium in which the artist works reveals his uncanny power whether it be oil, lithography, etching, woodcut gouache or tempera. Edvard Munch is the last shudder in an art outworn by conventions, given over to the decorative complacencies of the rich and bridled by academic routine. Like Sinding in music, Strindberg in the drama and Knut Hamsun in the novel Munch is an anarchist of art. He throws bombs, harmless ones, into the camps of both the romantics and the academics. Even for the man who paints merely for the joy of solving problems of atmosphere, color, form, light, Munch exhibits contempt. He is both a realist and a psychologist. He twangs neither the strings of sentimentality nor anecdote. He is not at all poetic, and he loathes smug drawing. At first sight I should say the man was quite mad, mad because of the intolerable burden of life. He is the most self-conscious of painters, and this consciousness often assumes curious masks. Hamlet-like, there is method in his lunacy; but even the method is repellent. I never encountered such art, except Wiertz's in Brussels, that so antagonized an audience. Even the exhibition officials here avoid the Munch room, which usually contains two types of visitors—the laughing ones and the shocked. I belong to neither class, for underlying his morbid dissection of the hideous fears, sorrows and rebellious landscapes of life there is a philosopher and a tender hearted artist peering, prying, and as curious as his own "Curieuses," an autographic copy of which I was lucky enough to secure. Only I wish this painter would occasionally condescend to observe the barest proprieties of drawing. He prefers seeing things and faces at a distance, faces drained of expression, white blanks, yet saturated with the horror of existence; sunsets that are as sinister as John Martin's, moonlights green and full of crawling mysteries. There is a "Moon Shine" here numbered 2572 in the catalogue. It is a woodcut, and the most depraved specimen of art I have ever seen. Yet it is, in the technical sense, only a study in shadows. But a face lurks in the smothering green moonshine that Dante must have seen its counterpart in hell. This picture I did not buy, though it only cost 100 marks for the reproduction.

His own self-drawn portrait in lithograph tells us why the man paints these subjects. I admired without reservations the characteristic head of Strindberg, like Knut Hamsun, a fellow countryman of Munch. Most pathetic and most praised of his canvases is the "Sick Girl," a powerful transcription from life itself of a dying child and the clutching agony of the bereaved mother. Of "Angst" and its wavering motive of the grotesque bathing women and the neighboring chromatic rocks I shall say nothing now. And yet how sane this designer can be as is evidenced by his "Am Strande"! It is as simple as Mozart, with only three tones employed, and displays a bold sincerity that convinces one thoroughly. As truthful as is no one alive using brush or pencil, Edvard Munch may yet realize the beauty of nature, of the human face. He has not revealed to us its more subtle meanings, rather do strangly hieroglyphics distress his extremely sensitive soul, for there is a great, nervous soul behind his shuddering arabesques. His Nietzsche-like contempt for the suave, the decorative, the obvious, must be swallowed up in a broader synthesis. Munch has his greatest work yet to accomplish.

MUNICH, August 12.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, September 9, 1901.

AS already cabled to you, Miss Alice Verlet, well known in the United States as a successful concert singer, made her début at the Théâtre de la Monnaie here last Saturday night, the role of Gilda, in Verdi's "Rigoletto," having been assigned to her. Considerable information might be gathered from what the daily papers here say regarding her unequivocal triumph, which places her now permanently among the opera stars of the Continent, an engagement at the Opéra Comique, Paris, being already effected, insuring for her such performances as to limit the possibility to sing for more than two months in the United States. She will next appear in Auber's "La Muette de Portici," operas of the old repertory being constantly selected here, particularly of the French school. Mlle. Verlet naturally feels as if her future belonged to opera henceforth, as the success at de la Monnaie justifies, and yet it would be an excellent idea for her to make an American concert tour.

Felia Litvinne, the artist who sang in America with Jean de Reszké some years ago, is singing Elsa, Aïda and other important roles here, and goes in January to fill another St. Petersburg engagement. She was obliged to decline a Vienna offer, as she is again to sing Isolde, her leading role, in Paris this season. Madame Litvinne is a favorite with the Brussels audience, and draws the highest salary of any opera artist on the regular engagement list here. It is among the possibilities that she will be heard in America in opera next season.

That thorough artist on the 'cello, Mlle. Elsa Ruegger, is in Brussels, preparatory to a tour in England in October with Adelina Patti, for a month or six weeks, in the larger cities. Mlle. Ruegger has signed for next year in America under Wolfsohn's management, and as she is known in the United States as a gifted performer who has already made a favorable impression there is no doubt of her continued success.

The National Conservatory here turns out annually an abundance of competent teachers, flooding, as it were, the little nation with professionals, who in competition pull down the prices to a pauper basis, hence there is no surprise in reading such an advertisement as this: "Wanted, by a Grand Prix graduate of the National Conservatory, pupils for the piano; four lessons for 2 francs." That is, four lessons of an hour each at 10 cents per lesson. These are people who know how to play and who have had a thorough musical education. Very naturally the musical profession offers no great or tempting opportunities.

I learn that Moriz Rosenthal, the great pianist, is at Gastein on his vacation.

I am informed by an Italian correspondent that Piatti's great 'cello—a Stradivarius of the finest type—has been acquired by Mendelssohn, the Berlin banker, who is already the owner of other famous examples. He paid 100,000 francs for it to Countess Soohis, of Bergamo—a daughter of Piatti. The widow of Piatti, who was separated from him during the greater part of their lives, is living at Lake Como. She is an English lady and is blind.

I also learn that Signora Galletti is dead, her demise occurring at her home in Milan. She was what we now would call a great "star" in her days, singing chiefly "Norma," "Favorita," "Lucrezia Borgia," "Anna Bolena," "Semiramide" and "La Vestali." She was a prominent figure on the stage of Italian opera, a remarkable actress, and a vocalist of the Pasta and Grisi class, of which no survivors now exist. She grew very stout and retired from the stage at the zenith of her career, as it was deemed best by her.

Bruno Oscar Klein, of New York, left for home from Hamburg last Saturday. His talented son continues his studies at Leipsic, and is gifted with the most refined violin technic, together with a profound and earnest ambition to become a thorough musician.

M. Zeldenrust, the Dutch pianist, is in Paris prior to his departure for America. B.

MUSIC IN ITALY.

CORSO VENEZIA 65, MILAN, ITALY,
September 7, 1901.

OPERA and operetta performances—heavy, light, lighter and lightest—have been given at the less important theatres of Milan throughout the summer. Besides these indoor performances there have been open air concerts at regular intervals, by the military band, in the Giardini Pubblici and in the Piazza della Scala. There is also good music played nightly by the orchestras at the Cova Garden and the Biffi Café, in the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele and at the Gambrinus (a large restaurant in the Galleria), where a Viennese ladies' orchestra discourses good music, well played, all the year round, night and day—that is to say from 12 to 2 at midday, and in the evening from 8:30 to 12 o'clock, or as the Italians put it, from 20½ to 24 o'clock (midnight).

At the Fossati Theatre a company opened September 1 with the four-act opera "Ruy Blas," by Filippo Marchetti, which was given successfully half a dozen consecutive nights. Now "Lucia di Lammermoor" of the same company is holding the boards at that theatre.

The conductor of the orchestra, which numbers thirty-two members, is Sig. Benjamino Lombardi, a man wielding a strong, firm baton over his forces.

The chorus, especially that of the male singers, is good in voice quality and well drilled in ensemble, but lacking in light and shade effects.

The scenery and the costuming are poor and faulty, leaving much to be desired, which is so frequently the case in Italian theatres.

Among the solo singers I should mention Giuseppe Damaso, the impersonator of Ruy Blas, as the possessor of a very pleasant and robust tenor voice, though he is not much of an actor. The lady singing the soprano part of the Queen of Spain was much afflicted by that ugly, disagreeable little thing—but big in its effects on some of the audience—known as the tremolo. (Rather I should say that it was I who was afflicted, for the queen appeared to be enjoying herself with what to her has become a natural mode of singing.) Casilda, the lady of honor to the queen, was sung and acted most charmingly by a pretty little singer named Ines Melloni, who, I understand, studied with the late Isabella Galletti-Gianoli, and who but very recently made her first appearance upon the stage.

Of the several light opera companies I will cite only the larger and most successful one, the Soarez, Acconci Company, occupying the Teatro della Commenda, and of which Signora Soarez is the life and soul, with a brimful measure of fun and sprightliness; one of those natures you can't help liking.

The large company contains quite a number of fair singers and nearly all the members are good actors. Their repertory includes the following operettas, besides a number of smaller one and two-act opuses: "Boccaccio" (Suppé), "Il Venditore di Uccelli" (Zeller), "La Poupée" (Audran), "The Mikado" (Sullivan), "Les P'tites Michn"

The National Conservatory of Music of America,

128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

Free Scholarship Examination in Theoretical Department October 1, one o'clock.
Max Spicker and others Examiners

(Messager), "Miss Helyett" (Audran), "Il Babbeo e l'Intrigante" (Sarria), "Las Mascotte" (Audran), "La Piccola Bohème" (Sadun), "Donna Juanita" (Suppé), "Shakespeare" (Serpette), "Barba Bleu" (Offenbach); their novelties, "La Dot de Brigitta" (Serpette and Roger), and "Le Donnine" (Audran), and "Il Carnet del Diavolo" ("Le Carnet du Diable," by Serpette), a fantastic musical medley in three acts and eight scenes or pictures, with fifty-six named characters in the cast; altogether too many for me to write.

This last named operetta of Serpette is filling the house to the doors with large, enthusiastic, thoroughly pleased audiences.

The roof of the Commenda Theatre can be made to slide apart, affording good ventilation by fresh air and producing the effect of an open air performance. The production now running has become so popular that the management has just issued or published parts of the scenes on postal cards, which I herewith send you.

The Lirico Theatre, I am told, is to be opened October 1 by a Spanish opera company for a short engagement, previous to the regular season at that house of Signor Sonzogno's own company.

"Francesca da Rimini," the new tragedy of G. d'Annunzio, is to be produced for the first time at the Costanzi Theatre in Rome, during November or the fortnight following in December. Eleonora Duse will create the part of Francesca, and has selected Gustavo Salvini to play the part of Paolo; he has accepted the engagement and will soon join La Duse's company.

The incidental music for "Francesca da Rimini" will be written by Signor Scontrino.

On the summit of Monte Capreo, near Carpineto, the birthplace of Pope Leo XIII., a gigantic cross, 60 feet high, was unveiled the last days of August, in the presence of Monsignor Tornielli and clergy, the Pecci family, and a large assemblage of worshippers. The Pope sent a telegram to the local organizing committee, praying that the symbol of Redemption just unveiled might serve as a pledge of protection and prosperity for his native place.

His Holiness has composed a set of Latin verses in celebration of the event.

What a vigorous old gentleman the Pope still must be!

On my return here from Venice a week ago I learned with pleasure that Mrs. Mary B. Deane-Jarvis, the wife of the Hon. William Jarvis, United States Consul at Milan, and who at present is visiting her home in the State of New Hampshire, had been singing there and in other New England States with brilliant success.

I am, indeed, glad to hear this, for Mrs. Jarvis is a most estimable lady, and in every way a lovable and womanly woman, the pride and the joy of the American colony here at Milan. She possesses a fine dramatic soprano voice of splendid quality and range. For the past two or three years the lady has studied with Maestro Sebastiano Breda, making prodigious progress under his guidance.

If you wish, I may at some time furnish the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER with a list of American vocal students and their masters in Milan.

DELMA-HEIDE.

MADAME DE WIENZKOWSKA REOPENS HER SCHOOL.—Madame de Wienzkowska, founder and directress of the Leschetiszky School of Piano Playing at Carnegie Hall, returned to this city after a delightful vacation spent at Sugar Hill, N. H. The artist intends to begin her professional work at once, as there are many pupils waiting and applications for lessons are coming from all parts of the country. Madame de Wienzkowska's season promises to be a brilliant one. Several of her talented pupils will appear before the public this winter also.

The recitals by pupils at the Leschetizky School under Madame de Wienzkowska are musically delightful and instructive. The playing of the young pianists reveals a logical, scientific and thorough training.

LACHMUND TO GIVE LISZT RECITALS.—Carl V. Lachmund contemplates a series of Liszt recitals this fall at the conservatory of which he is director, and a number of his professional piano students will devote their work largely to the study of this master. As Mr. Lachmund studied three seasons with Liszt at Weimar, with Rosenthal, d'Albert, Siloti, Aus der Ohe and others as classmates, his enthusiastic interest and thorough familiarity with the authentic traditions of Liszt's piano works should be of benefit to students who are preparing for a public career.

CLARENCE EDDY TO SAIL TO-DAY.—Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Eddy sail to-day from Cherbourg on the Kaiserin Maria Theresa. Mr. Eddy will give organ recitals at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, on October 13, 14 and 15, after which he will be in New York to plan for a tour through the Southern States, Mexico and California. Next spring Mr. Eddy will make a tour through England and Scotland.

Musical . . People.

Edwin H. Pierce is giving a series of six piano recitals at Holyoke College of Music, Holyoke, Mass.

Miss Grace Carroll has been appointed vocal instructor at Miss Head's school for girls at Berkeley, Cal.

George Crampton, a baritone, was the soloist at an orchestral concert given at the Broadmoor Casino, Colorado Springs.

Mrs. Caroline Arnold, who attended the Monteagle summer school, has resumed her musical classes at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Miss Kathryn E. Collins, who passed a part of her vacation in New York, has reopened her studio in the Arcade, Cleveland, Ohio.

Miss Annie Wilson, who lectures on the Wagner music dramas, has arrived at Santa Rosa, Cal. Miss Wilson plays her own illustrations.

Miss Lovira Tait, a singer from Springfield, Mass., appeared at concerts this summer given at Far Rockaway and other Long Island resorts.

Theodore R. Reese, a Milwaukee musician, is in Germany, where he is hoping to get an opportunity to present his opera "The Night Watch."

Miss Margaret Humphreys is the new head of the music department in the school of expression in the Southern Military College at Jackson, Ga.

Miss Wheeler gave a lecture on Wagner's music dramas September 3 in Park Chapel, Erie, Pa. The illustrations were given by Mrs. C. W. McKean.

Miss Erma Wing, formerly of Sacramento, Cal., will give a concert September 26, after which she is coming East to complete her musical education.

From Italy comes the report that Miss Poddie Ross, a coloratura soprano from Minneapolis, has sung "Lucia" to the satisfaction of the Continental critics.

George F. Stein, bass soloist of All Saints' Cathedral, Albany, assisted the choir of the Third Street Temple, Troy, during the festival of the Hebrew new year.

Miss Bessie Marshall, violinist, and Miss Zella Marshall pianist, of Chicago, closed an eight weeks' engagement at the Hotel Ramona, Colorado Springs, September 1.

Frank Sill Rogers, organist and musical director of St Peter's, Albany, returned from Europe a fortnight ago

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.
A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Resz and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, volu or compass. The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio.
MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAG

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
Address all communications to
613 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Buildg. (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, IL.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, L.

He directed the musical program at the McKinley memorial service on September 15.

The first pupils' recital of this season at the Plowe Conservatory at Peoria, Ill., was given on September 5. Mrs. Whitten, a contralto singer, assisted the young performers.

Miss Margaret Stilwell, the pianist, passed several weeks at the Earlington, Richfield Springs, N. Y. She was invited to play at several of the musicales given there this summer.

Miss Carrie Lum gave a song recital on September 6 at the Montgomery Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. She was assisted by Miss Carolyn Kohn, a local violinist, and Mr. Werner, accompanist.

Miss Nannie C. Love, supervisor of music in the Muncie (Ind.) schools, hopes to organize a great chorus of voices from Delaware County school teachers and others interested in vocal music.

Francis M. Hendriks will give a piano recital to-night (September 25) at Unity Church, Denver, Col. He will be heard in a program of twelve numbers, and seven of these will be from compositions of Chopin.

Lyman F. Brown has severed his connection with Mount Union College and opened a piano school at Cleveland, Ohio. The assistant director of the school is Miss Dora Brown, a daughter of the director.

Alexander Scott, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has returned from his studies with Herrmann at Frankfort-on-the-Main and North in London. Mr. Scott has opened a studio in Winnipeg, and will teach the violin and singing.

Henry MacLachlan will manage a series of high class concerts this season at Norfolk, Va. The concerts will be given at the Academy of Music in the Virginia seaport city, and great artists will be engaged as soloists.

Miss Kate Cohen and Miss Flora Marguerite Bertelle gave a concert on September 5 at the Congregational Church at Quincy, Ill. Several local vocalists and instrumentalists assisted in presenting a good program.

Prominent citizens of Peoria, Ill., are arranging a complimentary farewell concert to Miss Bertha Seabury, of their town, who is preparing to leave Peoria to continue her musical studies abroad. Miss Seabury is a violinist

Mrs. Campbell-Shafer, an Albany, N. Y., singer and teacher, passed the summer in Montreal and Perth, and at the latter place gave a concert early in September. Mrs. Shafer has resumed her vocal classes at her studio in Albany.

Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Bischoff gave a concert at the Congregational Church at Fond du Lac, Wis., last month, which proved one of the successful musical events of the summer in the West. The blind organist has many admirers in the West.

Miss Helen de Bierce Fuller has left her home at Oberlin, Ohio, and by this time has entered upon her duties as teacher of vocal music at the Southwestern University at Georgetown, Tex. Miss Grace H. Gridley, of Toledo, is the piano instructor in the same institution.

Miss Isabelle McKinley White made her début as a concert singer on September 4 at the People's Church, Kalamazoo, Mich. The young singer was assisted by Miss May Lewis Perrine, the organist of the First Methodist Church; Miss Harriet Hasty, accompanist, and J. William Wagenvoord, baritone. The program was made up of classic and popular compositions.

The concert in the Woman's Building at the Minnesota State Fair attracted a large audience. The program began with a solo by Mr. Jaeger, of St. Paul, which was followed by Mrs. Dolly Rathbourn-Chesley, who sang "Wishes," by Gertrude Sans Souci, and a waltz song by Bailey. Mr. Wetherby sang Dudley Buck's "Bacchus"; Miss Nellie Van Duzer sang Harris' "Madrigal"; Mr. Jaeger sang a second number, "Marie," by Lynn; Mr. Geddes sang "Hearest Thou," by Mattei; Mrs. Rathbourn-Chesley sang "The Mystic Spell," written by Richard Loffman, of Minneapolis, and Miss Van Duzer closed the concert with "Absence," by Little.

THE SEVERNS RETURN FROM ITALY.—Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Severn returned from Europe last Wednesday. As THE MUSICAL COURIER has previously stated, the Severns passed three months at the Francis Walker Summer School, in Florence, Italy. Mrs. Severn taught her branches, the voice and piano, and Mr. Severn taught the violin, and in addition composed a number of new works. The Severns also appeared at several musicales, at which they were assisted by pupils. Mr. Walker, who returned with the Severns, will be associated in New York this season with Mr. and Mrs. Severn, and also Arthur Severn, the violoncellist. The Walker-Severn Conservatory of Music will open on October 1 at 836 Seventh avenue. In the meantime Mr. and Mrs. Severn will be found at their old studio, 131 West Fifty-sixth street.

MÜLLER'S PUBLICATIONS IN DEMAND.—Carl C. Müller, the well-known teacher of harmony, counterpoint and composition, will resume instruction in these branches October 1, at his residence, 1291 Lexington avenue. His translation of S. Sechter's "Fundamental Harmonies" has now reached its tenth edition, and his First Series of Tables for the writing of harmonic exercises, giving opportunity for the learning of the elementary part, was issued in its eighth edition, a proof that these two works do not lose their hold on musical students. Both works are published by G. Schirmer, 35 Union square.

ADELE LEWING.—Mme. Adele Lewing, who reopened her studio on September 20, has several new compositions ready for the publisher. The pianist-composer passed her vacation at Block Island and in the Adirondacks.

THE LUCKSTONES HOME FROM EUROPE.—Isadore Luckstone has returned from Europe, where he passed the summer with his family. Mr. Luckstone will reopen his new studio at 128 East Sixty-fourth street on October 1.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

HANNAH & HAMLIN Dissolved June 1st.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY

DIRECTORS OF CONCERTS AND MUSICAL ARTISTS.

514-517 KIMBALL HALL CHICAGO.

LOUIS EVANS, President.

CABLE ADDRESS, LINARK, CHICAGO. LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE, HARRISON 2255.

REPRESENTATIVE AGENCY OF MIDDLE STATES

EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION

GENEVIEVE CLARK WILSON—Soprano.
SUE HARRINGTON FURBECK—Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN—Tenor.
CHARLES W. CLARK—Baritone.
AUGUSTA COTTLOW—Pianiste, and others.
LEON MARX—Violinist.

WE WILL NEGOTIATE FOR ALL HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD Studio 6, 241 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO. CONCERT ORGANIST. Piano and Organ Instruction.

A. CLIPPINGER, THE ART OF SINGING. Conductor. 410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE, VIOLIN VIRTUOSO. Teacher. Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE. Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER, PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals. Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT, Teacher of Singing, Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON, SOPRANO, 620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD, PIANIST. Instruction. Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler. Address: 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN, BARITONE, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist. (GODOWSKY.) Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers. ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE, SINGING MASTER. The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list. STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO. CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING. Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory. FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager. 'Phones: Harrison 1910 and 1736. Unsurpassed Faculty Teaching. ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. Stage Training, Elocution, Languages and the Fine Arts. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE. BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS. For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . . MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL, Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante, 623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic. CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY, JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO. ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT. JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors. Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, September 21, 1901.

"THERE is no truer saying than that the pen is mightier than the sword, but I would not venture to repeat it—as it is accepted as a platitude—were I not desirous to suggest that in all respects the pen is at least the equal of the sword. Those who wear the sword claim to be officers and gentlemen, and we who wield the pen I contend have the right, if we are worthy of our great profession, to call ourselves journalists and gentlemen. The institute of which I have the honor to be for a few hours longer the president, and of which you have the honor to be members by its royal charter, carefully considered by the gentlemen of our profession fifteen years ago, and conferred by Queen Victoria of glorious and blessed memory, preserves our ideal and tries to attain it. By our charter it is our duty to do all in our power to protect the purity of the press, and to secure the good fortune, and what is equally of importance, the good repute of press men. Let us rise, then, to our responsibilities—responsibilities as great as those of the doctor and the pastor. Let us remember that the purpose of the press is to be the loyal friend of man, and as a necessary result the faithful servant of God."

Not only are the above words powerful enough to have impressed readers in East and West alike, causing people to think. They are sufficiently liberal to embrace many branches of journalism, including that of music. And surely the highest ideal of the musical journalist must be to prove worthy of them. They formed the peroration of President A. Beckett's "The Mission of the Press," an eloquent address delivered on September 9, at Leeds, before the conference of the Institute of Journalists.

We're ready to admit, "There's no place like Chicago!" And yet, why is it that even the most loyal Chicagoan sometimes turns longingly toward the East? Why does this eminent manager sigh sentimentally and declare he is "in exile?" Why did the distinguished artist whom you met on Michigan avenue the other day look "blue" (not just sky blue, if you please, but indigo blue) as he shook your hand and—forgetting to comment upon the glorious fall weather, with its touches of Indian summer—reverted to the musical atmosphere of London? And why—why did you almost dare to sympathize with him? Perhaps it is all because the sunrise may have more fascination than the sunset. But how do the people in San Francisco feel about it?

Doubtless a spirit similar to that of certain born and bred Canadians, who, a trifle affectedly it is true, refer to "dear England" as "home," occasionally permeates the West.

But this is weakness. Our artistic "home" and "musical atmosphere" are here, where the Fine Arts Building, the great conservatories and other magnificent musical enterprises are making their influences felt.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever." This is what the concertgoer will feel inclined to exclaim when he enters the enlarged and newly decorated University Hall, in the Fine Arts Building. Over 1,000 seats are now available, and everywhere prevails an air of luxury and artistic refinement. The coloring is exceptionally rich, and the galleries, increased in size, are more effective than formerly, as architect and manager will be ready to admit. Upon this, the latest achievement in this Western palace of art, the Fine Arts Building, Mr. Curtiss, the able director, is most heartily to be congratulated.

Among symphonies which the Chicago Orchestra will play under Theodore Thomas' direction at the Auditorium this season are: Symphony No. 8, F major, Beethoven; Symphony No. 4, E minor, Brahms; Symphony in C, Mozart; Symphony in D, Bach; Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Beethoven's Symphony, "Eroica."

The Apollo Club's rehearsals are progressing satisfactorily, and an unusually successful season is predicted for the society.

This season officers of the Englewood Musical Club, of which Louis Evans is the competent choral director, include Ralph B. Throop, president; Mrs. E. J. Greiger, vice-president; Robert Lipsey, secretary, and Elbert Ingalls, treasurer. The chief object of this organization is: "To promote a better fellowship among the musical people of Englewood, and to build up a local association which will be independent, to a large degree, of other musical bodies."

At the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory of Music on the afternoon of September 12 a very creditable recital was given by pupils of Errico Sansone and Francesco Zito, his assistant. The interesting program included compositions by Haydn, Smetana, Godard, Sarasate and Sansone. Among the performers were Mr. Sansone, Professor Zito, P. Scaffa, H. G. Thayer. Mary Sansome, Bennie Hecht, Sara Waters, Percy Friedman and Florence Hendershot, while Giuseppe Garramoni, an exceptionally promising young violinist, won the chief honors of the occasion, his playing arousing much enthusiasm.

Miss Mary Wood Chase, the gifted Chicago pianist, is successfully managing her own engagements this season, and already important dates are arranged. Many of Miss Chase's pupils are occupying excellent positions in various parts of the country. Three of them are teachers at prominent colleges in Kentucky, one is director of music in a Tennessee college, another holds a similar position in a college in Minnesota, while a third is at the head of a school of music in Louisiana. Others are well-known instructors of large classes in different States, including Iowa, Colorado, Michigan and Missouri.

Miss Emma E. Clark has returned to the Fine Arts Building, having enjoyed an invigorating vacation in Michigan's wild Tahquamenon regions. During her absence Miss Clark gave a recital at the residence of Mrs. J. C. Graves, one of her former pupils, in Midland, Mich.

From Rockford, Ill., comes the announcement that Myron E. Barnes has resumed teaching at his studio on North First street.

Early in the present week Loudon G. Charlton, the well-known New York manager, visited this city in the interests of the prominent artists who are under his capable direction.

At her South Park avenue studio, Fannie C. Parsons is now organizing classes in musical kindergarten.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Ganz, of the Chicago Musical College, traveled through Canada during their summer vacation, which has now reached its conclusion.

At Sinai Temple the following appointments have been made for one year: Mrs. Aida Hemini, first soprano; Mrs. Jessie Waters Northrop, second soprano; Miss Elane de Sellem, first alto; Mrs. Tillie Nolen Schlossman, second alto; George Hamlin, first tenor; E. C. Todd, second tenor; A. E. Battoff, baritone; Arthur Dunham, organist, and J. Allen Preisch, basso and musical director.

Loudon G. Charlton announces that Madame Nordica will be heard in a concert program at the Auditorium, on November 25.

It is stated that Blatchford Kavanagh, baritone, who was once a popular boy soprano, is about to leave Chicago for an operatic course of study in Paris..

In theatrical and journalistic circles much interest is centred in the fact that Arthur Byron, a nephew of Ada Rehan, will present a new play, "Petticoats and Bayonets," at the Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, on October 7. This production follows "King Dodo's" long run, which concludes here on October 5.

Under the capable direction of Mrs. Herman Miller, the Woman's Amateur Musical Club, of Aurora, Ill., which gave "The Messiah" last year, is preparing to be heard in "Elijah" this season, the men's auxiliary club assisting.

At the Chicago Musical College much interest is being taken this month in the scholarship contest, under Dr. Ziegfeld's supervision.

Amy Murray, the gifted Scottish-American singer, will probably be heard here in January.

COBB RECITAL AT THE PAN-AMERICAN.—Clifford Reid Cobb, of Geneseo, N. Y., gave the 122d free organ recital at the Pan-American Exhibition on September 16. Among his selections were "St. Ann's" Fugue, by J. S. Bach.

Mr. Cobb is organist and choir leader of the Presbyterian Church in Geneseo, and is an enthusiastic and conscientious musician and fine organist. He is a former pupil and graduate of the Metropolitan College of Music in New York (the American Institute of Applied Music).

FERDINAND Q. DULCKEN.—The esteemed musician Ferdinand Q. Dulcken, has recovered from a severe illness, which confined him to his home for several months. Mr. Dulcken has resumed teaching.

Recently the Ditsons have published some new compositions by Mr. Dulcken. Mr. Dulcken's many admirers will be glad to hear that he has resumed his activity.

AMY MURRAY OPENS HER FALL TOUR.—Miss Amy Murray, the Scottish lecturer and singer, will open her autumn tour at Presque Isle, Me., to-morrow, September 26. On Friday of this week she will give a recital at Houlton, Me. Then she goes to Cheshire, Conn., to fill a date on October 9, and on October 11 she will appear at Haverstraw, N. Y.

MRS. SARA ROBINSON-DUFF.—Elsewhere in this issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER appears an interesting sketch of Mrs. Sara Robinson-Duff, the distinguished voice specialist, who is staying during her short visit to New York in the Burlington Apartments, No. 10 West Thirty-first street.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, September 21, 1901.

MRS. WILLIAM McALPIN has been spending a pleasant vacation at her summer home in College Hill. Her vocal school at the McAlpin homestead will be reopened for the regular academic year on October 25. Mrs. McAlpin will devote much of her time to the development of the operatic department of her school, for which her experience, talent and personal endowments so eminently qualify her. Her success of last year in the building up of an operatic school has been an incentive to more ambitious undertakings for the present season. She will give three public performances of grand opera in some prominent hall, with her pupils next winter. They will include the second act of "Lohengrin," scenes from "Faust" and second act of "Aida." About the middle of November she will give a public concert with her most advanced pupils.

The annual examination for free scholarships was held in the college last week. Of the large number of applicants the following were successful: Piano, Miss Ada Keller and Clarence Adler; voice, Misses Kathryn Gibbons and Mabel Dufour Flinn; violin, Misses Olive Kiler and Bertha N. Roth and Ralph Wetmore and Frederic Gerard; organ, Miss Bertha M. Foster and Henry L. Deniz.

Word received at the college from Miss Genevieve Seymour Lincoln, Miss Aline Fredin and Frederick J. Hoffmann announces their safe arrival in Vienna, where they will continue their studies under Leschetizky, all being accepted.

Signor Albino Gorno, principal of the piano department, will examine all prospective piano pupils every afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock. Signor Gorno has now in press a new composition, "The Ocean," arranged for piano and orchestra, which will be heard in the near future.

Contrary to expectations, and to the intense delight of numerous present and prospective pupils, Signor Lino Mattioli will teach both in the morning and afternoon. Among the new pupils of exceptional talent who have entered for the current year is Frederic Freeman, of Flint, Mich. Mr. Freeman, while studying in Florence, Italy, became so impressed with the excellent reputation held by Signor Mattioli abroad as a teacher of the voice, returned to America to finish his studies at the college.

The Marien String Quartet will begin rehearsals shortly for the first chamber music concert. Signor Romeo Gorno will play the piano part of the Dvorák quintet.

Edmund A. Jahn, who made such a favorable impression in the East this summer, has been engaged for a number of oratorio concerts to be given at Wheeling, W. Va., and other up the river cities. Mr. Jahn will also give a recital in Parkersburg, W. Va.

Dr. Nicholas J. Elsenheimer and Signor Romeo Gorno, in addition to their regular college duties, are devoting every available hour preparing for their concert tour.

Owing to the large enrollment this year the dean, W. S. Sterlin, has been compelled to appoint a number of assistants. The latest addition in his vocal department is Miss Elizabeth Mathias. Miss Mathias has been very successful as a vocal teacher outside the college, and her accession will no doubt prove valuable.

Pupils of the Department of Americanized Delsarte Culture, under the direction of Miss Clara M. Zumstein, will give a demonstration of their work next Thursday at Music Hall, under the auspices of the Fall Festival Association.

Adolph H. Stadermann, of the College of Music faculty, will be heard in a recital on the great Music Hall organ on Monday afternoon, September 23, in connection with the celebration of the Fall Festival. Mr. Stadermann is a serious musician, a close student and one who is making progress in the direction of art. The program will be as follows:

Prelude and Fugue in E minor.....J. S. Bach
Elevation in A flat, op. 25, No. 2.....Guilmant
Offertoire in D minor.....
Berceuse .....Batiste
.....Guilmant
Processional Prelude for a Solemn Mass.....Geo. E. Whiting
Suite Gothique, op. 25.....Boellman

Frederic Shailer Evans, of the Conservatory of Music, returned this week from his vacation abroad. He was accompanied on his tour by his father and mother. Mr. Evans had a delightful time in Italy, visiting Naples, Rome, Florence, Pisa and Venice. In the latter city he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Tirindelli. Next he toured through Austria and Switzerland. He took in Vienna and Salzburg; also Munich. In Munich he had the pleasure of attending the Mozart cycles of operas. He witnessed the performances of the "Magic Flute," "Figaro," "Don Juan," &c. He returned to Turin and set sail from Genoa for home.

Mr. Tirindelli has dedicated a beautiful new song, entitled "Absent," to Mrs. Annie Norton Hartdegen.

Miss Elise Dorst, a former pupil of Tecla Vigna, has accepted a position as vocal instructor at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., of which R. H. Peters is the director.

For the last five years Miss Dorst has been identified with the Georgetown (Ky.) College of Music.

The Liederkranz, under the direction of Louis Ehrgott, gave a concert in connection with the Fall Festival Friday evening of this week. An elaborate chorus program was performed, and the solo numbers were by Mrs. C. S. Bennett, soprano, and Miss Eleanor A. Bain, contralto. Miss Bain was heard in Mascheroni's "Lontananza," and Mrs. Bennett sang the "Spinning Song," by Weiland.

Frank Van der Stucken will sail from Bremen on September 28, and is expected to arrive in Cincinnati October 18. Under his direction the opera department of the College of Music will give two operas—"The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai, and the other not to be named until his arrival.

John F. McCarthy, violinist, has resumed his class work at his studio, 220 Grant street. Mr. McCarthy is an incessant worker and is expecting a much larger class this year than last. He is a pupil of Rothe, Unkenstein and Hans Becker.

J. A. HOMAN.

EMMA HOWSON'S PUPIL, PAULINE JOHNSON, IN ENGLISH OPERA.

FOLLOWING are some of the press notices Miss Pauline Johnson, the soprano, received, while singing in opera at Providence with the American Opera company:

Miss Pauline Johnson sings the part of Gilda, Rigoletto's daughter, in the excellent manner that was to be expected of her. The beautiful music as she interprets it is ever fascinating, and it may be as truly said of Miss Johnson as of Mr. Stewart that they have had no better opportunities to display their fine voices than in this opera. Some of the music, especially in the notable solo and duet, gives Miss Johnson's sweet voice delightful opportunities, in which it seems to fairly revel.—Providence News.

Miss Pauline Johnson proved an instant success as Leonora, her first solo winning a course of favor which reached its climax only in the death scene. Her work was impassioned and her voice was sweet and true in the difficult and impassioned scenes that it was her task to portray. At no time has she seemed to have so well pleased her audience as she did in the difficult task she essayed last night.—Providence Evening Bulletin.

It was very pleasing for the regular first nighters to see Miss Johnson in a leading part again. As Germaine, the long lost but bona fide Marchioness, she was very attractive and sang her part with an expression and feeling that many older operatic singers might envy.—Evening Times, Pawtucket.

Miss Pauline Johnson is a dainty and captivating Yum Yum, and her love scenes with Nanki Poo are interesting enough to be real.—Providence Journal.

Miss Pauline Johnson took the role of Yum Yum, one of the three wards of Ko Ko. She is of a very attractive personality, and her love scene with Nanki Poo was a bit of delicate comedy that stood well the strain of an encore. Her rendition of the solo, "The Moon and I," was very effectively done, and deserved the generous applause it received.—Sunday Telegram, Providence.

Miss Johnson received her entire instruction from the formation of tone to finish of careful vocalization from Miss Emma Howson, the eminent teacher. Miss Johnson's method of using her voice enabled her to accomplish a wonderful amount of work. She is a marvelously quick study, as may be seen from the fact that she sang Leonora, never having seen the part before, after four days of study. She also learned Gilda in "Rigoletto," of which she had a knowledge of the aria, "Cara Nome," and the duet with the tenor, in three days—almost an impossibility.

Miss Johnson is certainly one of the coming English prima donnas and is almost invaluable to a manager.

"WORTE DER LIEBE."—Louis V. Saar's new choral work, "Worte der Liebe," op. 47, written for soprano and tenor solos and four part male chorus, a capella—a novel combination—is to be published by F. C. E. Leuckard, in Leipsic, one of the most exclusive publishing firms in Germany. The new work will have its first hearing in the third concert of the New York Arion, under Julius Lorenz's conductorship.

TUNING SITUATION WANTED.—An extra reliable and long experienced tuner and voicer, who has been three years with present employers, desires a change of location; can tune organs also; factory or wareroom. Salary but moderate. R. W. Welles, 313 Fountain street, Providence, R. I.

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
1st American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
HAS NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, September 15, 1901.

THE terrible misfortune that has befallen our nation has greatly subdued our city. Many events have been postponed, stores were closed all day yesterday out of respect to the deceased President, and the whole town has gone into mourning. President McKinley was greatly beloved in California. His recent visit to the Golden State had brought him into personal contact with us, and the feeling he left behind him was that of personal ownership in a President who before had been but an honored name in the minds of the many. I think we all feel a personal bereavement, and an abiding sorrow in the loss of so good, so loving and great hearted a man as we knew our beloved President to be. It has been a terrible shock, and one from which we shall not soon recover.

Yesterday was the great high festival of the Jewish people—the Jewish New Year. Special music had been prepared in all the synagogues, and the temples were crowded with worshippers. In the Temple Emanu-El the music was extraordinarily fine. Cantor E. J. Stark had been for three months past engaged in composing the music to be rendered on this occasion. He used the Oriental idea, but clothed it in gorgeous and beautiful habiliments, giving the music a modern setting, but adding rather than detracting from the characteristic loveliness of the Oriental music. Particularly fine was the ensemble work, to which Cantor Stark has given particular attention, and the effect produced by the finely trained choir was in parts sublime.

In that part of the service where the ram's horn is sounded, the theme is taken up and echoed by the grand organ, and finally the full chorus bursts out in a grand fortissimo, using the same theme with startling and thrilling effect. The entire service, excepting only two numbers, was from the pen of Cantor Stark. One of the other two numbers was a soprano solo and chorus composed by Louis Von Der Mehden, Jr., which was given with fine effect. The choir of Temple Emanu-El was splendidly balanced, and had the assistance, besides the organ, of twelve orchestral pieces. The regular choir of soloists is composed of the following voices: Miss Daisy Cohn, soprano; Mrs. H. Kelly, contralto; Manloyd Jones, tenor, and S. Homer Henley, bass. W. A. Sabin is the presiding organist. The voices in the chorus choir were Mrs. F. Wright, Mrs. W. Taaffe, Miss Bagley, Madame Bernardi, Mrs. J. Driscol, Miss E. D. Brown, Mrs. M. Wilbourn, Chester Rosecrans, S. Hopcraft, T. G. Elliott, J. Sandy, L. Von Lingrem and Hiram Page. A touching feature of the service was the address of Rabbi Voorsanger, who, in place of his regularly prepared address for the day's festivities, spoke feelingly of the nation's affliction, and paid a most loving and generous tribute to the nation's martyred President.

An elaborate program has been prepared for the Day of Atonement, when strings alone will be used in the orchestra, which will be assisted by Mme. Inez Carusi on the harp. Mr. Stark's version of the Kol Nidrei "Day of God" melody will be presented on this day, when the memorial service is rendered. Mr. Stark has a powerful and richly melodious baritone voice, of which he is unsparing in the musical part of the service, taking many of the solos himself and giving them with deep feeling and splendid effect.

Rose Adler Relda, a San Francisco girl who has made a name for herself by her artistic work at the Opéra Comique, Paris, has signed for a three years' engagement with the Royal Opera House, Frankfort. Miss Relda has been put a comparatively short time before the public as a professional, but in that time has made extraordinary strides on the road to fame. She has a repertory of twelve operas in German and sings the prima donna roles in "Lucia," "Traviata," "Magic Flute," "Il Trovatore," "Rigoletto," "Romeo and Juliet," "Don Juan," "Barber of Seville," "William Tell" and "Les Huguenots." Her manager considers the young Californian a marvel in coloratura work.

Grace Carroll, the contralto, who has just returned from study in New York, gave her first concert before a San Francisco audience on Tuesday night, the 10th inst. She was assisted by Richard José Ferrer, the young violinist, a pupil of Ysaye, who also is but lately returned from his studies abroad. The concert was an artistic success, Miss Carroll displaying many good and unusual points in vocalism, not the least of which is her perfect enunciation. Her best numbers were: "A Narrative," by Mildenberg; "The Divinites du Styx," Gluck, given with fine dramatic effect, and "At My Grave," a weird yet lovely composition by Franz Arens, who coached Miss Carroll in it himself. She gave it a fine interpretation, her voice being well suited in depth and color to the sombre theme of the song.

Richard José Ferrer is an artist and in saying that one says it all. His bowing is perfect, his tone pathetically human and speaks with an intensity that tugs at one's very heartstrings. He is a rising musician and will soon be recognized by his work as one of the élite. His rendering of the Moszkowski Ballade was deeply emotional, and in response to his Zarzycki Mazourka which was a bit of witch-work the audience gave him a rapturous encore, to which he gave a Berceuse that was exquisitely tender. He plays with delightful ease of manner, which does credit to his fine tutelage. The accompanists were Miss Ethel Judson Bates and William B. King, both of whom did very superior work as seconds.

The concert given by the new Ensemble Trio—Miss Hogan, piano; Mr. Lewis, violin, and Mr. Langstroth, 'cello—in the First Unitarian Church, Oakland, was a big success, and was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience. The Raff Trio, which presents great difficulties technically for all the instruments, was given a rousing encore. Miss Hogan plays with great musical taste and a clean, brilliant technic. Mr. Langstroth, the 'cellist, played an exceedingly difficult Locatelli Sonata, interpreting it like a true artist. He has a beautiful style and draws a great warm tone from his instrument that is good to hear. His execution is delightful. He was recalled three times. Mr. Langstroth is made of the material that does not shrink before any amount of the hard work which will win success, and he has a great future before him.

John R. Lewis is a pupil of Sir Henry Heyman, and created quite a furore last season with his beautiful violin work. He was everywhere spoken of as a very talented young man, and his playing this year proves him to have been hard at work in the interim. Certainly it was a great credit to his master's training, and in his solo numbers he was enthusiastically received, as he deserved. For one encore he gave very feelingly the favorite Vieuxtemps "Reverie." Mr. Lewis is still very young, but he is in good hands, and if he does his part there is no doubt Sir Henry will make an artist of him. Mr. Cogswell's baritone numbers were pleasingly rendered and well received.

Two numbers on the program, the Raff Trio and Schutt "Waltzer Maerchen" (Fairy Tale Waltz), were played here for the first time.

An invitation recital was given on Thursday evening at Sherman & Clay Hall by Harry Samuels, violinist, and Hermann Genss, pianist. A very good program was given, and the audience, which was a very large one, showed its appreciation by continued applause. Mr. Samuels was accompanied in the Mendelssohn Concerto by Miss Ehrman, a very young and talented pianist, who played a very refined and intelligent piano part to Mr Samuels' violin. Mr. Samuels is well known for his superior work. The celebrated "Kreutzer Sonata" was given by Mr. Samuels and Mr. Genss with good effect. Mr. Genss gave as a solo number the Mozart-Liszt fantaisie "Don Juan," and in response to an encore gave his own dainty Nocturne.

William Piutti, pianist and pupil of Liszt, is to give a piano recital at Byron Mauzy Hall on the 26th. Mr. Piutti's playing is of a very refined order.

Some Boston papers lately received contain lengthy and comprehensive accounts of the music work of Dr. H. J. Stewart on this coast, and speak very highly of his ability both as a superior organist and a composer of high order. Dr. Stewart has announced that he will make no change in Trinity's choir, as Horatio Parker has left his work there in so perfect condition it will be very easy for Dr. Stewart to carry the work right on. It is very pleasing to us San Franciscans to hear that Dr. Stewart is receiving the warm welcome and appreciation he deserves.

At the Tivoli Opera House Mr. Steindorff is giving us the second week of "Faust," alternating with "C

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. Carl Alves
Vocal Instruction.
1146 PARK AVE., near 91st St., NEW YORK.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
126 East 83d Street, - NEW YORK CITY.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

men," which latter has Collamarini in her celebrated interpretation of the title role.

The death of Willie Pape, the composer, in Mobile, Ala., arouses early memories among old-timers. Many of his piano compositions are well known, particularly his setting of Tennyson's "Brook," transcribed for the piano from the old English ballad, and his "Irish Diamonds," which has been very popular. He was at thirteen years of age associated with Mme. Anna Bishop in concert.

Madame Bishop has done some fine work on this coast, and was one of the vocal teachers of Mrs. Marriner Campbell. Madame Bishop retired some years ago and went to Boston to take up her residence with her brother, who urged her to leave her work and come to him.

The following, quoted from St. Stephen's Parish Monthly Record, testifies to the esteem in which Roscoe Warren Lucy, the pianist, was held in that parish, which he has lately left for a more remunerative position as organist of the Central Methodist Church: "Roscoe Warren Lucy has retired from the organ at St. Stephen's to assume a similar position at the Central Methodist congregation. It was with very much regret that the rector and vestry parted with Mr. Lucy, whose courtesy and readiness to help the church at all times by the exercise of his art has been much appreciated. We cordially wish Mr. Lucy all success in his new sphere of action, and only part from him because financially he will be situated where he can command a larger income."

Their first concert of the season will be given by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music Friday evening, September 20, at the Alhambra Theatre, corner Eddy and Jones streets.

The song recital which was to have been given by Radford and Mme. B. Anais Peck and their pupils at Herman & Clay Hall September 17 is postponed to September 24, out of respect to the death of the President.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

Zeldenrust.

THE "deadly parallel" is always interesting; occasionally it is deliciously funny. Here is a sample of the latter variety that is worth perpetuating. Zeldenrust, the celebrated Dutch pianist, gave his annual recital in Paris in May. As is his custom for several weeks prior to a recital or public appearance of any kind, Zeldenrust put in about eight hours a day at his instrument in the Hotel Balzac, his home in the French capital. A couple of days before the date of his concert the bell boy knocked at the door and handed him the two appended notes:

One reads:

MY DEAR ZELDENRUST—One of my guests—a lady—begs hands that you give her a moment's respite. I should think your fingers might be tired for to-day, anyway. Be reasonable."

And is signed by mine host of the hotel.

The other:

MY DEAR MR. ZELDENRUST—We have been wondering who the pianist was who played so beautifully and who has entertained us (unconsciously) for the past three weeks. Imagine my surprise and delight in recognizing, on inquiry, the name. I hope you have not forgotten us nor the writer at Hotel Powers, and that you will come and see us and let us thank you in person for the pleasure your practicing (although it is too beautiful to be called practicing) has given us.

Very sincerely yours, JANET DRISCOLL.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, September 21, 1901.

MISS CLARA MUNGER was obliged to return to town early in the week in order to arrange hours for lessons, so many pupils wishing to begin their work with her at once. This season Miss Munger will limit the hours of teaching to the morning; last winter she only taught two afternoons during the week in addition to the morning work. Miss Munger has pupils from many of the leading cities of the country, who come to Boston for the whole season to study with her, while others come from New England cities and New York. There has been an urgent request for Miss Munger to establish a studio in New York city, where she would be part of the time, but the large number of pupils in her Boston studio preclude her making any change.

Adah Campbell Hussey, who has been singing at a number of concerts in Scotland, has received most enthusiastic praise from the critics of Edinburgh, Kingussie and Elgin. Wherever she appeared she was the "favorite" of the evening, and her "glorious contralto voice with a most beautiful quality," is always spoken of. She appeared twice at Kingussie, establishing herself warmly in the hearts of her audience, who were most enthusiastic in their demonstrations.

Miss Hussey sailed for home on the 12th of the month, and probably arrived in Boston to-day.

Mrs. May Sleeper-Ruggles has recently taken a studio in the new Huntington Chambers. She has a number of fine voices among her pupils, and with her class in Worcester, where she also is a member of one of the leading church choirs, and a studio at her residence in Newton, Mrs. Ruggles has a busy winter before her. Mrs. Ruggles sang with much success at the music festival at The Weirs, in August.

Mme. Etta Edwards gave a reception on Tuesday evening at her apartment in the Westminster in honor of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Morrison, of Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Morrison is one of the leading vocal teachers in his city, and was on a short trip to the East for his vacation, Mrs. Morrison being a sister of Leonard Marshall, Jr., superintendent of music in the public schools of this city. He was Madame Edwards' first teacher and he was also the teacher of Katherine Bloodgood. Among those who met Mr. and Mrs. Morrison were Mrs. Pierce, Miss Gertrude Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley P. Clemens, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Martin, Mrs. Clarke, Burt Wetmore, Helene Wetmore, Baron Steinmetz, Mrs. Lillian Andrews, Miss Barnard, Mrs. Philips and Mrs. Butler. Several of Mme. Edwards' pupils sang, and Frederic Martin delighted everyone with an aria from "Ernani" and a group of Schubert's songs. Miss Adeline Raymond was the accompanist. Refreshments were served and the evening was greatly enjoyed.

The Faelten Pianoforte School has started in with a rush of pupils that fills the class rooms every working hour of the week. This morning in Carl Faelten's interpretation class there were over seventy pupils, a remarkably large number for the beginning of the season. The first concert of the season will be in Huntington Chambers Hall on Tuesday evening by the following advanced pupils: Miss Ethel May Colgate, Miss Caroline Cunningham, Miss Minna Gallagher, Miss Helen L. Masten, Miss Alice E. Parker, Miss Sarah McKeen Williams, Harry L. Buitekan and Frank E. Heald.

Mr. Faelten's first recital will take place in Steinert Hall on the evening of October 8, when he will play this program:

Air and Variations, E major (Harmonious Blacksmith).....Händel
Rondeau Brillante, B minor, op. 109.....Hummel
Sonata Quasi una Fantasia, E flat major, op. 27, No. 1....Beethoven
Etude, B flat minor, op. 104, No. 1.....Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Song Without Words, D major, No. 11.....Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Capriccio, F sharp minor, op. 5.....Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Norwegian Folklife, op. 19.....Grieg

John Jewett Turner has returned to his studio after two months' rest at a number of resorts on the Maine coast and in New Hampshire. Mr. Turner resumed teaching last week, and already has the prospect of an exceedingly busy season. Among his new pupils are three with remarkable soprano voices. Mr. Turner's time will be fully occupied with his regular class of pupils. During the winter a course of pupils' recitals will take place early in the season. Mr. Turner is at his studio every day excepting Saturday. He has one of the large handsome studios of the city, attractive in every way.

The musical season in Haverhill was ushered in by an invitation concert given by James W. Hill at the First Universalist Church. A large audience filled the church. Melville Horner was the soloist of the evening. Mr. Hill recently dedicated a new organ in the Congregational Church, Hampstead, N. H.

At Association Hall, on the evening of the 12th, a recital was given by J. Louis Renaud, assisted by Mrs. J. J. O'Callaghan, Miss Margaret Roche, Daniel J. Murphy, J. Cartom Shelvie and P. H. Poley. The accompanist was D. J. Malley. All the singers are members of choirs in the leading Catholic churches of this city. The proceeds of the concert were devoted to sending a young student to college. Miss Roche is a pupil of Arthur J. Hubbard, and has a really beautiful contralto voice.

At the concert given by the Musical Club at Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman's on Friday morning, September 13, Miss Lena Little and Heathe Gregory sang. Miss Little, who has spent the summer in the South and at Yarmouthport, Cape Cod, has opened her apartment on Blagden street for the winter.

The Symphony Orchestra is to take part in the Yale celebration at New Haven next month, their services having been offered by Col. Henry L. Higginson. They play at the Hyperion Theatre on Wednesday afternoon, October 23.

T. Adamowski, after a summer in Europe, including an extended visit at Morges, the home of Paderewski, is at 10 Charles street for the season. Mr. Adamowski played at a musicale given by Mrs. H. P. McKean at Pride's Crossing on Friday, performing for the first time in America a paraphrase for violin and piano, arranged by Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Paderewski, from the latter's new opera, "Manru." Mr. Adamowski will visit friends at Newport and Lenox.

ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

LACHMUND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
132 WEST 85th STREET, NEW YORK.
CARL V. LACHMUND, - Director
(DIRECTOR WOMEN'S STRING ORCHESTRA SOCIETY.)
All branches. Faculty unsurpassed. Private instruction. Special course for students preparing for a public career.

PHENOMENAL CAREER OF LEONORA JACKSON.

LEONORA JACKSON is an artist her country may well be proud of, for history shows that there has never been a woman violinist of any nationality who at so early an age has been the soloist of so many great symphony orchestras, played before so many crowned heads and won such a reputation in so many different countries as this distinguished, hard working young American. Those familiar with the high standards of European art centres will understand the distinction for any youthful artist to be selected as soloist of such renowned Old World societies as the Leipsic Gewandhaus, the Association Artistique (Colonne concerts) at Paris, the London Philharmonic, the Kaim Symphony, of Munich; the Museum Symphony, of Frankfort-am-Main; the Philharmonic, of Geneva, Switzerland; the Royal Symphony, of Antwerp, and the like.

Miss Jackson was born in Boston, and received her early musical education in Chicago, under Professors Carl Becker and Jacobsohn. She studied two years at Paris with Professor Desjardins, four at Berlin under Dr. Joachim, with Professors Carl Markees and Carl Halir as under teachers. Her Berlin début with the Philharmonic Orchestra (which Joachim paid her the rare compliment of conducting) was a sensational success, and resulted in a summons to play before the Empress. Important engagements in the provinces followed; her fame spread rapidly throughout Germany. The following autumn the Prussian Government awarded the young artist the Mendelssohn State Prize (1,500 marks), the most coveted prize in Germany. Her London début February 5, 1898, at a Queen's Hall symphony concert, created another sensation and brought her at once into prominence in England and Scotland. The French conductor Lamoureux selected her for one of his London symphony concerts, and soon after she appeared in concert with Paderewski at the dedication of Salle Erard. To enumerate the many triumphs that followed in England, Scotland and on the Continent would make a long list indeed.

Queen Victoria decorated Miss Jackson with the Victorian Star at Windsor, and at Paris on the occasion of the visit of King Oscar of Sweden and Norway, the editors of the Figaro invited the gifted artist to play before His Majesty at a special fête they arranged in his honor. On the program were the Coquelins and Mounet-Sully, of the Theatre Française, and the leading soloists of the Grand Opera. Later, Miss Jackson's performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto at the Gewandhaus, Leipsic, February 22, 1899, under the baton of Arthur Nikisch, was an unequivocal triumph, which brought her a return engagement for the following autumn (October 9, 1899). when she played again the same work and repeated her original success. The instrumental soloists engaged by the London Philharmonic Society for the season of 1899 were Paderewski, Rosenthal, Sapelnikoff, Rachmaninoff, Joachim and Leonora Jackson. At Paris, April 23, 1899, as soloist of the Association Artistique (Colonne Symphony Concert), at the Chatelet Theatre, the young artist scored another triumph. Paderewski had been the soloist of the preceding concert of the series.

Miss Jackson has made four extensive tours in Germany, three in England, one each in France, Switzerland and Belgium, and two in America.

Her first American tour in the spring of 1900 comprised sixty concerts, eight of them as soloist en tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Herr Gericke. She appeared also with the New York Philharmonic, the Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg and St. Louis symphony orchestras. Last season came the crowning event of her career to date, a transcontinental tour of 161 concerts, one of the most extensive and successful tournées ever made in this country. Nearly every State of the Union was visited, from Maine to Oregon, Canada to Texas, and the triumphs of the Old World found their counterpart in the New. Great as is the favor accorded Leonora Jackson in Europe, she has won the same in the hearts and esteem of her own people. Her career has been well deserved, phenomenal.

REBECCA MACKENZIE.

MISS REBECCA MACKENZIE, the soprano, returned to New York last week after three months of rest and recreation in the West and Canada. From present indications Miss Mackenzie will have a very busy season. She will be heard as soloist with a number of musical clubs and in her song recitals, of which she has prepared a number of characteristic and interesting programs, one devoted to old folksongs and ballads, one to modern songs, another to woman's compositions and several miscellaneous programs.

REBECCA MACKENZIE.

The following is the latest opinion from the press regarding that artist:

The promise which Miss Mackenzie's voice always gave during the earlier years of its cultivation is being fully realized. Years of study and training and concert work have broadened and developed it, given it power and ease, brought confidence and complete control, but they have not taken from it any of that delightful freshness and naturalness which was always one of its chiefest charms. There is a rare purity in all of her tones, whether in the rich mellow lower register or in the silvery notes of the upper scale. Her phrasing is excellent, and the general interpretation of her numbers indicates not only a thorough mastery of the technical part of singing, but a fine intelligence that enables her to put, not merely voice into songs, but soul, without which singing is merely the emission of sounds that tickle the ear but touch not the heart. Especially striking is her control of her voice in pianissimo passages.—Evening Herald, Duluth, Minn., August 22, 1901.

"MESSIAH" IN ST. PAUL.—The Choral Club of St. Paul, Minn., will give a performance of Händel's "Messiah." Joseph Baernstein, who created a furore at the club's last concert, in April, has been engaged as the star attraction to sing the bass part.

FROM PARIS.

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 12, 1901.

ONE noticeable feature of the approaching season in Paris, so far as regards theatrical entertainments, is the marked diminution in the prices charged at many of the principal theatres. The Châtelet, for instance, the largest theatre in Paris, noted for the magnificent manner in which the pieces are mounted, has placed the best seats at 5 francs ($1). As this theatre, which plays nothing but heavy spectacular productions, necessitating orchestra, large ballet, expensive scenery and numerous costumes, was the first to commence the reduced tariff of admission, the other theatres (outside the subventioned ones) were of course compelled to follow suit. Many Parisians are wishing that the concert managers could see their way to reducing the admission fees in the same manner, as 10 and 12 francs for an orchestra chair is felt by many worthy music loving people to be somewhat of a tax on slender purses.

Several débuts are about to be made at the Opéra Comique, which opens on September 14, and among them that of a young American girl, Miss Chapman, who has taken the stage name of Mlle. Nerville. She makes her first appearance in the title role of Lakmé. At the same theatre they are also busy with the rehearsals of "Griselédis," the new opera by Massenet. The subject has already been treated as a comedy by Armand Silvestre, and played at the Théâtre Français. The choral work in "Griselédis" is not developed, being comparatively unimportant and sung at the wings, the choristers not being required on the stage. The principal role will be sung by Mlle. Bréval, who will be remembered by readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER as the dramatic soprano of Grau's troupe last season at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. This artist has been several years at the Opéra here, but this is, I believe, her first appearance at the second of the subventioned lyric theatres. The first performance of "Griselédis" is expected to take place about the middle of November.

Albert Carré, the director of the Opéra Comique, was officially commissioned last August to study the subsidized theatres of Germany and Austria, as compared with those of France, and I am able to give some details of his report to the Government. The lyric theatres of Berlin and Vienna differ from the corresponding theatres of Paris in that the directors—Count Hochberg at Berlin, and Prince Lichtenstein at Vienna—receive a fixed stipend, but are under no risks from possible losses, nor do they participate in any profit should there be any. These directors have full liberty so far as the selection of repertory, new works or the engagement of the entire staff, artists, &c., is concerned. They have simply to reckon with the sovereign, whose civil list furnishes the subvention, covers the deficit and arranges for the different pensions to those performers, who have complied with the regulations.

This system obtained in Paris up to the year 1828, when Louis Phillipe, being anxious to get rid of an institution that was a heavy burden on the civil list, turned over the Académie de Musique to Véron, who offered to take over at his own risk the direction of the Opéra for a term of six years, with a yearly subvention of 800,000 francs ($160,000), which is still the sum furnished annually by Government for the Grand Opéra of Paris. As, however, the tax of 20 per cent. on all theatrical representations in France (called droit des pauves) is unknown in Berlin and Vienna, it follows that the opera of Paris is much less highly favored in the matter of subsidy than that of Berlin, which receives—I understand—about $220,000 per year, being nearly double that of the Paris house when the afore mentioned tax is considered. At the Lamoureux concerts (Chevillard, conductor) this

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

next season, the following works will be performed for the first time: "Paradise and the Peri," Schumann; Dante Symphony, Liszt; Symphony in C major, Dukas; overture to the "Great Russian Easter," Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Also will be heard nine Symphonies of Beethoven, first act of "Tristan and Isolde," Pathetic Symphonies of Tschaikowsky and Symphony in G minor of Lalo.

That I was not too harsh in my strictures last week on the opera class at the Conservatoire is borne out by an article which has recently appeared by the excellent musician and composer, Victorin Joncières. He says: "As soon as the annual competitions at the Conservatoire begin we hear the same criticisms which seem from time immemorial to have been passed on the methods of teaching adopted there, the reforms that ought to be introduced, the meagre supply of artists it turns out and the general mediocrity of the results obtained. Each critic has had his own infallible panacea for remedying the many defects of the existing organization, each proposed his own plan of studies, or his own, of course, better system of management.

"Tired of the complaints of those who continually deplored the feeble teaching at the Conservatoire, the then Minister of Fine Arts formed a committee of inquiry to look into and report on the matter. But from the numerous sittings of this committee and the many reforms proposed nothing resulted but some slight changes as to conditions of admission—the age of the candidates, the length of time to be accorded to unsuccessful competitors and the list of vocal numbers to be used by pupils of the first year. Nothing radical or of real importance resulted from this investigation. Since then another committee has been formed by another Minister, more practical than his predecessor, composed of six members of the Institute—composers noted for their knowledge and experience, professors of the Conservatoire voted for by their colleagues. During the three years that this committee has been in office the choice of a professor—when a vacancy arises—is no longer arbitrary, as formerly. It is from a list of three candidates, drawn up in order of merit, that the Minister has to select an incumbent for the vacant post. Up to the present the one at the head of the list has always been appointed."

Joncières tells some anecdotes of different charlatans, calling themselves professors of singing, whose absurd and empirical methods of teaching have become legends in the Conservatoire. One there was, some thirty years ago, whose "method" it was to make his pupil lie flat on the back. This professor, who was weighty if not convincing, used then to seat himself gravely on the abdomen of the student of song, who was then obliged in this highly inconvenient position to go through his "aria." "The discomfort you experience," said the professor, "will cause you such extra respiratory effort that when you will be relieved of my weight you will be astonished at the ease with which you can sing."

It appears somewhat extraordinary, but no less true, that in spite of this, some really excellent singers graduated from that class. Another teacher used to make his pupils carry a bucket of water up the two flights of stairs leading to the class room, and then, all panting, attack their grand air without stopping to take breath. Yet another there was who invented a sort of wooden table-bed on which he pretended would enlarge the throat, and infallibly develop the voice or even create one where it was lacking. This impostor actually published a work demonstrating his method, with, of course, the usual anatomical diagrams. "Certainly," said the inventor of this wooden spoon system, "a student at the beginning sometimes experiences a disagreeable sensation of nausea, but after a little time that disappears, and I have formed pupils who have been able to keep the spoon in position for a whole half hour at a time, after which they all had superb voices."

One unfortunate aspirant had such confidence in the efficacy of the system that he nearly died a victim to his faith. He was a young clerk possessed of a fairly agreeable light tenor voice and unfortunately confided it to the training of the professor of the wooden spoon, who assured him that in a short time he could change him into the most remarkable "robust" tenor in the world. The young clerk, who had some little money saved, left his position to study singing under the direction of one who offered him such a brilliant career, following the directions with such assiduity as to leave the wooden instrument in its place for a considerable time. This continued until an abscess began to form and a difficult surgical operation was deemed necessary. He recovered after a tedious illness to find his voice gone and bewails his fate in having left his honest employment to try and follow "le grand art."

It was the extraordinary number of ignorant and unprincipled individuals, each claiming to have some secret "method" of forming the singing voice that caused Theodore Thomas one day to say reflectively: "I notice that when a man fails in New York at every other trade he immediately hangs out a sign as a singing teacher."

DE VALMOUR.

WALTER JOHN HALL.—A visit to the studio in Carnegie Hall of Walter John Hall the past week found that sterling musician and vocal instructor already busy teaching, trying voices and assigning lesson hours for the present season. Mr. Hall reports that his teaching has commenced earlier than usual. Another one of Mr. Hall's pupils has scored a success. Of Mlle. Jeanne Greta's singing, the Pittsfield (Mass.) Evening Journal, in a criticism of a recent concert, says:

A tall, graceful, attractive young woman, becomingly gowned, and with the light of confidence in her dark eyes. Her selection was Dell' Acqua's "Villanelle." The number was beautifully rendered. Mlle. Greta possesses a voice of remarkable sweetness and flexibility. Her low tones are remarkably rich and full, and she reached the upper register easily, and with not the slightest abatement of the richness of tone. Her method is remarkably perfect, and she sings with an intelligence that denotes absolute devotion and faithfulness in her preparation for concert work. Pittsfield has heard but few sopranos, if, indeed, any, more pleasing in all ways than Mlle. Greta, and will always welcome her cordially when opportunity presents. Her song won her an enthusiastic encore, to which she responded with Hawley's "Were I a Star," rendering the sweet little composition with artistic skill and sympathy.

MISS EGGLESTON GETS THE HAVEMEYER SCHOLARSHIP.—Silas G. Pratt has begun teaching at the West End Private School of Piano Playing. Among his talented pupils from out of town is Miss Adah Veru Neldon, from Coshocton, Ohio. The new free scholarship, the gift of F. C. Havemeyer, Jr., has been given to Miss Lulu Eggleston, of Brooklyn, whose successful début last year was favorably noticed in these columns. She has already proved herself worthy Mr. Havemeyer's generosity.

MUNICH NOTES.

MUNICH, SEPTEMBER 11, 1901

Editor Musical Courier:

I TAKE pleasure in sending you the list of the chief works to be produced by the Kaim Orchestra (Felix Weingartner director) the coming season:

J. Seb. Bach.....Flute Suite and Violin Concerto
Händel.....D major Concerto for String Orchestra
Gluck.....Overture, "Alceste"
Haydn.....Military Symphony
Mozart.....Jupiter Symphony
Mozart.....G major Symphony (in one movement), Composed by Mozart in his 13th year.
Beethoven.....1, 6, 7 and 9 Symphonies; III. Leonora Overture; Overture Egmont; G major Piano Concerto
Weber.....Oberon Overture
Mendelssohn.....Selections from the Midsummer Night's Dream Music.
Schumann.....B major Symphony
Berlioz.....King Lear Overture
Liszt.....Faust Symphony, A major Piano Concerto
Wagner.....Faust Overture, Lohengrin Introduction, Tannhäuser Overture.
Brahms.....Academic Overture, Fourth Symphony
Tschaikowsky.....E minor Symphony, Violin Concerto
Borodin.....Second Symphony
Saint-Saëns.....Jeunesse d'Hercule (one of the four Symphonic poems).
César Franck.....D minor Symphony
Elgar.....Variations
Suk.....A Poem
Mahler.....Fourth Symphony (first production)
Schillings.....Prologue to Œdipus
Richard Strauss.....Death and Apotheosis
Volbach.....The King's Children

It will be seen that outside of the masters the Kaim Orchestra has modern composers on its scheme, among them Germans and a Bohemian—Suk and an Englishman this time—Elgar, probably the leading English composer of to-day. Americans do not figure. It is probably due to the modesty of the American composer, who seems destined to await immortality only through death—the usual course of genius.

B.

Herbert Witherspoon has removed his residence studio to "The Hetherington," 571 Park avenue, New York.

CLARA POOLE-KING,
Prima Donna Contralto
SEASON 1901-1902.
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

NORDICA
Season 1901-1902.
RECITALS ONLY.
SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.
LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

Elsa Marshall,
Soprano.
22 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

THE Guilmant Organ School
(COPYRIGHT)
RE-OPENS
Monday, October 14th.
EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....
34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

Music in Canada.

THERE is indeed a strange irony in fate. At the moment when citizens of the United States are called upon to mourn for their assassinated President, Canadians must give a right royal welcome to the Ophir, bearing the Duke and Duchess of York to their shores. Thus, though the coming of the heir to the British throne is hailed with enthusiasm, "there's a minor in the carol and a shadow in the light."

In Montreal on September 19 services were held in the churches in memory of President McKinley. Chopin's immortal Funeral March was played at the American Presbyterian Church.

In Toronto the Methodist memorial service for President McKinley was held at the Metropolitan Church on September 19, appropriate music being sung. The Presbyterian service was at Knox Church.

The Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York will attend a concert in Massey Music Hall, Toronto, on October 10, when the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company will provide the program. This event is being arranged by Mr. Houston, of Toronto.

Henry Fielding Dickens, K. C., son of the English novelist, has been visiting Canada in the company of his two daughters.

Miss Abbott, pianist and accompanist, of Montreal, spent part of the summer in the Laurentian Mountains, and later visited scenes at the mouth of the Saguenay, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

"Modern Pianoforte Technique," a new work by A. S. Vogt, of Toronto, is meeting with well deserved popularity.

Miss Ida I. Field, pianist, of Toronto, has returned from Leipsic, Germany, where she spent the summer studying and visiting her brother, H. M. Field, the Canadian pianist.

It is announced that Lillian Nordica, who is a great favorite in Toronto, will sing there, in Massey Music Hall, on November 21.

Miss Eva Janes, the pianist, who has been in Brussels, will return to Canada this fall.

The singing of prominent members of the Westminster Abbey choir has been arousing much enthusiasm in Canada. A successful concert given by these vocalists in Ottawa on the evening of September 11 marked the reopening of Orme Hall.

An excellent recital was recently given in Halifax, N. S., by Percy Gordon, a local pianist.

Melton Prior, the English artist, is visiting Canada for the purpose of describing events and sketching scenes associated with the present tour of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York.

It is announced that Mrs. Julie Wyman will remain in Toronto throughout the present season. Her many pupils at the Toronto Conservatory of Music will be thankful for this favorable opportunity of continuing their lessons under the eminent contralto.

This season W. H. Hewlett will give an interesting series of organ recitals in London, Ont.

Arthur Dorey, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Ottawa, is giving an admirable series of recitals in the Canadian capital.

A discriminating music critic in Eastern Canada is Philip A. H. King, who writes interesting accounts of concerts in Compton, Que., and its vicinity.

Owen A. Smily, Mary Jardine Thomson and Gertrude Black-Edmunds have returned to Toronto, having made a successful recital tour through the Maritime Provinces.

A. T. Cringan has returned from his summer engagements at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, to his duties at the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

Mrs. Ida McLean Dilworth has resigned her position as soprano soloist at the Central Methodist Church, Toronto, in order to accept a similar position at Old St. Andrew's Church, in the same city.

The Toronto Mendelssohn Choir has resumed rehearsals, the works to be studied this season including Mendelssohn's "114th Psalm," for double choir; march and chorus from the third act of Bizet's "Carmen"; Lloyd's pastorale, "The Rosy Dawn," for eight part chorus, and Elgar's "It Comes from the Misty Ages."

A new opera, "Dolly Varden," by Stanislaus Strange and Julian Edwards, receives its introduction to the public this week at Toronto, under the management of C. J. Whitney. The Princess Theatre is the scene of action and the Lulu Glaser Opera Company constitutes the cast and chorus.

Mrs. Ryan-Burke, who has been in Paris, studying with well known singing teachers, resumes her vocal work in Toronto this month.

A new opera house which is to have a seating capacity of 1,400 is now being erected in Kingston, Ont. A. J. Small, of Toronto, has leased the building for five years, and the opening is arranged for New Year's night, 1902.

Walter Hahn, tenor, has been engaged as soloist at the Jarvis Street Unitarian Church, Toronto.

By the recent deaths of Hector Mackenzie, of Montreal, and Hon. George Allen, president of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, Canada has lost two of music's prominent supporters. The thoughtful liberality of both these gentlemen has long been appreciated and will not soon be forgotten by their many friends in the Dominion.

WHY HARMONY SHOULD BE STUDIED.

THE most important course in a conservatory of music is the theory of music, yet it is rarely taken and many talented students, for want of such instruction, have gone astray in their work. This branch of music is generally studied under compulsion; to the great majority of pupils it is uninteresting, and the result is that the study is of no value to them. After even two years study of theory, some students do not know the diminished seventh chord when they see it; indeed, they have no certain knowledge of the key in which they are playing. The opinion is now widespread that the whole system of theoretic instruction must be completely revised. It is asked: Why is harmony so wretchedly taught? The answer is: The majority of teachers are not competent to impart a knowledge of it, and therefore students abandon harmony, finding it useless to them.

Professor Richter's "Manual of Harmony" stands high in merit as a practical system to teach figured bass or harmonized melody. It makes the study of harmonic analysis fascinating even to the ordinary student. It is the text book in all of the classes of the National Conservatory of Music of America. The ideas and conceptions which the great composers have handed down to us are expressed by written symbols of music (notes, chords, passages), just as the written symbols of languages (letters, words, phrases) are used by great authors to embody and perpetuate their thoughts. It is quite possible for a mind with comparatively little education to triumph over the defects of early training so far as to appreciate many of the beauties of good writing. But it will be readily admitted that a systematic training in grammar and analysis, gained before or during the study of classical models, must be of incalculable value in forming that discriminating taste and accurate appreciation so essential to a true lover of literature. A knowledge of harmony is required in order to recognize the beauties of even the simplest hymn tune; the full appreciation of the exquisite workmanship of a Bach fugue is only gained through the study of counterpoint; a Beethoven sonata demands the careful attention of a student of form; a symphony falls with only half its due effect on ears untrained to follow the individual qualities of each instrument, and the massing and contrasting of these qualities in various schemes of tone and color.

It is never too early to begin to cultivate the habit of observation, and the constant application of knowledge continually adds to the force of this habit.

Examination in the Theoretical Department at the National Conservatory of Music will be held on October 1, at 1 p. m.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts Last Season.

LEONORA JACKSON
Assisted by HARRY J. FELLOWS, Tenor
WILLIAM BAUER, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: New York, 31 Union Square West. Chicago, 71 Monroe St.

HAROLD BAUER DECORATED BY THE QUEEN REGENT OF SPAIN.

HAROLD BAUER, the celebrated pianist, has just returned to Paris from Spain, where he gave a series of most successful concerts at San Sebastian with Pablo Casals, the violoncellist. While there Mr. Bauer was invited to play before Her Majesty the Queen Regent at the castle, upon which occasion she conferred on him the decoration of Knight of the Order of Isabel the Catholic.

Here are more notices from the English press of Harold Bauer's recitals in St. James' Hall, London, during last May and June:

Musical critics have the common reputation of being a dissatisfied race. There is ground for the assertion, but there is also excuse. Would any "Refereader" who had attended piano recitals for over twenty years expect to experience perfect satisfaction from any one player? But it is the unexpected that happens, and it came to me on Wednesday at Harold Bauer's recital at St. James' Hall. I went to criticise, and remained to enjoy. I referred last week to the reputation this young musician had acquired on the Continent and in America. From his playing at the recent London Festival my anticipations were considerable, but they were exceeded by realization. It would be difficult to find two sonatas requiring more individuality and versatility than those by Schumann in G minor, op. 22, and Beethoven in A, op. 101. The former has been described as an example of "how not to write a sonata," but it is delightful music, full of significance and romance, and it demands that its exponent should be thoroughly in sympathy with its wayward, fiery and tender spirit. Beethoven's work is greater intellectually. It scales loftier heights, it sounds deeper depths; and he who would climb them and fathom them must have keen perceptions and flexible wrists. Each composition exacts individuality of treatment, and it was this that, being forthcoming, so persuaded me that Mr. Bauer is a pianist of the first rank. This opinion grew stronger as he proceeded in his recital, which included excerpts from Scarlatti, Mendelssohn and Chopin, schools which embrace all styles and demand exceptional versatility if each is to receive its due. Such was meted out on this occasion, and the more I listened the more satisfied I became that Mr. Bauer is an Englishman.—Referee, May 19, 1901.

On Wednesday Harold Bauer gave a piano recital at St. James' Hall, and confirmed the high estimate of his powers formed at the London Musical Festival ten days previously.—Sunday Times, May 19, 1901.

Harold Bauer has come, played and conquered. He gave his first piano recital at St. James' Hall on Wednesday afternoon, and his intelligent and vivid readings of Schumann's G minor and of Beethoven's A major Sonata at once proclaimed him something more than an able pianist; so far as technic is concerned, he has already proved himself of the first rank. The interpretation of both works was remarkable for intelligence, life, poetry and restrained power. Though everything had been thought out, the playing gave the effect of spontaneity.—Athenæum, May 18, 1901.

The enthusiastic appreciation that attended Harold Bauer's performance at the last concert at the London Musical Festival was quite as apparent on the occasion of his piano recital at St. James' Hall last Wednesday afternoon. Harold Bauer began his musical career with every intention of being a violinist, but the piano eventually claimed him, and his extraordinary skill and facility over the keys show that he made no wrong choice.—Court Circular, May 25, 1901.

Harold Bauer, the English pianist, whose appearance at the London Musical Festival we recently recorded, gave, on Wednesday last week, in St. James' Hall, the first of two recitals, and fully confirmed the favorable impression which he had so lately created by his performance of Saint-Saëns' C minor Concerto. On the occasion now in question the two principal works which he essayed were Schumann's Sonata in G minor, op. 22, and Beethoven's Grand Sonata in A major, op. 101, productions demanding, for their adequate interpretation, high powers, not only executive, but also intellectual and emotional. Mr. Bauer came well out of the ordeal, playing each work with much intelligence, artistic earnestness and abundant mechanical skill, and he was afterward heard to much advantage in Mendelssohn's Study in B flat minor, in Scarlatti's Sonata in A and in Brahms' Rhapsodic in G minor.—Queen, May 25, 1901.

SHANNA CUMMING, SOPRANO,

For the Worcester Festival.

SHANNA CUMMING, the soprano, has been engaged in place of Emma Eames to sing the soprano part of Verdi's "Requiem."

The picture published represents Miss Cumming as the Widow in the operatic performance of "Elijah" at the New

SHANNA CUMMING AS THE WIDOW IN "ELIJAH."

Haven May Festival. Possessing a dramatic soprano voice, and backed by unusual musical ability, she sang and acted this role to perfection, so that all who heard her were enthused.

Said the New Haven Register of her, May 9, 1901:

Miss Cumming was an attractive Widow, and fully realized the dramatic possibilities of the character. The scene where her child is raised from the dead was impressive and one of the strong features of the evening. Her appeal to the prophet was full of pathos, and her joy when the spirit of the child returned was admirably expressed. * * * In the fine aria, "Hear Ye," Miss Cumming displayed vocal excellence and a fine appreciation of the spirit of the text. She has dramatic ability of a high order.

Miss Cumming also participated in the Albany May Festival, the Binghamton Festival, and always with much success. At Albany she was associated with Ffrangcon Davies, and here her success was indeed pronounced; she sang as her main number the dramatic aria, "Abschen licher," from Beethoven's "Fidelio."

Miss Cumming also appeared at the Montclair Club, making instantaneous success, and was re-engaged on the spot for the next affair of the club. These were but a few of her engagements, and the coming season promises much for the fair soprano, who rejoices in superb health, and is ever reliable.

A few press notices:

Anything more exuberantly graphic than that portrayal of the swan, "The Mahnahbezee," I have not heard in music for a long time. That is what you call true poetry in music; it is not only "There is the swan!" but "See how wondrously beautiful he is!" This sort of thrill ran through the whole solo which was admirably sung by Miss Cumming.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Miss Shanna Cumming bears about with her an aura of culture, musical and otherwise. She sang apparently with an inherent perception of the intellectual side of her vocation a quality which, added to a soprano naturally sweet, made her efforts a rare delight. The brilliant aria "Rejoice Greatly" was, in her rendition, just such a cry of prophetic and irrepressible joy as the words would seem to demand. "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth" is at all times a glorious song of hope; Miss Cumming brought out the serene confidence in the resurrection glory in a manner which was as creditable to her interpretation as it was flattering to her voice.—The Citizen, Ottawa, Canada.

By far the most appreciated soloist was Miss Shanna Cumming, the soprano, who at the afternoon matinee and the "Hiawatha" production carried all before her.

The soloists last night were Miss Shanna Cumming, soprano; W. Theodore Van Yorx, tenor, and D. Ffrangcon Davies, baritone. The two latter singers have been heard here before, and are known to Albanians for their good work, but Miss Cumming was an unknown quantity. From her first solo she delighted her audience, and hers was the triumph of the evening. Miss Cumming has a sufficiency of voice for even the robust demands of such a production as "Hiawatha," and her soprano has a convincing certainty, purity and precision to delight the critical, while her faultless artistic conception and the genuine beauty of her singing complete the capture of her audience.—The Albany Argus.

MARGUERITE PALMITER AND CARL GRALOW.—The artistic abilities of these singers have before been noticed in THE MUSICAL COURIER in separate articles, but their work at Mr. Powers' summer school is worthy of special commendation. They were the pupils of honor and added one success after another to their list of vocal triumphs during their stay in Kansas City. Miss Palmiter is a young lady of charming personality and winsome manner, and she reflected much credit upon her teacher by making vocal conquests wherever she was heard last winter. Miss Palmiter's voice is a high soprano, and her singing is characterized by finish and style.

Of Mr. Gralow it need only be said that he holds a superior position in the domain of music, both here and abroad, and that his magnificent baritone voice and artistic singing won him a membership in the New York Liederkranz directly the members of that organization heard him sing. Both of these singers will return to the city in time to begin with Mr. Powers' winter classes in Carnegie Hall, in October next.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

Frederic Mariner,

TECHNIC SPECIALIST,

Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,

— NOW —

Director of the

Bangor Piano School,

BANGOR, ME.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1122.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Klosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . . .	£1 5s.	Austria, ...	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

SUNDAY next the United Singers of Brooklyn will pay their tribute to the late President McKinley at Prospect Park. The busts of Beethoven and Mozart will be garlanded, and altogether the ceremonies promise to be beautiful and fitting.

IN a recent issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER in the Raconteur column were printed several excerpts from the new book, "Tarry Thou Till I Come," and credit to the publishers, the Funk & Wagnalls Company, was inadvertently omitted. We hasten to repair the oversight.

STRANGE that the press building at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo should be located in the heart of the noisy Midway. At the World's Fair in Chicago the quarters for newspaper men were handsomely situated in the Administration Building. Besides being surrounded by freaks human and four footed, and the din from barkers of nearby shows, the press building at the Pan-American is painted yellow, not the delicate cream in the color scheme of the Exposition proper, but a deep, strong yellow.

THE MUSICAL COURIER last week gave a striking example of German commercial enterprise in mixing up music and bargain counters. All the world has been complaining of the prices charged for everything at Bayreuth this year. Such complaints are absurd when the hotel price list contains such prices as the following for the unique objects enumerated:

	Marks.
A bed in which Niemann slept twenty-five years ago.. (On the jubilee night 20 marks additional.)	50
A bed made after the master's instructions for Brünnhilde's rock.....	65
A room with a window in the direction of the Villa Wahnfried	100
A room in the same direction, without a window....	50
A quart of mead in a horn (horn modeled after those used in the "Götterdämmerung").....	7
A slice of goose à la Lohengrin.....	5
A bit of the sprinting, very nearly "Flying Dutchman"	5
A steak roasted at Siegfried's forge.....	12

A FOREIGN exchange recently printed the following under the date of Vienna, September 7:

A curious dispute has arisen over the possession of a skull which is said to be that of Mozart.

The great musician died in 1791, and was buried in the churchyard at St. Marx. The gravedigger there afterward opened the grave again, and took possession of Mozart's skull, which at his death he bequeathed to his brother. The brother in his turn bequeathed the skull to his son, who sold it to the late Professor Hyrtl. Professor Hyrtl had no doubt as to the skull being really that of Mozart as it corresponded exactly to certain known peculiarities of Mozart's appearance.

Professor Hyrtl treasured the skull as a most valuable relic, and some years before his death wrote to the burgomaster of Salzburg, the birthplace of Mozart, announcing his intention of leaving the skull to the corporation of that town. When Professor Hyrtl died no mention of the skull was found in his will, so it was placed in a museum which he founded at Mödling, near Vienna.

Here it has remained for the last seven years, but the Corporation of Salzburg has now decided to take legal action in order to obtain possession of the skull. Several men of science who have examined the skull express doubts as to its really being that of Mozart.

SOME of our rural contemporaries are keeping up the old excitement over the injurious effects the perfume of flowers have on the singing voice. Our good friends cannot understand the natures of public vocalists, for if they did they would know that the greater the singer the more flowers she will expect her admirers to send to her. But, thank the stars, the floral craze is not as bad as it was when Patti was in her prime. Patti, by the way, may be quoted as an illustration of the harmless quality of the scent from a rose or violet. Patti in her day received tons of bouquets, but who ever heard of her losing her voice. The perfume of flowers is baneful when inhaled in a stuffy, ill ventilated room, not on the singing voice alone, but on the health of all who breathe in such vitiated atmosphere, and that is all there is to it, certain authorities to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE bust of Wagner won by the United Singers of Baltimore at the Saengerfest held in Brooklyn last year will be unveiled in the Monumental City on Sunday, October 6. The site upon which the bust will be erected was approved by the Baltimore Park Commission, and is located in a charming spot to the left of the Mansion House in Druid Hill Park. Mayor Hayes, of Baltimore, will make the speech of acceptance. The musical program will naturally consist of Wagner selections.

THE dramatic reporter of the Evening Sun attended the performance at the Metropolitan Opera House one night last week, and his opinions may be gleaned from following extracts taken from his report:

"There is always something pitiful about a forlorn hope. Without going back to history's pages it may be taken for granted that even so great a man as Napoleon himself was not in a particularly fine temper the day after Waterloo, and therefore a good deal of credit is due to the members of 'The Ladies' Paradise' company at the Metropolitan Opera House for the serene and smiling manner with which they faced their second audience unblanched after the newspapers had stormed them with shot and shell as no performance has been bombarded in New York since the days of the invulnerable Cherry Sisters."

"The most interesting feature of the performance was a man who sat in the third row of the orchestra and admitted publicly that he had actually paid to get in. The rest of the audience gazed at him in almost awe. At the end of the first act, he made a hurried exit and remarked: 'Well, if this is Paradise, give me Hell.'

The directors of the Metropolitan have not yet decided whether 'The Ladies' Paradise' will be succeeded by the 'May Howard Burlesquers' or the Rentz-Santley troupe."

ABOUT CONSERVATORIES.

THE recent ructions in the Conservatory o Music of Vienna, bringing about as they di the resignations of important faculty members such as Helmesberger, Door, Epstein, Stoll, Ros and others, because of the appointment of Emi Sauer to a positio which the malcontent considered an offens to their amour propr brings to mind that i some of these musical institutions, supported partly supported by Government subvention, t Vorbereiter, or, as the French call the office, t Moniteur, gets no salary whatever. These assistant as we would call them, give lessons to the bulk pupils, and those pupils only who show progre or who are gifted, or who advance through the r quired degrees, finally reach the chief, well-know teachers; but the mass of pupils are steadily in t hands of the Moniteurs, who give lessons free charge in order to be able to claim that they a teachers at the "National" or "Governmental" Co servatory, and through this secure private pupils.

The leading teachers get such a pittance of salary at these conservatories that they must ins upon a time limitation in their duties, because th also could not exist without the private pup Naturally, indeed very naturally, the Vorbereiter, Moniteur, as well as the chief teachers, recomme private lessons, or they would not be giving private lessons themselves.

This state of affairs reveals some of the reasons why, among the thousands of American pupils who study in European music schools and conservatories, so few are ever heard of—and we must remember the thousands we refer to are thousands each year, for there is an incessant flow of American pupils to Europe for musical education. Where are those who for the past 25 years are enlisted in this huge army? What has become of them?

Say that 25,000 Americans have been studying music in Europe during the past 25 years (surely a very reasonable, modest estimate); what has become of them? How many are singing to-day at a salary equal to that of a store girl? How many of the men compose music that is printed without cost to them? How many are successful teachers here? Probably a few thousand during the quarter of a century.

Do we call such pursuits successful careers in America? By no means. A career as a professional theatre orchestra player who later, after each performance, plays dance music until early morning hours is preferable because he, at least, makes from $1,000 to $2,500 a year, and has an assured place, and continues his work for years without interruption. But going to Europe to study music and returning here to be entombed in a little town where Beethoven and Schubert cannot be played or sung, and to eke out an existence as a teacher of the piano and gradually become demoralized because no good music can be heard in such places, except under a delusion that it is good because one plays it himself—to eke out such an existence, it seems to us, is a sad return for a European musical education.

No pupil should ever be placed in the hands of these Vorbereiters, as Mr. Leschetizky, of Vienna, does it; and no pupil should be taught by the Monitor, because these teachers merely use the pupils to build up a private practice of their own. Probably the many wasted years in European music schools are due to this unjust system—as unjust to the poor Vorbereiter as it is to the pupils. In fact the whole Conservatory system requires remodelling on 20th century lines, and the man who will do that—or the woman—will become the most important musical factor of the times. And America is the place to do it, for Europe is wedded to its superannuated systems.

CLASSIC HYMN TUNES.

WHILE the best musical taste must reject many of the hymns sung in the churches of certain Protestant sects there are hundreds of beautiful sacred songs to be found in the standard hymnals, particularly of the Protestant Episcopals and Lutherans. The tragic death of President McKinley has through some mysterious influence caused a universal revival of two familiar hymns. The one, "Lead Kindly Light," an example of beautiful, grand simplicity; the other, "Nearer My God to Thee," a popular favorite with the churchgoing masses in this country. The late William McKinley, a friend of the common people, loved both these hymns, and both were sung by universal consent at the memorial services everywhere. The words for "Lead Kindly Light" were written by John Henry Newman, who later became a Roman Catholic and was appointed a cardinal in England. Newman wrote the inspired words for this grand hymn in 1833, when he was only thirty-two years old. Several musical settings were made for it, but by far the best is the tune known as "Lux Benigna," composed by the Rev. John Bacchus Dykes in 1861. Dykes' score is lofty and admirably fitting to Newman's sublime poem.

The tune generally sung to "Nearer My God to Thee" is the one known as "Bethany." The music is an arrangement by Lowell Mason, probably from an old Saxon melody. Sarah Flower Adams is the author of the words. She died in 1848, and "Nearer My God to Thee" was written in 1840, when she was thirty-five years old. Mason arranged the tune called "Bethany" in 1858, eighteen years after the poem appeared.

The Masonic air or tune known as "Pleyel" was one loved by the late President Lincoln. A number of poems have been sung with this tune. "Hasten Sinner to Be Wise" and "Depth of Mercy," by Charles Wesley, are sometimes sung to Pleyel's tune. But the more familiar tune "Seymour," arranged by Henry Wellington Greatorex, after a score of Von Weber, is the one that appears in the up to date hymnals with "Depth of Mercy." Painstaking adapters of hymns have by no means neglected the great composers. Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Händel, Schubert, Haydn, Schumann and other immortals are again and again credited as the real composers of many of the best loved hymn tunes. Mendelssohn wrote a number of hymns to be found in the hymnals used in this country and England. "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," sung at Christmas in the Protestant Episcopal churches, is one by Mendelssohn. As the "processional" at the morning service it is very effective and inspiring.

Guillaume Franck composed the tune, "Old Hundred," 'way back in 1545, and the same year he also composed "Dundee," now a favorite in the churches of all creeds. Still further back must we seek for the days when Martin Luther composed songs for the church. The tune now known as "A Safe Stronghold" was composed by Luther in 1529. An old Swiss tune to be found in hymnals used in the Lutheran and Presbyterian churches is credited to the old Würtemberg hymn book. Some of the grandly simple hymns sung in the modern church are arranged from the Gregorian chants. Patriotism is another idea which inspired some hymn writers, for in most of the hymnals we find sacred words set to the tunes of national anthems. To some it may seem an anomaly that Charles Wesley, the great Methodist, should be the author of "Come, Thou Almighty King," a hymn usually sung in the churches to the Italian tune composed in 1760 by Felice Giardini. The Russian, Austrian and German national anthems are set to hymns, and are sung in English in many churches. Haydn composed the Austrian hymn in 1797. In the hymnals used in this country it is described as just "Austria." The tune is sung to several poems, one of the best being "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," written by the Rev. John Newton in 1779. The "Sicilian Melody," the "Spanish Melody" are both familiar settings in the hymnals of the Protestant churches. Those stirring stanzas by the Rev. Isaac Watts, which begin with the line "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," are sometimes sung to the air of "Die Wacht Am Rhine." Alexis Theodore Lwoff's musical setting for the Russian anthem is sung with the words by Watts, beginning "Kingdoms and thrones to God belong."

A setting by Georg Friederich Händel was chosen for Watts' hymn entitled "Saul." The Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, the beneficent founder of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, is the author of the touching burial hymn:

I would not live alway,
I ask not to stay.

The tune by George Kingsley is familiar by the title "Frederick." Muhlenberg wrote the words of this hymn in 1823, and the musical setting by Kingsley first appeared eleven years later, in 1834.

In the so-called heterodox denominations of Protestantism the hymns for the church services are selected with greater literary discrimination. Naturally the Unitarians and Universalists are less fervent, and particularly the former have eliminated everything extolling the divinity of Jesus. Nevertheless, some beautiful hymns are sung by the Unitarians. Phœbe Cary, who wrote "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," was a Unitarian. And, by the way, Sarah Flower Adams, who is the author of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was a Universalist. Both hymns, however, will be found in the hymnals of the orthodox sects. That the lamented President McKinley, a Methodist, should have expressed a preference for two hymns, one written by an Episcopalian who became a Roman Catholic, and another by a Universalist, is but another indication of the broad charity of the man.

Following are the verses of both hymns:

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT.

Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home;
Lead Thou me on;
Keep Thou my feet, I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou
Shouldst lead me on;
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will. Remember not past years.

So long Thy Power has blest me, sure it still Will lead me on.
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile.

NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE.

Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me.
Still all my song shall be
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

Though like the wanderer,
The sun gone down,
Darkness be over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

There let the way appear
Steps unto Heaven;
All that Thou send'st me
In mercy given;
Angels to beckon me
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

Then with my waking thoughts,
Bright with Thy praise;
Out of my stony griefs,
Bethel I'll raise.
So by my woes to be
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

Or if on joyful wing,
Cleaving the sky,
Sun, moon and stars forgot,
Upward I fly.
Still all my song shall be
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

SIEGFRIED WAGNER has determined to refuse all performing rights to any "Wagner Theatre" built and conducted after the model of Bayreuth. Moreover if any intendant or director of a theatre, possessing at the present time such performing rights, shall erect another theatre for festival performances of Wagner's works in the same city, the Wagner heirs will prohibit the latter. Of course this veto is directed against the Prinz Regent Theatre, of Munich; for Siegfried maintains that the Wagner performing rights were granted to the Court Theatre of Munich, not to the new Prinz Regent Theatre.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

For the name day of the Emperor Franz Josef the Vienna Court Opera House will produce Nicola's "Merry Wives of Windsor," in place of the Offenbach piece previously announced. It will be given on the revolving stage. Nicola's opera will be succeeded by Puccini's "La Bohême," which will be followed by Tschaikowsky's "Pique-Dame." Next year Dvorák's "Russalka" will be produced.

The city of Lille is organizing an international competition, to be held August 15 and 16, 1902, for singing societies, brass bands, military bands, trumpeters, jagdhorn blowers and mandolin players, and the mayor has approved of an appropriation of 150,000 francs for the purpose.

At Pyrmont there will be a music festival devoted exclusively to the works of Grieg. There will be performed the Holberg Suite, the Piano Concerto, the String quartet, the 'cello sonata, the chorals, "Before the Convent Door," "Lauderkennang," and a selection of his less known lieder.

The 'cello virtuoso Kanut Kündinger, who for half a century has been solo 'cellist at the National Theatre of Mannheim, has retired from his post at the age of seventy-one. He is succeeded by Carl Müller from Frankfort, a pupil of Prof. Hugo Becker.

Weingartner has completed his trilogy, "Orestes," based on the Orestes trilogy of Æschylus. It will be given in its entirety in one evening at the City Theatre of Leipsic.

The latest Paris composer, Ragnaldo Hagn, has written for the Opéra Comique a work named "La Carmelite," for which Catulle Mendès has written the text.

The Paris Théâtre de la République promises for April, 1902, performances of "Götterdämmerung" and "Tristan" alternately in French and German.

During the season 1900-1901 the Royal Opera House at Dresden performed in 279 evenings 61 different operas, a dramatic poem, three ballets and fifteen orchestral concerts. Of the operas Wagner heads the list with 59 evenings, Saint-Saëns comes next with 20 evenings; then follow Mozart and Verdi, 12 each; Weber and Leoncavallo, 11 each; Donizetti and Mascagni, 10 each.

In celebration of Dvorák's sixtieth birthday the National Theatre has organized a series of performances of the principal works of the master, among which will be included his oratorio "St. Ludmilla"; his last opera, "Russalka," one act of which was recently performed before the Emperor Francis Joseph. "Russalka" will also be staged at the Imperial Opera House in Vienna during the coming winter.

Charpentier's "Louise" is announced in eight theatres of Germany, and will be given next January at Hamburg and Altona, and at the municipal theatre of Magdeburg.

"The Polish Jew," by R. Weis, had a brilliant success at the Court Theatre, Dresden, and Scheidemantel distinguished himself as Mathis.

At Brussels there has recently been inaugurated an Association of Artists which proposes to found an institute in which will be taught the chief branches of practical and theoretical music and also the history of music, and æsthetics. Among the founders of the association are Arthur van Dooren (piano), Désiré Dewest (singing), Alfred Marchot (violin), Joseph Jacob (violoncello), and Léopold Wallner (harmony and history of music).

Preparations are being made at the Theatre Royal, Turin, for performances next November of Verdi's "Requiem" and Signor Luigi Mancinelli's oratorio "Isaias," which is new to Italy. The soloists will be artists of great renown. The choir is to consist of 160 voices, from the Academy Stephano Tempia, the municipal orchestra will be engaged and Signor Mancinelli will conduct.

The German papers speak in high terms of Franz Blumenberg's "Lied der Zigeunerin," for which they predict great popularity. The Lied is full of deep longing, which is well brought out in the passionate accompaniment. The central movement is dreamy and enthusiastic, while the close, with its charming rhythm and deep feeling, seems to concentrate all the feelings of the heart.

The last yearly report of the Society of Authors at Madrid, on the one hand, and the journal El Economista on the other, give us interesting details of the state of opera and drama in Spain. It is well known that the people of Madrid, as, indeed, all Spaniards, have a passion for the theatre. The capital of the kingdom, although its population is scarcely more than 500,000, boasts more than fourteen theatres of various kinds: the Theatre Royal and Buen Retiro, where serious opera is given; the Spanish Theatre, the Comedy, the Princess's, the Lara, devoted to the drama and comedy; La Zarzuela, L'Eslava, the Apollo, the Romea, the Modern Theatre, the Eldorado and the Comique, where the vaudeville and the zarzuela in one act flourish. And all these theatres, of which the two first are especially patronized by the aristocracy, are so well attended, that, according to the statistics published by El Economista, it appears that in the period of fifteen months from January 1, 1900, to March 31, 1901, the people of Madrid have spent on opera performances a sum not less than £76,000.—Le Ménestrel.

The London Daily News, in a notice of a new cantata by Coleridge Taylor to be produced at the Leeds Festival, has the following paragraph:

"On account both of its size and importance Mr. Taylor's 'The Blind Girl of Castel Cuillè' will probably attract most attention. It is a half program work, lasting about an hour and a half in performance; and while the orchestra plays in it a very important part, the text is, we learn, set to that species of choral narrative of which we now have so many examples, interspersed with dramatic and other choruses, and soprano and baritone solos. The words are those which Wordsworth based upon a Gascon poem by Jasmin, although the legend is by no means a monopoly of France."

Our contemporary is evidently not posted in his Longfellow, whose translation of the Provençal poets' lives, "L'Abuglo," appeared some fifty years ago. It is lucky that when he assigned the text to Wordsworth he did not give the music to Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

INTERVIEW WITH ESTHER FÉE.

SIX years ago Chicago was going wild over George du Maurier's romance of the Quartier Latin, the beautiful hypnotic vocalist and the dyspeptic Little Billee. Those were the days of the "Trilby" boom, and nobody was better known in connection with the general enthusiasm than Miss Esther Fée, the young violinist. Reams of copy were turned out about "the girl with the Trilby chin," for, beginning with her general likness to Trilby, citizens of Chicago were not slow to discover that Miss Fée really does possess the mouth and chin which George du Maurier's pencil gave to the imaginings of his pen. And then whenever there was a "Trilby" reading Miss Fée was requisitioned to play a low accompaniment to the lecture, or at the intervals to recall the old airs "Oh, Don't You Remember Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt," or "Malbruck s'en va-t-en guerre."

All this was an original, certainly, possibly the critics might say an illegal, entry into a musical career. But Miss Fée was already marked as a violinist of no ordinary ability and her playing had no more need then than now of the meretricious aid of any popular craze to recommend it. Very soon after the "Trilby" readings Miss Fée packed her trunks and set sail for Paris to give herself over to five years' unremitting toil at music before once more turning her thoughts Westward.

It is always with a certain amount of nervousness—a thing, by the way, to which a journalist though a journalist does occasionally confess—that one goes to interview an artist. One is like the ladies of whom Bottom apprehended that they "might be afeared of the lion."

But Miss Fée is not one to frighten an interviewer She is tall and fair, with a brilliant complexion, the beautiful Trilby jaw and a simple, direct way of talking of her hopes and aims which is anything but stagy. And it is such a relief to find that Miss Fée does not cut her hair short, but wears it in a very pretty chignon, according to the usual dictates of fashion! For all which very personal remarks may she duly forgive me.

Born in Illinois, Miss Fée did not begin to study the violin, she told me, till the comparatively late age of ten. Her parents were then living in Kansas, and little Esther was set to work under a professor of Polish extraction. "However," she says modestly, "though I began late, they said I made very rapid progress," and when she was sixteen she was studying at Chicago and already well known on public concert platforms. Soon came the Trilby boom, and then, as I said above, Miss Fée resolved to seek the "light from the east," and she migrated to Europe. Like all artists who have studied in Paris, Miss Fée declares this gay city to be also the centre of art, and I think she dates her life as a violinist from the moment when she passed within its octroi guarded walls. She did not enter at the Conservatoire, but gave herself up to the guidance of one professor.

Miss Fée's fingers played an unconscious scale on her knee, and I noticed that they were very long and nicely loosened at the base, the one from the other, and that each finger prided himself on knowing a great deal more than all his fellows, yet condescended to work in harmony with them for the benefit of the whole—just as properly constituted violin fingers should. "Ah," she went on answer to the question which the fingers suggested, "of course I practice my scales steadily every day. I have a friend who says that by arranging your pieces in the right order you will find in them all that you need in scales and consequently save time. But that I do not believe. Plain, ordinary up and down scales are the only things to keep your fingers lissome and trim, and besides"—the speaker looked about a little as though seeking for the inspiration of expression—"scales teach you in their homely way such a lot about the personality of notes, which you

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, McCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. EVANS VON KLENNER
School of Vocal Music
Voice Culture, Style and Repertoire in Four Languages.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
RESUMES TEACHING AT NEW RESIDENCE-STUDIO,
230 WEST 52d STREET,
SEPTEMBER 18.

VAN YORX
Teno
6 E. 17th t.
NEW YOR

meet again and recognize in the big works you have to study over."

"And how do you study big works?"

"Ah," was the answer, "one can hardly lay down any definite rules. To begin with, of course the technic of the piece has to be thoroughly mastered, carefully, bit by bit, and slowly. In fact, long after one is perfect on the execution of the notes one should, I think, go on playing them slowly while one is really learning to understand their meaning. And what a time that does take! Why, life isn't long enough to learn to understand some pieces. I practice a great while every day, going right through my repertory over and over again. And that isn't by any means to keep an eye on the passages which are apt to get rusty, but every time I go through a piece I learn something more about what it really means. One very good way is to sing what you are learning, and the reason why it is such a help is that whereas in expressing the music on the fiddle your mind has to do two things—express the music and guide the fingers as well—when you sing the mind just speaks straight out in a natural way without having to bother about the medium through which it makes itself heard. So you see," she concluded simply, "I just sing all the time."

Miss Fée's taste in music is divided into two extremes, which, as one looks at her, he can see to be a good indication of her character. First she loves the wild dance music of the Hungarians and the Slavs; and then, on the other hand, she finds that slow, religious music appeals to her more than anything else. Apropos, Miss Fée will forgive me for saying that she is a little bit shocked at Parisians' want of appreciation for Händel. Once when she was first in France she played Händel's Largo at an "at home"; played it as well as she knew how. The audience thanked and applauded her at the end greatly, but—they all wanted to know what it was!

Miss Fée has played a great deal in Paris at concerts at the Salle Hoche, and at those given by Madame Marchesi. It was at this lady's house and again at the inauguration of the American Institute in Paris that she was accompanied by Massenet. Miss Fée has also toured in England with Miss Ellen Beach Yaw, and played at the Belfast Philharmonic concerts and the Glasgow Popular concerts and also at Cardiff and Newcastle. But hitherto she has never properly "débuted" in a concert of her own, and this she looks to do next November in New York.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr. 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, reopened his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, since his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the University authorities of that town, he gave lectures on the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

MRS. SARA ROBINSON-DUFF.

THE fame of Mrs. Sara Robinson-Duff is well known to the many readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER through the frequent references which have been made to her work in Paris, where she has been teaching vocal art for several years past.

Although an American by birth, Mrs. Duff decided to make her home in Paris for the purpose of better furthering the interests of vocal students and aspirants to the operatic and concert stage. It is owing to her excellent work and reputation for candor that several families in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, whose daughters are about to enter upon a musical career, have requested her to make a short visit to the United States in order for her to personally decide as to the talent and vocal possibilities of their daughters, who are to be guided by her advice, this course being deemed by them more desirable than to follow the customary one of sending their daughters to Europe before they had acquired a real and satisfactory knowledge of the vocal possibilities before them.

MRS. ROBINSON-DUFF.

Although exceedingly busy in her Paris studio in the Rue Renaissance, Mrs. Duff accepted the invitation and arrived here a few days ago, and is now staying at the Burlington Apartments, No. 10 West Thirtieth street, where already she is overwhelmed with applications from pupils, with the result that she has been trying voices daily and giving advice which is sure to be of benefit to those who have taken advantage of her presence here to visit her.

Mrs. Duff will remain at the Burlington Apartments until October 8, when she will sail on the Maria Theresa for her Paris home. It is a very gratifying thing to know that American girls in Paris can have the opportunity of studying with so intelligent, refined and artistic a teacher as Mrs. Duff, and it is certainly advantageous to them, more especially as she is conversant with matters on this side of the ocean, matters which generally a foreigner does not know. Mrs. Duff also, naturally, understands the American temperament, and hence the reason for managers consulting her in Paris when in search of singers to fill engagements in this country, for at the studio of Mrs. Duff are to be met many of the most distinguished musical people of Paris.

Miss Mary Garden, who is a pupil of Mrs. Duff, and who is to make her début in "Manon" this week, at the Opéra Comique, in Paris, is a young woman who has already made a name for herself and she reflects great credit on Mrs. Duff's ability to successfully teach the vocal art.

Incidentally, it might be of interest to add that Mrs Duff is a native of Bangor, Me., a State from which Madame Eames, Madame Nordica and Anna Louise Cary hail—names all famous in the world of music. It would be advisable for students who are in earnest to make the acquaintance of Mrs. Duff during her stay here, and in her they will be sure to find a temperament that is as artistic as it is amiable.

SIGHT SINGING AND CHORAL CLASSES.—Miss Deming has returned from Europe, and may be seen at her school in Carnegie Hall, by those wishing to arrange for private or class lessons in sight singing in its various branches, between the hours of 10 and 12 a. m. and 2 and 4 p. m., every day except Saturdays. Classes will begin Monday, October 7. Miss Deming will give a series of three lectures upon sight singing and choral music abroad and in America, October 7, 10 and 14, at 4 o'clock, 402-403 Carnegie Hall. Each lecture will be followed by a lesson illustrating the methods used.

These lectures and lessons are free to the musical public. Many people do not realize the importance of this branch of music, and all students both of vocal and instrumental music should avail themselves of this opportunity to hear the subject brought out by an experienced teacher like Miss Deming. An evening class will be formed for those engaged during the day. Students learn to sing difficult music at sight without the aid of an instrument as easily as they read their language, when taught by the practical methods used by Miss Deming. Special courses of instruction are given to meet the needs of vocalists, instrumentalists, teachers of school music and children. Normal classes will be formed for those prepared for that work.

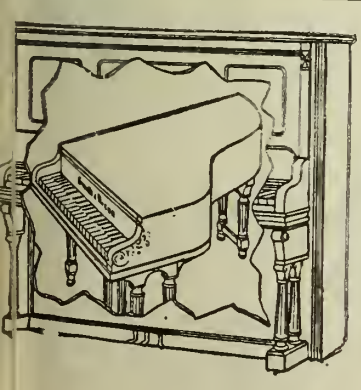
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
13 rue Bassano (Etoile), PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production.
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

Obituary.

Friedrich Chrysander.

FRIEDRICH CHRYSANDER, whose death on September 4, at Bergedorf, has been announced, devoted his whole life to the study of Händel, whose collected works he published in the monumental edition of the Händel Society.

Chrysander was born in Lübtheen in Mecklenburg, July 8, 1826, studied in Rostock, became organist at the Cathedral of Schwerin, music director at the university, and in 1860 director of the church choir in Hanover. He resigned these offices, however, but still retained a personal relation with King George, who allowed him a pension of 1,000 thalers a year; without his assistance he would never have been able to undertake the gigantic enterprise with which his name will always be associated. Henceforth his whole interest was given to Händel, whose works he had heard performed in England, and in 1856, in company with another Händel enthusiast, Gervinus, he founded the Händel Society. He took up his abode at Bergedorf, near Hamburg, and for the rest of his life devoted himself to his task, even superintending the engraving of the plates.

In his revision of the text he was guided solely by practical considerations, he strove to give the text more dramatic power and greater unity and to free the imperishable beauties of the music from the load of antiquated ballast with which it had been overladen. In a private letter he wrote: "As regards my translations and revisions of Händel's works, it has been supposed, as it is scarcely ten years since I have been publicly identified with the task, that they are products of these later years. Nothing can be more erroneous, for since the very beginning of the Händel edition, and even before that, I worked unceasingly. As it was, however, a field of which at first I knew nothing, I cut myself in quiet a path through the dark wood. In 1863, at a performance of 'Saul,' where I first introduced the clavier, I stated to some friends what must be the goal, but I kept my private opinions and views absolutely secret so that I might remain thoroughly free and uninfluenced." His object, he repeats, was simply a practical one, and therefore he wrote not a word of explanation or justification. But while casting overboard much antiquated ballast he may be accused of retaining or restoring it in the cadenzas of the arias.

In the instrumentation his great love of the organ, and its too frequent employment, overpowered the orchestral Klangfork. The poet and the champion drove the musician into the background; but for his courage, his labors, his investigations and researches, the undeniable promotion of the Händel cult, no praise can be too high.

In the private letter, already referred to, Chrysander writes: "I have never been anything but a musician, and have never wished to be anything else. Fifty years ago, when I first made practical acquaintance with Wagner's operas, an acquaintance which preserve me from the prejudices of others, I worked, under his influence, on two operas, but at the same time studied Bach with enthusiasm, whose clavier music I published in a graduated series in four volumes. But when I entered the domain of Händel I recognized not only what was lacking in myself, but also in modern music, and therefore the conclusion quickly ripened to sacrifice my own compositions and to prosecute the resurrection, or rather, the introduction, of Händel into our art, as my life's work. This resolution I made in 1853."

The death of Eduard Bartay, director of the National Conservatory of Budapest, on August 31, is announced. He was one of the most sympathetic figures of the musical world of that city, and to him the conservatory owes much for its success. He was for twenty years at the head of the institution, and had reached the age of seventy-five years.

Morelli, one of the best of modern Italian painters, lately died at Naples. He was an intimate friend of Verdi, and painted for himself a portrait of the master. To this another artist, Palizzi, added a wreath of laurel surrounding the portrait. The two painters then agreed that each of them should have it in turn for a month in their atelier. Then Torelli, the father of the dramatic author, Achilles Torelli, borrowed it to adorn his salon on a reception day. He never returned it.

HELEN NIEBUHR.—Miss Helen Niebuhr, the young American contralto, who has just returned from a long course of study under Bouhy, in Paris, made an enviable record in all her European appearances, and her first season here gives promise of repeating her foreign triumphs under Manager Charlton's able direction. Miss Niebuhr's engagements begin early in October. She is booked for an important concert at Trenton the same month, with Gregory Hast, the English tenor; for a ballad concert in Milwaukee, November 4, and later in November she will sing at the Brooklyn Institute on the same program with the Kneisel Quartet.

MINNE HUMPHRYES.—Following is an additional press criticism about Minne Humphryes:

A special attraction at the concert was the appearance of the distinguished artist, Mrs. Minne Humphryes. Everyone considered it a treat to listen to her rich coloratura soprano voice. In her rendering of the sacred song "Divine Redeemer," she seemed to throw her soul into song, until the spirit of prayer pervaded the whole room, and the tones of her sweet voice will long echo in the memory of many a heart. Critics who were present from Boston and other cities say it is among the finest voices they ever heard.—Chatham (N. Y.) Courier.

EMIL HOFMANN.—Emil Hofmann will return to America next month to fill the first of a long list of engagements for this coming season under Loudon G. Charlton's management. Mr. Hofmann's successes on this side of the water last season were notable, and he has made many important appearances since he went abroad in April. The last was at a music festival at Rudolstadt, on August 14, when the eminent baritone scored another triumph with his voice and art.

COMPOSITIONS OF SEBASTIAN B. SCHLESINGER.

Op. 38.—Wenn ich in Deine Augen seh. For baritone or mezzo-soprano, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York.

Op. 39.—Two Songs.
There, Little Girl, Don't Cry. No. 1 in A flat, No. 2 in F, published by E. Ascherberg & Co. and J. H. Schroeder, New York; N. Simrock, Berlin.
Phil's Secret. No. 1 in A flat, No. 2 in F, published by Boosey & Co., London.

Op. 40.—I Wait for You. No. 1 in E flat, No. 2 in F, published by E. Ascherberg & Co.

Op. 41.—Mourn in Hope, published by Novello, Ewer & Co.

Op. 42.—Little Baby, Dear, Good Night! published by Cranz & Co.

Op. 43.—Little Baby, Dear, Wake Up! published by Cranz & Co.

Op. 44.—Love Lives On. No. 1 in A flat, No. 2 in C, published by Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington street, London, W.

Op. 45.—Good-bye! For mezzo-soprano, published by Cranz & Co., 18 Berners street, London, W., and at Hamburg.

Op. 46.—The Queen's Riding. For mezzo-soprano, published by Cranz & Co., 18 Berners street, London, W., and at Hamburg.

Op. 47.—Where Billows Are Breaking. For mezzo-soprano, published by Cranz & Co., 18 Berners street, London, W., and at Hamburg.

Op. 48.—Unless. No. 1 in D, No. 2 in C, published by Novello, Ewer & Co.

Op. 49.—Two Songs, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York, and E. Ascherberg & Co., London.
Under the Nursery Lamp. For soprano or mezzo-soprano.
The Race. For soprano or mezzo-soprano.

Op. 50.—Wedding March, published by Oliver Ditson Company, Boston.
For Piano Solo.
For Four Hands.
For Band.
For Orchestra.

Op. 51.—Dreams in Autumn. Song, with Liszt Organ obligato, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York and E. Ascherberg & Co., London.

Op. 52.—The Ballad Singer. Song for baritone or contralto, published by J. H. Schroeder, and Bote & Bock, Berlin.

Op. 53.—The Lily. Song for baritone or contralto, pub

New York College of Music
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.
Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and a branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.
SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.
All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing an free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.
Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,
Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN
Distinguished American Pianist.
Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS. WEBB GARDNER
SOPRANO.
FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.
Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B. VOIGT
SOPRANO.
Oratorio, Concert a Song Recitals.
Address
RICHARD BYRO
Manager.
301 West 139th Street, NEW YO

M. VITTORIO CARP
Vocal Instruction.
ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.
210 WEST 59th STREET, opposite Park, NEW YORI

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Av

lished by J. H. Schroeder, and Bote & Bock, Berlin.

Op. 54.—Break, Break, Break. Song for mezzo-soprano, published by J. H. Schroeder, and Bote & Bock, Berlin.

Op. 55.—Bronze Brown Eyes. Song for soprano, published by the Century Company, New York.

Op. 56.—Two Hymns, published by the Century Company, New York.

Op. 57.—Little Boy Blue. For soprano and mezzo-soprano, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York.

Op. 58.—Come, Rest in My Bosom. For mezzo-soprano, published by A. P. Schmidt, Boston.

Op. 59.—Strew on Her Roses. For mezzo-soprano, published by A. P. Schmidt, Boston.

Op. 60.—Love, I Shall Know It All. Serenade, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York, and N. Simrock, Berlin.

Op. 61.—Love Haunted, published by J. H. Schroeder.

Op. 62.—Hark to My Lute, published by J. H. Schroeder.

Op. 63.—L'Echo, published by J. Hamele, Paris.

MADAME AMY SHERWIN.

MME. AMY SHERWIN, who is the wife of Hugo Görlitz, has organized a new entertainment for at homes in London, in the shape of a playlet, "A Love Tangle," written by Mrs. Stepney Rawson, author of "A Lady of the Regency," and George H. Clutsam, composer of a coon song called "Curly-headed Babby." The argument of "A Love Tangle," which plays half an hour, is that the Lady Amoys (Madame Sherwin) is "aweary of this great world"; the maid, Pansy, is tired of gardens. The hearts of each stray into the domain of the other, to the begetting of certain perplexities—since love, immemorial in its beauty, is old also in its talent for complications. Therefore, it is only after a pleasant war of words and song that the "tangle" is loosened, and that in the end the wranglers grow very wise indeed. This picture is by Miss Kate Pragnell.

Mme. Amy Sherwin is well known in this country, having appeared in concerts under Mr. Damrosch and singing at the time in the twelve performances of Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" at Steinway Hall. She is now singing in Great Britain in all the large cities.

CORRECTION.—We wish to correct a mistake in our issue of September 11, in which we headed the article in regard to Miss Deming's work, "Voice Culture." This should have been headed "Sight Singing," as Miss Deming's school does not include voice culture, as she prefers to leave this branch to others and devotes her work to the very important but much neglected work of sight singing, ear training and choral singing.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH.—Claude Maitland Griffeth, who taught for six years at the Virgil Piano School, has rented a studio at Carnegie Hall, where he will teach after October 1. Mr. Griffeth returned recently from Europe, and while abroad studied with Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. In his new studio Mr. Griffeth will form classes in sight reading, ear training and keeping time.

SARA ANDERSON RETURNS TO AMERICA.

SARA ANDERSON, the successful soprano, has returned to America, having been abroad since early June. William Fisher, her manager, has booked for her the coming season many important engagements, and this winter will see the young singer in almost every part of the United States.

It is interesting to follow the short but brilliant career of this artist, who but three years ago, returning to America after developing her art in Paris and London, entered at once the concert field and received unstinted praise from the press and public wherever she appeared.

SARA ANDERSON.

During the three years which found Miss Anderson prima soprano at the most important festivals throughout the country, soloist with the principal orchestras and innumerable appearances in oratorios, club concerts and recitals, she was booked through the Wolfsohn agency, but this season finds her under the management of William Fisher.

Beginning with her first appearance in Worcester in 1898, where she created a furore with press and public alike, her appearances have invariably brought forth the highest terms of praise and resulted in re-engagements everywhere. And so we find after three seasons of singing, this young, talented and studious American, serious in her work for art's sake, always seeking the highest ideals, the prima soprano of American singers.

Her voice is a full, broad, dramatic soprano, whose higher register runs up to the high C. The lower and medium voice often takes on the quality of a contralto. These qualities fit her for the big works, such as "Elijah," "Messiah" and the Bach and Beethoven Masses.

In song recitals, however, where the programs include the delicate compositions of the immortal composers as well as the dainty compositions of our present writers, her refined and cultivated mind handles and colors this voice and presents pictures as varied in hue as any landscape or miniature from the brush of an artist.

Having sung nearly all the soprano parts in the great oratorios and masses and with a vast repertory of operatic arias for orchestral concerts, Miss Anderson has turned her principal attention to song recitals. Miss Anderson will be in this country the entire season of 1901-1902, and will make two Western tours, according to bookings at the present time, one in December, one in February.

Holmes Cowper.

Having spent a delightful vacation in Western Canada, Holmes Cowper, the gifted and well-known tenor, has returned to his professional duties at Kimball Hall, Chicago. Mr. Cowper, who is under the direction of the Hamlin Company, will accept concert and oratorio engagements this season. The following are some of his representative press notices:

Holmes Cowper, the noted Chicago tenor, was heartily encored for his beautiful rendition of "Onaway! Awake, Beloved."—The Times, Dubuque, Ia., May 19, 1901.

Mr. Cowper is a delightful singer, with a voice of true lyric quality, and he sings with much refinement and intelligence.—Hawkeye, Mount Vernon, Ia., May 17, 1901.

Holmes Cowper sang the tenor part in a clear, smooth style. His high tones were always of a beautiful quality; the nicety and finish of his singing was enjoyed by all.—Gazette, Delaware, Ohio, June 14, 1901.

Mr. Cowper scored a success in "Cujus Animam." His voice has broadened and improved greatly in tone quality. With so excellent a voice Mr. Cowper should soon rank with the best oratorio tenors.—The Index, Evanston, Ill., May 11, 1901.

Holmes Cowper, of Chicago, was without question the star of the occasion. His beautiful voice has grown tremendously since he was here last, and that is saying much. He is most pronouncedly an artist of the first rank. It is but a question of time before Mr. Cowper is recognized as the leading American tenor.—The Bee, Omaha, Neb., March 22, 1901.

Mr. Cowper captivated his audience on the soft passages, for he has a voice perfection itself for ballads.—Musical Times, Chicago, November 14, 1900.

Holmes Cowper may be credited with a correspondingly signal success, and his singing of "Thou Shalt Dash Them" was applauded so persistently that Mr. Torrington permitted an encore.—The Globe, Toronto, Canada, December 19, 1900.

Mr. Cowper has a sweet and well trained voice, strong, flexible and well handled. He is a real artist in voice and training.—The Review, Elkhart, Ind., January 27, 1901.

GREGORY HAST.
AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James Hall, Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall, Oratorio, Crystal Palace, Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
London G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
WYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano. Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Sole Manager, Room 95 Carnegie Hall, New York.

American School of Opera
Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street
WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.
WINTER SEASON NOW OPEN.
PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:
NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

WHITNEY TEW.

WHITNEY TEW'S remarkable versatility has frequently been the subject of favorable comment, for the gifted basso is equally successful in song recital, oratorio or opera. As librettist, too, he has gained recognition, his version of "The Three Musketeers," in which he plays the part of Richelieu, having aroused praise and enthusiasm in Great Britain. To illustrate the heights to which Whitney Tew has risen in various artistic branches the following press notices may well be reproduced:

AS LIBRETTIST.

The Three Musketeers.—The author is Herbert Whitney, who, under the name of Whitney Tew, plays the part of Cardinal Richelieu. * * * It is less an opera than an operatic drama, and on that account it will probably obtain a wider and more mixed popularity than could otherwise be expected of it, for, combined with sweet, tuneful music, there is ample scope for dramatic talent. The passages selected for reproduction, however much they set the accuracy of the original at defiance and, of course, great latitude is permissible in opera- are not only stirring and sensational but very effectively treated.

The interest of the audience is arrested and sustained from the first scene to the last, and the curtain invariably falls on a good situation. * * * The most striking figure in the opera is probably that of Richelieu, which was filled last night by Whitney Tew. His make-up was decidedly ghastly, but Mr. Tew not only acted the part with much credit but gave a capital rendering of the song, "While Richelieu Holds the Helm," for which he was encored.—Aberdeen Free Press.

IN OPERA.

Mr. Tew sang the song of the Cardinal with great impressiveness and power.—Evening Telegraph, Dundee.

Whitney Tew (the librettist) portrays the character of Richelieu with force and decision, discriminating carefully the finer shades of the individuality.—Dundee Advertiser.

Faust.—The role of Mephistopheles was essayed for the first time by Whitney Tew, and his singing was really excellent, and his conception of the part artistic and consistent throughout.—Independent, Dublin.

Tannhäuser.—Whitney Tew is entitled to something more than a word of praise for the manner in which he adapted himself to the requirements of an exacting role in the part of the Landgrave.—Dublin Nation.

Whitney Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the part of the Cardinal.—The Stage.

The cast was a strong one. Mr. Hedmondt as Tannhäuser, Miss Ella Russell as Elizabeth, Whitney Tew as the Landgrave and William Ludwig as Wolfram were a sufficient guarantee of a certain distinct measure of success. * * * Mr. Tew sang well and with feeling.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Whitney Tew (the author) gave a strikingly characteristic reading of the part of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching.—The Era.

As Landgrave Mr. Tew, who possesses a fine range of voice, sang with ease and expression, and found favor with the audience.—Belfast Morning News.

As the Landgrave Whitney Tew uses a rich baritone voice with a dignity entirely in keeping with the character of the music allotted to him.—Brighton Herald.

Whitney Tew made a very effective Landgrave, using to good purpose his principal opportunity in the splendid scene of Tannhäuser's banishment. His fine bass voice is well suited to the music.—Manchester Guardian.

Don Giovanni.—In the last tragic scene with Don Giovanni Whitney Tew displayed a voice of great power and good quality, and the music was finely sung.—Oldham Daily Standard.

IN CONCERT AND SONG RECITAL.

Tschaikowsky's "Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt" was beautifully delivered by Whitney Tew, who also sang two other compositions with great finish.—Whitehall Review.

Miss Dorothea Hollins accompanied the noted American bass, Whitney Tew, in "Der Nebel," a beautiful study of her own composition, and the artistic singer gave a magnificent rendering of "Le Pas d'Armes du Roi Jean," by Saint-Saëns.—Hearth and Home.

Fate has indeed favored Mr. Tew, for she has gifted him with a voice of great range and beauty, full and resonant, which he has cultivated through incessant and intelligent study to such a degree that every tone is delightful and finished; this, coupled with a deep love for music, a most remarkable memory, great versatility and a fine and dignified stage presence, has enabled Mr. Tew to become a great artist.—Jamestown (N. Y.) Journal.

H. WHITNEY TEW.

Mr. Tew has a bass voice of rare power and expression, and his songs were delightfully given.—Dublin Daily Express.

Edinburgh Philosophical Institution.—Mr. Tew's reading of "Ethiopia Saluting the Colors" and "Captain, My Captain!" was powerful and dramatic. "Little Mary Cassidy" and "Ode to Bacchus" were also received with enthusiasm.—Queen.

Whitney Tew gained the high appreciation of his audience by his singing of "Ethiopia Saluting the Colors" and "O Captain, My Captain!" the words of the latter written by Walt Whitman on the assassination of President Lincoln. Sombre and solemn as is the music, it was almost intensified by the sonorous tone of the vocalist. His deep bass voice could not have been heard to greater advantage. In a lighter vein was "Little Mary Cassidy" (Somervell), but the expression was thoroughly appropriate, and Mr. Tew gave "Ode to Bacchus" (Chaminade) with spirit and verve."—Belfast News Letter.

Henry Wolfsohn is now arranging the dates of this basso's American concert tour, which will last throughout November and December, 1901. It is hoped that Mr. Tew will visit the leading cities of the adjoining Dominion, for many Canadian connoisseurs were delighted with his singing last year.

THE GRAU OPERA SEASON.

Complete Itinerary.

BELOW we give the complete itinerary of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company for the season of 1901-2. This is the authentic route:

October 7	Albany, N. Y.
October 8, 9, 10	Montreal, Can.
October 11, 12	Toronto, Can.
October 14	Syracuse, N. Y.
October 15	Rochester, N. Y.
October 16, 17, 18, 19	Buffalo, N. Y.
October 21, 22	Louisville, Ky.
October 23, 24	Nashville, Tenn.
October 25, 26	Memphis, Tenn.
October 28, 29	Atlanta, Ga.
October 30	Birmingham, Ala.
October 31, November 1, 2, 3	New Orleans, La.
November 4	Houston, Tex.
November 8, 9	Los Angeles, Cal.
Beginning November 11, three weeks	San Francisco, Cal.
December 2	Los Angeles, Cal.
December 5	San Antonio, Tex.
December 6, 7	Dallas, Tex.
December 9, 10	Kansas City, Mo.
December 11, 12, 13	St. Louis, Mo.
December 14	Indianapolis, Ind.
December 16, 17, 18, 19	Cincinnati, Ohio
December 20, 21	Cleveland, Ohio
Beginning December 23, eleven weeks	New York
Then, two weeks	Boston
Then, two weeks	Chicago
Then, four days	Pittsburg
Then, two days	Baltimore

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING.—Ferdinand and Hermann Carri, directors of this well-known institution, are in the city again, after having spent their usual summer vacation at Nantucket, Mass. The Messrs. Carri look forward to a very busy season. Besides the large number of pupils studying at present with them, many applications to enter their institution have been received from various parts of the country. The first Carri concert will take place the beginning of November in Knabe Hall.

THE CARPI STUDIO.—Vittorio Carpi, the vocal teacher, and his family recently returned to this city from Milan, Italy, as previously announced in these columns. Signor Carpi has now an artistically appointed studio, at 210 West Fifty-ninth street, opposite the Park, where his list of pupils is rapidly growing. Many of Signor Carpi's former pupils have called on him and welcomed him back to the scene of his former successes.

"MESSIAH" IN GALESBURG, ILL.—The Musical Union of Galesburg, Ill., William F. Bentley musical director, is showing renewed vigor and activity for the coming season. For the first concert, in December, it will give a performance of "The Messiah," with Sara Anderson, soprano, and Joseph Baernstein, basso. The concerts for the balance of the season are not decided upon.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time.
During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire

Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

Musical Clubs.

Louis Dressler has been re-engaged as musical director of the Montclair (N. J.) Apollo Club.

The Lancaster, N. H., Choral Society, under the direction of W. R. Lane, gave a concert at the Lancaster Congregational Church on August 31.

The Cleveland Vocal Society, Alfred Arthur conductor, will begin rehearsals the first Monday in October. The works to be given at the first concerts will be "The Christmas Oratorio," by Saint-Saens, and Beethoven's "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage."

The members of the Mozart Club, of Pittsburg, assembled on September 16 for the first rehearsal. On Thursday evening, November 21, the club will give its one hundredth concert. Other concerts will be given December 26, 1901; Thursday, March 18, and May 6, 1902.

The Verdi Club and Dominant Ninth Chorus, of Alton, Ill., will co-operate this season in engaging artists. The Dominant Ninth Chorus claims a membership of seventy-five and the Verdi Club, also a vocal society, has forty-five members. Gerardy, the 'cellist, will play at one concert.

Händel's "Messiah" will be sung at the December concert of the St. Paul (Minn.) Choral Club. Rehearsals have already begun. The date of the first concert will be December 10. Mrs. Genevieve Clark Wilson, of Chicago; Glen Hall, of Chicago, and Joseph Baernstein, of New York, will be the soloists.

Mrs. D. M. Butler, president of the Matinee Musicale, of Lincoln, Neb., will give a reception for the members at Walsh Hall, on October 7. The musical program at this reception will be in the hands of musicians from out of town. The regular meetings and work of the club will begin on October 21. Following is the outline of programs for the season: October 7, reception; October 21, first division, "A Life Story"; November 4, second division, Russian music; November 18, artists' recital; December 2, third division, opera music; December 16, second division, "Our Own Country"; January 13, third division, "The Gypsy Element in Music"; January 27, artists' recital; February 10, first division, "Myths and Legends"; February 24, second division, Bach and Beethoven; March 10, artists' recital; March 24, third division, "Comparative Examples"; April 7, first division, "Patrician and Plebeian"; April 21, open meeting; May 5, reception.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN
PUPILS
Mr. BOWMAN has returned to New York and may be consulted by appointment or by personal application at his studio, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday Afternoons. 2 to 3. Private Instruction in Piano, Organ and Theory. Classes also of two or more for the study of Theory.
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

MARY M. SHEDD.

MISS MARY M. SHEDD, discoverer and teacher of the American Method of Singing, has been spending the past week at the Waldorf-Astoria. Miss Shedd brought with her from Chicago one of her pupils, Miss Irene Briggs, who, although only thirteen years old, possesses a marvelous voice. When she began to study with Miss Shedd her voice was weak, and her range covered but eight notes. Now the volume of her voice is so great that it will fill any hall, and she has a range of three octaves. It is a wondrously mellow voice, and every tone from the highest to the lowest is as nigh perfect as can be. Her repertory, which is astonishing for so young a child, is as follows:

Salve Regina.....Dana
Ave Maria.....Gounod
Air from Atilla (in Latin and Italian).....Verdi
Brilliant Bird, from Pearl of Brazil.....David
I Will Extol Thee.....Costa
Serenade à Juanita.....Jouberti
With Verdure Clad.....Haydn
Vesper Hour.....Bracket
Heaven Is Not Far Away.....Moler
Lord Be Merciful.....Bartlett
Nearer, My God, to Thee.....Wiegand
Shine On, O Star.....Sawyer
La Danza.....Marchesi
Woodland Lullaby.....Johns
Coming Through the Rye.....Parry
And other ballads.

Miss Briggs will shortly fill several concert engagements in New York and Cincinnati.

To a representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER who called upon her Miss Shedd said, in part:

"Through my method every voice accepted by me will develop into the same tones with which De Reszké, Patti and all great artists were born. Muscles that support pure tone are capable of development whether the age be three or sixty. Singers have never known the possibilities of their voice in compass, volume or purity of tone, for if they had been taught a correct system they would be able to rise above physical conditions and at all times sing well, and would retain purity and ease of tone as long as the body retained health and vigor.

"The American Method of Singing is the science of pure tone development, which was only recently discovered and at present is known to but few. You have heard Miss Briggs sing and have no doubt perceived the difference in her singing and that of those singing by other methods. This difference is in reality a lack of noise, this noise being caused by use of the throat, or rather support of throat, and results in voices becoming harsh and unmusical, and eventually a failure. Everyone uses the throat for support, either in singing or speech. If they did not they would sing like Melbas and Pattis, and speak the same as Mansfield, Rehan and Bernhardt.

"Children's voices do not train more easily than adults, for the most easily trained pupils I ever taught were a lady, aged forty-nine, and a gentleman, thirty-two. Age has no effect on muscles that support pure tone. All is governed entirely by physical conditions."

ARTHUR REGINALD LITTLE.—Arthur Reginald Little, a pupil of Leschetizky, has opened a studio at Carnegie Hall. Besides teaching piano pupils, Mr. Little will give instruction in the interpretation of songs, and coach opera students.

"MESSIAH" IN MINNEAPOLIS.—The Philharmonic Society of Minneapolis, Minn., will give "The Messiah" on December 11, 1901. The only soloist engaged so far is the basso, Joseph Baernstein.

CHURCH MUSIC IN TORONTO.

TORONTO, September 20.

Editor The Musical Courier:

DURING the past two or three years I have been making a tour of the choirs of this city, making no discrimination between any of the leading large church choirs, but visiting all in order to satisfy myself as to the quality of music in use generally by the various choirs of Toronto, with the result that I found only one church in this so-called City of Churches that had perfect instrumental and vocal music. It is not my intention to mention any names; suffice it to say that the choir I refer to as being so excellent, produce equally satisfactory results, unaccompanied or accompanied by the organ.

Is not this fact astounding when one considers the size of this city, the number of churches here and the musical reputation which Toronto enjoys and is not entitled to, which these results show, and which I, as a resident of this city, am sorry for?

I think one cause of this deficiency is that persons are admitted into choirs who know very little or nothing about music. Ask some of the choirmasters why this is so, and they will try to avoid the question, but the real reason is, in order to keep the choir gallery full of members, regardless of their knowledge of music.

Some churches even consider the dignity of the choir so cheaply that they post notices, inviting anyone who has a "good voice" and knows how to sing, never mentioning who is the proper authority to ascertain the quality of their voices, to become members of the choir. So long as anyone and everyone can become members of the choirs, which, probably at one time, some years ago have been

Of the many foreign artists to visit America during the coming season no one has met with greater success in his specialty than has Mr. Alexander Musgrove, the distinguished English baritone. Born in London, in 1869, he studied there and made his début at Covent Garden (Promenade Concerts) on his twentieth birthday. Subsequently he appeared at St. James Hall, Crystal Palace, Royal Albert Hall, always winning instant recognition for his fine voice and artistic singing. In the autumn of 1890, his health causing anxiety, Mr. Musgrove took an extended sea-voyage, visiting South Africa, Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, travelling for four years, and singing with great success in all the colonial towns. Mr. Musgrove married, in New Zealand, the daughter of Mr. William Clark, of Wellington.

Returning to England, in 1895, Mr. Musgrove has appeared with choral and orchestral societies throughout the kingdom. His favorite work is in oratorio, but he has a large repertoire of solo songs. He is a song composer and the author of the words of more than fifty published songs.

Mr. Musgrove's repertoire contains, among many other songs, the following by American composers: "Sleep, Darling, Sleep," "Softly in a Dream," "Under the Rose," William Arms Fisher; "My Part in Thee," Mawson-Marks; "Auf Wiedersehen," Rosseter G. Cole; "I Plucked a Quill," Henry K. Hadley; "Visions of Hope," W. Berwald; "Absence," Alfred E. Little; "Bend Low," E. R. Kroeger; "Drink to Me Only," Louis R. Dressler; "Remembrance," Carl Busch; "I Know Not Why," M. L. Koevessy; all of which are published by the Oliver Ditson Company, Boston, and sold by Chas. H. Ditson & Co., New York; J. E. Ditson & Co., Philadelphia, and the leading dealers everywhere.

437.

ELECTA GIFFORD
SOPRANO.
Dates Booking for Concert, Recital and Oratorio.
WEST: CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.
EAST: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Manager
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK CITY.
Has the honor to announce the following distinguished Musical Artists:
LIZA DELHASE-WICKES, The Brilliant Belgian Pianiste.
GERTRUDE VON BETZ, Pianiste, (First Prize Leipzig Conservatory.)
ALFRED DONALDSON WICKES, Violinist.
HENRIETTA WEBER, Pianiste and Accompanist.
FLORENCE SAGE, Pianiste, In Historical Recitals.
MINNE HUMPHRYES, Soprano.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS

good, just so long will all competent singers remain out until their services are appreciated.

Of course we all know of the views held by some well intentioned persons to the effect that the church does not want to have those "new-fangled" singers, as they consider competent soloists, but what the church wants is some person who "sings from the heart," and the writer during the course of his tour in quite numerous cases heard samples of this "singing from the heart" with the result that it nearly gave him heart disease to listen to it.

Fill the choir galleries with competent musicians, and in some cases you can get enough for an entire choir without one cent of expense, and you will not have to go on the street corners or secure some novelty or sensation in order to draw a large congregation. It is a conceded fact that the church is the House of God, and therefore everything pertaining to the service therein should be as near heavenly perfection as possible; still, not withstanding this fact, congregations are willing to allow incompetent singers to howl their songs of praise instead of singing them.

Of course, in all cases the members of the choirs complained of are not to blame, as there may be a poor organ in the church, which is so in quite a number of cases, and in addition to the poor organ there may be an incompetent organist. Not more than three weeks ago the writer attended a church where the permanent organist was away on his holidays, and although the church is one of the very best in the city, still, for some unexplained reason, an organist presided at the organ who could not play "Lead, Kindly Light," correctly, making at least half a dozen slips on the pedals.

I do not wish to have it inferred that I am a chronic fault finder, but for the sake of music, which has been aptly termed the "Divine Art," and of those who have anything approaching a true ear for music, let us have as nearly perfect music as possible or none at all.

OBSERVER.

MADAME VON KLENNER IN HER NEW HOME.

MME. EVANS VON KLENNER, after an unusually successful summer, is back in New York.

As previously announced in THE MUSICAL COURIER, the Von Klenner School of Music was removed from the old location on Stuyvesant street to a handsome house at 230 West Fifty-second street. Here Madame Von Klenner resumed her teaching last week, many new applicants having called before the time of the re-opening. Among the new pupils are several who studied with Madame Von Klenner at Lakewood, on Chautauqua Lake, this summer. Letters from there to THE MUSICAL COURIER were filled with enthusiastic reports of the work accomplished during the so-called "idle months" of the year. Starting with a dozen pupils at the beginning of the term, July 1, Madame Von Klenner closed with a class of thirty-six. She has already forty applicants enrolled for next summer. A number of these summer pupils are teachers in the South and West, and Madame Von Klenner cannot say enough in praise of the zeal shown by them while studying with her.

But this is of the summer, and no more need be said now about that work. The present activities at Madame von Klenner's school show the healthful and stimulating influences of the head of the school herself. As one new pupil declared: "Madame von Klenner does not teach in a parrot-like fashion, but gives us all the best counsel gained through her own thoroughly trained and eventful career." The whys and wherefores are explained fully, and this leaves no one in doubt when the lesson hour is over.

Madame von Klenner, along with her cultivation of the voice, teaches repertory in four languages, style, interpretation and all branches necessary to complete the education of a vocal artist.

A. CARBONE.

THIS distinguished opera singer and vocal teacher has removed from No. 144 Fifth avenue to his spacious and elegantly appointed studio No. 240 Fifth avenue. His studio is complete in every particular; it is indeed one of the best arranged studios in New York. Mr. Carbone already has begun work, and the indications are that this will be the busiest and most successful season he has ever had. This is guaranteed by the large number of pupils who already have applied to him for instruction.

As a member of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company Mr. Carbone won a very high reputation, although previous to his connection with this company he had achieved fame in Europe, both as a singer and teacher. Many public singers who hold high positions in the world of music owe their success to this eminent voice builder. One of these, Miss Edith Salter-Dax, gained the position of soprano soloist in the choir of the Madison Avenue Episcopal Church in competition with a large number of applicants for the place. There were, in fact, some sixty-two aspirants in the field. Another pupil, C. Wallmann, was engaged as a member of St. Anthony's choir, in Brooklyn. Miss Salter-Dax was invited two weeks ago to sing at the opening of the season at the Aurora Grata Cathedral, in Brooklyn, and she won a brilliant success. She also sang with success at the concert given by the Young Men's Christian Association and at a musicale given by the Ecleetic Club at Delmonico's. Other of Mr. Carbone's pupils have been equally as successful.

Mr. Carbone's success as a voice builder rest upon a perfect knowledge of the voice and the production of tone. His knowledge was acquired by twenty-five years' study and a long experience in the leading cities of Europe. So profound is his knowledge and so successful in imparting it to others that he has been consulted by some of the most eminent voice specialists in Europe and this country. For many years he has been engaged in writing a book on singing, and this work is almost completed. It is entitled "The Art of Singing," and embodies a vast amount of information which will prove invaluable to teachers and pupils. His method is the "pure Italian method" or "the natural method," which is, he contends, the only one that accomplishes results.

MUSIC IN BROOKLYN.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK and David Bispham are both to sing before the Brooklyn Institute during the season. The famous German contralto will appear in a special recital, probably before the holidays. Mr. Bispham, who is a favorite with the Institute audiences, will give a recital after the new year, at which he will be assisted by Miss Bertha Bucklin, violinist.

The Misses Crawford will again give a course of five picture music recitals, and Henry Holden Huss has been re-engaged to illustrate at the piano. Miss Rebekah Crawford is the Brooklyn woman who has taken a hearty interest in the career of the child pianist, Alma Stencel, whose portrait and sketch THE MUSICAL COURIER published several weeks ago.

Arthur Claassen is rehearsing the United Singers of Brooklyn for the concert to be given at Prospect Park next Sunday. Memorial numbers in remembrance of the late President McKinley will be the feature of the program. Some 400 singers will march from Arion Hall to the Park.

The Tonkünstler Society will hold its Brooklyn meetings on alternate Tuesday nights as heretofore. More than half of the members reside in Brooklyn and Long Island.

Edward H. Lemare, the organist of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, London, will give a recital before the Brooklyn Institute on October 10. Mr. Lemare will play the new organ in the South Congregational Church, corner Court and President streets.

The Choral Art Society will sing under the Institute auspices again this season. The concert, however, will not be given until late next spring.

A number of the studios in the borough will not open until the first week in October.

Frieda Siemens

THE EMINENT GERMAN PIANISTE.

American Tour October to April.

UNDER DIRECTION OF

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Carnegie Hall, New York.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

. . . Vocal Score of . . .

MANRU.

Opera in Three Acts by

I. J. PADEREWSKI.

Translated and Adapted for Performance in English

By H. E. KREHBIEL.

PRICE, ... net, $5.00.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

The Walker-Severn Conservatory of Music, New York.

FRANCIS WALKER, Singing.
EDMUND SEVERN, Violin and Theory.
Mrs. EDMUND SEVERN, Piano and Singing.
ARTHUR SEVERN, Violoncello.

Open October 1st, 1901.

For terms write to the Secretary,

Mr. FRANCIS WALKER, 836 Seventh Ave., New York.

Homes for Students. Special Course in Accompaniment Playing, by Mrs. Severn. Class-lessons in Italian for Singers, Mr. Walker. Ensemble Playing, Mr. Severn.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour

SECOND ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOUR.

Sailing Wednesday, September 25, per U. S. M. S. "St. Louis"
Opening at Royal Albert Hall, London, October 4.

SOUSA'S FAREWELL.

Concert in the Metropolitan Opera House Last Sunday Night —The Band Will Sail To-day for England.

THE size and character of the audience in the Metropolitan Opera House last Sunday night must have impressed Sousa and the members of his band. An assemblage of the "March King's" admirers that completely filled the building gave him a most enthusiastic send-off. The following program, the same one with which the band will open its London engagement, was given, plus the inevitable encore numbers:

Overture, Sakuntala.....Goldmark
Duet for cornets, Introduction and Polacca.....Eilenberg
Messrs. Clarke and Rogers.
Suite, Three Quotations.....Sousa
The King of France went up the hill
With twenty thousand men;
The King of France came down the hill,
And ne'er went up again.
And I, too, was born in Arcadia.
Nigger in a woodpile.
Trombone solo, Love Thoughts.....Pryor
Arthur Pryor.
Grand Scene and Ensemble, Andrea Chenier.....Giordano
Soprano solo, Linda di Chamounix.....Donizetti
Miss Blanche Duffield.
Serenade, Rococo.....Meyer-Helmund
March, The Invincible Eagle (new).....Sousa
American Fantaisie.....Herbert

As usual, the audience was insistent and greedy in the matter of encores, and Mr. Sousa was as obliging and amiable as ever. New York audiences never tire of the Sousa marches; they are like Oliver Twist, and always cry for more. Never was Sousa's Band in finer condition than it was Sunday night. Great brilliancy, animation and smoothness characterized the performance of every number. One of the pieces on the program was the Fourteenth Rhapsodie of Liszt. This, however, was omitted and a grand sacred potpourri substituted in its stead. One of the airs this arrangement was "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Before this sacred number was played Mr. Sousa doffed his garb of white and donned a suit of sombre black, and his manner of conducting underwent a complete change. It was a serious performance, and its spirit was entered into by the vast audience. The soloists acquitted themselves with credit.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA.

ON THE OCEAN.

By the time that this number of THE MUSICAL COURIER is in the hands of its readers John Philip Sousa and his band will be on the water bound for England. This morning at 10 o'clock they will sail for Liverpool on the St. Louis. A large crowd of Mr. Sousa's friends will be at the wharf to witness the vessel's departure.

George Frederick Hinton, of the executive staff, who is now in England, soon will be joined by his colleague, Frank Christianer, who arranged the tour through England, Scotland and Ireland. Mr. Christianer, than whom there is not a more successful "route maker" in this country, has been identified with Sousa's Band since that organization was formed. He was a close, trusted friend of David Blakely, and Mr Sousa holds him in the same esteem.

FRANK CHRISTIANER.

Maud Reese-Davies, the soprano, who toured with Sousa's Band through the United States several years ago, will go abroad early in October, and will be one of the soloists who will travel with the band on its provincial tour. Miss Dorothy Hoyle, the violinist, who also traveled with the band a few seasons ago, and who is now in London, has also been engaged for the tour through Great Britain.

The program, which already has been published in THE MUSICAL COURIER, will be carried out. A few days before Christmas Sousa and his men will return home and will give a concert in the Metropolitan Opera House.

Miss Minnie Tracey will be the soprano soloist at the Sousa concerts in London.

A British Welcome.

Speaking of Sousa's visit to England Herman Klein contributed the following to the London Sunday Times of recent date:

One of the most interesting events of the autumn season will be the visit, for the first time to this country, of Sousa's Band. I regard this as a "musical event" in the fullest sense of the term; for if ever there was an organization that embodied unique features of artistic eclecticism, having for their basis supreme excellence of material and perfection of ensemble, that organization is the far-famed band trained and conducted by John Philip Sousa. To most people in these isles Sousa is only known as the "March King"—the man who wrote "The Washington Post"—the composer of "El Capitan." That, truly, is a good record enough. Yet in America it counts for no more than half the pedestal upon which his reputation rests. There, in his own land, where his countrymen worship and adore him, they will tell you that they don't know whether it delights them most to hear his music or his band. The only point in this connection upon which they are absolutely certain is that the combination of the two is the finest thing of its kind in the world. In point of fact, Sousa playing "Sousa" can "lick creation."

I first heard Sousa's Band in Brooklyn between five and six years ago. I shall never forget the impression created at the outset by the beauty of the tone. It was at once rich, pure, mellow and musical; never strident or noisy in its fortissimos, always exquisitely balanced and true in its most delicate pianissimos. Difficult, indeed, would it be to name a brass or military band that can approach Sousa's in the mere matter of calibre. But its superiority does not end here, any more than its executive merit achieves the superlative in Sousa's music alone. And for an excellent reason. This gifted writer of march tunes is not only an accomplished musician, but a very remarkable conductor. A master of the technicalities of his art, and possessing a rare talent for orchestration, he knows how to obtain the most subtle effects of contrast and the finest of nuances, whether the score before him belong to the "classical," the operatic, the sacred, or the miscellaneous order. His control over his men is marvelous; his capacity for inspiring them unlimited. Conductors who are fond of swinging their arms round like windmills should watch Sousa when he comes here, and observe what he can make his fifty-five men do by dint of an infinitesimal move of the baton, a tiny jerk of the wrist or elbow, a quiet nod of the head, or even possibly a gentle lifting of the eyebrow. The apparent ease of the whole thing, thanks to its perfection of method and discipline, renders it simply delightful.

According to the New York MUSICAL COURIER, Mr. Sousa is eagerly looking forward to his forthcoming tour; "he has long had a desire to show the music lovers of Great Britain what his band can do." He will sail with his men for Liverpool on the 25th inst.; and the opening London concerts are to take place at the Albert Hall on Friday, October 4, and the following evening. Then comes the four weeks' engagement at the Glasgow Exhibition, at the conclusion of which the band starts upon a provincial tour lasting until shortly before Christmas. After a return visit to London en route, they will set sail for home, arriving in New York toward the end of December. THE COURIER states that the tour will be under the management of a syndicate organized expressly for the purpose of "exploiting" Sousa and his band in Great Britain. It is backed by an abundance of money, and it guarantees Mr. Sousa a certain sum for every concert. He assumes no risk whatever. By the way, his latest march, "The Invincible Eagle," is a figure in every program. This march, Mr. Sousa believes, is "destined to prove the most popular that he ever wrote. Its record thus far eclipses any of its predecessors and the sale has been unprecedented." So please prepare to receive "The Invincible Eagle."

JESSIE SHAY TO PLAY WITH PAUR.—Miss Jessie Shay will play with the Paur Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on November 18. She has an important date before that, playing in Philadelphia on October 9. She will play in Pittsburg with the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra on November 22 and 23.

DEATH OF A DEVOTED MUSIC LOVER.—Miss Ruth Charlotte Dana, who died at the Hotel Thorndyke, in Boston, on Monday, was from her early youth in music. She did much to advance the art in her vicinity. Miss Dana was the daughter of the late Richard Dana, a poet, and one of the founders of the North American Review. She was born in Cambridge.

JEAN GERARDY
December, 1901, to May, 1902.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau,
131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

SARA ANDERSON,
SOPRANO
JOSEPH BAERNSTEIN,
BASSO
Exclusive Management: WILLIAM FISHER, "The Monterey," 351 West 114th St., New York.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: The Hetherington, 571 Park Ave., New York.

REBECCA HOLMES
VIOLINISTE.
ADDRESS:
32 West 40th Street, NEW YORK.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER.
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., September 19, 1901.

TO-DAY all the churches in the city held memorial services over the body of President McKinley, now placed in a vault in his home city, Canton, Ohio. A pall of gloom still hangs deeply over every heart in the city, and the music given in the churches partook of the nature of a wail of grief, a sorrow too deep to be comforted.

September 16 Clifford Reid Cobb, of Geneseo, N. Y., gave an organ recital at the Temple. Among a legitimate organ program appeared one, "In the Morning," from the "Peer Gynt" Suite, arranged for the organ by Francis York, which seemed to please the audience best.

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT.

Tuesday, September 17, was G. A. R. Day. The musical program was under the direction of George Whelpton. Soloists consisted of Mrs. Eleanor Baum-Shaw, soprano; Frederick Hicks, tenor; A. C. Adams, baritone; James T. Nimo, bass, and a chorus of thirty-five voices. Both speeches and music will long be remembered, partaking more of the character of memorial services than a G. A. R. camp fire.

Mrs. Anna Groff-Bryant is the wife of Chauncey Earl Bryant, the tenor soloist of St. Paul's Universalist Church, of Chicago. She is the contralto of the same church, a concert singer of high repute, and is in constant demand for song recitals and oratorios. She is a painstaking student for the advancement of the art, and is thoroughly progressive in her ideas. She has shown herself possessed of uncommon abilities of voice placing and especially in correcting faulty tone production and unevenness in register. The success of her pupils is ample evidence of her work done in her studio, many of them holding important church positions and in two instances the entire quartet is made up exclusively of her pupils. A bright example is Mrs. Haughey, soprano of the Lafayette Church choir, Buffalo, who has been engaged by the Evanston Club, Chicago, to sing the soprano solo part of "The Messiah" in the near future. At the organ recital given by John Wyckoff Durham, Mrs. Groff-Bryant sang "The Lord Is Mindful of His Own," J. Rheinberger, with an intensity of feeling and fine shading that carried away the audience. Continued applause induced her to repeat it.

THOMAS RADCLIFFE.

Thomas Radcliffe, of Salt Lake City, gave two organ recitals at the Temple of Music September 17 and 18. His program was admirably selected. Mr. Radcliffe is a master of the instrument, one of the best we have had this season. His command of all the resources of an organ, the beautiful coloring he gives in all his combinations of stops, reflects the greatest credit upon him. The Lemare Andantino, one of the numbers given as an encore, and "Schillers March," Meyerbeer, won especial approval with the audience.

EMMA L. MAYNARD.

Mr. Radcliffe studied in London and Liverpool under Henry Smart, W. J. Best, John Richardson Thalberg and Charles Halle. He made a distinct reputation before coming to America. Twenty-four years ago he conducted "The Messiah" in St. George's Hall, Liverpool with a chorus of 400 voices. He was sent by the Utah commissioners as concert organist to the World's Fair at Chicago. He has been the organist at the First Congregational Church, Salt Lake City, since 1880. The society gave him a reception, purse and vacation last summer.

Miss Emma L. Maynard, the blind organist, who gave two recitals on the great organ in the Temple of Music at the Exposition, August 21 and 22, was born in Waterloo, Ia., and during her babyhood an impairment of her sight was noticed. At three she played on the piano by ear, and would often steal away around a block to

MARY LOUISE CLARY
CONTRALTO.
ADDRESS: REMINGTON SQUIRE, Manager, 125 East 24th Street, New York.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA
Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.
Re-engaged for New England Festival
(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).
Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.
Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.
Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

neighbor to play her favorite instrument. At seven she begun her musical studies and entered the public schools. Her father assisted her by painting the musical staff on a blackboard, and with crayon copied the exercises assigned by her teacher. From this time she made rapid progress and showed remarkable ability in memorizing. Her mother assisted her much in her general education, and at fifteen she was able to enter high school. In 1889 she entered the State School for the Blind, at Batavia, N. Y., taking the prescribed course in music and literary work. She made remarkable progress in the study of the organ, and often delighted the public with choice numbers at commencement exercises and on other occasions. After her graduation in 1892, Miss Maynard became organist at the Emanuel Baptist Church, Buffalo, N. Y., until 1900, when she accepted a position as director of music at the State School for the Blind, at Gary, S. Dak., where she has gained signal success.

Her organ recitals were a decided success, and the audience did not know which to admire most, Miss Maynard's fine reading of her selections or the phenomenal memory which she possesses. The intricacies of the immense organ puzzle many of the organists who can see, but Miss Maynard's knowledge and intuition must be much above the ordinary to produce the music she gave in such a masterly fashion, and her selections were by no means of the lighter kind. All of her numbers showed the careful training of her teacher, Mr. Kaffenberger.

MRS. K. RIESBERG.

Johnston's New Offices.

R. E. Johnston, the impresario, will open his new offices, room 930, St. James' Building, Broadway and Twenty-sixth street, on October 1.

Gregory Hast.

MOST recent among the important bookings for Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor whom Manager Charlton will introduce to the American concert stage this season, are engagements to sing "The Messiah" with the Mozart Club, of Pittsburg, and as soloist with the Apollo Club of St. Louis, and the Chromatic Club of Troy. Mr. Hast is as celebrated for his ballad interpretation as for his oratorio work. Here is a notice that appeared in the London Daily Telegraph, after a recent ballad concert at St. James' Hall:

Mr. Hast is one of the few singers who can take a quaint old folksong, and, while preserving all its native simplicity, can idealize into a work of art. He did so with the old Sussex folksong, "The Week Before Easter." A higher flight still was taken in "How deep the Slumber of the Floods." One of Mr. Hast's gifts is that of achieving intensity without volume of tone. With never a touch of exaggeration, he can breathe a world of intensity into a whisper. Here his whispered ejaculation, "How Deep the Slumber of the Floods," had a profundity of meaning. In its subdued, polished phrases, the song was a masterpiece of simple but fervent feeling, while the manner in which the voice lingered on the closing words, "My Soul Shall Find Repose," and finally melted away into silence, was exquisite. Another gem of unaffected pathos was the encore song. The closing words were a triumph. They were just "O, Mary, Dear, that You Were Here," into which Mr. Hast breathed an infinitude of heartfelt yearning and pathos, governed by a sweet, mellowed spirit of resignation.

BUFFALO MUSIC.

BUFFALO, September 13, 1901.

AS refreshing as a summer's day in the country, listening to the babbling of a brook, the rustling of the leaves and the singing of the birds, after the noise and rush of a great city, was the music of the singers of Westminster Abbey choir after so much Wagnerian, Italian and French music.

It is superfluous to mention the faultless ensemble or the artistic reading of the solos and the enunciation of each, and nothing could be more restful than the old English ballads so beautifully given.

Although the tenor and baritone voices were most gratifying, the boy sopranos and the alto voices (which are now peculiar to English cathedral choirs) charmed the audience the most.

The people showed their appreciation by encoring nearly every number, and the choir was generous enough to always respond.

Buffalo is very proud to be the city of the United States to be favored by two concerts from the Westminster Abbey choir.

September 1 the Royal Bavarian Infantry Band, Jacob Peuppus director, assisted by the Koeningsee Upper Bavarian singing peasant troupe, gave a pleasing concert at the Teck Theatre.

The band is magnificent. Although containing more brass in proportion to the other instruments than most of our American concert bands, the tones are always mellow and rich and the effect most satisfactory. Herr Peuppus is musicianly and magnetic and his men respond instantly. The singing of the peasant troupe was a novelty and gave variety to the delightful concert.

The third of the series of popular Sunday night concerts by the Buffalo Orchestra, conducted by Joseph Hartfuer, was given at the Teck this week. The orchestra was in good form and pleased a large audience with a popular program. Mrs. Howard Humphrey, soprano soloist, has a voice of wide range and pleasing qualities.

Henry Stewart Hendy, organist at St. Mary's-on-the-Hill, gave a recital on the handsome new organ which has just been placed in the church Thursday evening of last week, in a masterly way.

A special musical service was held in the Emmanuel Baptist Church, Rhode Island street and Normal avenue, Sunday. The choir of thirty voices, under direction of J. F. Thomas, was assisted by Miss Blanch Fisher and Mrs. E. Whitcomb, contraltos; Mrs. F. B. Knapp, soprano; H. H. Work, tenor, and Mr. Townsend, basso Miss Ruby Belle Nason at the piano and Mrs. McTaggert, organist.

Some little time ago, but since the last letter regarding musical items of the city, the United Polish Singers of America gave their annual concert here. This is similar to the Saengerfest, only on a smaller scale, as the chorus numbered but 500 voices. The great assemblage of Polish people was most enthusiastic over the work of the chorus.

Mme. Rosa Kwasigroch, of Chicago, the greatest Polish soprano in America, won all hearts by her magnificent voice.

Madame Kwasigroch gave superb readings of a solo from the opera, "Maribar," and polonaise from "Mignon." George W. Karpus, tenor of Bay City, received an ovation at the close of his solo, "Alicia."

Mme. Antoinette Zaremba, soprano; S. Musial, tenor, and T. D. Liemiszewski, bass, were all warmly received as soloists and did excellent work.

The concert was one of the best ever given in the history of the organization.

The convention lasted for three days.

N. G.

BIRDICE BLYE MARRIED.—Miss Birdice Blye, the pianist, was married to Dr. W. B. S. Richardson, a physician of Chicago, Wednesday, September 18. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Cheney, a friend of the bride since childhood.

The bride is well known in both musical and social circles in New York city, where her charming personality and rare accomplishments have made her a favorite. She has spent much of her life abroad, and has been highly educated in the principal capitals of Europe. She studied music with the celebrated masters, and was the favorite pupil of Anton Rubinstein. His prophecies for a brilliant artistic career have been fully verified by her successes in Dresden, Berlin, Vienna, Paris, London and other great musical centres of the Old World, as well as in our principal Eastern cities. Dr. Richardson is well known in literary and artistic circles. He is a graduate of Montreal University, and studied medicine in the leading clinics of Europe. He is known as one of the most skillful specialists in Chicago.

THE VIRGIL PIANO SCHOOL.—Another season has begun at this busy school, which, from all indications, will prove an increase over any previous year. The exceptional progress made by a large number of pupils last season and the thorough and satisfactory work in preparing teachers to teach are undoubtedly the underlying cause of Mrs. Virgil's success in conducting her school. All the "old favorites" (or we might say "young favorites") are back again, with a determination to excel their former accomplishments. Miss Florence Traub, Miss Bessie Benson, Miss Marjorie Parker, Miss Laura Race, little Isabel Tracy, Jennie Quinn, Adele Katz, Wilbur Sanford Blakeslee, Master Miner Walden Gallup, Master Hans Barth Bergman are among the number. Little Beatrice Pollak has not yet returned to the city. Thursday evening will be recital night at the school this year, instead of Wednesday evening as heretofore. The public is invited to attend both this recital and the Friday afternoon recital played by the children at 4:15 p. m.

MME. KATHARINE FISK

FOREMOST CONTRALTO IN AMERICA,

WITH RECORD OF BRILLIANT EUROPEAN TRIUMPHS.

Transcontinental Recital Tour, Season 1901-1902.

ORATORIO, FESTIVAL AND

CONCERT DATES NOW BOOKING.

"Everywhere she appears the judgment is the same; unstinted praise for her rich, beautiful voice, dramatic intensity, vocal art and musical intelligence."—PHILIP HALE in Musical Record.

Sole Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

WHITNEY TEW

In America
November and
December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

The Stage—"Mr. Whitney Tew proved himself a singer of excellent capabilities. His voice, which is a bass of great compass, is delightfully sympathetic—now full of tenderness, now instinct with passion and joy. He could not have been surpassed in his rendering of Schumann's 'Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn' and Liza Lehmann's curiously weird 'Myself when Young.'"—July 4, 1901.

London Musical Courier—"Mr. Whitney Tew's singing was marked by a high order of intelligence. He is one of the few singers now before the public who possesses the many qualifications that mean success. Besides a voice powerful and sympathetic he has a remarkable memory, and he never fails to display an intuitive knowledge of the poetic and dramatic significance of the text. In four songs by Bach, Brahms, Schubert and Schumann he exhibited great powers of vocalization and expression, and a style in singing German so thoroughly Teutonic that it was hard at times to realize his American origin . . . Three songs in English were equally impressive."—July 5, 1901.

Ladies' Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals in Steinway Hall. Madame Lehmann's 'In Memoriam' was a great test of Mr. Tew's manner and inflection, and he sustained the interest of his audience well throughout it; and it is a supremely hard work for a single voice—fragmentary, passionate, moody, with its pedal-note of acute sorrow. . . . Mr. Tew is fortunate in possessing a powerful voice of fine quality, and he has both the voice and brains for success."—May 25, 1901.

Daily Telegraph—"Mr. Tew is an artist who commands attention and deserves praise Especially has he the gift of feeling and the power of conveying it to others, while in point of intelligence he leaves but little to desire. Mr. Tew essayed last evening songs of widely contrasting kinds and of various countries, but the manner and spirit proper to each were easily revealed, and the result was a conspicuous success."—May 23, 1901.

Sole Representative:

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

Greater New York.

NEW YORK, September 23, 1901.

INVITATIONS to a "Harvest Festival" at the home of William H. Barber (the old Barclay Mansion) at Astoria, L. I., were received by the favored few early last week, and in ready response to this your Gossiper began the fall campaign by a most willing acceptance, knowing by experience that there was sure to be something sui generis. Arrived at the ferry an old-fashioned 'bus met us, transferring to the Barber home, where on the lawn back of the house there was a make-believe gypsy camp, with kettle a-boiling, long-haired maidens about, telling fortunes, &c. On the rear porch a harp and violin made pretty music, and about dusk everyone went to the music room, where Professor Schradieck, violin, and Mr. Barber played some Hungarian Gypsy music by Vieuxtemps. Then the ever-present Thiers sang the Von Fielitz song cycle, "Eliland," followed by a bountiful supper. Then came the play in one act, two scenes, which interested all, followed by the dance in the barn. The whole affair was picturesque and original in high degree, evidently enjoyed as much by the two small Barber girls, and the "augmented third," the baby boy Barber, as by the guests, of whom there were half a hundred. Among those present were Professor Schradieck and family, Dr. Hatch, A. Gerard-Thiers, Miss Estelle Harris and a large social contingent from Manhattan and elsewhere.

Edwin Lockhart, the baritone soloist at Holy Trinity Church, Harlem, returns ready for concert work and teaching. He gave a concert at Sound Beach, and meeting Mrs. Cummings, wife of the mayor of Stamford, Conn., later sang aboard their elegant yacht. He also sang twice at Oceanic, and was the regular baritone of the choir at Russell Sage's church at Far Rockaway, as well as teaching quite a large summer class. He also spent a week at Lake Mohonk and in the mountains. He is planning a concert at Carnegie Lyceum the latter part of November. Mr. Lockhart's method of placing and developing the voice insures rich, round, sweet and resonant tones, free from the great muscular effort so painfully apparent in many singers. The utmost care is taken to eliminate defects and to develop and cultivate a perfect quality of voice. Much attention is paid to the cultivation of a strong physique (well developed lungs and high chest), and a set of unique and complete, though simple, exercises are given to gain this end. Distinct enunciation, correct phrasing and artistic tone coloring are dealt with in an intelligent and finished manner. Mr. Lockhart will be glad to explain personally more fully his method of teaching.

Miss Clara Kalischer, now located in the Van Dyck studio building, is well known because of her tour with Nevada, when she won many new admirers. She sang for me the Granier "Hosanna," displaying a beautiful mezzo-contralto voice of unusual range, coupled with much temperament. As she has had experience before large audiences and is a young woman of personality and poise, she would be an acquisition for some church.

Joseph Pizarello has removed his studio to Carnegie Hall, having there two rooms. Mr. Pizarello has made voice production a specialty and some of the best-known singers in the land are now sudying with him. He himself has developed a fine tenor voice, and as he has already made a reputation as concert pianist, his musicianship is unquestioned.

Miss H. Estelle Woodruff had charge as usual of the music at Round Lake the past summer, giving a large variety of music. She had a good chorus, giving parts of the "Stabat Mater," and it was repeatedly stated that the music was this year the best of any year. Her specialty is sight reading for singers and the second edition of her "Comprehensive Music Course" is just out. She gives class and private lessons and told me of some unique experiences with pupils and of her methods in making them learn to read and to read with others at the same time in duets, trios and quartets.

Miss Anna Plum, Rafaello La Marca's pupil, is in New York, and it is to be hoped the brilliant dramatic soprano will find a place worthy her abilities. Having studied in Italy seven years, with some years of stage experience, she is miles ahead of the average American singing girl. Endowed with a fine voice, this Milwaukee girl studied carefully and enthusiastically, and declares that of all her teachers, La Marca, now here, is the best. He has several pupils who are taking principal parts in the current operatic productions, having through him advanced from the chorus.

Arthur Voorhis, the pianist and organist, has removed his studio to 80 East Washington Square. Voorhis gave some enjoyable recitals in old Chickering Hall and his appearance as soloist at the Kaltenborn concerts the past summer will be remembered. He also organized and played with them a chamber music concert at Jersey City last season and the probable outcome of this will be a series of subscription musicales in that city.

Samuel Bowden Moyle starts his fall season with an unusually full class. Last season he had many pupils from far away, the South, California, &c., teaching until the warm weather, when he hied himself to a Connecticut resort, some pupils going to him there as well. Among his most promising pupils was the Rev. Walter Lowrie, the assistant pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, who was drowned at Newport hardly a month ago. Clergymen's voices, and the troubles many have with them, is a specialty with Mr. Moyle. Mr. Moyle's double quartet, the Folk-song Club, mixed voices, had some nice appearances last season, such as the Scotch Club, at Montclair; at the well-known sculptor, French's, and elsewhere. At Montclair the Outlook Club had them for an evening, and the local daily next day said:

"They gave a selection of part songs, in English, French, Italian and German, as well as solos. The excellent training showed in their unanimity of articulation, force, expression, and perhaps as much as in anything in their sustained correct pitch, which in unaccompanied singing is apt to fall. The voices blended sweetly, and the quaint old songs were rendered with taste and fine effect. The best thing of the evening was the setting of Kingsley's 'Sands o' Dee,' which was redemanded. The evening was an exceedingly enjoyable one."

The Wirtz Piano School has begun the fall term with increased attendance, Mr. Wirtz having associated with him Mrs. Conrad Wirtz and Gustave C. Wirtz. The excellent showing made by this school in their May concert will not soon be forgotten, when young people of all sizes and ages participated. There is thorough instruction at all stages, systematized care bestowed on the needs of each pupil, and the result is the turning out of excellent pianists, who understand what they play. The Wirtz Piano School is devoted entirely to the study of piano playing, from the beginning to the highest degree of finished performance. The school is centrally located at 120 West 124th street, and is equipped with the best modern facilities. The lower floor is arranged for recitals, with a stage and ample seating capacity. The upper floors are given over to class, teaching and practice rooms, which are furnished with first-class pianos, practice claviers, metronomes and every appliance for the thorough study of piano playing.

Baritone Percy Hemus has resumed his activity as soloist at St. Patrick's Cathedral, singing frequently also in the evening at Grace M. E. Church, Miss Kate Stella Burr, organist-director, and will this season be heard more frequently than ever in concert. His record of undiminished successes on his every appearance, both here and at Asheville, N. C., where he sang at the five concerts of the summer school, is one of which he may well be proud. He is a reliable, sterling artist, sure of his future.

Mail for Artists.

Mail matter addressed to the following is at THE MUSICAL COURIER office:

Eugenie Rice.
Charles Rice.
Francis Stewart.
Miss Clara L. Kellogg.
S. P. Warren.
Emil Fischer.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taithout.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

JOSEPH JOACHIM SCHOOL.
STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.
GERALDINE MORGAN, Director.
Orchestral and 'Cello Department, Paul Morgan.
115 CARNEGIE HALL, New York.

SHANNA CUMMING,
SOPRANO.
1424 Pacific Street, Brooklyn.
Telephone 906A, Bedford.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU.

MR EVERETT E. TRUETTE,
Organ, Harmony and Piano.
Large three manual organ in studio.
218 Tremont Street, Boston.

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 141-143 Fifth Avenue, New York.

McCALL LANHAM
BARITONE.
OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS.
Opera, Concerts and Oratorio.
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Care AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUSIC
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAGO

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER,
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC

UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 14. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1123.

Photo by Marceau, New York.

IRENE BRIGGS

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Head of Vocal Department "The American Institute of Applied Music," 212 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York. Permanent Studio. Also CONCERTS and RECITALS.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Concerts, Recitals, Oratorio.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL,

201 West 81st Street, New York.
LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS, concert pianist and teacher of piano and theory, director. Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. M. Virgil; certified teacher of the Virgil Clavier Method of Technic. Private and daily class instruction.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: "The Montevideo, 7th Ave., near 54th St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing.
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall.
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall,
New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: Room 1201, Carnegie Hall, New York.
Telephone: 1351 Columbus.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 206 West Eighty-sixth Street, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH,

Virgil Method. Pupils in Piano and Harmony. Six years instructor at the Virgil Piano School. Pupil of Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. Classes in Sight Reading, Ear Training and Time Keeping. Studio: 132-133 Carnegie Hall, city.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA. OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
851-852 Carnegie Hall.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
172 West 79th Street, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue. New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

VOCAL CULTURE, TONE EMISSION, VOICE BUILDING, STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH.
128 East 64th St., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
80 Washington Square East, New York.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

Pianist.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method.
Studios: 1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

MRS. M. PRICE, Director, 2105 Seventh Ave. corner 125th Street. Special daily class. The only one in New York where the pupil has a lesson and practice every day under the care of competent teachers. Terms reasonable. Virgil Clavier used.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Illustrated Lectures on Music.
Private instruction Classes in music-study.
Residence-studio: 17 West 103d Street, New York.

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director.
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

MR. & MRS. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "New Method of Memorizing." 141 Fifth Ave., New York.

MUNICH THE ARTISTIC.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901

II.

I SUPPOSE critics of all varieties consider it their bounden duty to lecture their subjects. Therefore please do not take too literally my remark last week about Edvard Munch and the forthcoming sanity of his art. A man's best work is usually accomplished when he is laboring under great stress, emotional excitement of some sort. It may not be quite sane—it will probably lack balance, repose, breadth, all the qualities we call classical. But what fire, what speed, what unconfined rapture here is in an art born of overpowering impulse! The poet sings, the painter paints, the musician composes in a species of frenzy regardless of the lengths their passion may lead them. It is art that strikes out the sparks in the brains of the audience, a thrill is created, and if it does not long endure its intensity compensates for its brevity.

So to tell Munch or any artist that his creations would be improved if such and such elements were eliminated is to find fault with them for the quality that makes their work individual. Munch is Munch, and Stuck is Stuck. They might have been born someone else, but they were not, so let us rejoice. I know that in bracketing the two names I may be accused of lacking in critical discrimination, for their work is poles apart. I only selected their names as typical instances. Stuck is the master craftsman of the two—a great composer of beautiful, wild things, and a colorist—above all else a colorist. Munch is a psychologist who discerns the unfamiliar in the familiar, and he does this avowedly, employing none of the machinery dear to lovers of the supernatural in art. For instance, I went the other afternoon to get some coffee in the Café Luitpold. It was twilight, and outside the rain fell, dreary and upright. It was too early to light the huge dome, so I saw as I entered faces with pallid dabs of fading daylight in them. They belonged for the most part to honest Munich burghers, but in the yellow and dusking atmosphere there was something unreal, unearthly. It gave me a chill, and I was glad to see the pretty waiter girl, with her mundane smirk and familiar coffee pot. Now, there was a picture for Munch, or the subject of a poem for Lingwood Evans. The Norwegian surprises the quotidian; he catches for us glimpses of nature's alchemical processes; his rocks and sea-wood are real, yet unlike any other painter's. The note of individuality sings through all his canvases, and he is Edvard Munch, and some day he may be better known and understood.

To show in what scorn he is held here I need only tell you that when I tried to buy some of his reproductions I was repulsed by an art dealer. "Abscheulich!" he exclaimed; "no one wants a Munch!" When I attempted to explain that I did not come to him for his art criticism, valuable as it might be, I was bowed out of the shop. Eventually I bought an original at Littauer's, on the Odeonplatz. It is called "Les Curieuses." I hope to reproduce it some day, and if I do you must promise to sit still and not scream any more than you can help, for scream you must.

And now to the healthy men of pencil and palette. Wandering through the Glass Palace I found much to admire. Besides the Böcklin collection there were special collections of Nicolaus Gysis and Wilhelm Leibl. The former was a Greek, a man of native fancy and technical skill. The room devoted to his work is a charmingly devised one, containing a window which recalls a scene in Hans Sachs' Nuremberg workshop. Among many other things there is a "Harmonie," a plakat for Ibach & Son, the Barmen piano manufacturers. It is prettily devised. I did not spend as much time in the Leibl collection as I should have done. In the Belgian section I saw a strong bit of painting by Albert Baertsoen, of Ghent—a transport boat snowed under in a Ghent canal. Karl Böhme, Albert Ciamberlani, Gustave Courtois, Dagnan Bouveret and André Dauchez are all well represented. Dinet's "Arabian Legend," in the French section, is beautifully painted. In the "Secession" Fritz Erler's "Einsamer Mann" in tempera showed an imagination guided, perhaps, by Ibsen, Nietzsche and Hauptmann. In Munich a man translates to canvas his philosophies as well as his æsthetics. The variety of themes show this. There is less painting for the sake of paint than in Paris, though virtuosity is not absent. Oddly enough, Fortuny and Madrazo influences are strong. Hierl-Deronco's "Auf dem theater" attracts attention, as does Hermann Kaulbach's "Verwaiste Herzen." There is also a tendency toward mystical subjects, such as Albert v. Keller's "Eve" and his "Vision of a Stigmatic," a theme elsewhere wonderfully treated by Gabriel Max in his "Katherine Emmerich," the visionary who during her life witnessed the passion and sufferings of Christ. Grieg accompanying his wife at the piano is the theme of a painting by P. S. Kröyer, of Copenhagen.

In the Hungarian section the work of László is always surrounded by an audience. I took more solid pleasure in the Lenbach room. Some of the portraiture is wonderful, though the brush work is not so square, so solid as in the Bismarck, Piloty and Pope Leo portraits. Lenbach's female heads are full of exquisite charm, delicate color and workmanship. The Miquel portrait is a return to an earlier manner. This statesman only died last week. I found in the Swedish, Danish and Norwegian galleries much of the morbid extravagance of Munch. Scandinavian sunsets must be extraordinary affairs if these pictures are faithful transcriptions. A moonlight by Alexander Marcette, of Brussels, is worthy of mention, while for René Mesnard's landscape with a herd of cattle I can confess gasping admiration. This French painter has studied Troyon, Millet, Daubigny, Corot and Diaz with equal partiality, and the synthesis is extremely agreeable. Puvis de Chavannes is represented, as is Besnard, the latter by a brilliant female figure executed with consummate virtuosity. A painter named Edvard Rosenberg, of Stockholm, attempts the impossible in a starry night scene, as black as your hat, yet alive with night winds and crisp stars. Anders Zorn has two of his uncompromising portraits, one of Prince Karl of Sweden, the other of a mother. I was profoundly impressed by the work of Leo Samberger, of Munich. His head of the sculptor Drumm puts him in the Lenbach class. Samberger not only paints, but he characterizes. There are five Segantinis here, all excellent specimens. Otto Sinding, of Christiania, and Sisley, of Paris, should be seen, and there is an odd night-scape by Gudmund Stenersen, of Christiania, called "Johannisnacht." It depicts a man playing the 'cello under the stars. That clever chap Jean Veber, who writes almost as well as he paints, has two extravagances, full of mad color and odd conceits. You see I am only jotting down what I liked, irrespective of academic or indeed of critical formulas. But the Whistler, the beautiful head in rose and gold called "The Little Lady Sophie of Soho"! After wondering if any one alive could paint like "Jimmy" I reached the sage conclusion that Whistler, like many a man before him, had gone to the masters—to Da Vinci, to Velasquez—for inspiration. This little lady folds her hands very much like "Lisa Giaconda," and there is in the entire composition—oh! its delicate transparencies, its life-like rhythms!—a shadow of the Mona Lisa. And Da Vinci is not hurt by such subtle flattery.

I shall not detain you much longer. In pastel I particularly admired the fantasy and skill of Julius Diez, who, like his namesake, almost, of Paris, has a marked color sense. His "Don Quixote" is the knight incarnate, and another pastel of his called "Spuk" is a ghastly bit of fooling. The Pasternak original drawings for Tolstoy's "Resurrection" are also here. I wrote of them when I reviewed the book. They betray much invention. Ruppreet's portraits in water color are all capital specimens. I saw the noble head of Turgenev, but cannot recall the name of the artist. Tolstoy, in blouse and bare feet, is in the Russian section. I enjoyed the Glasgow men better than the English painters. America was well to the fore. The portraits of Cosima and Siegfried Wagner, by Otto Greiner, are in lithograph.

In the sculpture section there is a finely conceived and executed figure of "Wotan," by Rudolph Maison. Theodor Lundberg's "Strand und Welle" shows Rodin's influence. There is also a strange figure by Del-Bò of a female that attracts attention. "The Wanderer," by Luksch, is another remarkably strong idea. Perhaps the most bizarre group in the collection is by Wilhelm Hejda, of Vienna. It is powerfully modeled, and represents Death carrying off the last child of mankind. The figure of the All-Conqueror, seated on a horse that wearily tramps over dimly seen figures in low relief, is a chilling one. The horse recalls the Stuck animal in "Krieg." In the background are men and women, old and young, frantically tugging at the shroud which trails from the shoulders of Death. As the horse moves so are they spinning their own shrouds—that seems to be the grim story told. I saw Milka Ternina before this group one day last week.

In the New Pinakothek many visits fail to yield up a tithe of its pictorial delights. The Lenbach heads of Pope Leo, Bismarck, Piloty; the two Stucks already referred to—"Sin" and "War"; the two Gabriel Maxs,' "Katharine Emmerich" and a comical group of monkeys; the Herterichs, Louis Herzog's "Mittagsglut"—this young painter is now in Philadelphia; the Meissonier, and that masterpiece of Arnold Böcklin's, "Das Spiel der Wellen"—here is food for weeks. Looking through my catalogue, with its penciled memoranda, I am terrified lest I be tempted to transcribe at length my impressions. THE MUSICAL COURIER would have to issue a special supplement if I did. The Makarts I liked, the Munkacsy I did not. The "Wallenstein," by Piloty, is worth all the monstrous Kaulbachs ever painted. There are miles of tiresome paintings of the Kaulbach order. His "Storming of Jerusalem" is a type of art that I loathe. Historical painters are almost as great bores as historical novelists. Menzel, Hartmann, Defregger, Papperitz—who knows his Henner; Hans Petersen, Piglhein, Räuber—"St. Hubert," George Sauter, Schuster-Woldan, Hans Thoma, Wenglein—these are men from whose work it is impossible to withhold the most generous admiration. They are painters, and they are also artists. Sometimes the two are widely divorced.

At the loan exhibition of master works of the Renaissance, in the Art Exhibition Building, every school is well represented. Florentine, Umbrian, Sienna, Ferrara, Milan, Italian of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, Bolognese, Spanish, Old Netherlands, French and Dutch schools are set forth by some glorious specimens. A noble Velasquez, the portrait of his wife, started my blood tingling, for here is the impossible rendered possible—a canvas upon which seemingly lives flesh and blood. Amberger's portrait of a young Fugger hangs just opposite Albrecht Dürer's great head of the famous old Jacob Fugger, the Rothschild of his times. I saw a Van den Neer moonlight, which I welcomed as the original of an engraving I possess executed by Le Bas. But, oh! the mellow splendor of the original! A Pieter de Hooch interior again recalled Hans Sachs' house. The Van Dycks are noble portraits, and Tizian's wicked head of King Francis I. of France is a miracle of portraiture. What eyes had these men of the Renaissance! They gaze at you steadily from across the centuries, a severe scrutiny expressed with unerring touch by the artists who so well interpreted them. I should like to have known the young woman painted by Lorenzo Costa. She must have been a strange, subtle creature.

Albert Dürer's portrait of a young man would have delighted Da Vinci, with its golden curls, its grave, sweet expression, its pious hands. But why wearily catalogue all the secrets of this treasure house on the Koenigsplatz! Hopeless, too, would it be to describe the Raphaels, Cranachs, Titians, Rembrandts, Holbeins, Dürers, Ostades, Teniers, Cuyps, Credis, Ruysdaëls, Botticellis, Wouvermans, Breughels, Rubens—all the masters in the collection of the Old Pinakothek. These pilgrimages cannot be lightly attempted. Months should be expended where only weeks were at my disposal.

After exploring the Glyptothek and falling in love with the Barberini Faun and the mask of Medusa, I felt that if health and sanity were to be preserved I must give my eyes a rest, so I made excursions in and around Munich—went up every day to feast my eyes on the Stuck villa, wandered on all sides of the River Isar—really, I couldn't tell you how many banks it has in Munich, it is so split up—dined, lunched and supped at every restaurant, café and brewery in the town. The drives are beautiful. You can go on the Theresien-Höhe and catch a bird's-eye view of the entire city, returning by way of the Hall of Fame and the colossal statue of Bavaria, overlooking a vast plain, upon which is annually held the great October fair. Again I must revert to the eating and drinking in Munich. There is nothing like it anywhere. You take coffee or tea and rolls in the morning. At 10:30, frühschoppen, beer and sausages. At noon or thereabouts a dinner is eaten which staggers belief. After that a walk or a nap, and at 5 coffee with cakes. If you go to the theatre or opera—and you usually do—you put off the supper hour with snacks of cold meat and beer between acts, very solid snacks, and later a big supper, with wine, beer and all sorts of things. It is then time to go to bed, and perchance to dreams. How any serious artistic work is accomplished with such a régime is a mystery. My theory is that the celebrated painters and sculptors here did their best work when they were young and starving. The consequences of this over-feeding are to be seen in the gross figures, red faces—especially red are the noses—and rapid maturing of the women. A slim, pretty girl gets married. In a year she waddles because of the heavy food. This gluttony, I am told by obese apologists, is because of the enervating climate. To properly live in Munich you must eat and drink frequently, else you will become sick. I don't believe this.

I spent a day on the Chiemsee, the picturesque lake upon whose borders Ludwig II. built his castle in 1878-85. You go by rail to Prien, take a narrow gauge road to Stock, a few minutes further on, and then sail up the lake on a noisy, puffing, little paddle-wheel steamboat to Herren Insel. Upon this wooded island stands the palace. It is a monstrous debauch in gold, containing the most villainous collection of gimcracks and fribbles I have ever seen under one roof. Ludwig must have seen everything yellow, for the palace is a nightmare in gilt, gold, gilded bronze, wood, brass, marble, stone and tapestries. The waste of money must have been tremendous. There are imposing enough staircases, salles and chambers; but the eternal monotony of the gold and brass, the Nile frescoes executed by a half dozen Munich professors—fresco painting in Munich sets on edge the teeth because of its raw enharmonics in color—kill all suggestion of dignity, of imperial space. In company with a lot of unfortunates I was marched from room to room, the cicerone pointing out to the awe-struck Germans of our party the bed, the chair, the bath wherein the royal body slept, sat and disported itself. The Germans, who are more hopelessly snobbish than the English, or even the Americans, simply kneel before royalty or its stuffed effigy. A photograph of a royal somebody will gather a bigger crowd in Munich than a dog fight in Frankfort, Pa. So the grunts and moans of admiration as each salle, crowded with evidences of Ludwig's shallow artistic taste, was reached got upon my nerves, and I longed for the open air. But the guide is a fanatic in this Schloss. He insists on showing you every button, every bit of brocade, every atom of royal furniture. The bed of his crazyship did not appeal to me, though a huge case for musical instruments, with a mother-of-pearl door, did. The "Galerie de Glaces," 24 feet long, with its colonnades of colossal candelabras, crystal chandeliers, marble busts and mirrors reminded me more of a showroom in a New York gas fixture establishment than of Domitian's Hall. Ludwig tried hard to imitate that depraved Roman emperor; so this gallery, with its couches placed suggestively in front of the mirrors, plainly told its tale. Louis XIV., the Grand Monarch, was another of Ludwig's objects of adoration. All the absurd extravagance was prompted by a desire to emulate the French king. In one room the poor deluded Bavarian royal one was able to see his own image indefinitely multiplied by cunning and cruel mirrors. No wonder the man went mad. His image went to bed with him, arose with him and dogged him high and low all day long. Whichever he went he saw multiplications of Ludwig Wittelsbach. Can you fancy a worse hell on earth than this?

Following the instruction of a skinny wretch who lives in New York, and whose neck I'll wring on my return, I fled from Herren Insel after admiring briefly the view over the terraced Italian garden in front of the palace. I took the boat to Frauen Insel, a tiny and pretty island not far from the palace. There you find, quoth my informant before I left home, good food, a quaint old church, and a picturesque entourage. I found everything but the food, and feeling famished after all the mock Renaissance glitter of the Schloss, I vainly besought the host for something to eat. But it was 4 o'clock. All good Germans dine at 12, and coffee at 4, therefore my request was viewed with suspicion. I didn't waste much time in parleying. The boat was putting off from the landing when a panting fat man reached the dock. A little thing like backing in did not worry the amiable captain, so I reached Prien in time to refresh myself and catch the express to Munich.

As Mozart operas are not being sung at the famous Residenz-Theater this month, I went there to see the second performance of Björnson's new play, "Laboremus," about which I wrote last month. I print the program as a matter of record:

K. RESIDENZ-THEATER.

MÜNCHEN, SONNTAG DEN 8. SEPTEMBER 1901. ZUM ERSTEN MALE WIEDERHOLT:

LABOREMUS.

DRAMA IN DREI AKTEN VON RJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSON.

LEITER DER AUFFÜHRUNG: HERR OBER-REGISSEUR SAVITS.

PERSONEN:

Wisby	Herr Schneider
Lydia	Fräulein Swoboda
Dr. Kann	Herr Suske
Langfred	Herr Lützenkirchen
Borgny	Fräulein Schneider
Hoteldiener	Herr Hildebrand
Französischer Diener	Herr Trautsch
Oberkellner	Herr Nachreiner
Englischer Herr	Herr Putscher
Englische Dame	Fräulein Kolbe

I found the book much duller than the play: but the high artistic quality of the performance, the technical smoothness, clarity of characterization, and exposition of its rather involved psychology made Björnson's ethical and æsthetic drama very interesting. As you may remember, Lydia, the pianist, poisons with her music the sick wife of a man who falls desperately in love with her. The piece resolves itself into a quartet, Dr. Kann being a sort of deus ex machina in the solving of difficulties. Unlike his distinguished countryman Ibsen, Björnson is not an individualist, not a Nietzschian. The whole point of the play is the deprecation of selfishness under the guise of brutal, brilliant talents. Lydia is a gifted girl, who almost ruins Wisby, taking him away from his family. She carries on an affair at a hotel with a young composer—all the characters are Norwegian—named Langfred, a nephew of Dr. Kann. This proves her undoing, for through the agency of a sweet, young thing dressed in white, and called Borgny, Lydia is discovered in her true likeness. The infatuated and rather lachrymose Langfred transfers his affections to Borgny, who turns out to be Wisby's deserted daughter. She forgives her father and revenges the memory of her mother before the curtain falls. The motivation is not very clear, and the author preaches, preaches unmistakably. His title shows which way the ethics blow. Because the composer does not labor therefore he is unhappy. I doubt if an English speaking audience would stand the story, commonplace as it is. The speeches in which Langfred exposes the psychology of a composer are excellently made, but are too full of æsthetics for the average audience. Langfred is composing an opera—"Undine." His rondo for piano is played with great success by Lydia—fancy a twentieth century musician making rondos!—but his well-spring of ideas is dried up. The scene in the second act where he explains this to the adventuress is dramatic. She tries to make him forget the woman of his imagination for the woman who lies on a couch before him. I can't conceive anyone playing this role more seducingly, more forcefully or with more triumphant brilliancy than does Frl. Swoboda, a handsome, supple creature. Lützenkirchen was the composer to the life. But virtue prevails, and the pianist, after telling the vacillating musician that he will never amount to much, is scared away by the vision of Borgny, the daughter of the woman she played to death. Lydia is right. She had my sympathy in the play, for Langfred would accomplish better work, even though it proved his ruin, with her than with the blonde and namby-pamby Borgny. One humorous thing I noticed. The author describes Borgny as a Norwegian girl who has traveled in America. That remarkable fact absolves from the petty conventions which forbid girls from visiting young men in their rooms! But the audience gravely accepted this fact. A trip to America must cover a multitude of eccentricities.

I also visited the Deutsches Theatre in the Schwanthaler-Passage, and witnessed an excellent variety show, though the stage did not interest me half so much as the audience. Picture to yourself the parquet covered with tables and couches, the boxes filled with tables, everybody eating, drinking and smoking, everybody staring at the stage. The Germans are a practical race and believe in taking their pleasures polyphonically. And isn't it strange that whenever you mention Munich the hunger and thirst motive sounds in the orchestra!

I read, but without much excitement, a novel by Alfred Beetschen called "Ein Reiner Thor. Bayreuther Fest-Spiel Roman." The hero, a Parsifal sort of creature, though loving a woman at the twelfth hour, refuses her kiss, and rightly enough ends up in Boston as a teacher of piano. This point is very subtle. For the rest there is a lot of Bayreuth gossip and musical talk. I fear this "pure fool" would not be popular in America.

Hello! it's time to eat again! Kellner, a bucket of beer, some soup, coffee, cakes, potatoes and sausages! I am ahungered!

MR. AND MRS. EDMUND SEVERN.

MR. AND MRS. EDMUND SEVERN, who recently returned from a sojourn in Florence, Italy, are both busy here again in their individual branches. Were it not for their innate modesty both of these excellent musicians would be better known than they are to-day. But in the long run methods like theirs win in the end. Not only as a violinist and teacher is Mr. Severn making a name for himself. As a composer he is destined to grow. New England cities have already heard his more ambitious works, while here in New York music lovers have heard some of his chamber music compositions, as well as some of his beautiful songs. Mrs. Severn is quite as busy as her talented husband. Both as a teacher of the piano and the voice she is gaining pupils in New York and in Springfield, Mass., where both she and Mr. Severn teach a few days each week. Their New York studio is at 131 West Fifty-sixth street, and in addition to the work there Mr. and Mrs. Severn will be associated with Francis Walker. Jointly with him they will conduct a school of music in the Van Dyke Building.

While abroad this summer Mr. and Mrs. Severn taught their respective branches at the Francis Walker Summer School, delightfully situated in modern Florence. A number of pupils went to Italy with the Severns, and particular progress is reported of Miss Galbraith, a vocal pupil of Mrs. Severn. During the summer we published a report of Miss Galbraith's singing at a musicale given in Florence by Madame Stefani, the musical Lady Bountiful in the Tuscan capital. A number upon the program, which was omitted from our previous report of this musicale, was Mr. Severn's Suite Orientale, for piano and violin. The Severns played this work at their own concert in the Tuxedo last winter, and a criticism of the first performance was published in THE MUSICAL COURIER. The guests at Madame Stefani's were if anything more enthusiastic over this composition. The hostess herself presented Mr. Severn with a silver mounted bamboo cane appropriately inscribed, the bamboo, by the way, being a product of Madame Stefani's garden.

EMMA HOWSON.—The closing week of the American Opera Company's engagement at Providence, R. I., brought forth the following press notices of Miss Pauline Johnson, the talented pupil of Miss Emma Howson:

Miss Pauline Johnson took the part of Marguerite, and her sweet voice was most effectively used in interpreting the simplicity, the loveliness and the woe of that character ever to be sung of and thought of until man's race is finished. She acted well and in every act was the delightful picture portrayed for the large audience. Particularly well done was the jewel scene and the scene at the window.—Providence Times.

Miss Pauline Johnson proved an instant success as Leonora, her first solo winning a course of favor which reached its climax only in the death scene. Her work was impassioned and her voice was sweet and true in the difficult and impassioned scenes that it was her task to portray. At no time has she seemed to have so well pleased her audience as she did in the difficult task she essayed last night.—Providence News.

The piece is handsomely staged and costumed, as are all of the operas handled by this organization. The singing is par excellence. Miss Pauline Johnson has not done better this season than she does in this instance as Leonora. Her clear, pleasing voice and superior method tell powerfully in aria after aria.—Providence Evening Telegram.

HENRIETTE WEBER IN HER NEW STUDIO.—Miss Heriette Weber, the pianist and accompanist, is now at home in her new studio, 60 West Thirty-ninth street. A number of promising pupils are taking lessons from Miss Weber, who is equally skillful in teaching as she is in playing the piano. Further along in the season Miss Weber will give a series of musicales, and her manager, Arnold Somlyo, has booked her for a number of public concerts and recitals. Miss Weber's individuality and good taste is reflected in the manner in which she has furnished her studio.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

Free Scholarship Examination in Orchestral Department (Thursday) October 3, 2 until 3 P. M. Leo Schulz and others Examiners Musical Clubs.

The Troy (N. Y.) Vocal Society resumed rehearsals yesterday, October 1.

Mrs. F. L. Tuck, of 21 Grant street, Bangor, Me., organized a music students' club, at her home, on September 16.

Guillaume Sauvlet will give a series of piano recitals during the autumn and winter under the auspices of the El Paso (Tex.) Music Club.

The board of directors of the National Federation of Musical Clubs held a meeting week before the last at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York.

The Ladies' Thursday Musicale of Minneapolis, Minn., is arranging a concert for the last week in October. Camilla Urso, the violinist, is engaged as the soloist.

As previously announced in THE MUSICAL COURIER, Milwaukee is planning great things for the jubilee season of the Arion Club of the prosperous city on Lake Michigan.

A music study club was organized at Cortland, N. Y., September 9, and the officers elected were: F. Tibbets, president; W. E. Chamberlain, vice-president; Mrs. Anna Tu, secretary.

The Philharmonic Society, the Haydn Male Chorus and the Cecilian Ladies' Chorus, all of Utica, N. Y., attended the Pan-American Exposition and participated in the singing contests on Friday, September 20.

Emil Reyl, the new conductor of the Hoboken Quartet Club, directed the first rehearsal of the society on September 10. Mr. Reyl succeeds Johannes Wershinger, now director of the Dresden (Germany) Liedertafel.

Both the Choral Club and Schubert Club of St. Paul, Minn., will have new homes this winter. Neither club is as yet permanently located. On October 16 the Schubert Club will hold a reception in Summit Hall, on Laurel avenue.

The Philharmonic Club, of Indianapolis, Ind., has elected the following officers: President, H. H. Van Wie; vice-president, C. S. Eaglesfield; secretary, Charles O. Bryan; treasurer, Henry Laut; librarian, John Wilson; director, Edward Nell. Rehearsals for the season began a fortnight ago.

The Choral Society of Washington, D. C., begins rehearsals at Carroll Institute Hall on October 7. Josef Kaspar will be the director again, and Dr. Anton Gloetzner has accepting the exacting position of accompanist for the season. Händel's "Messiah" will be sung at the Christmas concert, and Verdi's "Requiem" at the March concert.

A new choral society has been organized at Cambridge, Mass., and Bertram C. Henry, a Harvard graduate, has been chosen for conductor. Mr. Henry, who received his musical education in Germany (one of his teachers being Rheinberger, of Munich), is a member of the faculty of the Faelten Pianoforte School, Boston, Mass.

One of the first of the musical clubs to give a concert this season was the Euterpean Ladies' Chorus, of Columbus, Ohio. The date was September 12. Mrs. Mary E. Cassell conducted the forty voices participating in the choruses. Solos were sung by Mrs. Humphreys, Miss Roberts, Miss Downs and Master Howard Woodbury, a boy soprano.

A program of Hungarian and Bohemian folk music will inaugurate the season of the Fortnightly Musical Club of Zanesville, Ohio, on October 9. The officers and committees for this club for the year 1901-1902 are as follows: President, Miss Judith Griffith; vice-president, Miss Ella Stultz; secretary and treasurer, Miss Margaret Stultz; executive committee, Mrs. George Stanbery, Mrs. C. U. Hanna, Mrs. L. K. Brown, Miss Kate Davenport Jones; musical committee, Miss Katharine Stanbery, Mrs. Rufus Burton, Miss Mary Conrade, Miss Anna Allison Jones.

WHITNEY TEW REMAINS UNTIL FEBRUARY.—Because of the many demands for the services of Whitney Tew, the celebrated basso, for oratorio, song recitals and miscellaneous concerts, his manager, Henry Wolfsohn, has persuaded him to give up his European concerts in January and remain in America until February 1, when he will return to England. Already is Mr. Tew engaged for many of the principal oratorio performances. In addition to his singing with the Handel and Haydn Society, the Brooklyn Oratorio, the Washington and St. Louis choral societies, and song recitals in New York on November 11, Boston, November 14, and Brooklyn, he is also to be heard in a performance of "The Messiah" to be given in Minneapolis, a song recital in Buffalo and with the Art Society in Pittsburg.

NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING.—Ferdinand and Hermann Carri, directors of this well-known institution, have resumed their work of teaching. The Messrs. Carri will have a very busy season. Quite a large number of applications have been received by the Messrs. Carri from various parts of the country, besides the many pupils studying at present at their institution. The first concert by the Messrs. Carri will occur beginning of November at Knabe Hall.

Musical . . People.

Herbert Milliken has begun his second year as teacher of the violin in Bay City, Mich.

Mrs. Arthur Crabbe, of London, will open a studio in Worcester, Mass. She will teach piano and other branches.

Herbert Cram, a young baritone singer from Minneapolis, Minn., has come to New York to study with Oscar Saenger.

After a restful summer vacation, Miss Eleanor Bushnell has resumed her classes in piano and harmony at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. Tappan Adney, soprano, and Miss Elizabeth Walker, pianist, gave a recital at Clark's Hall, Caribou, Me., on September 17.

Miss Clara Hunt, an American singer with some European reputation, gave a concert at Watertown, N. Y., on September 19. She is to appear in other towns in this State during the autumn.

It is reported that Miss Kate Vannah is receiving satisfactory royalties upon some of her songs. Miss Vannah is a native of Gardiner, Me., and was educated in her own State and at Emmitsburg, Md.

Otto F. Dans, a youthful violinist residing at Oshkosh, Wis., has composed a popular waltz, and accordingly is being complimented by his friends and neighbors. The young man is twenty-one years old.

Paul Berge, a talented young musician from New Orleans, has been admitted to the first class in the Brussels Conservatory. Young Berge passed a high entrance examination. Marks Kaiser was the teacher of young Berge, who is a son of Dr. Philip Berge.

Miss Helena Augustin gave a piano recital on September 9 at the summer home of Mrs. James L. Breese, Southampton, L. I. Her program included works by Mozart, Beethoven, Chopin, Von Weber, Liszt and Moszkowski. Miss Augustin is a pupil of Carreño.

Gasten Borch, a 'cello player and composer, will give a concert on October 4 at the First Congregational Church, Duluth, Minn. He will be assisted by the Beethoven Club—Gerard Tonning, Fred H. Bradbury, J. H. Flaaten, T. N. Goedahl and G. Borch.

Dr. Arthur Heft, director of the Symphony Orchestra at Des Moines, Ia., has announced that generous contribu-

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.
A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Reszké and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, volume or compass. The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio.
MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAGO.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
Address all communications to
613 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406) Chicago
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circulars

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

tions are being made toward the maintenance of the orchestral concerts to be given during this season.

Miss Mary A. O'Mara, one of the best known piano teachers in Troy, N. Y., has returned from her vacation and resumed her professional duties.

Russell A. Loring, of Hingham, Mass., has entered upon his duties as the new instructor of the violin at the Arcade Conservatory of Music, at Cleveland, Ohio.

Florizel Reuter is the name of a boy violinist who has studied in Geneva, Switzerland, with Henri Marteau. It is reported that Reuter will make a tour later in the season.

Miss Ida Lewis, solo soprano of Emanuel Baptist Church, Albany, N. Y., has been engaged also for the afternoon Sunday services at Holy Cross Church, Troy, N. Y.

Miss Nellie May Ebersole, a musician of ability, has returned to her home in Indianapolis, after a restful vacation passed in the country.

Musical prodigies come springing up, and one of the latest to enter the ranks is Master Charles Clough, of Burlington, Ia. The lad is said to be only eleven years old. His teacher was Miss Cora Brobst, of Burlington.

J. Frank Donahue gave an organ recital at the new First Congregational Church, Torrington, Conn., on September 18. He was assisted by Dr. Carl E. Dufft, Mrs. Minnie Atwood Jackson and Mrs. Emma Atwood Curtis.

Miss Marie McFarland, a Denver singer, who recently returned from her studies abroad, gave a concert at the Broadway Theatre, Denver, on September 27. She was assisted by the Denver Apollo Club and M. Appy, 'cellist.

The Dessauer-Troostkyk School of Music at New Haven, Conn., has reopened its doors, this being the tenth year of the institution. Pupils of this school are prepared for entrance to the department of music at Yale University.

George L. Heyes, Mrs. McDonald-Estill and Miss Alice Fallon gave a musicale recently at the rooms of the Lambs Club, of Helena, Mon. The musicale was one of a series to be given on the days set apart for the entertainment of women.

Miss Lilla B. Harding, who won the free scholarship in the department of vocal music at the Ithaca Conservatory, is a pupil of W. H. Hoerrner, of Binghamton, N. Y., and a member of the choir of Trinity Memorial Church, Binghamton, of which Mr. Hoerrner is choirmaster.

Miss Hattie Sternfeld has returned to the city after a pleasant vacation spent among the Westchester Hills and partly at the Catskill Mountains. She has resumed teaching at her studio in Steinway Hall, and at the Educational Alliance, where Miss Sternfeld is head of the piano department, and also at her private studio, 232 West 126th street.

W. D. Armstrong, who is president of the Illinois State Music Teachers' Association, gave the first recital on the Henry C. Priest memorial organ, at the First M. E. Church, Alton, Ill. The new organ is the largest in Alton and one of the finest in the State. The organ is a two manual tubular pneumatic, with twenty-five speaking stops and five mechanical attachments. The organ is operated by electricity. At the recital Mr. Armstrong played a dedication march composed especially for the occasion. Charles Haagen sang the "Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser," and Dudley Buck's "Fear Not, O Israel."

The formal opening of the new building of the Landon Conservatory of Music at Dallas, Tex., was celebrated with a concert on September 10. Following is the musical program: Schubert, "L'Abeille," violin, Miss Sue Marcia Beebe; Henselt, "If I Were a Bird," two pianos, Misses Isabell Hutcheson and Ethel Powell; De Beriot, Seventh Concerto, violin, Miss Beebe; Mannay, "Within Thine Eyes," vocal, Miss Jessie Woodruff Pottle; (a) Hoffmann, "Snow Flakes," piano solo; (b) Chopin, "Berceuse"; (c) Rubinstein, "Le Bal Waltz," Miss Powell; Thomas, "Summer Night," vocal, Miss Pottle; (a) McDowell, "The Brook"; (b) McDowell, "Shadow Dance," Mrs. Elbert Dunlap; Chaminade, "Le Soir," op. 79, No. 2, two pianos, Miss Powell and Mrs. Dunlap. Mr. Landon was assisted in receiving by Miss Pike, Miss Hardwick, the Misses Bessie Boggs, Kathleen Oxford, Effie Farish, Ethel Cook, Dudley Hawes, Ruth Withers and Miss Carr, of California. Misses Florine Fry, Mildred Holloway, Hattie Jeane O'Bannon and Sadie Will received the cards of the visitors. After the musical numbers an address was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Boggs.

MAX BENDHEIM.—Max Bendheim has begun the season at his studio, No. 332 West Fifty-sixth street, with every indication of continued success. A number of his last year's pupils are now singing either in concert or on the stage, and, no doubt, his work in the coming year will develop a like number of fine voices.

GENEVIEVE BISBEE.—Genevieve Bisbee has opened her large and attractive studio for the winter, in preparation for a very busy season. Its artistic beauty has been added to by a splendid new Steinway grand, which will give still greater charm to Miss Bisbee's pupils' recitals and her delightful "evenings of music." Miss Bisbee's readable booklet, entitled "Leschetizky and His Method," should be read by all who are interested in Leschetizky's method and the study of the piano.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, reopened his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, since his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he gave lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD,

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

HANNAH & HAMLIN Dissolved June 1st.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY

DIRECTORS OF CONCERTS AND MUSICAL ARTISTS.

514-517 KIMBALL HALL
CHICAGO.

LOUIS EVANS, President.

CABLE ADDRESS, LINARK, CHICAGO. LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE, HARRISON 2255.

REPRESENTATIVE AGENCY OF MIDDLE STATES

EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION

GENEVIEVE CLARK WILSON—Soprano.
SUE HARRINGTON FURBECK—Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN—Tenor.
CHARLES W. CLARK—Baritone.
AUGUSTA COTTLOW—Pianiste, and others.
LEON MARX—Violinist.

WE WILL NEGOTIATE FOR ALL HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD
Studio 6, 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
CONCERT ORGANIST.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Address: 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HOWARD WELLS,
Pianist,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director,
Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free.
243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
'Phones: Harrison 1910 and 1736. Unsurpassed Faculty Teaching.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC.
Stage Training, Elocution, Languages and the Fine Arts. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

ROWDON
Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

September 10, 1901.

SPEAKING as man and not as critic, and with a candor which requires a certain and by no means inconsiderable degree of courage, I put myself down in black and white, and for the first time in my life, as wearied of Wagner. As a critic it is a different thing altogether; for the admiration a Wagner invites is based upon the solid foundation of his matchless might as a musician, his irresistible powers as a poet, and in one word his world conquering gifts of genius. "That tired feeling," therefore, is an entirely personal and it may be only a temporary one; at least I hope that it will prove such, for I should not like to journey to my end through this world without love for Wagner.

The causes for it are also in the main self-inflicted or professionally produced ones, and are probably based principally upon the toujours perdrix Wagner diet, with which my musical stomach has been overfed operatically, just as it was overdosed with Beethoven symphonically, whereby the final effect was naturally the same. As a critic I was forced to hear so and so many good, bad or indifferent performances of Beethoven symphonies every winter, year after year, season after season, for the last quarter of a century, and I knew them from memory already before I ever became a critic.

Is it a wonder, therefore, that despite their grandeur and beauty they have lost their charm for me, and have ceased to be of interest to me, even when performed in the most matchless manner under a Nikisch or a Weingartner, by a Berlin Philharmonic or Royal Orchestra? And it is fast growing to be the same thing with the works of Wagner, about whose "Tannhäuser" I can say what the hero himself utters to Venus, when he is growing tired of her charms: "Zum Ueberdruss ist mir dein Lieben." "Lohengrin," poetical as the legend and the language of the work, radiant as the music is, the sameness of the scintillating sky blue color and the monotony of the square rhythm that pervades nearly the whole work from beginning to the end, have made it almost unendurable for me. It is tedious to sleepiness, and if I have to hear a representation of "Lohengrin" professionally, because of a new singer, or some other important circumstance connected with the performance itself, I have hit upon the not overcomplicated device of inviting some fresh and enthusiastic young music student—if possible one who never before heard "Lohengrin"—and thus, through his or her enjoyment of the work I derive something like a renewed interest in it.

But this, of course, is only an artificial and indirect means of spurring myself on to listen to an opera, which once upon a time, when I heard it myself for the first time, ever so many years ago, I dubbed "a divine revelation." The man to whom I made in all sincerity and in the hyperenthusiasm of youth this sacrilegious utterance happened to be the greatest anti-Wagnerite among the musicians of importance of his time. It was the late Ferdinand Hiller, who, although much older than myself, honored me with his friendship and later on became my trusted and valued adviser. He did not "sit down" on me, when I went into raptures about "Lohengrin"; he did not even try to dampen my enthusiasm, but I remember his kind and slightly sad smile, when he said to me: "Some day you will return to Mozart. You will become weary of the continuously alternating A major and F sharp minor key color." Nevertheless I happened to come in upon him one day when I found Hiller deeply engrossed in the study of the orchestral score of "Lohengrin." His prophecy, however, has been fulfilled in its latter part sooner than I ever dreamed that it would or could become true, while the return to Mozart was only in so far an impossibility, as I had never forsaken my first love in music, except for temporary flirtations of a more or less serious kind and length of duration with Schubert, Schumann and Chopin.

For Liszt I had never any love, nor was Mendelssohn ever much to my liking. I gloried in the orchestral colors, the harmonic daring and the rhythmic pregnancy of Berlioz, but I never loved him. The latter feeling I experienced, however, much later in the case of Tschaikowsky, whom I admire ardently. The taste for Brahms is an acquired one with me, just as is the one for eating tomatoes. Of this latter juicy fruit I could not even bear the smell when I made the first attempt at eating them in the United States, and now here in Germany, where I cannot get them half as fresh or luscious, I have a perfect craving for them.

The same experience I underwent with regard to Brahms' music. At first I could not stand it, and Tschaikowsky's answer to Bülow, when the latter tried to convince his Russian friend of the greatness of Brahms' music: "It may be very great; in fact, as long as you say so I cannot doubt that it is great; but I don't like it," was just what I would have said to a similar question, and in fact did say not more than fifteen years ago. Now I long for a good performance of the Second Symphony, either one of the two piano concertos, most of the choral and all of Brahms' chamber music. Thus is the frailty of human taste, especially that of a conscientious critic, who analyzes his own feelings and does not care to lie to himself regarding his own predilections or antipathies. The only two composers with regard to whose works I have never yet felt the slightest wavering are Beethoven and Bach. My admiration for the latter has ever been on the increase, until it now has reached a point which is very akin to awe. I felt piously inclined as a mere boy when listening to the St. Matthew Passion Music, and I want to kneel down before the greatest of all musicians that lived so far, when I hear the same work to-day. Beethoven I admire, Bach I revere, but Mozart I love!

This incidental musical credo has led me from my mutton, however, and I want to return to it by stating that the first and the last of the lyric dramas of Wagner are or have become equally boresome to me for opposite reasons. In "Rienzi" the composer was not yet "Richard himself," and his striving to imitate the cheap and frequently vulgar effects of Meyerbeer, only because the latter had achieved popularity by means of their application, makes "Riénzi" an epignon emulsion not worthy of Wagner. The contrary is the case with "Parsifal." It is the hard and partially dry fruit produced by an aged tree. Senility speaks out of many pages of a score which by means of artificial and clever mood pictures cloaks the paucity and sterility of the musical ideas. Wagner was impotent in invention when he begot "Parsifal." Moreover, I believe he lied to himself and to others with regard to the religious fervor displayed in his Swan Song. I cannot help doubting his sincerity in this music, just as little as I believe in that of Mendelssohn, when this baptized Jew writes the music of an oratorio in honor of St. Paul, and this is what disgusts me in both "Parsifal" and "St. Paul," as unsimilar as these works are in every other respect. Rubinstein must have felt something very similar when he said: "Wagner created his 'Parsifal' merely from anti-Semitism. Christ having been a Jew, Wagner craved for a new Christ, not descended from Jewish parentage, and thus he conceived one of his own begetting and named him 'Parsifal.'"

With the work which by most musicians is deemed Wagner's chef d'œuvre, "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," I made the same mistake which I committed with the writings of Dickens. The first volume of the latter's fiction I ever got a hold of was "David Copperfield," which I read during the first summer of my sojourn in the United States. It fascinated and amused me so much that I devoured everything else Dickens ever wrote without making a stop, or an exception, or a change in the way of taking up some other book in between. The effect was naturally and as might have been expected, that Dickens palled on me, and that I have never been able to read anything of his for a second time. Now it was during the winter of 1873-4—if I am not mistaken—that "Die Meistersinger" was given for the first time at Cologne, and created such a sensation and furore in that heretofore anti-Wagnerian town that the work was given thirteen times in the course of that one season. I attended all of the thirteen performances, and it turned out for me an unlucky number, in so far as I have never been able to sit through an entire "Meistersinger" representation ever since with any degree of comfort, rest or complete enjoyment. I knew everything by heart before it was being sung and that made it harder to endure. I also found that there were too many recurrences of the same musical thoughts, and no representation I had to attend afterward not even the first Bayreuth performance, seemed to me half as interesting or as good as the ones I heard at Cologne at the age of twenty with Eugenie Pappenheim, now living in New York, as Eva; with Otto Schelper still singing the same part at Leipsic to this day, as Hans Sachs, and a most glorious one he was in voice and action, and with Jaeger, who has long since joined the silent majority, as Walther von Stolzing. I remember that old man Hiller left his box on the evening of the première in utter disgust right after the street fight scene and without waiting for the poetical anti-climax of the moonlight woo of the final scene of the second act, muttering to himself as he slammed the door of the box. "What, that is meant for music; damn it, it is Schweinerei!" You'll excuse me please, for not making an attempt at translating the la word of the anathema.

Now you may say to me: But what of the "Nibelunger ring?" and I shall have to confess that its dramatis personae never took a hold of me, and that in fact they, wit the exception of the twins Siegmund and Sieglinde, ar of Brünnhilde and the young Siegfried, did not even i terest me. Their fate could not impress me, for they a not human in either their language, aspirations or sen ments, and considered as gods they are partially weak a all of them unnatural to ridiculousness. As for the mus of the "Nibelungenring," it is of all of Wagner's wor the most uneven in value of invention. There are m ments and whole episodes of overwhelming beauty a freshness, climaxes of wonderful vivacity and electrifyi effectiveness and tragic expressions of tremendous pow nay terrific, almost heathenish, irrelentlessness of torme But these are on the whole the exception, the far ap culminating points of a work of four evenings in durati in which there occur ever so many quart d'heures d'enn as a French critic so aptly described them. If I cou make for myself—mind you, only for myself—a selecti of the places in the "Nibelungenring" I should like hear again, I could curtail the four scores and draw th together in one single one, which it would not take m than one evening to perform. This of course sounds l heresy, not to say black blasphemy; but these are sentiments and I have the courage to state them bo and frankly.

There remain then two works of Wagner not menti in the above list, and these are also the only ones wh

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

ave not yet lost their hold upon me, for I can still listen o them with intense and genuine enjoyment of their mu-ical and dramatic contents. I mean "The Flying Dutch-ıan," the most characteristic and first strong, original nd fresh creation of Wagner's early period, and "Tristan nd Isolde," which in my estimation is his real chef 'œuvre, his ripest as well as his most consistent work, nd the one in which his inventive power is equally as trong as his constructive faculty. In it Wagner realized ıost potently his own aspirations and ideals, for in "Tris-ın" his Koennen was equal to his Wollen, and no artist an ever reach a higher plane.

Curiously enough circumstances enabled me within the ıst few months to verify and corroborate these impres-ions and sentiments, which of course are entirely of a urely personal nature. I heard "The Flying Dutchman" t Bayreuth, where I listened to it with a rapture and en-ıusiasm which I had not felt before for a long time in ny Wagner performance, and now last week I attended, eturned to Berlin, as one of the first representations of ıe season, a production of "Tristan und Isolde." It was ıe Isolde I had come to hear, our new dramatic soprano; ut it was the music which held me in my seat at the :oyal Opera House from the first note of the Vorspiel) the last B major sigh of the Liebestod. Richard trauss conducted, which means that the reading of the :ore was a congenial one. He interprets no work of the ıaster more sympathetically than "Tristan." The or-hestra was superb from beginning to end, and the mise-n-scène, barring the shabby setting of the first act and ıe listlessness of the chorus, beyond cavil. Miss Plaich-ıger, our new heroine, was not heroic enough, but she as a fine, well trained voice and sings with intelligence nd musical feeling. She was disappointing only in the ıoments of highest passion and dramatic verve, but ı the finale of the first act and in the love duet of the :cond, she sang the Liebestod in overwhelmingly eautiful and simple, natural style. Real dramatic so-ranos, however, are extremely scarce, and Miss Plaich-ıger is not one of the small number. Gruening you now, and therefore I need not tell you that he also was o Niemann in the love duet. Both partners stood there nd sang to each other instead of in each other. He also ıved his voice during the first two acts in order to have ıe requisite force for the triple dying scene of the last ne, and in this he succeeded. One artist only was satis-ctory from first to last, and that was Baptist Hoffmann, ho vocally as well as histrionically was alike admirable ı the part of Kurwenal.

A coloratura soprano, whom I noticed favorably in my :cent report of the "Charivari" performances at the The-er des Westens, Miss May Hamaker, a young New York irl, who has since been singing with some success at the Lebende Lieder" (animated songs) in Kroll's Garden, ıst signed a contract to appear at several of the leading ıriety theatres in America next season.

The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger tells us that Lilli Lehmann finishing her vacation at her villa in the Tyrol, and dis-aying her sylphlike figure in the native costume, short irts and all. Oh, for a day in the Tyrol with a camera!

Daniel Visanski, the talented New York violinist, has ıst returned from Sassnitz, where he spent a pleasant and rofitable summer, for several of his pupils had gone with m to the north coast, and continued their violin lessons ıring the entire hot spell.

The Latin Quarter of Berlin is beginning to awaken om its long summer sleep. The music student is once more rampant on the Potsdamerstrasse. What marvelous sights we shall behold soon, when this season's crop of new American students, fresh from the States, begins to find its way into the haunts of the music makers, and displays itself in all the glory of the latest transatlantic fashions. What weird "hair cuts," what skin tight trousers, what pigmy hats, what Lilliputian overcoats, what short skirts, what pretty faces we shall see!

One of the first concertmasters of our Royal Opera, handsome and popular Bernhard Dessau, has just received a tempting offer from America to lead the first violins of the newly formed Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. In spite of the fact that Dessau was tendered the neat sum of $4,000 for a short season, he refused the engagement, prefering to remain here with his many private pupils, and to continue his duties at the Opera and at Stern's Conservatory, where he is one of the leading teachers.

Sam Grimson, a favorite and private pupil of Joachim, has just returned from a vacation spent in England. Mr. Grimson has announced a concert with orchestra, to take place after Christmas, and is already booked for eleven out of town engagements.

Herr Prüwer, the second kapellmeister in Breslau, recently won a curious wager. He bet that he could play all the "Ring des Nibelungen" on the piano, and sing the roles to his own accompaniment, without making more than six mistakes. He made only four, and won. This is a feat which several other leaders of my acquaintance might have some hesitation about attempting.

Herbert Robinson, the big basso from Minneapolis, who has been a resident of Berlin for over five years, left for London last week, where he proposes to make his permanent home.

Here's one adopted from a German comic paper:

Rose—"What's become of that Mrs. Musicke's son. She used to think him a budding genius?"

Ethel—"He's become a blooming idiot."

Miss Mary Sheratt, a young American pianist, pupil of Leopold Godowsky, will give an orchestral concert at Beethoven Hall, early in October.

Neville Bloch, editor of the German Times, an English paper much read by foreign students here, is engaged to be married to Miss Elizabeth Wetzel, a German-American singer, now busy at the Theater des Westens.

S. E. Hartman, the Chicago baritone, attended the Bayreuth performances as the guest of Schumann-Heink. The great singer was so enthusiastic about Mr. Hartmann's voice that she advised him by all means to stay here and study German opera, in preference to singing at London concerts, where he had already booked several engagements. The ambitious Chicagoan at once came back to Berlin, and proved his mettle by memorizing the role of Telramund in two days—quite a feat for one who has just stepped out of Italy, where he has been singing opera for three years in the most approved Italian style.

Miss Minnie Methot, the gifted New York soprano, formerly prima donna of the "Princess Chic" opera company, has settled in Berlin for a few months in order to study several German operatic roles with one of our best local maestros. Miss Methot has a "dramatic" soprano voice, and intends to go in for the parts of Elizabeth ("Tannhäuser"), Mimi ("Bohême"), Elsa ("Lohengrin") and Ulana ("Manru," Paderewski's new opera).

Mrs. Benzig, a contralto from New York, with an unusually rich and voluminous voice, is doing splendid work under Frau Lilli Lehmann. Some music students succeed not on account of, but in spite of, their teachers.

Major Pond, the old-time American impresario, was in town for a few days. He has been taking the waters at Marienbad. While here the hustling Major signed a contract with a new violin prodigy for an early tour in the United States. He refused to make premature publication of the name of this latest catch.

All the numerous Berlin friends and admirers of Miss Estelle Liebling are immensely delighted at her good fortune in being signed for the season by Henry Wolfsohn, and they look forward expectantly to the accounts of her first appearance in New York with Kubelik.

Moriz Rosenthal is not to be heard in Berlin after all this winter. His Russian engagements will take up so much of his time and necessitate so much traveling that he feels it incumbent upon himself to postpone his Berlin recitals. This postponement will probably be for several years, as the pianist's itinerary includes Paris and London for next spring and summer and the United States for the following winter season.

During his stay in London during the season just past Prof. Dr. Joachim became acquainted with Lord R., a nobleman more agreeable than musical. The violinist invited the peer to attend one of the Joachim Quartet concerts at St. James' Hall. On the appointed day Lord R. arrived at the establishment, and by mistake wandered into the Moore & Burgess Minstrel Show, held on the ground floor. That evening Joachim and Lord R. met at dinner. "How did you like us?" inquired the artist. "Very much indeed," answered the nobleman; "at first I had some difficulty to make you out under your black paint. Your antics were most amusing. I had no idea you could sing and dance too."

Marguerite Melville, that rarely gifted chit of a girl, about whose piano quintet I wrote so enthusiastically some months ago is at work on a piano concerto. If this new opus turns out on a par with the last, then pianists may well congratulate themselves, for Miss Melville possesses an inexhaustible mine of melody, and knows how to dress it effectively and brilliantly.

Frank Bryan, a blind pianist from Boston, pupil of Jedliczka, will give a concert at Beethoven Hall early in November.

Mortimer Davis, of San Francisco, formerly a pupil of De Pachmann, has decided to settle permanently in Berlin. He is very busy teaching, and looks forward to a most successful season.

Mr. Tunberg, of Omaha, Neb., will leave his teacher of last season, Felix Dreyschock, and follow the banner of Franz Kullak.

I have often read that musicians, as a rule, attain to fair age, but I never supposed that their longevity is so surprising as Manager Hermann Wolff would have us believe. In his Concert Calendar for 1901-1902 there

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
First American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
DATES NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager, 444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

are recorded the dates of the birth and death of famous composers. We find, for instance, that Joachim Raff was born May 27, 1722, and died June 25, 1882; J. Ph. Rameau, born September 25, 1683, died September 12, 1864, and Anton Bruckner, born September 4, 1324, died October 11, 1896. Thus Raff lived to be 160 years old, Rameau 181 and Bruckner 572!

In his last will and testament the late Fritz Simrock, owner of the music publishing house of that name, left the manuscript score of Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro" to the Berlin Royal Library, which now owns one more of the most valuable of Mozart's autograph scores, among the remainder being that of "The Magic Flute."

Prof. Max Klinger, of Leipsic, has been selected for the sculpturing of the Brahms monument to be erected in the composer's native town of Hamburg.

I had the pleasure of meeting last week the eminent young Chicago musical littérateur and vocal teacher William Hubbard, whom I had not seen since Paderewski's concert in Dresden four years ago. Mr. Hubbard will leave Berlin soon in order to be able to resume his activity in Chicago with the begining of next season.

Hugo Kaun, the Milwaukee male chorus conductor and composer, will give a chamber music soirée with a program entirely of his own works at Leipsic on October 18, and an orchestral concert of his compositions in Berlin on the previous night.

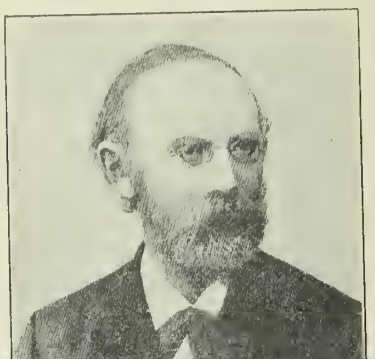
After the continued success the Royal Opera House is experiencing with Saint-Saëns' "Samson and Dalila," which is being presented there at least once every week before large and enthusiastic audiences, Director Hofpauer, of the Theater des Westens, decided to put on the French composer's opera "Henry VIII.," in the course of the coming season. In order to create increased interest for the work he invited Saint-Saëns to conduct the first performance in person. In a very long and somewhat stilted letter Saint-Saëns begs to be excused, because for eighteen years he has not been able to stay in Paris even during the winter. He always lives either in Asia or in Africa during the cold spell, and hence will and cannot accept offers to conduct opera or to participate in concert.

The first operatic director to try the Bayreuth version of "The Flying Dutchman" in one session without a break was Gregor, of Elberfeld, and the experiment seems to have been a successful one from what I learned about the performance through a letter received from a good authority.

The directors of the Vienna Conservatory have accepted the resignation of Professors Epstein, Door, Rosé and Stoll under the plea that they could not allow these gentlemen to dictate to them conditions in the way of running the conservatory. Professors Ludwig and Marx will be the successors in the piano department, and Court Opera singer and actor Albert Stritt will undertake the teaching of the dramatic classes of the conservatory. Emil Sauer, of course, will be the head of the new "master school" of piano playing, and he glories in a much coveted title and an annual salary of 7,000 florins, for which he will have comparatively little work to perform.

Georg Leitert, once upon a time a popular piano virtuoso, died last week in the Saxonian Lunatic Asylum at Hubertusberg after a long illness at the age of forty-nine. He was born at Dresden, where he created a sensation as a Wunderkind of thirteen years. Then he began to study music seriously, and later on became one of the favorite pupils of Liszt, whom he also accompanied to Rome. Afterward his virtuoso career led him over the entire Continent, until in 1878 he settled down as teacher at the Horak Piano School in Vienna, whence in 1881 he emigrated to Paris, where for nearly twenty years he held a foremost position as teacher and concert pianist. Also as a composer Leitert made a name for himself, although he left but few published works.

The death of the world-renowned Händel student, biographer and editor of the revised edition of Händel's works, Dr. Friedrich Chrysander, was probably made known to you by cable before these lines will reach you. He died at Bergsdorf, near Hamburg, at the age of seventy-five, having been born at Luebthoen, in Mecklenberg. He studied music at the university town of Rostock, in his native State, and there also obtained the philosophical doctor degree. His travels took him to England, where his predilection for Händel's works was strengthened and where he conceived the plan of his life work.—[See last issue for obituary.—Ed. M. C.].



Dr. Friedrich Chrysander.

Still another death of recent occurrence is that of Richard Kleinmichel, who died at Berlin at the age of fifty-five, equally well known and respected as musician and as musical littérateur. He was born December 31, 1846, at Posen, where he received his first musical education from his father, a military bandmaster. Kleinmichel later on graduated from the Leipsic Conservatory, where he became a first-class pianist. He also returned, after he had made a scanty living as music teacher in Hamburg for some years, to Leipsic in 1876, scoring there considerable success as conductor at the opera and likewise as pianist. In 1890 he abdicated the baton and came to Berlin, where he settled as composer and musical editor. Here he gained special merit, not only through his skillful arrangement of piano scores of Wagner's works, but also through the resurrection of several important but neglected operas, which regained a new lease of life in his revised edition; thus, for instance, Lortzing's "Opera Rehearsal," which has since been given with success in Berlin. His own compositions denote a great versatility of talent, for they not only comprise piano pieces, among them some excellent studies, but also symphonies and two operas, "Manon" and "Der Pfeifer von Dusenbach." Kleinmichel was also Berlin correspondent and at the time of his death editor of the Leipsic Signale fuer die Musikalische Welt.

Numerous have been the visitors at the Berlin office of The Musical Courier, not only in the short intermission of my sojourn at the seashore but also since my return to town last week. I may mention Mr. Nordheimer, of Toronto, the consul of the German empire; Axel Delmar, poet and opera libretto writer, formerly of the Royal Comedy of Berlin; Kadisch, a young conductor recommended by Hofkapellmeister Dr. Karl Muck; Miss Kathrin Hilke, solo soprano, from the Cathedral of New York; Max Leckner, teacher of piano and theory, from Indianapolis, Ind.; Carl Heinzen, from Compton Hill, Kensington; Ernest H. Bauer, violinist, and Leo Schulz, 'cellist, of the Bendix Quartet, of New York; Miss Caroline Koehler, pianist, from San Francisco, Cal.; Miss Margaret Crawford, the young American dramatic soprano, who is about to enter upon her first German engagement at the Halle Opera House; Miss Mabel Chelton, from San José, Cal. unquestionably the best looking girl this office has beheld for many a long day, and who, I am sorry to say, left for Vienna in order to study with Leschetizky, instead of taking piano finishing lessons right here in Berlin, which she might and should have done; Miss Doris Goodwing, a young vocal student, formerly a pupil of Miss Carr Roscnheim, of Baltimore, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. M. Kriegsmann, from New York, the lady a young dramatic soprano of great promise and a pupil of Florenza d'Arona, in Paris; Miss Elfrieda Rhoda-Neuberger, of New York, a pretty, dark eyed light soprano, who will probably sing at the Cassel Royal Opera House from next season on; Miss Rosa Habermann, a young lady from Cleveland, Ohio, who intends to study the piano in Berlin; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Samuels, from Jamestown, N. Y., the parents of two talented daughters, the youngest a pupil of Ysaye at Brussels, who will be heard in concerts during the coming season; Mrs. Stencel and her highly gifted young daughter Miss Alma Stencel, of San Francisco, Cal.; Moritz Mayer Mahr, pianist and piano pedagogue, who recently, upon invitation of the Grand Duke of Baden concertized before the grand ducal couple and their court attendance and was made happy by a costly present from H. R. H. Miss Beatrice M. Davidson, the comely soprano, who will shortly make her operatic début at the Elberfeld Opera House as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," and who is to sing there also the parts Micaela, Queen in the "Huguenots" and Leonore in "Trovatore," while Mme. The Dorré, who was likewise a caller at this office, will impersonate Carmen and Acuzena in the same representations; Miss Florence Joutard, a fourteen-year old composer of talent from San Jago de Chile, who performed for me a piano prelude and fugue, a theme and variations, the last one of which is a finely written three part fugue, and also an interesting tarantella; with her came her composition teacher, Max Loewengard, critic of the Boers Zeitung, and teacher at the Stern Conservatory, who brought me his newly published Lehrbuch on counterpoint, a sequel to his teaching book on harmony, which was received with favor by numerous young music students of the conservatory and elsewhere; Paul Geyer, critic of the Neueste Nachrichten, also called and brought a little volume, recently published, entitled "Musikalische Elementar-Lehre," which is intended as an introductory teaching book, leading up to Loewengard's harmony school; lastly, but of course most important of all, there was Marc A. Blumenberg, editor-in-chief of The Musical Courier. O. F.

William Worth Bailey.—The remarkable success attained by R. E. Johnston in booking the tour of W. Worth Bailey, the blind violinist, who was practically unknown here six months ago, has demonstrated what an artist can hope for when guided by an intelligent and experienced manager. Mr. Johnston is overwhelmed with applications for Bailey, and many artists are calling upon Mr. Johnston daily in the hope of securing his service. The business of Mr. Johnston is increasing so rapidly that he has been compelled to open new offices at the St. James Building, Broadway and Twenty-sixth street, one of the finest and most accessible locations in New York.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. Carl Alves
Vocal Instruction.
1146 PARK AVE., near 91st St., NEW YORK.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Send for Circulars.
126 East 83d Street, - NEW YORK CITY.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK. 2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, September 22, 1901.

THIS has been a sad week in the history of San Francisco. Flags are flying at half mast on all public and many private buildings. Everywhere the eye turns it is met with heavy black draperies—President McKinley was nowhere more beloved than in San Francisco and the grief at his untimely end is genuine. Thursday, the day he was laid away from mortal sight at his old home in Canton, Ohio, services were held in memoriam in nearly every town in California. In the morning religious services were held in the churches and many an eloquent tribute was paid to the memory of him in whose remembrance they were held. In the afternoon memorial services were held in Mechanics' Pavilion, with a splendid program, and so great was the throng that sought entrance at the different street doors, the way had finally to be barred and admittance refused even to those who, though holding invitations, came late. It was a memorable time for our city and one that will not soon be forgotten.

The eulogy by General Barnes was one of his most eloquent addresses and people were weeping everywhere, old men with gray beards, people in their prime, young men, women and school children, ere he had finished. One of the most beautiful things I have heard for many a day was Signorina Barbareschi's "Ave Maria." She has a voice of magnificent power and compass and filled the large pavilion with the lovely strains of Gounod's well-known composition as easily as if it had been a drawing room. Her voice has never sounded to so favorable advantage in all her operatic work as it did on that day. Much credit is due August Rodemann and Paul Steindorff, two of our best known professional musicians, for their leading of the orchestral numbers. The choruses were ably conducted by J. W. McKenzie and did their part well. The program was gotten up on short notice as a matter of course and was marvelously well done, all things considered. I give it below:

Overture, Melpomene.....Chadwick
Full orchestra.
August H. Rodemann, conductor.

Introduction,
Mayor Phelan.

Funeral March, Götterdämmerung.....Wagner
Full orchestra.
Paul Steindorff, conductor.

Hymn, Lead, Kindly Light.....Newman
Chorus and Orchestra.
J. W. McKenzie, conductor.

Prayer,
Rev. S. D. Hutsinpiller, D. D.

Chanting of Lord's Prayer,
Knickerbocker Quartet, Elks' Quartet, California Quartet.

Hymn, Nearer My God to Thee.....Adams
Chorus, orchestra and Audience.
J. W. McKenzie, conductor.

Soprano solo, Ave Maria.....Gounod
Signorina Nice Barbareschi.

Overture, Egmont.....Beethoven
Full orchestra.
Paul Steindorff, conductor.

Eulogy,
General W. H. L. Barnes.

Funeral March, second movement from Symphony Eroica. Beethoven
Full orchestra.
August H. Rodemann, conductor.

Hymn, America.....Smith
Chorus and orchestra and Audience.
J. W. McKenzie, conductor.

Benediction.

Star Spangled Banner.....Key
Chorus and orchestra and audience.
Paul Steindorff, conductor.

The programs were beautifully gotten up with a half-tone of President McKinley on the first page. His dying words on the last page, the whole heavily bordered in back. All the diplomatic ministers, principal officers of army and navy and high officials of every department were present. It has been long since there has been such a display of gorgeous uniforms and gold braid. Everything was done that could be done to hnor the memory of our deceased President, and nothing was lacking to prove the great love and respect in which he was held in the hearts of his people.

The song recital which was to have been given at Sherman & Clay Hall, on Tuesday last, by Bradford and Mme. B. Anais Peck was postponed, owing to the death of the President, till Tuesday, September 24.

Dates are fast being filled for the season's concerts. Among those nearest at hand is a recital soon to be given jointly by Miss Annette Hullah, pianist, and Harry Barnhart, basso. Miss Hullah hails from London, and comes highly recommended. She is said to be a pupil of Leschetizky, and as this is her first appearance here the concert is anticipated with much interest. Mr. Barnhart has just returned from Europe, where he studied under Corteszi in Florence and Randegger in London. Though he has studied operatic roles, his strong point is said to be oratorio. The concert will be given at Sherman & Clay Hall next Thursday, and a most interesting program is promised.

Miss Belle Clair Chamberlain is another of our talented ones but lately returned from European study. As her tuition has been under Bloomfield-Zeisler and later in Berlin with Teresa Carreño, her concert promises to be of more than ordinary interest.

Hugo Mansfeldt, who is to return home in November, is preparing a recital to be given in Sherman & Clay Hall the first week in December. It has been some time since Mr. Mansfeldt has treated us to one of his fine programs and he will be cordially welcomed.

The first concert of the season to be given by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music was held on Friday evening, September 20, at the Alhambra Theatre. The program, which embraced numbers from the different departments of the conservatory, was listened to by a packed house. There was not a single vacant seat to be had by the time the program opened. Miss Helen Chandler is one of the most promising students in the conservatory, and is possessed of the material that goes to make the true musician. Her Octave Etude was rendered at very rapid tempo and with perfect clearness, showing surprising advance in technic since I heard her play a few months ago. The Chopin Polonaise was also brilliantly handled. The little ones were especially pleasing and played with delightful correctness and intelligence. Little Bessie Grigg was especially interesting, and Madeleine Buckley, Hilda Schloh and Gladys Couth, all little maids under twelve, deserve special mention for their really superior work. The latter is a young violinist and plays with wonderfully pleasing expression. Miss Vincent's Wallenhaupt Caprice showed a beautiful legato touch. The program, which I give below, is really too long to enumerate each number or discuss its merits. Suffice it to say that great credit is due instructors and pupils alike for the careful preparation given an elaborate program. Professor Bonelli is an enthusiast in his line and never spares any pains to make these pupils' concerts a success. That tickets of admission are eagerly sought testifies to their popularity and growing reputation.

March aux Flambeaux.....S. Clark
San Francisco Conservatory Orchestra

Piano soli—
Octave Etude, No. 1.....Kullak
Polonaise, A minor.....Chopin
Miss Helen Chandler.

Vocal solo, Merrily I Roam.....Schleiffarth
Miss Charlotte Towle.

Piano solo, Reverie.....Rosellen
Little Bessie Grigg.

Vocal solo, Echo Song.....Eckert
Miss Marguerete Slocombe.

Piano solo, Spinning Wheel.....Spindler
Little Madeleine Buckley.

Quartet, Grand Caprice Hongroise, op. 7.....Ketterer
First violin, S. Benson; second violin, Miss A. Benson;
'cello, R. McLean; piano, Misses Dephne Sugden and Lottie Williams

Left hand solo, Reverie.....Maxson
Miss Ella Cecil.

Overture, Faust.....Gounod
San Francisco Conservatory Mandolin Club.

Piano solo, Spinning Song.....Mendelssohn
Little Hilda Schloh.

Violin solo, Precieuse.....Gilet
Little Gladys Couth.
Edith Lincoln, accompanist.

Piano soli—
Romance, op. 5.....Tschaikowsky
Erlking (song by Franz Schubert).....Liszt
Miss Minnie Muncie.

Vocal solo—First Song.....Gumbert
Miss Gertrude Gallick.

Piano solo, Mazurka Caprice, op. 38.....Wollenhaupt
Miss Gertrude Vincent.

Cornet solo.....Selected
Miss Nellie Ahkman.

Piano solo, Polacca Brillant, op. 72.....Weber
Miss Josephine Rahlman.
J. W. O'Brien.

Piano solo, Sonate, op. 13 (first movement).....Beethoven
Miss Maybelle Kelley.

Mandolin selection.....Schneider
San Francisco Mandolin Club.

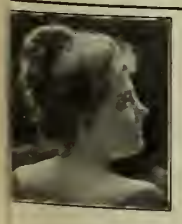
Word comes from Sacramento of memorial services held there on Thursday last. There was a musical pro-

ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.



GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

LACHMUND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
132 WEST 85th STREET, NEW YORK.
CARL V. LACHMUND, - Director
(DIRECTOR WOMEN'S STRING ORCHESTRA SOCIETY)
All branches. Faculty unsurpassed. Private instruction. Special course for students preparing for a public career.

gram, in which the two hymns, "Lead Kindly Light" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee" were sung by a chorus of 200 voices; also the chant, "Thy Will Be Done," by a male chorus. The services were held in the Capital grounds and attended by thousands of citizens. Services were also held in all the churches and by the different orders and the Grand Army in honor of their "beloved comrade, Major McKinley."

At the Tivoli Opera House last week, on account of the illness of Signorina Montinari, the part of Marguerite in "Faust" was taken by Signorina Barbareschi, a change which one could not be grateful enough for as Barbareschi filled the part admirably, as she does all she undertakes. This week, owing to Mr. Steindorff's unremitting efforts to vary the old beaten path of grand opera, we are to have "Nabucco," one of Verdi's early efforts, in which Barbareschi is again the central figure. Her personality is naturally commanding. She will make an ideal king's daughter. Lia Politina Talassa and Dudo complete the principals of the cast.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

Whitney Tew's Career.

H. WHITNEY TEW, the basso, who for the past seven years has made his home in England, and is coming to this country in November next for a concert tour under the management of Henry Wolfsohn, is an American, being born in New York State thirty-one years ago. Before Mr. Tew made singing his profession he was a banker, and also devoted much of his time to the study of painting. His great love for music, however, led him to cultivate that art, and after several years of serious study here and abroad, London, Germany, Paris and Italy, Mr. Tew made his professional début in a song recital at Queen's Hall, London, and immediately established himself as a singer of great ability and intelligenee. Later he was heard in oratorio and opera in London and the provinces of England, Wales and Ireland. Mr. Tew is also a composer of some distinction, having set to music "The Three Musketeers," which met with emphatic success in England. In this work Mr. Tew sang the part of Cardinal Richelieu. His concert and operatic repertory is an extensive one, and his command of languages, German, French and Italian, is perfect. During his stay in this country, which is for the months of November and December only, Mr. Tew will be heard with most of the principal choral societies, including the famous Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, the St. Louis Choral Symphony Society, the Brooklyn Oratorio and the Washington Choral Society. He is also engaged to give song recitals in Brooklyn, with the Institute of Arts and Sciences; in New York, on November 11; Boston, November 14, and in Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago, Montreal, Toronto and Western cities.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY.—The opening meeting of the Alpha Sigma, one of the fraternities of the Broad Street Conservatory, was held last Thursday evening at the Conservatory, 1329-21 South Broad street, Philadelphia. After a musical program the work for the coming season was outlined. This fraternity contributes much to the social life of the students of the Conservatory, many of whom come from far distant States.

ADELE MARGULIES AT CARNEGIE HALL.—Miss Adele Margulies will be found at her Carnegie Hall studio Tuesdays and Fridays, between 2 and 3 p. m. Since her return from Europe Miss Margulies has accomplished considerable in the way of getting her pupils back to their studies. The friends of this accomplished pianist are expecting her to give some public concerts during the season.

CINCINNATI, September 28, 1901.

THEODOR BOHLMANN, pianist, of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, enjoyed a glorious summer vacation, which was at the same time a honeymoon trip. It goes without the saying that his trip to Europe this time was the most interesting of the eleven round trips which he made to the Old World since he made America his permanent home eleven years ago. The young couple left New York on July 4 on the North German Lloyd steamer, Barbarossa, and returned on the same vessel, arriving in port on September 4. Mr. Bohlman, who has traveled a great deal, is authority for saying that the Barbarossa is the most quiet and comfortable steamer afloat and that it has the best chef and the most genial captain.

Captain F. Mentz in amiability of temperament can only be compared to the late Captain Von Gorsel, the hero of the lamented Elbe. Mr. and Mrs. Bohlmann remained most of the time in Berlin, Mr. Bohlmann's former home, where they lived at his mother's flat, who was delighted to receive her new daughter. This happy family gathering was made still happier when Mr. Bohlmann's distinguished brother, Prof. Dr. Georg Bohlmann joined the circle in August. Dr. Georg Bohlmann is one of the faculty of Göttingen University, where he created a chair for the mathematical basis of life insurance, on which subject he delivers a course of lectures in the year, which are frequented by a large international public. He also spends all his vacations at his mother's house. Mr. and Mrs. Bohlmann visited Nurenberg, Bayreuth, Dresden and Hannover. In Bayreuth they saw "Parsifal," with Van Dyck in the title role, Frau Wittich as Kundry and Knuepfer as Gurnemanz. In Dresden they witnessed a performance of "Tristan and Isolde," with Teresa Malten as the incomparably beautiful Isolde. If anyone thinks that Wagner's music ruins voices, he should have heard Teresa Malten, who has sung it for the past thirty years and who still sings it gloriously. In Hannover Mr. and Mrs. Bohlmann visited an old schoolmate, Mr. Hardeland, and his family, who is now the distinguished pastor of Christ Church in that beautiful city. Mr. and Mrs. Bohlmann also called on the Van der Stucken family and by them were most cordially received.

Mr. and Mrs. Bohlmann have resumed their classes at the Conservatory and Mr. Bohlmann says he never had a larger class in September. His reputation as a teacher is spreading.

Among the many visitors at the Cincinnati office of THE MUSICAL COURIER during the past week was H. B. Turpin, of Dayton, Ohio, who achieved such widely acknowledged success as director of the Dayton Music Festival last year. Mr. Turpin spent a delightful vacation of three months at Gloucester, Mass. He resumes his large vocal class in the Gem City October 7, and he will divide his professional time between Dayton and Columbus. Mr. Turpin expects to give a choral concert or two during the season.

Information comes here that Dr. Ziegfeld, president of the Chicago Musical College, has secured a new acquisition in the person of Bernard Hemmersbach, who was formerly connected with the College of Music. Mr Hemmersbach is a pianist born in Cologne, who for a long time made Paris his home. He studied in Cologn and won high honors at the Brussels Conservatory. H is a pupil of Massenet and Dieneur. His recitals in Pari were among the musical events of the gay Parisian capital last year.

H. G. Andrés left Cincinnati to-day on the Big Fou to settle his professional life permanently in New Yor city. This morning after the service in the Mound Stree Temple he was agreeably surprised by the congregatio which he served in the capacity of organist and choi master for the past thirty-three years. That is an enviab record. He was presented with a magnificent loving cu of solid silver and on behalf of the board of trustees wit a fat purse of money. Mr. Andrés is a pianist and o ganist of note. Not one in this city could play Beethov as he—with so much fire and interpretative force. T French delicacy he adds all the robustness of the Germa school. Mr. Andrés leaves a void which it will be difi cult to fill. But Cincinnati's loss will be New York gain, where no doubt he will soon assert his right to tal his place among the best and most representative of h musicians.

The musical features of the fall festival closing to-d. are much to be commended as evidences of cultivating higher and more æsthetic taste among the patrons of su events. Much credit is due for this to the manageme especially to A. Eugene Hall, to whose energy it is mair owing that the forces were so well brought together. B the newspapers expended, as usual, a great deal of "to myrot" in the so-called criticisms of the performanc The fact is Cincinnati was never before so cold of intel gent criticism. It is either highly diluted milk of t "sloppy" kind, or else a nauseating attempt to say son thing when there is nothing to say. One of these writ is continuously laboring to be facetious, when the o ridiculous thing about it is that he or she does not kn how very "funny" it is to strike continuously and ne hit the nail on the head. An analysis of the Attic st contained in the old classics might be of advantage. T other writer is a mere tyro, who evidently thinks it is n essary to analyze each musical phrase he uses before v turing to use it for the benefit of his readers. It looks s though he wrote his reviews with the aid of a musi dictionary. But really these writers are not to blame the condition of things in the newspapers. It is not at surprising to find a racehorse reporter detailed to wr up a musical criticism. Everything goes on the Americ daily newspaper when it comes to musical criticism.

One of the best performances on the Music Hall org during the festival was that by Mrs. Lillian Arkell-R. ford yesterday afternoon. It was a diversified progr and well suited to the audience. Mrs. Rixford understa the art of registration well, and, while she is technic up to the demands of a difficult repertory, she alw shows a high order of inteiligence in her playing.

Adolph Stadermann, of the College of Music facuy. played the Music Hall organ on Monday afternoon. I a miscellaneous program he was heard to great advantag especially in the Boellmann "Suite Gothique." His styl is serious and musicianly. He is a close student and is c quiring breadth.

Emma Heckle has returned from a delightful vaca on spent with her friends in the East. She has resumed e large vocal class at her studio in the Pike Building.

J. A. HOMA

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YOR

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMS

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Boohig

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, September 28, 1901.

Mrs. L. P. Morrill resumed teaching at her studio in the Oxford to-day, coming over from New York last evening, and will be in this city every Saturday during the season, the remainder of her time being spent in New York. During the summer Mrs. Morrill had a successful class of pupils at New London, Conn.

Miss Priscilla White, who is at the head of the vocal department at Lasell Seminary, has already a class double the number of last season and the work has hardly yet begun. In addition to the two days each week that she has arranged to be at the seminary it is probable that part if not the whole of another day will be devoted to her work there. Miss White is receiving pupils at her studio in the Pierce Building and the season promises to be an unusually busy one.

Many musicians from this city attended the music festival at Worcester during the week, by far the larger number going up on Thursday afternoon for the first performance of Mr. Chadwick's "Judith." Norman McLeod was present on Wednesday afternoon when his pupil, Miss Adelaide Griggs, appeared.

J. Melville Horner, the well-known baritone and teacher of singing, has returned from a vacation spent in the Maine woods, where he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dexter. Mr. Horner has taken a studio in the Pierce Building for the season. The Haverhill Gazette of recent date speaks in high terms of Mr. Horner's singing at a recital in that city.

Joseph Goodreault, a pupil of Madame Sargent-Goodelle, of Boston, who has been successfully singing in concert and opera in New York and the South the past season, sails the last of October for Milan, Italy, where he will continue his studies with the celebrated maestro Belasco.

Evelyn A. Fletcher-Copp has just closed the work of a large normal class and is now in New York for a few weeks, arranging the work of the Fletcher Music Method for the coming season in that city.

Dr. H. J. Stewart, organist and director of the choir of Trinity Church, is now fairly settled in his studio at Steinert Building, where he receives pupils in singing and interpretation of vocal music.

The first recital of the season by the Faelten Pianoforte School took place in Huntington Chambers Hall Tuesday evening, the occasion being the opening of the new hall as well. A large audience, including many friends of the school, was present, and listened with evident satisfaction to the program, which consisted of classical and modern music. The students who took part were Miss Ethel May Colgate, Paris, Tex.; Miss Caroline Cunningham, Cambridge; Miss Minna Gallagher, Malden; Miss Helen L. Masten, Roxbury; Miss Alice E. Parker, Boston; Miss Sarah McKeen Williams, Peacham, Vt.; Mr. Harry L. Buitekan, Boston, and Frank E. Heald, Brookline. Carl Faelten, Forrest J. Cressman and Bertram C. Henry, members of the faculty, also appeared. Upon a general invitation of the director, Carl Faelten, many of those present made a tour of inspection after the recital, visiting the new Faelten Hall and the teaching rooms, where Mr. and Mrs. Faelten, with members of the faculty, held an informal reception. Expressions of gratification were heard on every hand at the school's enviable accommodations and many congratulations and good wishes for a most successful season were forthcoming.

The Fadettes Woman's Orchestra, Mrs. Caroline B. Nichols, conductor, start out October 14 on their fourth annual tour of the United States and Canada. They open in Yarmouth, N. S., playing two weeks in the "Land of Evangeline"; then into Canada, later returning to the States. The orchestra numbers twenty players, most of whom have been members of the organization since its inception. Mary Reuck Wilczek, of New York, will be the violin soloist and concert mistress, and Miss Mildred Rogers, mezzo-soprano, of Portland, Me., is the vocalist chosen to assist the orchestra. Miss Rogers possesses a fine voice of great power and beauty; she sang the leading roles with the Bostonians last season. Her selections for this tour include "Carmena," by H. Lane Wilson; "My Love Is Come," Marzials; "Girls of Seville," Denza; Lullaby from "Jocelyn," Godard; "Parlate d'Amor," from "Faust"; Irish Folk-song, A. Foote; "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delila," Saint-Saëns.

Miss Emmeking and Miss Townsend, who have a studio at Huntington Chambers, announce a musical kindergarten for young pupils.

The first evening of the faculty course at the New England Conservatory of Music occurs next Wednesday at Sleeper Hall, when there will be a piano recital by George Proctor.

Miss Mary Monaghan, who is to sing the soprano part in the "Hymn of Praise" at the Maine Music Festival, is the young lady who made a remarkable and lasting success at the festival two years ago. Since that time she has been ill and only recently recovered her health sufficiently to resume her singing. Her voice is a pure soprano of the finest quality, under perfect control and of very extended range. She is to sing as a solo number the aria from David's "Pearl of Brazil."

H. Carleton Slack, with whom she is studying, predicts a splendid future for her. She is now considering an offer of a lucrative church position in New York.

Miss Rosetta Key will return to this city in October and resume her position as leader of the quartet at the North Church, Salem.

Carl Armbruster and Miss Pauline Cramer will arrive in this country about the middle of October. Mr. Armbruster will give a series of ten lectures on the life and works of Wagner at Chickering Hall on Monday and Thursday evenings, commencing October 31. These will be the only lectures given by Mr. Armbruster on the works of Wagner in Boston this season.

Boston Singing Club is the name chosen for the new musical organization recently formed by members of the choruses conducted by H. G. Tucker the past two seasons. The club will be directed by Mr. Tucker. The following named officers have been elected: Conductor, H. G. Tucker; secretary, Charles Delmont; treasurer, Charles A. Call; librarian, George Turner Phelps; directors, David E. Dow, M. J. Fenton, E. N. Goldrick, John Medway, H. M. Murdough, Charles P. Trickey, George H. Weale. The offices of president and vice-president will remain vacant for the present. The work laid out for the season has been selected from Mendelssohn, Tschaikowsky, Palestrina, Parker, Gallus—and the Mozart Requiem will be sung. The chorus numbers ninety voices, and two concerts will be given at Chickering Hall on January 22 and April 2.

Chambord Giguere, of Woonsocket, R. I., who studied in this city at the New England Conservatory of Music, and also with Joseph Emile Daudelin, has taken the first prize with distinction at the Brussels (Belgium) Conservatoty of Music.

MRS. ROBINSON-DUFF SAILS OCTOBER 8.—When Mrs. Sara Robinson-Duff returns to Europe on October 8 she will take with her a number of pupils, who will continue their studies with her in Paris. All of these young women have excellent voices said Mrs. Duff, and she added there would be no use going unless their voices were fine. During her stay here in New York Mrs. Duff has been more than busy conducting daily voice trials at her apartments at the Burlington, 10 West Thirtieth street.

MARGARET GOETZ.—Miss Margaret Goetz has returned to the city after a restful summer in the Berkshire Hills, and can be found in her new residence studio, 206 West Eighty-sixth street. She will fill a number of concert engagements this season and accept a limited number of pupils as usual.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

CLARA POOLE-KING,

Prima Donna Contralto

SEASON 1901-1902.

WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

Elsa Marshall,

Soprano.

222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON,

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES

Professor of Voice Production.

Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)

Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils

For Prospectus and Terms apply to

121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL

TENOR.

Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago.

THE Guilmant Organ School

(COPYRIGHT)

RE-OPENS

Monday, October 14th.

EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....

34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, September 26, 1901.

A NOTABLE recital, which Charles R. Baker announces as the inaugural event of the Chicago concert season, will be given on October 8 by William H. Sherwood in the beautified and enlarged University Hall, Fine Arts Building.

It is appropriate that this eminent pianist, whose triumphs at the Pan-American Exposition have recently been added to his many laurels, should be chosen for this auspicious occasion; while the fact that Mr. Sherwood has not of late been heard at a public recital in this city offers the irresistible charm of novelty.

And the all-absorbing question now is: What will he play? Will he let the people marvel at his versatility by interpreting Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann and half a dozen other composers.

One thing is certain: The American composer will not be forgotten, for Mr. Sherwood is his friend.

When the "King Dodo" performances reach their conclusion at the Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, on Saturday, October 5, the production may honorably claim the distinction of having run for twenty consecutive weeks. Upon a record so remarkably successful Louis Francis Brown, manager of Studebaker Hall, and Messrs. Pixley and Luders, composer and librettist, are to be congratulated. The "King Dodo" songs and choruses have become very popular in Chicago.

Emil Liebling announces that his class recitals will be held at Kimball Rehearsal Hall on Saturday afternoons, September 28, October 19, November 16, December 14, January 18, February 15, March 15, April 12, May 24 and June 21. The first program will include sonatas by Scarlatti, Weber, Beethoven and Schumann.

Electa Gifford, the soprano, whose operatic triumphs have frequently been recorded in THE MUSICAL COURIER, arrives here from New York this week to confer with her concert manager, Charles R. Baker, and also to fill a number of Western engagements.

Miss Gertrude Gane, a talented pianist, who for several years took lessons from Miss Mary Wood Chase, and later went to Berlin, where she studied with Barth, has returned to Chicago. The fact that she will continue to work under the guidance of the gifted American concert pianist, who was her former instructor, forcibly illustrates the loyalty of Miss Chase's pupils, and the high esteem in which she is held by them.

Pupils of William A. Willett, one of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory's well-known vocal instructors, are meeting with gratifying success. A soprano, Miss Elizabeth Edwards, has been appointed soloist at La Salle Avenue Baptist Church, in this city, while Miss Bertha Williams, another talented musician, is now director of the Taber (Ia.) College's department of singing.

The American Violin School will give a faculty and advanced students' recitals in Kimball Hall on Saturday, October 5, at 3:30 p. m., Mrs. Viola Frost Mixer, Miss Maude Wilson and Cyril Graham assisting. Violinists will include Joseph Vilim, W. H. Bond and Miss Winifred Townsend.

The Hamlin Company, of which Louis Evans is now president, announces that Theodore Spiering, the violinist, is under its exclusive concert direction. Anton Witek has informed the Hamlin Company of his decision not to visit America this season.

Frederick Warren, baritone of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, is arranging a series of Tuesday afternoon recitals to be given in his attractive studio. At the first of these events, on October 8, the program will consist of songs by Edward German, Edward MacDowell, Gounod, Dvorák, Foote, Tschaikowsky, Korbay, Grieg, Chadwick, Lang, Allitsen, Lohr and Andrè Messager.

September 28, 1901.

Since University Hall, Fine Arts Building, is now enlarged to such an extent that it is capable of accommodating practically all of the entertainments which heretofore have been held in Central Music Hall, the former henceforth will appropriately be known as the Music Hall, Fine Arts Building. In addition to the Sherwood opening event, Louis Francis Brown announces the following list of attractions, several of which have previously been mentioned in these columns: Fritz Kreisler, Charles Gregorowitch, Josef Hofmann, Madame Schumann-Heink, Plunket Greene, Max Heinrich, the Spiering Quartet, George Grossmith, Paul Blouet (Max O'Rell), Mme. Sarah Grand, Sir Robert Ball, the Cushing lectures, the Cornell Glee Club, the Chicago Orchestra program study classes, under the direction of Miss Anne Shaw Faulkner, and the Summy Ballad Concerts, while the Amateur Musical Club and the Woman's Club will use the Music Hall for their larger recitals and meetings.

THE AUDITORIUM'S CONSERVATORY FACULTY.

The Chicago Auditorium Conservatory's new and interesting calendar, published under the capable direction of Roy Arthur Hunt, manager, shows that the representative faculty includes the following names:

Frederic Grant Gleason, director.

Piano—Robert Stevens, director; Fay Hill, Guy Bevier Williams, Clara Cermak, Fredrik Nelson, Carl Everett Woodruff, Adele Wooster and Lillian Sargent.

Vocal—Herman L. Walker, Beatrix M. Peixotto, William A. Willett, Frederick Warren, Mrs. Ooliata Zimmerman, Elsbeth Korrer, Mme. De Norville and Mrs. Robert Clark.

Organ—Wilhelm Middelschulte and Walter Keller.

Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition and Orchestration—Frederic Grant Gleason and Walter Keller.

Violin—Leopold Kramer, Errico Sansone, Charles Quinn, Francesco Zito, Joseph Vilim, Adolph Loeb, Edna Crum and Philip A. Laffney.

Violoncello—Carl Klammsteiner.
Double Bass—F. T Edmunds.
Harp—Della Crysdale.
Flute—Wm. Z. Cole.
Oboe—J. Bareither.
Clarinet—Wm. Z. Cole.
Bassoon—F. Frenschild.
Cornet—John Quinn.
Horn—August Mueller.
Trombone—D. Stoelting.
Mandolin, Gutar and Banjo—Henry F. Meyers.
Children's Music.—Adele Wooster.

FINE ARTS DEPARTMENT.

Oil, Watercolor, Miniature, China Painting, Pyrography, Journalism, Newspaper Illustrating, Designing, Photographic Retouching and Coloring—Charles Kent Owen, Mrs. E. Schofield Wright, Teana McLennon-Hinman, May Armstrong, M. Ellen Iglehart, Mrs. H. Harshman, Hugh Stuart Campbell and Julia H. Thayer.

Foreign Languages—Mlle. Parcot, French; Louis Trevino, Spanish; Italian and German by native teachers.

Oratory, Dramatic Art, Physical Culture, Delsarte, Dramatic Expression and Rehearsal of Plays—Prof. Henry Dickson, director; John Lane O'Connor, Mrs. Henry Dickson, Mabel Lewis and Myrtle Moss Mericle.

School of Opera—J. Allen Preisch, director; Herman L. Walker, Mme. De Norville and Beatrix Peixotto.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY'S YEAR BOOK.

At its offices in Kimball Hall the Hamlin Company is now busily engaged preparing for this season's musical campaign. The attractively illustrated year book, issued

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.

LEONORA JACKSON
Assisted by HARRY J. FELLOWS, Tenor;
WILLIAM BAUER, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: New York, 31 Union Square West. Chicago, 71 Monroe St

this week, announces the installment of Louis Evans as president, and opens with this interesting paragraph:

"We take pleasure in presenting to the public this select list of high-class artists, which represents the finest talent to be obtained. Our policy for the coming season will be to carry but a few artists upon our list, but these few to be unexcelled, and as Chicago is the chief centre of the Middle States, we are in a position to furnish their services at the best possible terms. We are also continually in touch with all leading musicians throughout the country, and are prepared to negotiate for their services, upon request. We trust that the past high standard upon which our business has been conducted will commend us to the musical public generally, whose continued patronage is solicited."

In a recent interview with the writer, John J. Hattstaedt, director of the American Conservatory, gave a vivid account of his trip to Europe this summer. Switzerland, Holland, London and Paris were visited. Mr. Hattstaedt was much impressed with the beauties of The Hague, where he was entertained by the father of Jan Van Oordt, the violinist. In London he heard some good music, including a concert at Crystal Palace, but in Germany it was quiet, owing to the death of the Empress.

The desk which the director found on his return was a pleasant surprise and a formidable assurance of the high esteem in which he is held by his faculty. During his absence Karleton Hackett looked after the interests of the conservatory, which is in a prosperous condition.

The American Conservatory makes the following announcement: "Believing that there is a strong demand for singers who are thoroughly conversant with current church music and choir singing, the American Conservatory has organized a department for practical choir training under the capable management of Cyril Graham, an experienced choir master."

Allen Spencer will give a recital on Thursday evening, October 17, at Kimball Hall. He will be assisted by Miss Elaine De Sellem, contralto.

Miss Clara Hener, a talented pupil of Madame Ragna Linne, of the American Conservatory, has accepted a position as vocal instructor at Christian College, Columbus, Mo.

Miss Florence Roberts, a young but capable pianist, who formerly was a pupil of John J. Hattstaedt, director of the American conservatory, has been engaged as teacher of piano playing at Harlin College, Mexico, Mo.

Mabelle Crawford, contralto, has been selected as the artist to assist Mr. Sherwood at his recital in this city on October 8.

Electa Gifford, soprano, and Clara Murray, harpist, will take part in a concert to be given under the auspices of the St. Cecelia Club, in the opera house, Flint, Mich., on a February date to be announced later.

Charles W. Cark's new circular is in much demand at the Hamlin Company's headquarters, for it contains an excellent picture of the well-known basso.

Mrs. Sue Harrington Furbeck, contralto, will sing at the Aurora (Ill.) Orchestra's first concert on December 4.

The favor in which Holmes Cowper, the tenor, is held locally, is evidenced by the fact that his services have been secured for private events in this city on October 3, December 29, March 30 and February 27.

A visitor at THE MUSICAL COURIER'S Chicago office this week was George Arthur Daniells, a member of the well-known Emanuel Presbyterian Church Choir, in Milwaukee.

Herman Diestel, 'cellist of the Spiering Quartet, has returned from a hunting expedition, and has resumed teaching at the Spiering Violin School, in the Fine Arts Building.

The Chicago Musical College states that Herman Devries' engagements with the Castle Square Opera Company are so arranged that they will not interfere with his duties as a teacher.

Mr. Gauthier, of the Chicago Musical College, visited Paris this summer, as did several other prominent members of the faculty. Concerts, lectures and recitals will begin at the college in October.

The Chicago Musical College Quartet, comprising Madame Clary Ganz, Mabel Shorey, Herman Devries and Charles Gauthier, contributed valuable assistance at memorial services held here in honor of the late President. At the Marquette Club's great meeting in the Auditorium Clarence Dickinson played Chopin's "Funeral March."

In the death of Miss Maude Jennings, whose funeral was held last Sunday, Chicago loses one of its gifted young concert pianists. A pupil of Mark Skinner Lansing and later of Emil Liebling, she enjoyed a large teaching clientèle, and for years was a prominent member of the Amateur Musical Club.

CHARLES R. BAKER'S SUCCESS.

When a new enterprise is undertaken the question invariably arises: Will it succeed?

Every week THE MUSICAL COURIER receives news of important dates which Mr. Baker has secured for his artists.

One of the most successful singers under Mr. Baker's direction this season is Glenn Hall, whose many engagements are forcibly illustrating the tenor's exceptional popularity.

Unique offers are received by Chicago managers occasionally. This week an Ohio lady writes to Mr. Baker stating that if Mr. Sherwood will go to her town and play they will give the pianist room and board and a handsome fee of $25.

THE MUSICAL COURIER learns from an official source that a statement circulated elsewhere to the effect that a well-known Chicago tenor has been engaged to fill Edward Lloyd's place at the Apollo Club's concert is erroneous. However, it is to be hoped that future developments may render the announcement simply premature.

Mrs. Theodore Worcester, the talented and accomplished pianist, will give a recital at the New England Church, Aurora, Ill., on November 2, at 2:30 p. m. The program will be long and exacting, having been so arranged for the benefit of many music students who will attend the event. Mrs. Worcester's repertory is of rare interest, embracing as it does compositions by Liadoff, Balakireff, Brahms, Schubert, Henselt, Heymann, Jensen, Tschaikowsky, Glazounow, Tausig and many others. She will play frequently in public this season, making a specialty of school and club appearances.

On December 17 Charlotte Maconda, the eminent soprano, will be heard in this city.

And when are two of this season's distinguished visitors from London, England, to be heard here? Mr. Charlton and Mr. Wolfsohn, is Chicago to be denied the privilege of passing judgment upon Gregory Hast and Whitney Tew?

The art and music student element seems to be growing larger and more influential in Chicago, and this is not surprising, for in many respects the advantages which this city offers equal, if they do not surpass, the opportunities which New York or Boston afford.

Southerners who contemplate coming North to study look to the West as well as the East!

There are great artists here.

Remember that in this city Amy Fay's "Bernhardt of the Piano," the famous Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, has chosen to make her home.

ADELE LEWING'S COMPOSITIONS.—Benjamin Havens, of Tarboro, N. C., played Adele Lewing's Canzonetta and Gruss for piano at the summer school of music in Brookfield Centre, Conn., and they met with special favor, so he was obliged to repeat them at another concert.

AMY ROBIE.—Amy Robie, violinist, will return to New York October 8, and at once resume work at her studio, 184 West Eighty-second street. Her vacation has been spent in the Berkshire Hills, where she has had her share of engagements in concerts and recitals.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

Frederic Mariner,

TECHNIC SPECIALIST,

Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,

— NOW —

Director of the

Bangor Piano School,

BANGOR, ME.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

THE BERTHOLDT,
128 MARYLAND AVENUE, S. W.,
WASHINGTON, September 27, 1901.

AT the opening of the musical season many of the younger musicians are to be seen and heard vehemently seeking concert engagements. It has been my privilege to talk with a number of these and to make some attempt to put them on the right track. My endeavors in this direction are often unsuccessful, owing to a misunderstanding by the parties in question of conditions in Washington. In Washington an "esprit de corps" is lacking, and this is not in any degree the fault of any one person or set of people. It is rather the result of the general absence of factories and other large business houses from the city.

When the large business centres of the country are aroused to great activity by the advance of cold weather, or by general prosperity, Washington gets only a little wave from the swell. The business in this city is then increased to some extent, but this increase is very small in comparison with the increase observable in other cities not suffering from the causes which afflict Washington. In other cities teachers fill up their music classes in September. Here many do not get fairly to work before December. Concerts in other cities are well started in October. Here they do not seem to get fairly under way before December or January.

In spite of these very obvious facts, musicians will continue in a vain endeavor to eke out a living in local concertizing. This is simply an impossibility. It is impossible for the best musicians in town to earn a living by giving concerts in Washington. No matter how many years they have lived here, or what a large following they have, it cannot be done. There is therefore only one thing to be done by a Washington musician who desires to gain a livelihood through concert engagements, and that is to build up an outside patronage. Instead of looking for engagements in Washington, he must look for engagements in Washington, Richmond, Baltimore, Philadelphia and many other places.

Lotta Mills, Maud Powell and other musicians living in Washington climbed up the ladder of their profession in this way: If Maud Powell had been as short-sighted as many of our musicians are she would still be a local celebrity, and New York, Paris and London would never have heard of her. Instead of putting all of one's energy into the useless task of attempting the impossible, why not devote some of that energy to a future possibility? Instead of wasting all the year trying to get engagements in Washington, why not spend a little time, energy and money in getting outside engagements in the future? It is not necessary to move out of Washington. Every bit of this can be done here. The artist may not succeed at once, but in a few years the success will be sure to come.

The possibilities for a good Washington singer or player to achieve a national reputation are very large. Just as New York is the Mecca to which Washington looks for its concert soloists, so Washington is a sort of Mecca to the South. Daughters are sent to Washington from homes throughout the South to complete their education. Why, then, should not the South look to Washington for its solists? Why should not the musical clubs and societies of the South consider Washington as the headquarters for vocalists, violinists and other solo artists for their concerts?

I will answer that question. It is because of the wretched and narrow-minded business management of most of our local musicians. They will not take the slightest trouble or spend the least amount of money in advertising themselves or pushing their claims to notice outside of their own little town. They know that they can't earn enough here by singing and playing in public to support a cat—even a poorly dressed one—but they are content to accept the situation as they find it and do nothing.

The idea of making a Southern tour is one which should appeal to the first-rate artist, after the splendid success made by Anton Kaspar last spring. The people of the South have a fine appreciation of good music and are warm in their expressions of approval. Any first-rate artist who is properly managed can be sure of a cordial welcome from a Southern audience.

This same principle of "outside engagements" can also be applied to the teaching profession of Washington. If you are teaching here for $3 an hour, why not make a little trip out of town two days a week and charge $4 or $5? If you set your own value at $3, surely no one will think you are worth any more than that, and New York teachers who may not be any better, but who charge more, will be considered by your pupils as being superior to yourself. If you have no outside clientèle, just do a little advertising this year and next in the right way and see if results do not come after that.

Now the composers of Washington are really in hard luck, for the publishing houses here do not believe in advertising their goods outside of the city, and so depend on the lamentably small local patronage to sell their article. Consequently the sales of a Washington composer's music in New York, Chicago and other cities is very limited. That is why a Washington man finds it so hard to build up the reputation necessary to make people buy his songs. This does not apply of course in the case of Dr. Bischoff and a few other composers when they have their compositions published by well-known music publishers, but the publication of a piece by a local house that spends no money on outside advertising is a fatal element in its success.

Nearly all of our musical folk have returned to town now, and are preparing for their winter's work. Among the singing teachers, Mme. Holberg, Mrs. Benson, Mr. McFall, Mrs. Hormess, Mr. Freeman, Mrs. Oldberg, Mrs. Daly, Mr. Simon, Mrs. Mills, Dr. Bischoff, Dr. Kimball, Miss Wilson, Mr. Heimendahl and Mr. Lawrence have opened their studios. Mrs. Benson having left the Sanders & Stayman studio, and having found new quarters on G street. Miss Amy Law, a pupil of Albert Gérard-Thiers, announces that she has opened a vocal studio on G street. Those among the pianists who have changed studios are Arthur Mayo, Mary Kimball, John Theophil, Frank Gebest. Mrs. Frank Byram and Mrs. Routt-Johnson are also at work, as are also Mr. and Mrs. Lent, Sol Minster, Herman Rakemann, Wenceslao Villalpando, and many others, too numerous to mention. A large number of Washington musicians spent the summer or a part of it at Bar Harbor, Me., while another contingent, including Mr. and Mrs. Lent, summered in the Alleghenies. Mr. and Mrs. McFall were at Asbury Park, and Henry Xander was in California, while Anton Kaspar and Mrs. Kaspar were in Europe, the former studying in Paris. Miss Benson and Miss Cryder both spent some time in New York, the former devoting her attention to opera.

The ever-popular Mrs. Brooks, of the Washington Capital, has made herself famous by her designation of the palpitating sounds made by many of our sopranos as "palsied tones." Mrs. Brooks is a singer herself and will be heard in Washington this season.

BERENICE THOMPSON.

STELLA HADDEN ALEXANDER HAS RETURNED.—Mrs. Stella Hadden Alexander has returned to town from her trip into the country and sojourn by the seashore. The Powers-Alexander studios, to be jointly conducted at Carnegie Hall by Mrs. Alexander and Francis Fischer Powers, opened yesterday, and a busy winter may be predicted for these musicians and their associates.

At Lebanon, Pa., Mrs. Alexander gave a piano recital on September 12, which proved a real artistic event in that vicinity. Following are extracts from the Lebanon newspapers about her playing:

It may be said without fear of contradiction that Mrs. Stella Hadden Alexander's piano recital given Friday evening in Sons of America Hall, under the auspices of the ladies' auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., was the finest ever heard here. That the audience, among whom were most of Lebanon's best musical talent, thoroughly recognized Mrs. Alexander's great ability and appreciated the excellence of the program was fully attested by the encores given her. Although this is only her fourth season, nevertheless she is considered one of the best pianists before the public today. Her program contained MacDowell's "Sonata Tragica," "March Wind" and Polonaise in E minor, and selections from Bach, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, Raff, Templeton Strong and Moszkowski, and in its rendition she showed brilliant technic, admirable phrasing and musical intelligence. Mrs. Alexander is a pleasing speaker, and her introductory remarks were well received. An additional charm is a commanding and graceful figure.—Lebanon News.

Music hath charms when rendered by an artist, and it is needless to say that Mrs. Alexander held her audience enraptured all the way through her rendition.

She announced before she began that it might be appropriate to play a few national airs at the outstart, under the present conditions of the country, but that she preferred to reproduce the themes of the eminent patriotic music writer, MacDowell. As will be noticed by the program, three of the opening pieces were by this composer.

Mrs. Alexander has wonderful talent and memory. She played every selection of the entire program without a written note before her!

The "March Wind," op. 46, No. 10, was a realistic musical demonstration. All of the numbers were decidedly interesting especially to the musically inclined.

"The Elf" and "Music Box" were exceptionally pretty and catchy bits, the latter taking the ear of the audience so that a perfect quiet prevailed, and each faint note was heard in the farthest corner of the large hall.

The applause at the finish of each number was almost incessant. In Mrs. Hadden Alexander Lebanon music lovers and critics have before them a performer of rare merit, and they may congratulate themselves upon having been able to have her here for an evening. She makes a piano talk.

Mrs. Alexander's personality is charming and the manner in which she entertains an audience is delightful.—Lebanon Evening Reporter, September 21, 1901.

EXAMINATIONS FOR ENTRANCE TO THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY ORCHESTRA.—The entrance examinations to the orchestral classes at the National Conservatory will be held to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon from 2 until 3 p. m. The orchestra will be, as formerly, under the direction of Leo Schulz. The instructors of the various orchestral instruments are the best to be had, the teacher not only giving lessons, but playing beside the pupil in the rehearsals and concerts. The fourth series of public concerts will take place during the season (dates will be given out later) at the Madison Square Garden Concert Hall. The soloists will be the advanced pupils of the National Conservatory.

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, McCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public.
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. EVANS VON KLENNER
School of Vocal Music.
Voice Culture, Style and Repertoire in Four Languages.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
RESUMES TEACHING AT NEW RESIDENCE-STUDIO,
230 WEST 52d STREET,
SEPTEMBER 18.

VAN YORX Tenor
6 E. 17th St.
NEW YORK

MUSIC IN BROOKLYN.

WITH the United Singers of Brooklyn to provide the musical program, "German Day," at Prospect Park attracted a great assembly of people last Sunday afternoon to Brooklyn's beautiful recreation park. It is never safe to guess at numbers, but it was estimated that 10,000 attended the concert while the park at other points was also crowded with people attracted by the ceremonies. Arthur Claassen, the conductor of the United Singers, directed the musical program. The busts of Mozart and Beethoven, which the Brooklyn singers won at the Saengerfests held in New York in 1894 and in Philadelphia in 1897, were decorated with wreaths. At the ceremonies addresses were made by August Tiemann, president of the United Singers, and George V. Brower, commissioner of the Brooklyn Parks. As a tribute to the memory of the late President McKinley, the orchestra played at the opening of the concert program the dead march from "Saul" and the singers as a memorial sang "Stumm schläft der Sänger," by Silcher. The other choral numbers included "Das ist der Tag des Herrn," by Kreutzer; "By Lictchen am Haus," Pfeil; "Robin Adair," arranged by Dudley Buck, and Arthur Claassen's song with orchestral accompaniment, "Deutscher Sang and Deutches wort." At the close of the concert all united in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the late President McKinley's favorite hymn. Shannon's Twenty-third Regiment Band assisted at the ceremonies.

The Brooklyn Liederkranz will hold an election for officers on Sunday, October 13.

Mrs. Arthur Claassen and her children sailed on the Barbarossa from Bremen last Saturday. They have been in Germany since the spring. Mr. Claassen, who joined his family abroad in July, returned to Brooklyn three weeks ago.

The Arion Singing Society will perform Strauss' "Fledermaus" at the clubhouse on October 20, and later will repeat the performance in public for the benefit of charity.

The Temple Choir, organized seven years ago by E. M. Bowman, is rehearsing some of the music to be sung on Founder's Night, November 7. Next week THE MUSICAL COURIER will announce other concerts and musical evenings to be undertaken this season by the members of the Temple Choir and their faithful and accomplished leader, Mr. Bowman.

PLATON BROUNOFF.—A glance at the unique circular just issued by Mr. Brounoff shows the varied attainments of the man. He is conductor of the Russian Imperial Orchestra (which may number from fifteen to fifty men, as desired) and of the Russian Capella, which consists of from four to sixty singers in national peasant costume. He will also continue his original lecture-recitals on "Russian Life and Music," also orchestral concerts and music festivals of classical, modern and popular compositions of all nations, given by Mr. Brounoff and the Russian Imperial Orchestra in national costume, assisted by two soloists (vocal and instrumental). During last season Mr. Brounoff had some prominent engagements as lecturer, as follows: Harvard Club, Roselle, N. J.; New York State Music Teachers' Convention, Saratoga, N. Y.; Educational Alliance, New York; Board of Education (two lectures), New York; "Old First" Presbyterian Church (two lectures), New York; Philharmonic Club, Washington, D. C.; Women's Philharmonic Society, Carnegie Hall, New York; Musical Culture Club, Hornellsville, N. Y.; Engleside Girls' School, New Milford, Conn.; Montclair Club, Montclair, N. J.; Educational Alliance, New York; Recreation Rooms Settlement, and at private residences. He has been re-engaged by the Engleside Girls' School, New Milford, Conn., and other engagements are pending.

HANCHETT.—Dr. Henry G. Hanchett has already made engagements for the coming season that will insure him a time of great activity. He has been engaged for sixteen lecture-recitals before the Brooklyn Institute, and his tour in January and February will be the most extensive he has yet undertaken, as it will include a number of points in Texas, a State which he has never visited, but from which he has had many pupils in attendance upon his summer school of musical art in Monteagle, Tenn. The coming series of recitals before the Brooklyn Institute will bring his total number of appearances before that body up to more than 100 during seven consecutive years. A stronger commendation of Dr. Hanchett's work could hardly be written, for the Brooklyn Institute is accustomed to have the best of music—choral, orchestral, chamber and solo—in concerts and as illustrations of lectures, and it has a large number of concerts every season. Dr. Hanchett's audiences at his Institute recitals are constantly growing as the special excellence both of his playing and of his verbal interpretations of musical philosophy become better known. The interest in the coming courses will be greatly augmented by the assistance at some of the concerts of the Maxwell Orchestra of about twenty-five musicians, under Dr. Hanchett's direction.

SARA ANDERSON ENGAGED.—The Philharmonic Club, of Minneapolis, Minn., will present a miscellaneous program early in February, 1902. Sara Anderson, soprano, has been engaged as soloist.

Obituary.

MRS. HOWARD BROCKWAY.

THE many friends and colleagues of Howard Brockway, the pianist and composer, deeply sympathize with him in his sad bereavement over the death of his wife, Annabel Boise Brockway. While returning to the city from the country last Thursday Mrs. Brockway jumped from the rear platform of an express train of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad near Congers, N. Y. Reports all state that she was instantly killed. On the train with Mrs. Brockway at the time were her mother-in-law, Mrs. Clara Brockway; her little daughter Sylvia and her sister, Miss Catherine Boise. Before entering the tunnel near Congers Mrs. Brockway had changed her seat, and when the train again pulled out into the daylight Mrs. Brockway's relatives missed her, and in the search they were horrified in learning of her terrible act. Mrs. Brockway had been in ill-health. She suffered at times from mental depression and melancholia. The body was brought to the city on Thursday night and taken to Mr. Brockway's home, 317 West Ninety-second street. Mrs. Brockway was an accomplished musician. Her father, Otis Boise, formerly professor of harmony at the Royal Conservatory of Music at Berlin, is now a member of the faculty of Peabody Institute, Baltimore. Mrs. Brockway was married to Mr. Brockway six years ago. She was thirty years old.

MRS. EMIL GRAMM.

Mrs. Marie Schelle Gramm, wife of Emil Gramm, a leading viola player of this city, died last Saturday at her home, 1771 Madison avenue. She had been critically ill, and her death resulted from a complication of diseases. Mrs. Gramm was in former years a favorite concert singer. In society and in her home life she was a woman greatly admired for her beauty and rare womanly charm. She was born in Buffalo forty-three years ago. Her musical studies began at her home, and later she went to Germany, where she remained a number of years studying with prominent masters. She returned to the United States in 1881 and devoted herself to concert and church singing. She was a soprano, and for many years sang in the choir of St. Thomas Protestant Episcopal Church, corner Fifth avenue and Fifty-third street. The funeral services were held from this church last Monday morning. The interment was private. Mrs. Gramm is survived by her husband and two children. Her youngest is a gifted musician, playing the violin with skill and understanding.

A SAAR CIRCULAR.—Louis V. Saar has issued an artistic circular. The front page contains a beautiful steel engraving of the composer reproduced from a painting, while the body of the circular contains criticisms taken from leading newspapers in Europe and America.

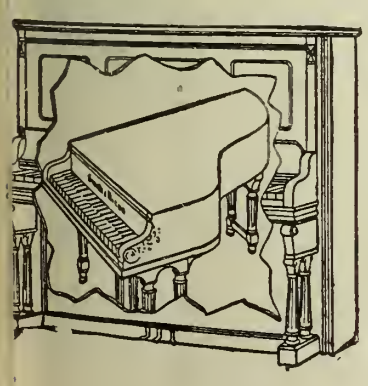
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

AMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
13 rue Bassano (Etoile), PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production.
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1123.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera. 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States,	$5.00
Great Britain,	£1 5s.	Austria,	15 fl.
France,	31.25 fr.	Italy,	31.25 fr.
Germany,	25 m.	Russia,	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months	$25.00	Nine months	$75.00
Six Months	50.00	Twelve Months	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months	$75.00
One inch, 6 months	125.00
One inch, 1 year	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion	175.00
One Column	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

GABRILOWITSCH, the piano virtuoso, has secured a highly satisfactory and remunerative contract for Russia the coming season, and will not play in the United States until the season 1902-3. His success in this country has advanced his European interests materially.

ONE of the most exasperating things at the Pan-American are the voices of the people from Western New York and the Middle West. A hard, acid treble greets one at every turn, and the voices of the men from these sections are not much more agreeable. How soothing to the ears in all this babel is the occasional refined conversation from the well-bred resident of New York city or Boston, or the mellifluous address of the native from Maryland or Virginia. The United States is a rich country, and it is fondly to be hoped that every mother's daughter and father's son will in the course of time be rich enough to afford several years' study in voice culture. It will take years to reform this national defect.

OCTOBER, the month of the opal and autumnal reorganization in domestic, commercial and civic life, is the month of the year loved by the philosopher, and generally a favorite with the artist. It is possible in this climate to do all things in this glorious autumn month. Both indoors and outdoors life is enjoyable. The country is beautiful and invigorating, and the town is a beehive of activity, and health-giving, too. Everyone but the professional idlers gets into harness for the year's work in these days of early sunsets and long evenings. Publishing as we have during the months of this year a list of famous and prominent musicians, we refer in this instalment to the names of composers, instrumentalists and singers born in the month of October. As in our previous articles, the astrological significance of the more conspicuous men will be briefly considered. In some of our earlier editorials we made disavowals of astrology as an exact and accepted science, but honest astrologers will not take offense at sincere agnosticism, for do not thousands stand in the same attitude toward religion, and, most remarkable of all, toward the medical science? There is always a chance of the man on the fence leaping over on one side or the other. As a study astrology is intensely interesting, and those who have studied it longest are the last to be discouraged by ridicule and skepticism. A man who has opinions and sticks to them is the man most likely to cement his ties of friendship, and a man with a brood of strong friends cannot be injured by his enemies.

MUSICIANS BORN IN OCTOBER.

The zodiacal sign Libra prevails when October begins, and, indeed, has prevailed since on or about September 22. Those born from October 1 to October 22 are fully in the sign Libra, which translated into plain English means the scales. Libra is the second sign in the Air Triplicity, and generally a superior nature is attributed to the Libra man or woman. Inspiration is one of the strong endowments of the Libra person. This does not imply, however, that every Libra man is inspired. Heredity, environment and, as the astrologers claim, position of the planets at the hour of birth are all factors to be considered in writing a horoscope.

Giuseppi Verdi, born at Roncole, Italy, October 9 (some have October 10), 1813, is the greatest musical genius born in October under the sign Libra. Franz Liszt was born October 22, a date in the astrological divisions where Libra ends and Scorpio begins. Verdi died January 27 last, mourned by the whole musical world, the grand old man in music. Other musicians and composers born in October under the sway of Libra who have fame to their credit include:

October 3 (1828), Waldemar Bargiel, died February 24, 1897; October 6 (1820), Jenny Lind died November 2, 1887; October 7 (1821), Friedrich Kiel, died September 14, 1885; October 8 (1585), Heinrich Schütz, died November 6, 1672 October 9 (1835), Charles Camille Saint-Saëns still living; October 10 (1863), Alexander Siloti still living; October 11 (1835), Theodore Thomas still very much alive; October 12 (1835), Arthur Nikisch, still very much alive (it will be observed that Saint-Saëns, Thomas and Nikisch were born in the same year—1835); October 13 (1792 Moritz Hauptmann, died January 3, 1868; October 15 (1818), Alexander Dreyschock, died April 1 1869; October 18 (1706), Baldassarre Galuppi, died January 3, 1784; October 21 (1822 John Sims Reeves, still in the land of the living.

Franz Liszt, born at Raiding, October 22, 181 and died at Bayreuth, July 31, 1886, is the greate musician born in October in the sign Scorpio middle sign of the Water Triplicity. The othe musicians who became famous or prominent, bor in October under Scorpio, are as follows:

October 23 (1803), Gustav Albert Lortzing, die January 21, 1851; October 24 (1811), Ferdinan von Hiller, died May 10, 1885; October 25 (183 Georges Bizet, died June 3, 1875; October (1825), Johann Strauss, Jr., the "waltz king," die June 3, 1899 (it will be observed that Bizet an Strauss were born on the same day of the mont and both died in the month of June); October (1782), Niccolo Paganini, died May 27, 1840.

Certain traits and tendencies have been ascrib to persons born in each sign, and while it is a mitted that the description may fail to satisfa torily fit the individual, the astrologers declare th the domains are unfailing. There are four doma in the zodiacal sphere, namely, fire, water, air a earth. Three signs in each domain complete te cycle of twelve zodiacal signs. The fire and wat people are totally unlike, and there is no resemblance in the characteristics of people born in r and people born in earth. Like everyone who tak up a study seriously, the writer of this series of articles published in THE MUSICAL COURIER s discovered something new, or rather somethg that none of the authorities stated, and the new co covery in this instance is just to say to the interested in the occult and mysterious laws of e universe that the greatest composers were bo in the domains of fire and air. Illustrations we given in former articles by quoting Bach, Be thoven, Haydn, Rubinstein and MacDowell as born in fire, and Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssoh Schumann, Wagner, Verdi, Gounod and Richa Strauss among those born in air. By astrologe it is claimed that the fire and air people are mo volatile than the people born in either water o earth. But it is not the purpose here to enter pe deeply into the analysis of the astrological signs

Our readers born in the sign Libra will kn whether the description fits them. Here, then an outline of the supposed traits of the Libra pe son: Generous, magnetic, enthusiastic, intuiti imaginative, love for the beautiful, very often ex travagant, loyal in friendship, and absolutely im pervious to disaster or defeat. A ray of hope is arouse the Libra member of the home to "bolu serenely," while the other members of the fa il still lie crushed over some domestic misfortu Constant and true as friends, Libra people, pa ticularly Libra men, are prone to faithlessnes in their love relations. Ever longing for new fe and scenes, the Libra man frequently interprets th law for himself, but, then, there are exceptions ev among the Libra men.

The characteristics of Scorpio and Sagitta in will be considered in the issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER of Wednesday, November 6.

"THE motions of his spirit dull as night and his affections dark as Erebus." Czolgosz, the assassin! fit only for treason, stratagems and spoils; and yet less execrable, being but an individual, than the mass of individuals whose teachings have been exemplified with such sudden and startling force. Like a thunderbolt came the blow that plunged the Nation into mourning. Like a lightning stroke it announced a gathering of forces over which as yet there is little control.

MUSIC AND ANARCHY.

From its special point of vantage THE MUSICAL COURIER would like to ask what part musicians have played in the various assassinations, murders and conspiracies to murder that have recently blotted the pages of history? How far have musicians helped along rebellion against law and order, and against the rulers who represent these safeguards of civilization Are Nihilists, Anarchists and rabid Socialists conspicuous for musical attainments, musical gifts or even for interest in musical matters? Is the rank and file of Anarchists recruited from musicians, professional or amateur? Were the murderers of the Empress Elizabeth, of President Carnot, of King Humbert, or the would-be murderers of the Czar, the Emperor William and Queen Victoria known to be associated with musical affairs? And what of those who in a quarter of a century have shot down in such dastardly way three of our own rulers, each ruler one of whom the Nation could say, "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" What of them, the murderers—Booth, a cultured fanatic; Guiteau, feeble minded egotist! Czolgosz, half witted Anarchist; were they students, teachers or upholders of music? And what of Johann Most and Emma Goldman and others equally guilty, though less conspicuous To put the question fairly again, are the members of Anarchistic associations interested in music at all? Do they have good music at their meetings? Do they attend operas and concerts? Do they have music in their homes, or train their children to delight in a "concord of sweet sounds"?

No. We can safely answer no.

Music by its very nature is a powerful support to law and order; though it may at times be degraded to incite to deeds of lawlessness, so also may literature or any other art. Music is based on immutable laws and presupposes for its proper comprehension (we do not speak now of its emotional appeal, or of any emotional interpretation of its meaning) the same mental faculties that distinguish the mathematician and the scientist. The greatest composers and teachers, some interpreters even, prove this beyond a doubt. No doubt is likely to arise, however, except among those who are ignorant of the structural basis of music, or who fail to see its relation to cosmic laws.

It has been unfortunately too much the custom for writers upon musical topics to look at music in its emotional aspect. True, music has incalculable value regarded as an outlet for emotion which otherwise might find some dangerous form of issue, dangerous either to the individual or the community. But regarded as a study it is disciplinary; it demands strenuous mental effort; for technical proficiency it requires, except in the case of a rare type of genius, constant self-abnegation and self-control.

There is something antagonistic indeed in the juxtaposition of the words, music and Anarchy. Disruption and harmony. Even the most practical minded man, averse to considering music anything but a toy, a plaything, must admit that it is not from the musical world that Anarchists come forth to set themselves against the laws of the land; that land which protects them; the land in which they claim the right to make their homes; the land wherein they depend upon their law-abiding neighbors to enable them to rely indeed upon a non-Anarchistic community to give them food and shelter and wages and social countenance. Is there any better way for this same land to dispose of them than to send them to some one of our newly acquired islands; allow them to form a penal colony by themselves, free from outside influences, governed entirely by each other; a great go-as-you-please community? Thus they might test their own doctrines.

In such colony would music hold an honored place? We doubt it. Court records show that musicians are with rare exceptions peaceable, law-abiding citizens. The divorce records are another matter—an individual story. "There is no doubt," says Luther, "that the seeds of many virtues are in such hearts as are devoted to music."

THE MUSICIAN AS A CITIZEN.

Individually the musician may like to follow his own will, so far as personal pleasure is concerned, or what he thinks is pleasure, but in the large sense he is obedient to the Government, he upholds its laws, he helps to keep the social fabric intact. He may not be conspicuous politically, but he is instrumental in forwarding the best interests of the community in a myriad minor ways, which pass unnoticed unless there arises some occasion for calling attention to their cumulative value. To one who knows the musician as THE MUSICAL COURIER may claim to know him, knows his virtues, his foibles and his failings, he will seem to amply deserve the title of good citizen, best expressed by the old Latin term, civilis.

The general bent of his mind enables him to appreciate, however unconsciously to himself, the necessity of all things working in accordance with the higher laws of the universe, laws discovered by the students of nature, of religion, of science, of sociology. He may not, we emphasize, always think definitely about subjects not directly bearing upon his profession, but his inner convictions are shown by his attitude toward the community and by his fulfillment of the responsibilities which he assumes. His positive value as an integral part of the social order should not be overlooked while we are all peering into the causes of the present tendencies to anarchy and social disruption. We are not alarmists; but if we consider the increasing number of murders, the lynchings and torturing of negroes in the South and West, at the evidences everywhere of a desire to resort to brute force instead of waiting upon the arm of the law; if we note the sullen mutterings of labor against capital and the antipathy to trusts, even such a trust as directly and indirectly profits every workingman associated with it—if we consider all these things we can scarcely fail to see the possibility that the next war in which these United States take part will be an internal social war, a war primarily incited by Anarchists and fomented by the disaffected of all classes.

But it is not the musician who will fight with those whose reasoning is illogical and whose methods are barbaric. His profession, we repeat, taken in that higher aspect by which we alone have the right to judge, inclines him to self-control, to put the part subordinate to the whole, to subdue self for the sake of an ultimate end. This end may indeed be a selfish one, but it is not destructively so to others.

VALUE OF NATIONAL STUDY.

While we cannot suggest music as a cure-all for social ills, we can conscientiously advocate a widespread, intelligent study of music as an assistance toward preserving peace. Let the whole nation become more musical. Let the love for music be fostered in all classes; let it especially be taught seriously in the public schools; and, above all, taught in every place where it can reach those who are inclined to dwell upon fancied grievances against society at large. The history of nations shows how often increase of luxury and the centring of wealth in an artistocratic class cause a reversion to murderous impulses, causes what might be called a minor back-running wave to savagery. But in this age such reversionary tendencies may surely be met and checked. And among the various controlling agencies, punitive or restrictive, or practical or æsthetic, is any more deserving of attention than the disciplinary study of music—study of it intellectually, of the laws which have governed its development—laws which are comparatively little taught, comparatively little understood? Give music the same place in the school curriculum that is accorded to mathematics. Put it upon a par with mythology at least.

The result of such study, such recognition, would soon convince the skeptical in the religious world, the political world, the social world, that music is no child's play, but a man's work, and that it helps to the making of men, not to the brutalizing of them. And new emphasis would soon be given to the words of philosophers and thinkers, from Plato to Carlyle, in commendation of music as an aid to good government.

THE following letter from Richard Wagner, written in an Italian hand, and without capital letters, was addressed to Adolf Stahr, whose works, "The Life of Lessing," "A Year in Italy" and "Women in Goethe," are still remembered. Stahr had considerable musical talent, sang with a pleasing voice, and played and improvised on the piano. He had been corrector at Oldenburg, but the state of his health compelled him to resign the functions of a teacher. He resolved to be a writer, to get a divorce from his wife and to marry Fanny Lewald, and for all these reasons he betook himself to the city of Weimar, where the hereditary prince, the late Duke Carl Alexander, was his friend, and where he met Liszt, who had resided there since 1847. Stahr arrived with Fanny at Weimar April 30, 1851, where Liszt was surrounded by a regular court of pupils, among them Joachim and Hans von Bülow. Liszt was full of plans, the chief being a propaganda for Wagner. With this Stahr was in full sympathy, which he displayed in letters and articles to many journals. "Lohengrin," written between 1845 and 1847, was first performed at Weimar on Goethe's birthday, August 28, 1850, and Stahr heard the fifth performance, May 11, 1851, and wrote an article about it, which he either sent or had forwarded to Richard Wagner. The article gives the story of "Lohengrin" and adds an enthusiastic description of the impression it created. After speaking of Lohengrin's answer to Elsa,

WAGNER ON "LOHENGRIN."

> Ich muss! ich muss! ich muss! mein süsses Weib!
> Schon zürnt der Gral, bass ich ihm ferne bleib, he continues, "We might reply to him with Lessing, 'Kein Mensch muss müssen,' if we did not consider that Lohengrin had the misfortune of not being a man, but a god. * * * The poet had only one possible way of making this conclusion satisfactory, namely, by humanizing the myth. Lohengrin sacrifices his magic power and wisdom, his holiness and divinity, for the sake of love; he purchases the happiness of humanity by the weakness of humanity; he would win our hearts and raise us out of the dreamy symbolism of abstract transcendency into the bright realm of real liberty and noble humanity. Lohengrin, who, as a soldier of the Grail, sacrifices everything to preserve his position, may be a just expression of godlike transcendency of its 'in' and 'over' humanity (Un und Uebermenschlichkeit; to us who are men, and can only see and feel like men, to us he appears only as a spectral shadow of a view of the world, the passing of which both our reason and our conviction demand."

To this Wagner sent the following reply:

"MY MOST ESTEEMED FRIEND—You can most easily form a conception of the impression which your—just communicated—judgment on my 'Lohengrin' has produced on me when I tell you that hitherto, with a certain, hard to be defined smile, I have missed or rather seen untouched in all discussions of my work the one point which you have brought out with such drastic sharpness.

"Between my 'Lohengrin' and my present designs there lies a world. The horrible pain for all of us is when we involuntarily see our sloughed-off skin held up to us as our very shape and figure. If everything were as I wished it 'Lohengrin'—the writing falls in the year 1845—would have been long ago forgotten before new works which, sufficiently for me, prove my progress.

"Let us tell the tale. The music was completely ready in 1845. In 1848 comes the revolution. All vapor delusions fall from me, in 1849 I have to run away, I joyfully turn my back on the whole old rubbish, I take a free breath in a pamphlet, 'Art and Revolution,' I pull myself together seriously in a book, 'The Art Work of the Future,' I go so far as to break utterly (häuslich) with all the world. Then one day my eyes fall on the poor 'Lohengrin' score, I am sorry that it had never once been heard, and I write a couple of lines to Liszt; if it seems funny to him he still might have it studied at Weimar. Now, it was Liszt all over to take it seriously. As I have said, the fact that no one hit on the point which you touch made me almost laugh; now I laugh no more, but it is almost annoying to me that 'Lohengrin' should see the light. When you know my present poems you will know why.

"So far, so good! It delights me that once I assumed the Christian standpoint so obstinately, and that as an artist with perfect naïveté. When I had completed the poem of 'Tannhäuser' someone requested me to make Venus conquer Elizabeth. I found the notion very beautiful, only I said then I could not write 'Tannhäuser.' Against my already printed 'Lohengrin' one of my talented friends brought the fundamental objection that Lohengrin must finally become human. It is this objection that aroused your reproach. I actually began to reflect and to make for myself some sketches of alterations. I took all possible pains to lie to myself about a humiliated God, &c. Fortunately, none of these changes pleased my friend. Lohengrin must be what he was, that is what Christian folk have made him, if I would not fall from inconsequence into inconsequence. In perfect intoxication I plunged him into music, there was nothing else to do with him. So I saved myself from a rationalistic opera.

"I know what you understand of monotonous unrhythmical melody, the solution of which I think I shall give you, on my side theoretically, in the third part of my next book, 'Opera and Drama.' The fundamental principle does not lie in the music—for music can only be full-blown speech—but in speech itself, in the verses. We have at present only rude verses; no real ones. And my musical expression is connected only accidentally with speech; the essential, real connection had hitherto escaped me. And this I derived not from theory, although you will sooner see my theory than the practical work from which I drew the theory; this I did from my poem 'Siegfried's Death,' in which, quite by myself, I came on the speech which is necessary for music.

"In one thing you do me injustice. You call my Lohengrin a polemic against modern opera. You find a puritanic zeal in him. Well, do not call it a designed polemic. When I wrote the opera I was in a fashion possessed by the object, and could reach no other purpose than to present it full and luxuriant, 'recht tönend.' And this purpose lay so far from all protesting that I, on the contrary, overlooked everything which really made this work into a protest.

"Enough! I cannot at present criticise, and can perhaps never do so at all. But—if you knew how I felt to-day when I read your article! For six years I have been working with my pen over a 'Young Siegfried'; this very day I have sketched out perfectly (in dialogue) the closing scene, Brünnhilde's awakening. When you learn to know the scene think of me, how I must have felt when I heard you speak of me.

"Now I thank you, and hope we remain friends. Do you accept? Liszt wishes to have 'Young Siegfried' still kept secret. When I am ready with the verses I shall send it to Weimar. Liszt will at once communicate it to you, then I shall have leisure to write to you more and better.

"Farewell, and receive once more my most hearty thanks. Yours truly,

"RICHARD WAGNER.

"ENGE (near Zurich), May 31, 1851."

What talk of humanity, Christianity and protests! The "Lohengrin" story is a very pretty story, a variant of our old friends Cupid and Psyche, and Wagner saw clearly in those early days that the first duty of a poet, of a musician, of any artist, is to be possessed with his subject and do his best with it. A poem with a purpose is as bad as a novel with a purpose, and nearly as inartistic as a problem play. But, alas! how many problems and purposes have been found in "Tristan" and in "Parsifal"! How much program music afflicts the world!

TERESA CARRENO, the fascinating South American pianist, who made her farewell tour in this country last season, is to be married again, at least this interesting announcement was made in a cablegram from Berlin, published in the New York Herald last Saturday. This, by the way, will be this gifted and beautiful woman's fourth venture into the mystical and uncertain state of matrimony. According to the Herald cable Carreño will wed a brother of her second husband, Signor Tagliapietra. It is reported that the nuptials will take place early this month. In commenting upon Carreño's former husbands the writer in the Herald appears somewhat ironical in his descriptions, but that undoubtedly was unintentional on his part.

Here is an extract from the Herald:

Teresa Carreño's second husband was Signor Giovanni Tagliapietra, who came to this country as a baritone in an operatic company about twenty-five years ago, and has since remained in America. Several years ago he married the daughter of the late John D. Townsend, a noted lawyer, and has since made his home in the old Townsend residence, at No. 343 West Thirty-fourth street.

It was said at the Townsend home last night that Mr. and Mrs. Tagliapietra were at present on a trip to Boston, where they were staying at the Parker House. Much surprise was expressed at the news from Berlin, and while it pointed out that Signor Giovanni had three brothers, it was believed that the happy man in question was Signor Arthur.

Signor Arthur Tagliapietra was formerly an employee of a typewriter company in this city, but returned to Europe three years ago after a residence of twelve years here. As he is about forty-two years old, he will be ten years the junior of his wife. Teresa Carreño's first and third husbands were Emilie Lauret, a noted violinist of Leipsic, and Eugen d'Albert, an equally prominent pianist.

Shades of Anton Rubinstein and Franz Liszt! What will Eugen d'Albert think when he finds himself referred to as "an equally prominent pianist."

THE pious people of Oberammergau are about to erect a small theatre in which the actors selected for the performances in 1910 can practice. It is intended also to give performances every summer in order to attract strangers to the village and make it a summer resort. Lang, the Christ of 1900, was taken this year to Bayreuth by an English family, and returned full of enthusiasm for "Parsifal." He says he will play Christ much better in 1910.

OFFICIAL FROM BERLIN.

THERE is no reason to doubt that a début and even a career on the operatic stage is not the most pleasant means of obtaining unadulterated happiness. At the same time no laws have as yet been passed anywhere, not even near Timbuctoo, that compel young ladies or young men who have voices, or who believe that they have voices, or who know how to sing even without voices, to become opera artists; when they enter upon that sacred and select career now identified with some of the most glorious names in the history of the vocal art, they do so always voluntarily, and when discolorations of the mental atmosphere ensue because of storms, even artificial stage storms, they have no reason to complain of their fate except on the general ground that Fate is always ready to apologize, and then goes right on and does it again, even if we complain. We can argue from now until the crack of doom to the contrary, there is no one to blame for what we are doing but ourselves. It therefore appeareth as if Mrs. Alma Daniel Webster Powell might be interested in reading the following official statement, which, while it does not refute many things she says and does not appear to care, still illustrates that the operatic powers look at all these matters from an entirely different point of view than that of the singer. Such it appears from the following letter addressed to this paper by the Director of the Royal Opera House, Berlin, Germany:

GENERAL-INTENDANTUR DER KONIGLICHEN SCHAUSPIELE,
BERLIN, September 17, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

An article in the New York Sun of September 1 refers to conditions and methods at the Royal Opera here based upon supposed experiences of an American soprano singer, and the conclusion that might be drawn from the utterances of the party justify me in stating to you that the management of this institution remembers no such occurrences as are given out by Madame Powell.

It may be assumed that this opera management has no prejudices against "foreign" singers, for we make no distinctions whatsoever, and do not recognize the existence of a "foreign" spirit. In the list of singers who have appeared at this opera house one can find artists of all nationalities, beginning with the antipodian Melba and passing through all European and other nations. Ethnological selections are unknown to us; we simply look for the artist.

If we were insincere we should sacrifice art to the practical advantages to be gained, and then we should certainly engage American singers, because of the large influx of American visitors and students, all of whom could be attracted by the announcement that an American or Americans are singing on the stage of the Royal Opera House here, but we eschew all national tendencies and hence if, for any number of reasons, an artist does not fit in the symmetry of our structure, we are obliged to discontinue the engagement, be that singer a German, an American or a Boer.

Neither can we utilize the stage of our opera house for the education of débutants; we must have artists of routine and approved experience, and that may be another reason why contracts must be cancelled in accordance with the terms. The intrigues and personal squabbles of the singers are not worthy of any consideration and are dismissed by us as inconsequential; we devote neither time nor attention to them, as can well be understood by the world at large.

Thanking you in advance for the courtesy involved in publishing this, I remain, Yours respectfully, H. FIESSOR.

Director Royal Opera, Berlin.

RUTH I. MARTIN RECITAL.—A piano recital will be given by this brilliant pupil of Moszkowski and Leschetizky on of November at Mendelssohn Hall. A program of modern and classic compositions will be played. Miss Martin has been for a year past teacher of piano at Ann Arbor, associated with Dr. Stanley.

BUCK-BABCOCK SUNDAY MUSICALES.—Dudley Buck, Jr., and Mrs. Charlotte Babcock will resume their enjoyable Sunday afternoon musicales at their handsome and roomy studio, in Carnegie Hall, beginning the first Sunday in November. As in the past, only the best talent will be heard.

MUSIC IN THE TWIN CITIES.

St. Paul Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
845 HAGUE AVENUE,
September 24, 1901.

MUSICAL activity in the Twin Cities has begun and the season promises to be a busy one. By October 1 concerts and recitals will be in full sway. Both cities are launching several bright and progressive teachers, and some important musical events are looked for.

The St. Paul Choral Club will give St. Paul some of the best concerts of the year, among them "The Messiah" for December 10, under the direction of George Normington. The quartet already engaged are stellar lights in the oratorio world, and are Mme. Genevieve Clark-Wilson, Mabelle Crawford, Glenn Hall and Joseph Baernstein. The rehearsals are held weekly on Tuesday evenings in the Christ Church Guild Hall.

The Schubert Club enters its thirteenth year this season, and is widening its field of activity by adding a students' section to its original plan of work. Fortnightly concerts, with two or three artists' concerts, are among the things already announced. The club has so enriched its curriculum this year that few had expected it would announce a concert. The musical public will be delighted at the news of Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler's coming on December 5. Madame Zeisler's place among the women pianists of the world is without doubt fully established, and she is considered the emotional pianist of the day.

Manager Loudon Charlton, of New York, spent two days last week in St. Paul in the interest of his artists. Madame Nordica has been placed with the Y. M. C. A., and prospective dates for Charlotte Maconda, Hast and Zeldenrust. Great enthusiasm is predicted for the Nordica recital.

Miss Maud Earl Burdette, who was until a year ago contralto in St. Paul, is meeting with success in Chicago. Besides numerous concert and oratorio engagements, Miss Burdette has been engaged as soloist and musical leader at the People's Church, Chicago, of which Dr. H. W. Thomas is pastor.

Edward Baxter Perry, the blind pianist, is announced for a recital in St. Paul October 28.

The Kneisel Quartet will come to Minneapolis the coming winter under the auspices of the teachers' club of that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Ober-Hoffer are established at the Hampshire Arms for the winter and announce Wednesdays as their "at home" days.

Arthur Berg, violinist, and Miss Minnie Berg, pianist, have announced a series of four recitals to be given during the winter at the Central Presbyterian Church. Several novelties that have never been heard in St. Paul will be given.

The Professional League will hold its first meeting Wednesday evening, October 2.

Madame Locke Valisi's pupils have organized "The Grieg Piano Club," and will meet every six weeks for recital work and musical history.

Henry Delafield, the young St. Paul musician, will leave about October 5 for Boston, for the study of harmony and composition.

The Mozart Club, under the direction of Professor Manner, will be unusually active this winter. A German opera and several concerts will be given at Mozart Hall.

Franklin W. Krieger, who recently returned from Berlin, after a three years' course with Madam Stepanoff, will give his first recital in St. Paul some time in October.

One of the important pieces of musical intelligence in local circles is the announcement that the Apollo Club, of Minneapolis, has secured as its director Charles A. Graniger, of Cincinnati, who has been for eight years director of the Orpheus Club, of that city, an organization similar in character and calibre to the Apollo Club. The club announces that in order to bring up a still higher standard of its male chorus, the number of singers will be reduced to sixty. For the first concert Signor Campanari, the renowned baritone, has been secured.

John Parsons Beech has just returned to Minneapolis from Boston, where he has been studying under the best masters. He will make a specialty of the Leschetizky method of piano technic.

The Johnson School of Music and Dramatic Art has made an important addition to its regular departments in the establishment of school for organ playing, under the direction of H. S. Woodruff, the well-known organist. A large two manual pipe organ has been built in one of the studios, and is the only instrument available in the Twin Cities for teaching and practive purposes outside of the churches.

Members of the Minneapolis Thursday Musicale will be delighted to learn that Mme. Camilla Urso, the violinist, has been engaged to give the first treat to the club and will be heard the last week in October. Since her last concert tour Madame Urso has been resting quietly in Minneapolis, but leaves again November 1 for another extended tour.

The first large concert of the season in Minneapolis will be Miss Jean Wakeman's début concert at Plymouth Church, Friday evening, October 4. This will be Miss Wakeman's first public appearance since her return from Berlin and much interest is centered in her recital She will be assisted by Miss Gertrude Hale, soprano; U. S. Kerr, baritone, and Franklin Krieger, of St. Paul, accompanist.

The Northwestern Conservatory, Minneapolis, will give its faculty concerts in October.

Wm. H. Hall, the vocal teacher, is settled for the winter in comfortable quarters in the Century Building.

T. J. Wessels, of Chicago, managing the Thomas Orchestra, was a visitor in the Twin Cities last week. Both cities hope to be included in the circuit made by the orchestra.

GERTRUDE SANS SOUCI.

EVENINGS OF OPERETTA.—Opera lovers of America who have never been abroad have often wondered whether the time would come in this country when they would be permitted to hear something more than the usual routine list of operas which have hitherto been presented to them. There are, for instance, a goodly number of exquisite little masterpieces by Offenbach, Suppé, Schubert, Mozart, &c., which have become prime favorites abroad, but which for some reason or other have been produced seldom or not at all here. Most of these gems are in one act, and three of them make a good bill for an evening. Their tone ranges from grave to gay—seldom too hilarious and never too doleful. It is surprising that variety loving America has not made more of them.

William G. Stewart, however, whose name has long been associated in the operatic world not only with enterprise, but with artistic results, has at last determined to give us a taste of this kind of entertainment, and is about to "put on" with his own company a series of seven weeks of operettas. His purpose is not only to produce foreign classics, but entirely new works from our own modern composers, and to this end he will offer the services of his company for any short opera which a sufficient number of patrons may desire to hear.

The performances will commence Monday evening, October 14, and will take place in the Berkeley Lyceum Theatre, 21 West Forty-fourth street, which has recently had its stage enlarged and refitted. Each bill will probably consist of two or three operettas, and will continue for only one week, with a Thursday matinee, thus giving the public an opportunity to secure tickets for the entire series.

ENGAGEMENT IN MUSICAL CIRCLES.—Miss Harriet R. Woods, the soprano, a pupil of Ashforth, well known in the best social and musical circles of New York, is engaged to marry Fritz Falck, a prominent railroad official of Elmira, N. Y. Miss Woods, whose charming personality has made for her many friends, has withdrawn from musical work.

BAERNSTEIN.—The managers of the Springfield Musical Festival have engaged the basso Joseph Baernstein to give a song recital in that city on Tuesday, November 19, 1901.

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James Hall, Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall, Oratorio, Crystal Palace, Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
London G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Sole Manager, Room 95 Carnegie Hall, New York.

American School of Opera
Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary. WINTER SEASON NOW OPEN.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.
Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

EUROPEAN NOTES.

A dealer at Bayreuth has for sale a relic of Richard Wagner, the complete proofs of the first edition, piano and voice, of "The Flying Dutchman," corrected by the master's own hand. The price is 2,500 francs, and fears are expressed that it may fly to America.

Randegger's opera, "The Shade of Werther," produced at Leipsic, failed completely. In this work Werther cannot rest in the tomb because he kissed Charlotte, and Charlotte cannot rest in hers because she had been such a well conducted person as to go on cutting bread and butter while he was pining and ogling.

Champfleury's fancy of a porcelain violin has been realized. It is reported that a worker in the porcelain factory of Meissen has made several porcelain or terra cotta violins, for which he has taken out a patent. As old china is priceless and as old fiddles are priceless, it is alarming to think what will be the price of a Sevres Stradivarius in a few generations.

Frau Jahnel, who attempted to kill the composer and violinist Gunkel, of Dresden, by firing two shots at him in a street car, has been declared insane and placed in a lunatic asylum.

A sculptor of Warsaw has received a commission from several of his Polish admirers for a bust of Chopin, to be erected at Marienbad at the house where he lodged in 1836.

An Athenian journal, Asty, reports that a lawyer named Iatrikos has gone to Rome as a representative of the interests of a Verdi family of Thebes, who claim a share of the composer's property.

At the Milan Dal Verme the tenor Giacchero promises to sing Arnold in "William Tell" "in the original key, without transposing or suppressing anything." Unfortunately he threatens to add several high C's to the ten indicated by Rossini. This is treating "William Tell" as prime donne treat "The Barber of Seville."

The story of the sale of Piatti's Stradivarius 'cello for 100,000 francs to the banker Mendelssohn, of Berlin, has revived the story of how it came into the former's possession. One of the English Governor-Generals of India returned to England via Spain, where he picked up a magnificent 'cello. On his arrival at London he went to Piatti and asked him to give him some lessons, adding: "I'll learn fast because I have an excellent instrument." When the lessons began Piatti fell in love with the 'cello, for it was a magnificent Stradivarius, unique in its style, and he spun out the lessons as long as possible in order to have the pleasure of playing on it. But the great man's perseverance began to fail; he preferred to hear Piatti play rather than practice himself, and one day said: "Keep it; you at least can do it justice." "But I cannot pay what is is worth!" replied the professor. "Never mind," said the other. "I'll send it to your house!" "No, no!" cried Piatti; "if it has come to that, I'll carry it home myself," and he shouldered it at once and returned home. The same Mendelssohn who has now acquired it offered to Piatti, when he met him at Bergamo, at the Donizetti centenary, a blank check that he could fill up whenever he made up his mind to part with it. But Piatti kept it till his death. All of which is very pretty—but is it a pipe dream?

Bottesini's contrabasso was less fortunate. It is an admirable instrument, made by C. A. Testore, at the beginning of the eighteenth century. Bottesini bought it for 900 francs in 1839, and carefully preserved it till his death. His heirs offered it to the Conservatory of Parma, of which he had been director. They reminded the directors how Genoa preserved the violin of Paganini, Venice the contrabasso of Dragonetti and other cities other instruments of other composers; the Parma Conservatory, however, would have none of it. Finally the heirs sold it for 1,200 francs to a lawyer of Turin, who was a great collector. Mr. Hill, the London dealer, made tempting offers to the new possessor, Emlio Henry, who offered to sell it to the conservatory for the price he had paid. Again the conservatory declined, so the Bottesini contrabasso went to London, where it was sold to Claude Hobday.

Le Menestrel reprints Mottl's circular, in which he says: "M. Siegfried Wagner charges me to inform you that he will not conduct the performances of the 'Götterdämmerung,' proposed for next year," and has the cruelty to add: "Right you are, Siegfried!"

France possesses a society for the "Reform of Authors' Rights," which in a long circular says that persons who give musical or literary entertainments are oppressed by the Society of Authors, that an energetic campaign must be planned to effect a complete reform and to break the mercantile fetters that hamper so many artists and musicians in following their vocation. In fighting this system of blackmail, the Society of Reform will pay, in the case of its subscribers, the costs of any action which may be brought against them by the Authors' Society. The circular is signed by two members of the Chamber of Deputies.

The death of Eugene Diaz is announced. A son of the famous painter, he was a painter and a musician. He produced "Le Roi Candaull" in 1865, which failed. Then, in 1873, "La Coupe du Roi de Thule," which, in spite of having such singers as Fauré, Achard and Madame Guegmard, only saw a dozen representations. In 1880 he presented at the Opéra Comique "Benvenuto," which had the fate of its predecessors. He then turned to painting, and only a few weeks before his death, in reply to a friend who inquired if he still thought of the theatre, he replied: "Oh, no. I have had enough of it. I paint pictures for America, and that pays better than operas."

At a late banquet given to Calvé at her native village M. Joseph Fabre, Senator of the Avegnon, made an address, in which he said: "I wish to repeat to you what Mlle. Calvé has just said to us. She presented to us her father, a peasant, eighty years old, proud of his daughter, the peasant girl, who is now a princess of art, and repeated a speech of the old man: 'My daughter, look at these rose bushes, they can count many roses. But here is one that has only one. It has spent all its sap on this one rose, which is beyond comparison the finest of all. This is the history of your humble ancestors and yourself. You are the supreme flower of many forgotten generations.'"

The Frankische Courier, of Nuremberg, after reprinting some of Siegfried Wagner's threats against Herr Intendant von Possart, and remarking that the very time when Wagner's ideal is being fulfilled in the city where he at first hoped to see it carried out, adds: "The ideal nimbus, which, in the eyes of the laity, surrounds the performances at Bayreuth, could not receive a greater injury than that inflicted by Siegfried's jealous speeches against the Prince Regent Theatre. Herr Wagner would have been justified in such speeches if he as heir of his great father had been forced to fear that the works of the master would not be performed at the Prince Regent Theatre with the same piety and love which have hitherto been displayed in their production at the Court Theatre. He might perhaps have been justified in such speeches if the intendant had started competition by reducing prices. But such suppositions are not to the point. His speeches and his declaration against the creation of new Wagner theatres can be suggested only by fear of competition. Were not the performances of the present Bayreuth Festival sold out just as formerly, although the opening of the Prince Regent Theatre had been announced and advertised months before? Higher prices were paid this year at Bayreuth than at any other period; higher than at the opening of the Festival Theatre, and higher than in 1882, when the master was still alive. The Prince Regent Theatre also was sold out hitherto at all performances; even in Munich a premium was paid, a proof that all enterprises when they serve the master's ideal are side by side, whether they take place at Munich, Vienna, Frankfort, or in any city of the world. With this state of affairs the people at Bayreuth must learn to put up. Otherwise it may be the case that the very persons who lament the resolution of the Reichstag, not to prolong the protection time for the master's work, will look back on that resolution with gratitude, as by it the relatives of Richard Wagner will be able to make no other opposition to the works becoming the common property of the people!"

Victor Maurel has come to a timely and wise conclusion. He intends to start a vocal school in Paris. It is to be called "Institut Maurel." A magnificent house has been rented and furnished, and everything is in readiness except—the pupils.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,

Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN

Distinguished American Pianist.

Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS. WEBB GARDNER

SOPRANO.

FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.

ORATORIO, CONCERT. RECITAL.

Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B. VOIGT

SOPRANO.

Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.

Address RICHARD BYRON Manager. 301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK

M. VITTORIO CARPI

Vocal Instruction.

ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.

210 WEST 59th STREET, opposite Park, NEW YORK.

Elizabeth Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals | Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

Another Complimentary Letter

THE FOLLOWING IS A FAC-SIMILE OF A LETTER RECENTLY RECEIVED BY Mr. R. E. JOHNSTON:

Mr. R. E. Johnston,
Manager Wm. Worth Bailey.

My Dear Sir:

A sweet, low note which seemed an angel's whisper, a silence deep and still, then a voice saying, "O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory?" and why?--because of the master-playing of Wm. Worth Bailey. The vision splendid had been seen, and one's being flooded with the melodious harmonies of the perfect life as they touch and satisfy heart and soul and mind.

Yes, Bailey is in the strictest sense a true artist. He stands unrivalled in these United States, and before long the nations will come bending to him and crown him king of all living violinists. As one listens to him one is touched and uplifted by the strong, tender personality which shines in his face and radiates his manner.

But who shall describe the wonderful, wonderful playing of this marvelous master of the violin, as not only with absolute fidelity but with full sympathy, glorified by his own rich individuality, for the composer whose musical thought of life he would interpret, he gives one the full meaning thereof?

To hear him is to have true touch with the great musical men of earth, as Bach, Beethoven, Paganini or Saint-Saens, and to know the joy of life.

May he live long to enjoy the high influence for gladness and goodness which will be his as the great American violinist--yes, world-famed and world-crowned one! There can be no doubt of his glorious future.

And I heartily congratulate him on his manager.

Very Faithfully
Geo. C. Webber

Archdeacon of Madison,

Diocese of Milwaukee.

Sept. 3, 1901.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

CHANGE OF ADDRESS!

Mr. R. E. Johnston's Offices:
Ninth Floor,
St. James Building,
Broadway and 26th St.,
NEW YORK.

WILLIAM WORTH BAILEY

Greater New York.

NEW YORK, September 30, 1901.

J. WARREN ANDREWS is again daily at his church, the Church of the Divine Paternity, a score of pounds heavier than when he left. Sailing a yacht, making a little music with Boston visitors and with pupils and keeping an eye on the small Andrewses took up part of his time, and he returns with many plans for his winter's work. This will include his organ recitals, with fine soloists; the giving of important choral works, with solo, quartet and semi-chorus, and the giving of recitals in the West and elsewhere. His solo quartet is well known, consisting of the brilliant young soprano, she of the golden voice, Miss Estelle Harris, Miss Cornelia Marvin, Mr. Quesnel and Mr. Miles. Those who have heard this quartet say that it is not excelled in the city.

Two of his organ pupils, namely Alfred Willard, of Burlington, N. J., and Arthur L. Collins, of the Church of the Good Shepherd, will probably give entire organ recitals on his beautiful organ at the Church of the Divine Paternity. October 20 the entire choir resumes evening service.

Miss Katherine Pelton, with whose excellent singing and winsome personality New Yorkers are becoming increasingly familiar, is here, having filled some engagements. On Memorial Service Day she was soloist at two important services in Ossining and Tarrytown. At the former place the largest possible number of people were gathered in the church, and at the latter probably 1,000 people were turned away. It is a pathetic circumstance that Miss Pelton had the honor of being the last person to sing before the President in the White House; a signed photograph from him is a valued possession. At the memorial services mentioned she sang "Lead, Kindly Light" and an old sacred song, "There's a Beautiful Land on High." Her winter's work begins with brightest prospects, with concerts, musicales and pupils, and she is planning a song recital out of town for the early winter.

Bern. Boekelman, the well-known composer, annotator and originator of the polychromatic edition of the Bach Fugues and Inventions, has removed uptown, after thirty years' residence downtown. A recent interview proved most interesting, in view of the long activity and varied experiences of this pedagogue and brain worker. He devoted many months to his part of the Paderewski music volumes just out, his part being the editing of certain works, and also originated a "Symposium" between many of the leading teachers of the day. He was in personal correspondence with them, and used their answers to his queries as the basis of this symposium, which is most interesting.

If there is any piano teacher who is unfamiliar with his colored print Bach editions, he or she should obtain them at once. By means of various colors, used in the theme, answer, &c., in these polyphonic works everything stands out clearly, so that the mind at once understands through the eye.

Hubert Arnold, violinist, has, by dint of charming personality and the influential friendship of people worth knowing, gained a large following, who have every confidence in him as a teacher and admire him as a man. A five-minute call on him developed into an hour and a half's visit, and then your Gossiper was loth to go. Mr. Arnold's experiences, in Australia, England, on the Continent and here, have given him a wide horizon, so he is above all petty views of the world and the music-mad men in it.

He spent his summer principally in Canandaigua, on the pretty little lake there, and caught numberless bass, being an enthusiastic angler. He also spent hours daily practicing, having learned the big Tschaikowsky Concerto, gave a concert in Canandaigua and at Clifton Springs, teaching a bit also, visited the Pan-American Exposition several times, and has before him a busy season, with certain important appearances as concert-violinist.

The Misses Kieckhoefer have removed to the house, 148 West Sixty-fifth street. These enterprising young women form a trio—violin, piano and 'cello—which is much in demand in society circles, in which is their principal work. They spent the summer in Newport, and, as Miss Marie said, "played in every house there," having as vocal assistants young Gregory, bass, and the new baritone, Guardabassi. They have already booked fifteen concerts, and are filling their respective positions, in church, as teachers in schools, &c. Miss Marie Kieckhoefer showed me a pretty keepsake in the form of a heart, given her by an admiring young—woman.

Tali Esen Morgan had fine success in his summer school at Ocean Grove, the M. E. summer resort on the New Jersey coast. Up to his assuming charge, five years ago, nothing but plain Gospel hymns had been heard there, and now he has a chorus capable of singing such works as "Elijah," the "Holy City," "Stabat Mater," &c. He also formed an orchestra of fifty. Next season he has planned a special summer course in sight reading for teachers, and a ten-day music festival. Mr. Morgan will organize an orchestra here also at once, and has already a proffer of services from many fine executants. First-class amateurs will be accepted as members without cost to themselves.

Preliminary to the organization of the several divisions of the New York Festival Chorus, Mr. Morgan will hold a meeting of all his singers in Association Hall, at Fifty-seventh street and Eighth avenue, Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The chorus sang at the McKinley memorial meeting in Carnegie Hall at 4 o'clock. The regular rehearsals of the various branches will not begin until the first week of November.

Tenor John Young was for two months in Barrington, R. I., Narragansett Bay, where he enjoyed the rest and change. The rise of this man has been consistent and rapid, so that now he is solo tenor of the Second Collegiate Church, Harlem, and of Temple Israel. He has been re-engaged at the Brooklyn Institute, his engagement there last year having proven successful, and has some important affairs on the tapis. His singing at the Glens Falls meeting in "The Messiah," N. Y. State M. T. A., last June, was much enjoyed, and he made many warm admirers there.

An evening of music and readings will be given the Y. M. C. A. on Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue next Tuesday, when the singers of the evening will be Mrs. M. Hesson Robinson, contralto, and Mr. Robinson, tenor. Mrs. Robinson has a voice of beautiful quality and is solo alto at St. Paul's Chapel and Mr. Robinson is tenor at St. James P. E. Church. Carl Russell, 'cellist, and Mrs. Harriet A. Robinson, accompanist, will also assist.

C. J. Kogge has just opened a new studio on Fifth avenue, having charge of a choir in New and singing tenor himself. A pupil of George Tamaro and others he has augmented what he learned of them by personal observation and experience, so that he is that rare combination, a singer teacher. Living in New Jersey, he came here for lesson giving, and on account of his pupils of past seasons persuaded him to open a studio here, where he has excellent prospect of success.

Arthur Reginald Little has again a studio in Carnegie Hall, which he left two years ago to study in Europe. Good taste and refinement characterize the studio and he looks forward to a busy season. He made much reputation as a concert pianist in Europe, a glimpse of which is given in the following:

At his recital yesterday Arthur Little confirmed the good impression made at his recital last week. * * * In the Beethoven Sonata he proved himself a very capable exponent of the great master, and played with intelligence and refinement. * * * He was particularly successful in the Chopin Nocturne and two Studies, and the A flat Polonaise, by the same composer, was played with power and good sense of rhythm.—London Musical Courier, June 16, 1898.

J. Harry Wheeler has just returned from the Adirondacks, where he went for a much needed rest after having a tremendous amount of vocal teaching at Chautauqua Assembly, N. Y., in July and August. It was the fullest season he has had for the fifteen years he has had charge of the vocal department there. He resumes his winter work at 81 Fifth avenue with a very large class of pupils, several of whom are already artists of real worth. His pupils' musical evenings he will resume the last week in October.

The Branth Women's String Quartet is a new organization which will cut a figure in the concert world of the East hereafter. Miss Ida Branth is a violinist of American and European renown, who takes the leadership. Miss Olga Frinks-Severina, the 'cellist, is well known in the field, having toured in this country and in Europe as musical celebrity for ten years. Theodore Lilienthal, second violin, is a pupil of the Carri Violin School, and has good press notices as a violinist. Harrietta Tidd, viola, is also a player of great talent, and well known as a

OLIVE MEAD,
VIOLINIST.

Orchestral Engagements Season 1901-2.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Boston (third time).
Boston Symphony Orchestra—New York.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Philadelphia.
The Chicago Orchestra—Chicago.
Personal address: 1425 Madison Avenue, New York.
Sole Management of
FRED R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE
T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.
MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.
During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET
Fourteenth Season.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.
Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.
Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.
Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts"
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

ropolitan district, Washington and Philadelphia. rtet has been in practice for some time, and great n ensemble have been achieved.

Sada Wertheim.

promising young violinist, Sada Wertheim, two ars ago a talented child, now a fast maturing ith an enviable future, will sail for Europe on y on the steamer Phœnecia, accompanied by her While the trip will be indefinite in length, such the success and progress of the young violinist country that negotiations are now under way for earance in the European musical centres and she heard from through our foreign correspondence stant date.

aching Hamburg Sada and her mother will go to nd probably remain there for the winter. London visited in the early spring and later they will go . Sada takes with her the best wishes of scores ds for a successful trip.

Victor Harris.

ER a tour through the country, which lasted over ur months, Victor Harris is back in the city and r the opening season. Mr. Harris devoted his va- o travel and recuperation. As a vocal instructor, rris has placed himself in the front rank, and the season promises to be one of the most successful areer. His list of pulls is growing rapidly, and hem are many who will soon be heard from to ge.

IS ROGERS.—Francis Rogers, the baritone, is to be York this winter after more than a year's absence. son he was a member of the Metropolitan English Opera Company, and sang during the winter in pera in St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee. In to his operatic work, he found time to sing in parts of the West in concert and oratorio. Some mments:

gers is a finished singer, and displays rare taste and in his interpretations. His diction is impressive, his musicianly and his mastery of vocal technic is evidenced riety of tone colors he employs at will.—St. Louis Mirror.

ging of "Il Balen" ("Il Trovatore") won a well deserved ld served as a vehicle to enable him to display unusual ity.—Chicago Times-Herald.

d a healthy, rich, well trained baritone.—Milwaukee Sen-

Herald (in "Lohengrin") he proved to be possessed of a baritone, and his singing of the role was manly and im- Chicago Tribune.

ogers is going to make New York his abiding s season, and is open for engagements in opera, concert and recitals. His address is Wolfsohn Bureau, 131 East Seventeenth street; or, 26 East hird street.

UL CHORAL CLUB.—The Choral Club, of St. Paul, ill present this season "The Messiah" in Decem- "The Creation" in the spring, and a miscellane- cert with short works in February, with Sara n as soloist.

ORE THOMAS HERE.—Theodore Thomas, the con- f the Chicago Orchestra, is in New York for a it.

FREDERIC MAXSON.

Concert Organist and Organ Teacher.

THE name of Frederick Maxson, the well-known concert organist, of Philadelphia, has become familiar to the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER through the frequent notices of his work which have appeared. His concert appearances cover quite a large field, geographically, and his work has met with cordial recognition from press and people. The musical services at the Central Congregational Church, where he has been organist and choirmaster for the past seventeen years, have added to his reputation.

In the field of teaching Mr. Maxson has met with conspicuous success, over forty of his organ pupils having held or holding church positions at the present time. During this season Mr. Maxson proposes to devote special attention to organ teaching, both for concert organists and those either preparing for church positions, or who, holding church positions, desire to perfect themselves in their work. To this end a special course is arranged for church organists, including the study of instrumental church music, accompaniments of hymns, chants, anthems, solos, &c. Other practical work, transposition, reading of vocal score, &c., will not be neglected. The aim is to form church musicians capable of doing efficient service.

FREDERIC MAXSON.

Mr. Maxson's advanced pupils are holding good positions in Philadelphia and elsewhere, and those seeking organ instruction would do well to make arrangements at an early date, as the hours are fast being taken up by pupils new and old.

The following list of pupils will show the practical efficacy of Mr. Maxson's teaching:

James C. Warhurst, North Baptist, Camden, N. J.
William Powell Twaddell, St. Andrew's, West Philadelphia.
Walter H. Ketley, Olivet Presbyterian.
Frank N. Oglesby, St. Paul's P. E., Chester, Pa.; First M. E., Germantown.
Lawrence Gaff, St. Michael's P. E., Germantown.
Reuhen S. Hormann, Bethesra Presbyterian.
Edgar Filbert Langer, Heidelberg Reformed.
Walter de Prefontaine, St. Thomas' P. E., Whitemarsh, Pa.; First Presbyterian, Norristown, Pa.
George F. Carey, St. Mark's P. E., Frankford, Philadelphia.
C. Virgil Gordon, M. E. Church, Smyrna, Del.: Olivet Presbyterian, Philadelphia; Westminster Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.; assistant organist St. George's, New York.
Howard R. O'Daniel, Trinity Church, Pottsville, Pa.
Arthur S. Greenleaves, St. John's Reformed, West Philadelphia.
Miss Helen B. Brisbin, First M. E., Lewistown, Pa.
Miss L. J. Hilgert, M. E., Lansdowne, Pa.
Miss Amy Morgan, assistant, Beacon Presbyterian
Mrs. W. H. Riddle, East Park Presbyterian.
Miss Winnie Wallace, First Presbyterian, Bridesburg, Philadelphia
Miss Alice K. Beed, Presbyterian, Richmond, Philadelphia.
John M. McGlynn, St. Dominic's R. C., Holmesburg, Pa.
Howard E. Taylor, Temple Presbyterian.
Archer F. Livezly, St. John's P. E., N. L., Philadelphia.
T. Stewart Harris, co-organist, Nineteenth Street M. E.
Walter F. Van Horn, New Jerusalem Church, Huntingdon Valley, Pa.
Miss Gertrude A. Goodell, Spring Garden Unitarian.
Miss Charlotte Howard, Christ M. E., West Philadelphia.
Mrs. M. F. Patton, First Presbyterian, Chestnut Hill, Pa.
Miss Bessie T. Allen, Trinity Presbyterian, Chestnut Hill, Pa.
H. J. Magee, Cookman M. E.
Miss Emily M. Cadmus, Fortieth Street M. E., West Philadelphia.
Miss L. V. Moore, Tioga Baptist.
Miss Ella J. Rowley, Tenth Baptist.
Mrs. W. A. Wilgus, Frankford Presbyterian, Franford, Philadelphia.
Miss Alice S. Baker, House of Refuge, Glen Mills, Pa.
Mrs. Mary Victor Malpass, Leverington Presbyterian, Roxborough, Philadelphia.
Miss Florence May Moland, Emmanuel Baptist Chapel.
Miss Mary Miller, Cumberland Street M. E.
Miss Ella Brereton, Nineteenth Street M. E.
Miss Emma G. Blades, M. P. Church, Pocomoke City, Md.
Mrs. Ralph H. Leopold, First Presbyterian, Pottstown, Pa.; Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, Philadelphia.
Miss Mary B. Immel, R. E. Church of Reconciliation.
Emil Held, St. Luke's Lutheran.
Miss S. McVaugh, Frankford Avenue Baptist.

Mr. Maxson's studio is at 813 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia. The organ lessons are given on the fine three manual organ in the Central Congregational Church.

Pupils are given the privilege of attending the choir rehearsals at the Central Congregational Church to obtain points in choir drill, &c.

ALICE SOVEREIGN.—This deep-voiced contralto gave a recital at Rockford, Ill., last summer, singing with great success songs by Grieg, Lehmann, Allitsen, MacDowell, Chadwick, Braun, Secchi and the song sung by Schumann-Heink, "Love-light," by Julian Edwardes, which latter was given her by Frau Heink. Miss Sovereign was first heard of here when she made such a big success at one of the Chapman festivals, and following this she was engaged as the successor of the eminent contralto, Grace Preston, at the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn.

CLAVIER PIANO SCHOOL.—The following notice has been issued, which will be of general interest:

POSITIVE, ABSOLUTE PITCH

possible to every musician and music student.

With very few exceptions, all persons possess in some form the sense of absolute pitch, and on Thursday night, October 3, in Clavier Hall, 11 West Twenty-second street, W. A. White will speak on this subject, and will demonstrate that musical positive pitch is but the natural development from this crude, untrained faculty. All interested are invited to be present. No charge.

New York College of Music,
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.
Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and all branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.
SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.
All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction in harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing and free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.
Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

N GERARDY
NG WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY CHESTRA, OCT. 18 and 19.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

TZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 EAST 17th ST., NEW YORK.

SARA ANDERSON,
SOPRANO
OSEPH BAERNSTEIN,
BASSO
ve Management: WILLIAM FISHER, "The Monterey," 351 West 114th St., New York.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: The Hetherington, 571 Park Ave., New York.

Rebecca Holmes
VIOLINISTE.
Address:
32 West 40th St., - NEW YORK.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

The Worcester Festival.

BY PHILIP HALE.

THE forty-fourth annual festival of the Worcester County Musical Association was held in Mechanics Hall, Worcester, September 23 to 27. George W. Chadwick was the conductor and Mr. Kneisel the assistant conductor. Wallace Goodrich, the organist, was prevented by sickness from assistance the first night of the festival, and his place was then taken by Henry M. Dunham. The orchestra was made up of Boston Symphony players.

The festival opened with César Franck's "The Beatitudes," which was sung for the first time in English at the festival of last year. The solo singers were Mrs. Shanna Cumming, Mrs. Clara Poole-King, Miss Adelaide J. Griggs, Messrs. Evan Williams, E. C. Towne, David Bispham (Satan) and Stephen Townsend (Christ).

The performance as a whole was a poor one. The chorus was timid in attack, uncertain in contrapuntal walk, not well balanced, regardless of dynamic indications. There was the thought of insufficient rehearsal, or possibly there was the overconfidence that comes from recent familiarity and recent praise. The solo honors were borne away by Mr. Williams, who sang "Where'er We Stray" with unsurpassable breadth and with rare appreciation of dramatic climax. Mr. Bispham's reading of the music given to the Angel of Death was one long to be remembered for its quiet, elemental authority. Although Franck did not display his genius in dramatic writing, nevertheless Mr. Bispham almost succeeded in persuading the hearer to the contrary. Mr. Townsend at first disappointed his admirers, possibly from a too deliberate attempt to suggest the Redeemer, who, however, in pronouncing the Beatitudes, was intensely human as well as benignantly divine. Mr. Townsend was almost cold and angular in the pursuit of dignity, the desire to avoid sentimentalism. But he improved during the evening, and his last appeal, "O! ye righteous," was warm and irresistible in persuasion. His voice is of limited compass, chiefly effective in the upper register; he sings as a rule with uncommon intelligence, with rare appreciation of the purpose of author, as well as composer, and the voice, within its limitations of range, is at the same time sensuous and virile. The performance of the other solo parts does not call for special remark; it is only just to say that the mezzo soprano solo, the complaint of the "Mater Dolorosa," was sung with forced and dry emotion. The great quintet was ragged and ineffective.

Although the performance was a poor one, nevertheless the beauty and grandeur of the work shone forth in glory through the clouds and the mist, and in spite of those who tried to call attention to the sweetness, nobility and mysticism of the great Belgian. I say Belgian for no modern Frenchman could write such sacred music, and Franck was a Belgian in brooding and serene mysticism, as well as a Belgian by birth. Was it not Thackeray who said in effect that a praying Frenchman was a most ludicrous object? Look over the sacred music, the oratorios of modern Frenchmen. Massenet chucks Eve under the chin, writes under the spell of her natural and intoxicating odor, and is on most amiable terms with the Deity. They tell me that Gabriel Fauré's Requiem is as though composed for une petite femme. If you go back to Berlioz you find tremendous effects, the spectacular, all manner of surprising things. But there is not the intense sincerity of Verdi, there is not that poignant grief, that heavenly consolation, which you find in the Manzoni Requiem; nowhere is there such a passage as the first appearance of "Et lux perpetua," a page unequaled in the literature of sacred music.

Franck was a Belgian in the pleasure of losing himself in the thought of divine mysteries. You find in his best music the sentiment of Ruysbroeck, as in certain essays by Maeterlinck you find the peace of Franck, a peace that passeth all understanding. These lines from the "Religio Medici" might serve as a motto to Franck's "Beatitudes" and some of his chamber music: "Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in religion for an active faith; the deepest mysteries ours contains have not only been illustrated, but maintained by syllogism and the rule of reason. I love to lose myself in a mystery; to pursue my reason to an O altitudo!"

Franck loved the Muse and the Church. The Muse rewarded him platonically; the Church at his death eulogized his services and during his life paid him the shabby salary of a Continental organist.

"The Beatitudes" is not flawless. The more dramatic choruses are often but a feeble expression of profane pleasure and blasphemous joy. The composer was alone in his musical life save for his pupils, and he was not wisely criticised. In his rapt contemplation of celestial things Franck forgot too often the fact that Time and Space are after all appreciable quantities. The sweet and simple soul was so near to eternity that he sometimes wrote as though for an eternity of performance.

Yet "The Beatitudes" is a unique work. Franck looked beyond his wretched text and considered the oppressions that are done under the sun, and the tears of such as are oppressed, and the power on the side of the oppressor; but unlike the Preacher, King in Jerusalem, he did not turn and praise the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive. He heard the voices of "the complaining millions of men"; but he also heard the voice of the Christ on the mountain, the voice that blessed the poor in spirit, the mourners, the meek, the pure, the peace makers, all those reviled and persecuted, and all hungry and thirsty after righteousness: the stormy and discordant voices died away; even the voice of Satan was hushed; the celestial "Hosannah" was sung not as a promise to mortals, but as the trumpeted signal that the old things had passed away, that all things were made new.

The orchestral pieces played on the afternoon of September 25 were the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Brahms' Third Symphony, Massenet's hectic overture, "Phèdre." The performance of the symphony was indescribably dull, so dull that Edgar Stillman Kelley, who was present, was disappointed in that he had never fully realized before how dull Brahms could be; and he feared lest he had been wrong in applauding Brahms' structural ability. Miss Griggs sang the exquisite "La Captive" of Berlioz with full appreciation and with charming tonal effect except in the upper register, when she seemed unable to respond physically to the demands of the composer. The English translation of Hugo's text is full of interest.

Bien loin de ses Sodomes
Au pays dont nous sommes
Avec les jeunes hommes,
On peut parler le soir.

becomes

Far from these realms benighted,
In our lands happier lighted,
With pleasant youths united,
Talk we when falls the dew.

Verdi's Requiem was given Wednesday evening with Mrs. Cumming, Mrs. Poole-King, Messrs. Van Hoose and Carl E. Dufft. The performance was in many respects admirable. The chorus surpassed all expectation, for it actually observed and respected and followed the composer's indications. Many of the extremely piano passages were sung with surprising delicacy. The solo and concerted music was sung for the most part respectably. It is just to add that Mrs. Cumming was substituted at comparatively short notice for Emma Eames.

It is not necessary to speak at length of this remarkable work, which is not only a masterpiece of Verdi—O thrice honored name!—but a masterpiece of masterpieces in the musical literature of the world. I believe there are some who still groan in their uneasiness because it is "dramatic," "spectacular." But will not the Last Day be beyond all doubt and peradventure a highly dramatic affair? And is not hell itself distinctly spectacular?

The orchestral pieces on the afternoon of the 26th were Saint-Saëns' prelude to "The Deluge," Kelley's suite, "Aladdin"; Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale. Miss Estelle Liebling, who has a pretty voice, one adapted to colorature display, sang somewhat nervously—for it was her first appearance—the "Bell Song" from "Lakmé."

I believe you have heard Mr. Kelley's suite in New York, but a few words concerning it may not be out of place. He has taken themes, he says, which he heard in temples, theatres and dwellings of the Chinese in San Francisco. Of course, he modified them in a measure. Would that he had modified them more! An Oriental tune as a rule is endurable only when it has been so changed that

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall NEW YORK.

no Oriental would recognize it. It is far better for a Westerner to imagine his Orientalism; to evolve his camel from the depths of his inner consciousness. For the exotic quickly palls, then irritates, then maddens, no matter how striking may be the ingenuity of the composer who employs it as the chief ingredient.

Ah! what a story "Aladdin" is! "There dwelt in a city of the cities of China a man which was a tailor, withal a pauper, and he had one son, Aladdin, aight." Who would not go on? Who would not rather read this and the other marvelous tales than attend a wilderness of festivals?

Mr. Kelley's Suite is in four movements. The first tells of the wedding of Aladdin and the Princess. It would be charming—half the movement is charming—were it not for too much thematic repetition. The second movement is a serenade in the Pear Garden. It is pretty, fascinating music. But the strongest movement is the third, which describes the removal of Aladdin's palace by the Marid or Slave of the Lamp at the command of Maghrabi, the accursed musician, and alas! the lady Badr-al-Budur was also borne away, the pearl of price, the sheeney sun. Are the opening measures descriptive of the incantation? Or are the spirits hard at work at the foundation, as though dressed in overalls and armed with picks and jack-screws and ropes and chains? What does the text say? "And in an eye-twinkling, the Maroccan and the pavilion with all therein were transported to the African land." Therefore, this is not realistic program music, if the ominous music paints the pains and groaning of removal. And did not the Marid do the work alone? But the palace is borne aloft, the palace of jasper, alabaster, sumak, marble and mosaic. A pedal point assures us of the firm repose of the building on the shoulders of the slave, while ascending chords with well contrived modulations give the idea of motion, flight, while the tune sung by the Princess comes down as though Aladdin should hear it and follow. At last the palace is beyond mortal vision. An impressive and highly imaginative page! The finale celebrates the return and the Feast of Lanterns, and it is the least effective portion of the work. I understand that Mr. Kelley introduces his fugue to express the street sounds and shows and the popular tumult and rejoicing; but even a fugue that is approved by pedagogues cannot express everything. No, the finale is not effective, even in any display of exotic color.

Mr. Chadwick's new lyric drama "Judith" was performed for the first time the night of September 26. Miss Stein was Judith, Mr. Bispham was Holophernes, Mr. Towne was Achior and also a Sentinel and Dr. Dufft was Ozias. To the Ozias of the libretto I prefer Mr. Ozias Midwinter in Wilkie Collins' "Armadale." He is a much more interesting person.

The librettist, William C. Langdon, is a professor of English in a New Jersey school. His story is founded on, that is, it follows closely, the novelette in the Apocrypha. I say novelette, for all modern commentators agree in the statement that the characters, situations, incidents are fictitious. Mr. Langdon cheapens and vulgarizes the tale; he is inclined to take a low view of Judith; in fact, we see his heroine winking at the rejoicing crowd in Bethulia when she tells how she did the job for the easy mark Holophernes, how she worked the badger game. Here is a verse from her song, in which she is assisted by a friendly chorus:

The monster woo'd with foul intent—
I took his jeweled sword.
The monster woo'd with foul intent—
But red the torchlight in the tent
As 'cross his drunken throat it went,
And blood with wine was strangely blent—
Jehovah be adored!

The verse is conventional opera verse, without distinction of any kind.

I prefer the story as it is told in the Aprocrypha, although Judith is a treacherous, bloody and violent woman in any version. Not so vilely treacherous as Jael perhaps, but more unfortunate, because many in hope of academic prize have painted her, and numberless composers of exceeding mediocrity have chosen her for heroine. I spare you the list, which embraces the names of nearly all Rhine wines and the less distinguished musicians in exhaustive dictionaries. Yet Jomelli, Mozart, Salieri, Seroff, Cimarosa, Lefebvre, Marcello put hands on the story.

But who can make Judith attractive? A woman, first cousin, if not sister, of Temba-Ndumba, who pounded in a mortar her own male child to make an invulnerable ointment; who took a lover to her arms by night and dined off him next day. A woman of the long list from Semiramis to the woman of Saragossa—a woman that might have joined the bodyguard of Gelede, King of Dahomey, and been at ease with Penthesilea, Tomyris, Candace, Oserrah, Marguerite of Burgundy, Prefect Gregory's daughter, Begum Sombre, Kara Fatimah, English Moll.

Mr. Chadwick has written a biblical opera, and in this respect has followed others. The best portions of the work are those in which he is filled with the oratorio spirit, in which he masses choral effects. In this field he is more successful. Thus in the first act we find the chorus, "God, Jehovah, we who sinned," a chorus that is truly beautiful and most musical. And in like manner there is an impressive ending to the work. But the second act, which is frankly operatic, at times comic-operatic, as in the opening, is weak in character drawing, as well as dramatic fire and passion. Neither the sensual attacks of Holophernes, nor the coy allurements of Judith, nor yet again the tragic catastrophe are portrayed musically with power. The hearer without libretto could form no vivid idea of contending and stormy passions on the stage. Judith is here a woman with a high necked gown, dress shields and a New England conscience. But what does the unknown novelist say: "She washed her body all over with water, and anointed herself with precious ointment, and braided the hair of her head, and put on a tire upon it, and put on her garments of gladness."

Do you ask what a garment of gladness is? Let a Worcester reporter answer:

The gown Miss Stein will wear in her appearance as Judith to-night is very well adapted to the part. It was imported specially for her from Paris, and is of pink liberty satin under tulle with a Renaissance lace collar. The tulle is covered with long wavy lines of oval gilt and silver spangles, and, as the gown is made in Princess style, its effect on Miss Stein's tall, graceful form will be sinuous—just the desired effect for the character.

Furthermore, Judith "took sandals upon her feet, and put about her her bracelets, and her chains, and her rings, and her earrings, and all her ornaments, and decked herself bravely, to allure the eyes of all men that should see her." Surely she should have had in her mouth more passionate strains and not relied wholly on the deplorable passion of Holophernes for strong drink. Mr. Chadwick has given the said Holophernes a pretty song, a song that is at times poetically beautiful, although the words are ultra-sentimental, especially for an Assyrian, who was a warrior and of a race that delighted in noisy, shrieking music. The

Mme. Katharine Fisk

FOREMOST CONTRALTO IN AMERICA,

WITH RECORD OF BRILLIANT EUROPEAN TRIUMPHS.

Transcontinental Recital Tour, Season 1901-1902.

ORATORIO, FESTIVAL AND

CONCERT DATES NOW BOOKING.

"Everywhere she appears the judgment is the same; unstinted praise for her rich, beautiful voice, dramatic intensity, vocal art and musical intelligence."—PHILIP HALE in Musical Record.

Sole Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

WHITNEY TEW

In America
ovember,
December
And January.

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

The Stage—"Mr. Whitney Tew proved himself a singer of excellent capabilities. His voice, which is a bass of great compass, is delightfully sympathetic—now full of tenderness, now instinct with passion and joy. He could not have been surpassed in his rendering of Schumann's 'Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn' and Liza Lehmann's curiously weird 'Myself when Young.'"—July 4, 1901.

London Musical Courier—"Mr. Whitney Tew's singing was marked by a high order of intelligence. He is one of the few singers now before the public who possesses the many qualifications that mean success. Besides a voice powerful and sympathetic he has a remarkable memory, and he never fails to display an intuitive knowledge of the poetic and dramatic significance of the text. In four songs by Bach, Brahms, Schubert and Schumann he exhibited great powers of vocalization and expression, and a style in singing German so thoroughly Teutonic that it was hard at times to realize his American origin . . . Three songs in English were equally impressive."—July 5, 1901.

Ladies' Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals in Steinway Hall. Madame Lehmann's 'In Memoriam' was a great test of Mr. Tew's manner and inflection, and he sustained the interest of his audience well throughout it; and it is a supremely hard work for a single voice—fragmentary, passionate, moody, with its pedal-note of acute sorrow. . . . Mr. Tew is fortunate in possessing a powerful voice of fine quality, and he has both the voice and brains for success."—May 25, 1901.

Daily Telegraph—"Mr. Tew is an artist who commands attention and deserves praise. Especially has he the gift of feeling and the power of conveying it to others, while in point of intelligence he leaves but little to desire. Mr. Tew essayed last evening songs of widely contrasting kinds and of various countries, but the manner and spirit proper to each were easily revealed, and the result was a conspicuous success."—May 23 1901.

Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

orchestration of the work often calls for high praise.

The performance was not of a high standard, although it gave a fair idea of the opera. The two chief singers were not vocally well disposed, and the chorus was often pitiably weak and ragged.

The program of the afternoon concert, September 27, included Mackenzie's "Coriolanus" Suite (first time in America), Liszt's "Concerto Pathétique" (arranged and played by Richard Burmeister), Beethoven's Second Symphony. Mr. Van Hoose sang with commendable breadth, tenderness and manly feeling "Adieu, donc," from Massenet's pornographic version of the sad story of John the Baptist.

The suite is dull. It is without color, without dignity, in a word without character of any kind. Ah, if Mackenzie had only followed his Scottish inclinations, and introduced a bagpipe, or thundered out with the full brass "Hoot mon!" before the dwelling of Tullus Aufidius!

Mr. Burmeister played delightfully. The concerto itself is one of Liszt's less important works, and it hardly repaid the loving labor of the pianist-arranger.

There is little to say about the evening and final program. It was a program of "Artists' Night," and such programs always remind me, when I see men and women armed with a popular aria, of Hamlet's speech: "Then came each actor on his ass."

Suzanne Adams appeared and showed her unblenching wifely devotion by singing a waltz by her husband. She also sang "Batti, batti," and sang it all too slowly. Mr. Bispham sang Iago's creed ("Otello"), and "Quand' ero paggio" ("Falstaff"); Miss Stein sang Bemberg's "Jean d'Arc"; and Mr. Williams sang inimitably the aria from "The Swan and the Skylark." The orchestral numbers were the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"; variations from the Kaiser Quartet of Haydn; Bizet's "Jeux d'Enfants"; a march by Saint-Saëns. A motet by Mozart was the finale, a motet not worth the resurrection.

The weather was glorious throughout the festival; the prices of admission were higher than before; the attendance as a rule was smaller; the result, as I hear, was a pecuniary loss.

IRENE BRIGGS.

IRENE BRIGGS, whose picture appears on the front page this week, is the thirteen year old pupil of Miss Mary M. Shedd, discoverer and teacher of the American method. As was mentioned in last week's MUSICAL COURIER, Miss Briggs' voice and repertory are astonishing, and her teacher may well be proud of her.

Last April Miss Shedd read a paper on the American method before the Chicago University, from which the following extracts are taken:

"Ever since the world began new lines of thought have been condemned, and as this method is a new discovery, prejudice and doubt must be met with and swept away. It is for that reason that I am always anxious to have my pupils sing for those who doubt. They compare their singing with that of those singing by other methods and are convinced that the American method is the only true one.

"Think of the thousands who graduate in vocal music each year; many of them have studied from five to ten years. How many of them become great artists? Only those who are naturally born singers.

"To make singers sing naturally is just what the American method aims to do. There is no effort, no stress or wear and tear upon the throat. Children sing with full, round, mature tones, while men and women long past the prime of life have tones that are as fresh as those of men and women twenty years of age.

"Students of this method notice the rapid improvement in their voices and are encouraged thereby. They do not study for years and then find out that they never will be able to sing. In from one to two years earnest students are ready for professional work. Perfection is what is aimed for and perfect singing is the only kind worth one's time or money.

"A writer in a musical magazine says: 'In order to become a good vocal teacher one should have a pleasing personality and plenty of magnetism.' As long as teachers depend upon hypnotism, magnetism, pleasant smiles, finely equipped studios and social influence instead of actual knowledge, certain and systematic, just so long may we expect failures. Many men and women who began to study with us for the purpose of learning to sing are now preparing to leave their occupations and become teachers. This proves that the American method has a tangible, practical side which appeals to the business instincts of many.

"The testing of the voice reveals the condition of the muscles which determine the possibilities of the voice, and enables me to state with a reasonable degree of accuracy the length of time required to perfect the voice and place the singer in demand. Heretofore the element of uncertainty has been the most discouraging feature in the study of singing. Many of our so-called great instructors admit that success is by no means assured. To the earnest student who places himself in my care I can honestly state that success is certain. No matter how badly one sings or how small the voice, so long as the ear is acute as to pitch I can teach you to sing with as pure a tone as any artist ever sang."

In Chicago, where Miss Shedd is well known, her pupils are her best recommendations, and the following letter from the late George W. Lyon, of Lyon & Healy, also speaks for itself:

Mary M. Shedd will be the greatest voice teacher the world has ever known by reason of her appreciation of pure tone, which enables her to detect and remove faults in the beginning, in which she surpasses any one that I have ever known. On account of her wonderful knowledge of pure tone I do not hesitate to say that some day teachers of the piano, violin and other instruments will seek a recommendation from Miss Shedd, as any uncertainty in foundation work becomes apparent to her at once. Miss Shedd has often astonished me by her just criticism of cornet and flute players, her accurate ear detecting the incorrect breathing, made obvious by the uncertainty of execution and lack of even power.

BLAUVELT SAILS.—Madame Blauvelt sailed on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse last Wednesday. She has already forty engagements in England and Germany, and will sing on successive Saturdays in London, leaving the Continent especially for the purpose. In London she sings at Albert Hall, at Queen's Hall and the Crystal Palace. She has had the rare distinction of six engagements with the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter. January 2, 1902, she returns to New York.

The Virgil Correspondence School.

THE CLAVIER METHOD BY MAIL.

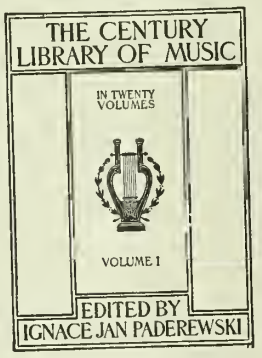
A new, superior and eminently efficient system for Teachers and Players (only). Special Technic Course (24 lessons). Every principle explicitly stated and clearly illustrated. Each lesson taken gives the right to send a question letter, the answers to which will receive Mr. VIRGIL'S personal attention.

Certificates to qualified teachers of the CLAVIER METHOD.

Prospectus, explaining system, terms, conditions, &c., sent on application. Address

SECRETARY, VIRGIL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,
11 West 22d Street, New York.

"THE CENTURY LIBRARY OF MUSIC" EDITED BY PADEREWSKI.



RICHARD BURMEISTER says: "The musical compositions, as to text, phrasing and fingering, show the hand of a master."

EMIL PAUR says: "A wonderful edition of the most important piano repertoire. Paderewski's fingering and phrasing are masterful."

DR. WM. MASON says: "It has features which seem to me deserving of special commendation."

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER says "It cannot fail to be valuable to every music student who can afford to be the happy possessor of this attractive publication."

GABRILOWITSCH says: "I wish the work, which I most heartily commend, every possible success."

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS says: "Besides . . . what has appealed with especial interest to me as a musician and teacher have been the unique piano lessons contributed by some of the foremost French and German pedagogues of the piano."

JULIE RIVÉ-KING says: "It represents an event in musical history."

THIS is unquestionably the most important work on modern music ever made—and the most beautiful. It is edited by the greatest of pianists, and it contains practically all of the music which he plays in concert—re-edited, re-phrased, re-pedalled and re-fingered. There are also superbly illustrated articles on the great musicians of the world, contributed by the most famous living musicians, with music lessons by the great teachers of Europe.

Readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER are cordially invited to send for the illustrated circular describing it, and for the valuable pamphlet of comparisons of music as found in this work with the same in standard editions. (Free.) Address

THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, NEW YORK.

ELECTA GIFFORD
SOPRANO.
Dates Booking for Concert, Recital and Oratorio.
WEST: CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.
EAST: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Ston
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russi.
For terms and dates address ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., Engla.

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Manager
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK CITY.
Has the honor to announce the following distinguished Musical Artists:
LIZA DELHASE-WICKES, The Brilliant Belgian Pianiste.
GERTRUDE VON BETZ, Pianiste. (First Prize Leipzig Conservatory.)
ALFRED DONALDSON WICKES, Violinist.
HENRIETTA WEBER, Pianiste and Accompanist.
FLORENCE SAGE, Pianiste, In Historical Recitals.
MINNE HUMPHRYES, Soprano.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YOR
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

FROM PARIS.

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 17, 1901.

PARIS is very gay at present, owing to the presence of the Emperor and Empress of Russia on French soil. The city was partially illuminated last night, the Opéra appearing to particular advantage, with its bold outline accentuated by tiny gas jets. Last night I was present at a performance of "Aïda." Not an ideal performance by any means, that is vocally, although there were many excellent features connected with the representation. For instance, the orchestra at the Opéra in Paris is nearly always irreproachable. I mean in its playing. So far as the conducting is concerned that very often leaves much to be desired. At present it seems to be the prevailing mode to relegate to a minor position the post of conductor in most of the large opera houses. In Paris the names of the chefs—of whom there are three—are not considered of sufficient importance to figure on the programs. Whether this is the result of the present conductors being mediocrities I cannot say. I only state the fact. Times are indeed changed when the authority of, let us say, a Costa was paramount; when an operatic conductor was really musical director (and not a stick waggler), carefully following the vagaries of singers—often imperfectly educated as musicians—who, nevertheless, strive with all their might to impose their crude ideas, erroneous tempi and readings on conductors, who certainly should be vested with sufficient authority to refuse to accept any such dictation. These are the days of virtuosi of the baton, and they, of course, seek the field of symphonic concerts, finding therein a wider field for the exploitation of their talents and their readings, in which the bizarre and eccentric pass very often for originality. Be the causes what they may, whether mediocrity on the part of the incumbents or economy on the part of the managers, certainly the chairs of the opera conductors in Europe are not filled to any great extent at present by men who, combining the ability and experience requisite with that other essential, the suaviter in modo, et fortiter in re, or the iron hand in velvet glove, so necessary to the operatic maestro. At this particular performance of "Aïda" I was struck by the great and increasing absence of artistic singing, and the fact that the most elementary laws of tone production, quality, &c., seem to be violated with impunity if the role happens to be what is called a dramatic one. An instrumentalist—say a stringed instrument performer—has it constantly impressed on his mind that but for the absolute necessity of correct intonation no difficulties exist, and failing this, no merit can be allowed, and I never could understand why a singer should be allowed to scream and yell flat and sharp in breath, and yet for these defects to be condoned on the plea of earnestness and dramatic truth.

At the Opéra Comique performances have only just begun, consequently no novelties have as yet been given. Several interesting débuts have taken place during the first week in the standard repertory. Among them that of Mlle. Nerville in the opera of "Lakmé," that opera of Délibes which already begins to appear tawdry and artificial, somewhat like the tarnished gold lace and the rusty spangles of a well worn circus rider's cloak. Mlle. Nerville—or Miss Chapman—the former being only her theatrical name, is an Irish girl, possessed of a voice of the extensive range required for "Lakmé," achieved a success, more perhaps as vocalist than actress, her extreme youth and lack of experience fully explaining any trifling shortcomings on the latter score. I will revert to Mlle. Nerville later, when I shall have had more opportunities of judging of her capabilities. One feature of the present management of the second subventioned lyric theatre of Paris is the effort made to give beginners a chance. Hitherto the débuts have been largely confined to those singers who had gained prizes at the Conservatoire, but owing either to the lack of sufficient and capable singers furnished annually by that institution, or the desire to go further afield, the Opéra-Comique seems recently to have opened its portals to several young artists who have not passed through the Conservatoire.

Sardou, who, with Ghensi, is the co-author of the libretto of "Les Barbares," the new opera of Saint-Saëns, is to stage manage the work on its production, which will be about the middle of October. The rehearsals have been a little delayed by the leave of absence granted to Vaguet (tenor) and Delmas (bass), but are now in active progress. The first orchestral rehearsal will take place in a week from now, the printing of the band parts being completed. Several papers have stated that "Les Barbares" will be played in conjunction with a separate ballet of the repertory to finish the performance. This is not correct, as the work will form the complete night's entertainment, and has an incidental ballet in the third act, finishing (as I wrote last week) by a farandole, in which the composer has used most effectively several Provençal folksongs. "Les Barbares" is in three acts and a prologue. The first scene is a full view of the antique theatre of Orange, with its sacred laurels, as seen at sunset. The second scene is also the theatre of Orange, but seen in profile and by moonlight. The third act takes place before the gates of Orange, and has been designed, I understand, by Sardou himself. It has been rather extensively advertised that Siegfried Wagner would conduct some of the Wagnerian performances to be given in Paris next year. This will not be the case, as the following letter proves:

LUGANO, September 5, 1901.

Herr Siegfried Wagner has asked me to inform you that he has abandoned the idea of directing any of the performances of "Die Götterdämmerung" to be given in Paris next year, while, however, still continuing his interest in this artistic experiment.

FELIX MOTTL.

The last theatrical joke on the boulevards: Said the director of a theatre to a young author whose piece they were rehearsing: "My dear boy, you have really not yet got the feeling of realism or truth of detail. For instance, your play begins with these stage directions: At the rising of the curtain, the concierge (janitor) is discovered reading his newspaper. Now, this is perfectly untrue to life. Don't you know that he always reads his lodger's newspaper?"

DE VALMOUR.

KAMINSKY MEMORIAL CONCERT.—At the Educational Alliance last Sunday night a concert was given for the purpose of raising funds for a stone to the memory of the dead Russian musician, and a good audience enjoyed the program. Conductor A. Shapiro wielded the baton in true professional fashion, his orchestra playing well. Perhaps the surprise of the evening lay in the playing of Fonaroff's pupil, little M. Mishel Shapiro, who played the "Concerto Militaire," by Lipinski, with much virtuosity. He had to play an encore, and bow many times.

Mrs. Diamond Nathan, a pupil of Madame Ogden-Crane, sang beautifully some coloratura compositions, showing a high and clear voice under excellent control. Others who assisted were Mr. Leve, clarinet; Dr. Radin, who made an eloquent address, and F. W. Riesberg at the piano.

H. H. Wetzler Returns to New York.

H. H. WETZLER has returned to New York after spending an interesting summer in Europe. His was quite a musical journey, since he hardly missed any performance worth hearing. He says he was very much impressed by the conducting of Richard Strauss, whom he met in Berlin, and who, aside from his eminent musicianship, is a most amiable and interesting man personally. In Bayreuth Mr. Wetzler heard eight performances, and met the whole Wagner family at the Villa Wahnfried, and was constantly in the company of hosts of distinguished personages, among them Richter, Mottl, Muck, Nikisch, Van Rooy, Friedrichs, Hans Thoma, the artist, and many others. From Bayreuth Mr. Wetzler went to Munich for the inauguration of the new Prinzregenten Theatre. In Weimar he spent a fortnight with Busoni, of whose wonderful playing he speaks most enthusiastically.

The reception of Mr. Wetzler's compositions in Germany has been gratifying. Many of the leading singers have taken up his songs and sing them with great success in all the principal cities. Prof. Julius Stockhausen, the dean of singing masters, has also shown great interest in Mr. Wetzler's work and teaches his songs to many of his pupils. Mr. Wetzler's orchestral works have attracted much attention; one of them will be performed at the second symphony concert of the Frankfurt Opera House in November.

Concerning his orchestration of the Bach organ sonata in E flat Felix Mottl writes: "I consider your Bach orchestration a splendid success and a work full of fine and subtle traits."

Mr. Wetzler has resumed his teaching and is looking forward to a very busy season. His residence-studio is at 5 East Eighty-fourth street.

WALTER JOHN HALL.—The pupils of this successful vocal instructor keep on winning fame and renown for themselves, as well as for their talented master, with every public appearance. In a criticism of a recent concert the Los Angeles Herald refers as follows to Mrs. Minne Hance-Owens, contralto, who has returned to her home in California, after a protracted course of study with Mr. Hall: "The reappearance of Mrs. Minne Hance-Owens, after a long absence in the East, was greeted with an ovation. Her peculiarly sweet and resonant contralto has gained in strength and sweetness, and the improvement in her method is marked. After her introductory number the weird "Autumn Gale" of Grieg, Mrs. Owens was recalled, and delighted her audience by her artistic reading of the well-known "Rosary." During the latter part of her stay here, and up to the time of her departure for the West, Mrs. Owens was the contralto soloist at the Brick Church, Fifth avenue, in this city, and her work there and in concert was attracting marked attention. Her successor at the Brick Church, Miss Edith L. Davies, who is giving great satisfaction, is also a pupil of Mr. Hall, and has been for the past three years. In fact, Mr. Hall's success in training the contralto voice has been most pronounced.

Frieda Siemens

THE EMINENT GERMAN PIANISTE.

American Tour October to April.

UNDER DIRECTION OF

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Carnegie Hall, New York.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

. . . Vocal Score of . . .

MANRU.

Opera in Three Acts by

I. J. PADEREWSKI.

Translated and Adapted for Performance in English

By H. E. KREHBIEL.

PRICE, ... net, $5 00.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

The Walker-Severn Conservatory of Music, New York.

FRANCIS WALKER, Singing.
EDMUND SEVERN, Violin and Theory.
Mrs. EDMUND SEVERN, Piano and Singing.
ARTHUR SEVERN, Violoncello.

Open October 1st, 1901.

For terms write to the Secretary,

Mr. FRANCIS WALKER, 836 Seventh Ave., New York.

Homes for Students Special Course in Accompaniment Playing, by Mrs. Severn. Class-lessons in Italian for Singers, Mr. Walker. Ensemble Playing, Mr. Severn.

HENRIETTE WEBER

Pianist and Accompanist.

INSTRUCTION. For Terms, Dates, &c., address

Studio: 60 West 39th St ARNOLD SOMLYO, Mgr.,

'Phone: 2058-38. CARNEGIE HALL, N. Y.

Edward MacDowell

PIANO RECITALS.

Address Columbia University, New York.

FRANCIS ROGERS

BARITONE.

Oratorio, Concert, Recitals, &c.

Address Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 East 17th St., or 26 East 33d Street, New York City.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., September 28, 1901.

A BRIGHT example of what an up-to-date American girl can do is Miss Caroline Cramer, of Rochester, N. Y. She sang at the Temple of Music August 28 as assistant for Walter Heaton's organ concert. The greater part of the shifting crowd stayed to the last to hear Miss Cramer's last number. She sang "Oh, Divine Redeemer," Gounod, and "This Would I Do," Chapman. Her pure soprano voice of extensive range, warmth of expression, splendid enunciation and refined personal appearance combined, caused salvos of applause, and she had to sing again and again. Right from the first musicians knew that she has had splendid instruction, and we were not surprised to hear that she had a year's study under Marchesi, Paris, having previously studied under Mrs. Alice Faber, Rochester. Hundreds of testimonials from Rochester papers and surrounding towns testify to her ability to charm an audience. We predict that Miss Cramer will some day seek larger fields and wish her much success.

John C. Weber's Military Band has been playing to admiring crowds for several weeks and it is with deep regret that the music lovers see them depart this week Last night's program was especially fine. Mr. Weber's own compositions are always redemanded.

JOHN C. WEBER'S MILITARY BAND.
John C. Weber Conductor.

March, Hongroise, Rakoczy.....Liszt
Overture, Stabat Mater.....Rossini
Waltzes, Wiener Mad'ln.....Ziehrer
Polka de Concert, Pizzicato.....Strauss
Grand Fantaisie, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Grand Overture Solennelle, 1812.....Tschaikowsky
William Kopp.
Ballet music, Faust.....Gounod
Descriptive Millitary Fantasia, The Warrior's Dream.....Voelker
Excerpts from The Runaway Girl.....Monckton

Another band, Brooke's Chicago Marine Band, has been drawing crowds for a few weeks past. Mr. Brooke gives many sclections from Wagner and his own compositions are much admired. In fact, they have become very familiar; "The Buffalo March" (new) won hearty applause.

Frank Taft, of New York, adds to the interest of the Exposition, with his daily recitals on the Æolian Pipe Organ at the Mission Building.

A charming young Boston woman, who directs the Woman's Band in the Japanese village at our Exposition, is Miss Ethel MacDonough, a member of the celebrated Woman's Fadette's Orchestra. The orchestra is composed of ten pieces, their music is clean cut, well selected and they merit much praise.

CAROLINE CRAMER.

A great surprise to the musicians that gathered at the Temple a week ago to hear an evening performance on the organ was W. K. Steiner, of Pittsburg, Pa. He was an unknown quantity before, but the music lovers present are clamoring for a repetition of his concert. He is booked for engagements this fall. A picture and data will appear in our next.

Attention of music lovers is called to a concert to be given by Miss Silence Dales October 3, which is Nebraska day. She has been chosen as the musical representative from Nebraska, is a violinist of repute in Lincoln, Neb. She will be assisted by Mrs. Frederick W. Taylor, Buffalo's soprano soloist, and Miss Marie Hoover, pianist. Description of concert will follow later.

MRS. K. RIESBERG.

PHILADELPHIA SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1901.

Editor The Musical Courier:

IF you will kindly give publicity to the following statement, you will greatly oblige the undersigned:

Certain publications have recently appeared which show misconception of the policy adopted by the management of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Being most reluctant to take any action which might lead to controversy, the committee has hitherto refrained from referring publicly to the matter, but now deems it advisable to do so.

The management is and always has been most desirous of engaging every Philadelphia player who is competent. Offers to such were held open several weeks before a single applicant from outside was accepted. Had all these resident players accepted positions, there would still have remained vacancies, because the number of musicians of symphony orchestra grade in Philadelphia is insufficient.

This condition of affairs is not the exception, but the rule. The eminent orchestras of this country have all found it necessary to draw upon the chief cities of America and Europe. The management has received applications from players in Boston, New York, Pittsburg, Scranton, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, San Francisco and abroad. Probably no city in either America or Europe has ever recruited a complete first-class symphony orchestra from her resident players alone.

Clearly, then, two things become necessary, that outsiders be engaged and that local players agree to play with such outsiders.

Both propositions have met with opposition. In order to understand the opposition to the second, it must be stated that nearly every local player belongs to the organization known as the Musical Union; this body forbids its members from playing in an orchestra containing non-union players. Its by-laws were recently amended making one year's residence in Philadelphia a prerequisite to membership, and raising the initiation fee from $25 to $100. The first amendment was subsequently repealed. The second makes membership for non-residence virtually prohibitory.

The foregoing are the conditions which affect the situation.

If the Union, through the rules made by its members prevents a member from joining the orchestra, his grievance is clearly against it, and not against the management of the orchestra, which is anxious to engage him. It is difficult to see wherein these rules benefit Philadelphia's best musicians.

It has been stated that the management intended to supply music for dances and balls, and compete in general musical business. Such is not the case, and has never been contemplated. In fulfilment of the purposes for which a first-class orchestra is created, engagements for high grade concerts, oratorios, &c., will be accepted.

During the coming season over fifty symphony concerts instituted by the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, will be given in various places. Thus, instead of interfering

Originally I intended securing only 50 Concerts for this Season, but everybody seems to want him, and I have now (Sept. 30th) more than 75 arranged for, so I have decided to secure another 75, which will not be difficult. Mr Bailey's Company includes ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano, and EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist.

WM. WORTH BAILEY

R. E. JOHNSTON, Room 930 St. James Bldg., Broadway and 26th Street, New York City.

HERMANN HANS WETZLER

Will resume his instruction in Piano, Harmony, Composition and Organ;
—Also—
German Opera and Song Interpretation
Residence: 5 East 84th St., New York.

ELLISON VAN HOOSE, TENOR

Sole Management
Wolfsohn's Musical Bureau, 131 E. 17th St., New York

MARY LOUISE CLARY

CONTRALTO.

ADDRESS: REMINGTON SQUIRE, Manager, 125 East 24th Street, New York.

Hattie Scholder

Phenomenal Child Concert Pianist
Age 10.
For terms, dates, etc., address
J. E. FRANCKE, 109 East 14th Street
S. EPPINGER, 718 Lexington Avenue
New York.

ith the business of Philadelphia musicians, as has been tated, the management has practically created many new pportunities, for which it desires to engage every Philadelhia player who is competent. Very truly yours,

JOHN H. INGHAM,
OLIVER B. JUDSON,
EDWARD I. KEFFER,
OSCAR A. KNIPE,
EDWARD G. MCCOLLIN,
A. VAN RENSSELAER,
HENRY WHELEN, JR.

Executive Committee of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association.

Tivadar Nachez.

Tivadar Nachez must indisputably be reckoned among the first ted virtuosos of the time. In grandeur and richly flowing power tone he is scarcely surpassed by the best. The restless Hunrian blood which rolls in his veins gives to his execution a fire at hurries the hearer onward, and his colleagues who can render aganini's sixths and octave etudes, variations on the G string, with ch sureness and beauty, can to-day be counted on one's fingers. ut he is not only a dazzling virtuoso, he appears as a true artist Tartini's "Devil's Trill" and Brueh's First Concerto, interesting his "Swedish Rhapsody," based on the original "Swedish Mely," and inspiring was the rendering of the noble Schumann Abendlied" and the effective Bazzini "Scherzo Fantastique." In ply to stormy demands he made some additions, and surprised with Beethoven's G major Romanze and a sordine piece of an egiac cradle song character.—Prof. Bernhard Vogel, Leipsiger eueste Nachrichten, October 29, 1894.

The admirable virtuosity of the noted master Tivadar Nachez et general approval. Not only by brilliant technic, but also by eat delicacy in the piano, and especially by his really great dery, both in the cantilene and in the most difficult ornamentation bravura pieces, Herr Nachez roused the audience to ever inreasing storms of applause. When we saw this man with the dark ial expression, reminding one of the Mephisto of the stage, dur- his execution of Tartini's "Devil's Trill," we did not anticipate t the same man later could produce such tenderness and feeling tone in the adagio of Brueh's G minor Concerto, and in Schuann's "Träumerei" at the end. We scarcely believe that any other tuoso can equal this Paganini of to-day in versatility. The sterly execution of the "Devil's Trill" arouse general astonishnt. Equally charming was his playing of the Schumann number.—rnhard Säuberlich, General Anzeiger, Leipsic, October 29, 1894.

Tivadar Nachez, Royal Kammer virtuoso from London, is a lin virtuoso of gigantic technic, who need not dread comparison h Joachim and Sarasate. His tone is grand and full. He played ides compositions by Tartini, Brueh and Paganini, his own nposition, "Schwedische Rhapsodie" (op. 22). Altogether the ncert was an enjoyment seldom met in Leipsic.—Leipziger Zeig, October 29, 1894.

NEW PAPPENHEIM STUDIO.—Mme. Eugenie Pappenheim's w studio at her residence, The Rutland, Broadway and fty-seventh street, are now fully in order. The apartnts have been fully redecorated and refurnished under dame's direction, and the work has been carried out in very artistic manner. There are now three connecting ms, which are devoted to the reception of pupils and al study; a reception room, a library and the music m proper. They are large rooms, with exceptionally h ceilings, well adapted for singing. Especially the sic room is very much admired. It is decorated in old e, with furniture and hangings to match. The celeted prima donna has a busy season before her.

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. A Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

JOSEPH S. BAERNSTEIN.

WE present this week a good picture of Joseph S. Baernstein, the well-known basso. Mayor Jones, the thrice elected mayor of ambitious musical Toledo, after the first appearance in that city of Mr. Baernstein, remarked with emphasis upon the platform, where Baernstein had just been recalled again and again, "Here is truly the twentieth century singer. His success does not keep him from nor is he too proud to sing to us serious compositions from the old composers, or the jolly, tuneful ditties and folksongs of the Welsh, Irish and Scotch."

This is the impression one receives while listening to the varied recital programs of this artist, and, using the words of a music critic: "His princely bearing, his easy and perfect method of tone production, his clear and distinct articulation, his magnificent and deep interpretation makes listening a real pleasure, and each member of the audience feels him or her self personally sung to."

JOSEPH S. BAERNSTEIN.

In years gone by, and indeed too often do we still find it in our present singers, artists, when they had decided to enter the field of music, and having acquired what is generally termed a good tone production, would place themselves in the hands of a master, commit the notes and words of the aria or song in question, and then, parrot-like, repeat with unfailing accuracy, every emphasis, inflection, retard or accellerando, just as it was taught the

But the method of to-day, and to which Baernstein has struck the keynote, is quite a different thing. Audiences require and look for more than a beautiful voice; they want first of all to hear the sense and meaning of the words; they want the story depicted to them; they want interpreted masterly and with individuality the aria, the old classics or the new love song, that they may see and feel and know as well as hear the pulsations of those hearts whose only expressions are written musical notes.

Baernstein, during the past ten years, has conscientiously bent his every effort to acquiring the correct and distinct articulation of the English, German and Italian languages in singing, to the broadening of his mentality; to the deepening of his imaginative powers; in short, to the equipment more perfectly of himself to appear before a cultured audience, and have that indefinable something which creates magnetism and holds the audience attentive throughout a lengthy program.

Little wonder then that this studious one finds himself sought where music is sought in its highest and most beautiful form; little wonder that we read the phrase so often used in criticism of him, "His singing was a revelation."

Mr. Baernstein has placed his affairs entirely in the hands of William Fisher, who acts as his exclusive manager. Engagements have been booked in New York, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Springfield, Baltimore, Kansas City, Toledo, Brooklyn, Newark, Englewood, Galesburg, Detroit and Philadelphia, and numerous other appearances are pending.

Francis Fischer Powers at His Summer and Autumn Schools

THOSE who have followed the career of Francis Fischer Powers will hardly be surprised to learn that in two seasons he has established in Kansas City, Mo., one of the largest summer schools in America. During the season of fourteen weeks, Mr. Powers, with his able corps of assistants, gave vocal instruction to something like 200 pupils, representing nearly every State in the Union, for whom Mr. Powers' season was all too brief. On leaving for Los Angeles, Cal., however, whither he went to open (with Mrs. Genevra Johnstone Bishop) his autumn classes, Mr. Powers left in charge of his Kansas City work Horace H. Kinney, his talented and popular first assistant. The following articles from the Kansas City Independent speak for themselves, and are two more of the already countless tributes paid the eminent New York baritone and teacher:

MR. POWERS LEAVES.

The departure of Francis Fischer Powers for Los Angeles this week and his intention to start a school for vocal instruction in that city call attention to the meteoric success he achieved here. It has been but two years since he came to this town an unknown stranger from New York, that is, unknown aside from knowledge obtained of prodigious successes in the East, and yet in that short time he established himself so strongly and favorably in local musical circles that no figure is better known than his, nor no name received with more glad acclaim.

There's something strenuous about the man, something Rooseveltian in his composition that brings him to the fore, for each of the times he conducted vocal schools here the sessions have been in summer, which, heretofore, had been considered the very worst time of the year for his business. Yet for all that he attained distinction unequaled by teachers established here for years.

Now he is to start another school in Los Angeles, the third of a chain which reaches across the continent. Mr. Powers usually makes New York his winter home, a place where he achieved his first great success. Most instructors would have been content with that with which his strenuous personality was not, so long as there remained other fields to enter and other obstacles to overcome, and so he has put his interests here in other hands and journeyed after fresh triumphs.

The two closing twilight musicales by pupils of Mr. Powers were given last Monday and Wednesday evenings. This is the first time that Mr. Powers has sung at these musicales, and his wonderful baritone voice was heard in Bizet's "Agnus Dei." At the close of this number Mr. Powers reached a high A flat with such a volume and at the same time beauty of tone as to completely carry away his audience.

The success of Mr. Powers' pupils this season, as well as the high character of these musicales, fully demonstrates the superior ability of Mr. Powers as a teacher and artist, and in his work he has been wonderfully supported by Harry Briggs, one of the finest accompanists that has visited the city.

Will Play the Mason & Hamlin.

AMONG the artists who will be heard with orchestra, quartet and in recital on the Mason & Hamlin piano during the season 1901-1902 are:

Harold Bauer.
Ernest Hutcheson.
Carlo Buonamici.
Paolo Gallico.
Alfred DeVoto.
Thomas Whitney Surette.
Edgar Stillman Kelley.

THE TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employers Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JULY 1, 1901.

Total Assets,	$32,198,504.44
(Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)
TOTAL LIABILITIES (including Reserves),	27,499,719.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,698,785.19
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$44,469,462.48
Total Insurance in Force,	$499,260,653.00

GAINS: 6 months, January to July, 1901.

IN ASSETS,	$1,270 172.92
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	4,739,635.00
INCREASE IN RESERVES (both Departments),	1,165,244.44
PREMIUMS, INTEREST and RENTS, 6 Months,	4,538,683 18

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS Secretary,
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON General Manager of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS. ORATORIOS.

PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA.

FESTIVALS.

FRITZ SCHEEL, Conductor.

OFFICE: 1520 CHESTNUT STREET.

PUBLISHER ARTHUR P. SCHMIDT.

Quarter-Centennial Anniversary.

AMONG the items of interest for the present month we note that the well-known music publishing house, Arthur P. Schmidt, of Boston, celebrates on the 2d inst. its twenty-fifth anniversary.

Mr. Schmidt, who was born in Altona, Germany, April 1, 1846, entered the music business of George D. Russell & Co., Boston, as clerk in 1866. In 1876 he established a small business of his own on Winter street, and three years later went to Tremont street, where he remained until 1884, opening branches in Leipsic in 1889 and New York in 1894. Since selling the Boston retail department in 1889 his time has been devoted entirely to publishing, having moved to more extensive quarters at 146 Boylston street.

From the day of his establishment as a music publisher Mr. Schmidt has steadily pursued the policy of taking up compositions by the best American composers and publishing them with the same elaboration and detail which characterize the work of the foremost German houses, thus securing to a number of our prominent composers like Chadwick, Beach, Foote, Paine and others, the means of bringing their works before the public. This policy has been consistently followed to the present time, and to-day his catalogue, which numbers fully 6,000 works, is considered representative of American music in its best form.

In 1880 John K. Paine's Spring Symphony was issued, being the first orchestral score ever published for an American composer.

This was followed by many other orchestral works worthy of note, and it is but justice to state that the progress made by American composers has in a large part been due to the encouragement and assistance extended by American publishers.

Gregory Hast and Brahms.

TO so interpret Brahms' songs as to make them perfectly intelligible and especially enjoyable as well is a high test of a singer's art. Brahms is to music what Browning is to poetry—caviare to the general. Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor, whom Loudon G. Charlton will introduce to American audiences this coming season, is a Brahms apostle, so to speak, and he has made a specialty of some of the great composer's songs, notably "Die Meinacht." Of his interpretation of this number, the English press is unanimous in its terms of high praise.

The Manchester Guardian says: "To those listeners, however, who had the good fortune to understand German, the rendering of the song, "Die Meinacht" (Brahms) must have been a delight. It was sung in a manner that fully revealed the beauties of the music."

Another authoritative critic says: "The strains which haunt my memory of that evening are those of Brahms' 'Meinacht,' which Gregory Hast sang by special request. Surely 'Meinacht' is one of the most inspired of all Brahms' songs, and, when sung as it was the other evening, would bring immortality to its composer had he never written anything besides."

Opening of Clavier Piano School.

THE opening exercises at the third school year of the Clavier Piano School were given last Monday evening, September 30. Following is the program:

Sonata ..... Scarlatti
Etude Melodique ..... Raff
Pierrette (Air de Ballet) ..... Chaminade
Miss Grace Hodgson.
Remarks by Mr. Virgil—subject, "The Work Before Us."
Pastorale ..... Scarlatti-Tausig
Capriccio ..... Scarlatti-Tausig
Rondo in G major ..... Beethoven
Frank Norris Jones.
Announcement of Lesson Hours.
Musical Numbers (to be announced).
John Rebarer.

The regular work of the school began yesterday (Tuesday, October 1), with a large attendance. The weekly recitals will be given as usual, but in place of recital the first week, W. A. White, who is to teach ear training at the school this season, will on Thursday evening, October 3, at 8 o'clock, deliver a lecture in Clavier Hall on the subject "Positive Pitch, and How to Acquire It." All persons interested, whether members of the school or not, will be welcome at this lecture.

It is intended to make the weekly recitals a feature of the school, and ensemble classes will be formed later for the rendering of chamber music. Charles Russell, the 'cellist, will have charge of the ensemble classes.

ANTONIA SAWYER RESUMES.—Mrs. Sawyer's new studio, 1690 Broadway (Telephone, 502 Columbus) is sure to be the scene of constant activity this season, to judge by the number of vocal students already registered for lessons. Her superior knowledge of diction, as exemplified in her own singing, her wide experience and sympathetic personality, all count toward making her one of the great teachers.

To-morrow she resumes teaching at Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Gardner's Fifth avenue school, where she gave last May a fine students' concert. At the commencement next day she sang three times, standard songs by Masscnet and others.

Her summer, spent in the hills of Maine, was a combination of pleasant work and recreation, and to close her season she gave two concerts, apropos of which local papers said in part:

Mrs. Sawyer is a singer who possesses a remarkably sweet, rich voice, and her musical tones are of rare quality. * * * A few of her pupils here in town sang at the musicale. * * * The program was listened to with much interest. * * * All present felt they had been given a fine opportunity to hear the best music done in good style.—Bangor Daily News.

The musicale given by Mrs. Sawyer and her pupils was attended by a large number. * * * It was a most delightful occasion, and a feast for lovers of music. * * * Mrs. Sawyer has been teaching here with most flattering success.—Bangor Commercial.

FLAVIE VAN DEN HENDE.—Mme. Flavie van den Hende, the 'cellist, has returned from her sojourn in Virginia. She is under L. G. Charlton's management. Her studio is at 45 West Eighty-second street.

EMIL PAUR RETURNS.—Emil Paur, the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society and of the Paur Symphony Orchestra, returned from Europe Monday. His two sons, who accompanied him last spring, will remain in Germany and continue their studies.

EMIL FISCHER.—Emil Fischer, the distinguished basso, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has taken a residence studio at the La Rochelle, 57 West Seventy-fifth street.

Mr. Fischer will hereafter devote his time to teaching.

VAN DER STUCKEN ON THE BARBAROSSA.—Frank Van der Stucken sailed last Saturday from Bremen for New York on the North German Lloyd steamer Barbarossa.

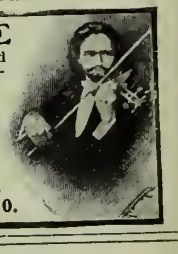
WANTED—Male pianist and teacher, good soloist, for Southern female seminary, one or two months, $40 per week; place may be permanent. Address ATLANTA, MUSICAL COURIER office.

VIOLIN VALUE

A Violin bought by our Original and unique plan becomes simply an investment. It is always worth exactly what you paid for it. It will pay you to investigate. We carry the largest line of fine and rare Violins in America. Good ones, $5 up. Easy payments, if desired.

Large, handsomely illustrated Violin Cat FREE on request.

THE RUDOLPH WURLITZER CO.
E. Fourth Street, CINCINNATI, O.



Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

MRS. L. P. MORRILL,
SCIENTIFIC VOICE CULTURE.
The Chelsea, 222 West 23d Street, New York.

KATE STELLA BURR,
VOCAL CULTURE—ACCOMPANIST.
Coach to leading artists. Correct interpretation. Highest artistic finish. Opera, Oratorio, Song Recitals. Organist-Director Grace M. E. Church.
Studio: 76 West 82d Street, New York.

JOHN YOUNG,
TENOR.
Oratorio and Concert.
271 West 113th Street, New York

HUBERT ARNOLD,
VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
138 West 65th Street, New York.

J. JEROME HAYES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 40 West Twenty-eighth Street.

WALTER L. BOGERT,
Musical Lectures, Song Recitals, Conducting.
Instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint and Song Interpretation.
72 Lawrence St., Flushing, New York City.

THE BERTA GROSSE-THOMASON SCHOOL FOR PIANO.
340 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.
Piano Classes. Theory, Harmony, Composition.
W. E. BASSETT. Tuition per Term, $15 to $50.

JOSEPH JOACHIM SCHOOL.
STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.
GERALDINE MORGAN, Director.
Orchestral and 'Cello Department, Paul Morgan.
914 CARNEGIE HALL, New York.

SHANNA CUMMING,
SOPRANO.
1424 Pacific Street, Brooklyn.
Telephone 906A, Bedford.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU.

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 141-143 Fifth Avenue, New York.

McCALL LANHAM
BARITONE.
OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS.
Opera, Concerts and Oratorio.
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Care AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUSIC,
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAGO.

MISS AMY ROBIE
Violiniste.
Lately of Brussels and Royal Conservatory of Leipzig.
Concerts, Musicales Instruction.
Residence-Studio, 184 W 82d Street, NEW YORK

LEO SCHULZ,
'Cello Virtuoso,
77 WEST 55th STREET, NEW YORK.

THE KLINGENFELD COLLEGE OF MUSI
—AND—
SCHOOL OF ELOCUTION.
108 Hancock Street, BROOKLYN, N. Y
NEW YORK STUDIO: 40 West 35th Street.

OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 15. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1124.

S. M. FABIAN

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI, New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Head of Vocal Department "The American Institute of Applied Music," 212 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York. Permanent Studio. Also CONCERTS and RECITALS.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Concerts, Recitals, Oratorio.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL,

201 West 81st Street, New York.
LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS, concert pianist and teacher of piano and theory, director. Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. M. Virgil; certified teacher of the Virgil Clavier Method of Technic. Private and daily class instruction.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: "The Montevideo, 7th Ave., near 54th St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer course.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue, and 29th Street.
Studio: Room 1201, Carnegie Hall, New York.
Telephone: 1351 Columbus.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 206 West Eighty-sixth Street, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG, ACCOMPANIST.

Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH,

Virgil Method. Pupils in Piano and Harmony. Six years instructor at the Virgil Piano School. Pupil of Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. Classes in Sight Reading, Ear Training and Time Keeping. Studio: 132-133 Carnegie Hall, city.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
851-852 Carnegie Hall.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
172 West 79th Street, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York.
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

VOCAL CULTURE, TONE EMISSION, VOICE BUILDING, STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH.
128 East 64th St., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
80 Washington Square East, New York.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

Pianist.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method.
Studios: 1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Studio: 60 West Thirty-ninth Street,
Private 'phone: 2058 38th. New York.

S. ARCHER GIBSON,

SOLO ORGANIST.
Organist-choirmaster of Brick Church and Beth El Temple, Fifth avenue.
Address: The Iowa, 135 West 104th Street,
Telephone: 1108 Riverside. New York.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE IN ALL BRANCHES.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

MRS. M. PRICE, Director, 2105 Seventh Ave. corner 125th Street. Special daily class. The only one in New York where the pupil has a lesson and practice every day under the care of competent teachers. Terms reasonable. Virgil Clavier used.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Illustrated Lectures on Music.
Private instruction Classes in music-study.
Residence-studio: 17 West 103d Street, New York

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director.
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory and Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "New Method of Memorizing."
141 Fifth Ave., New York.

MUNICH THE MUSICAL.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

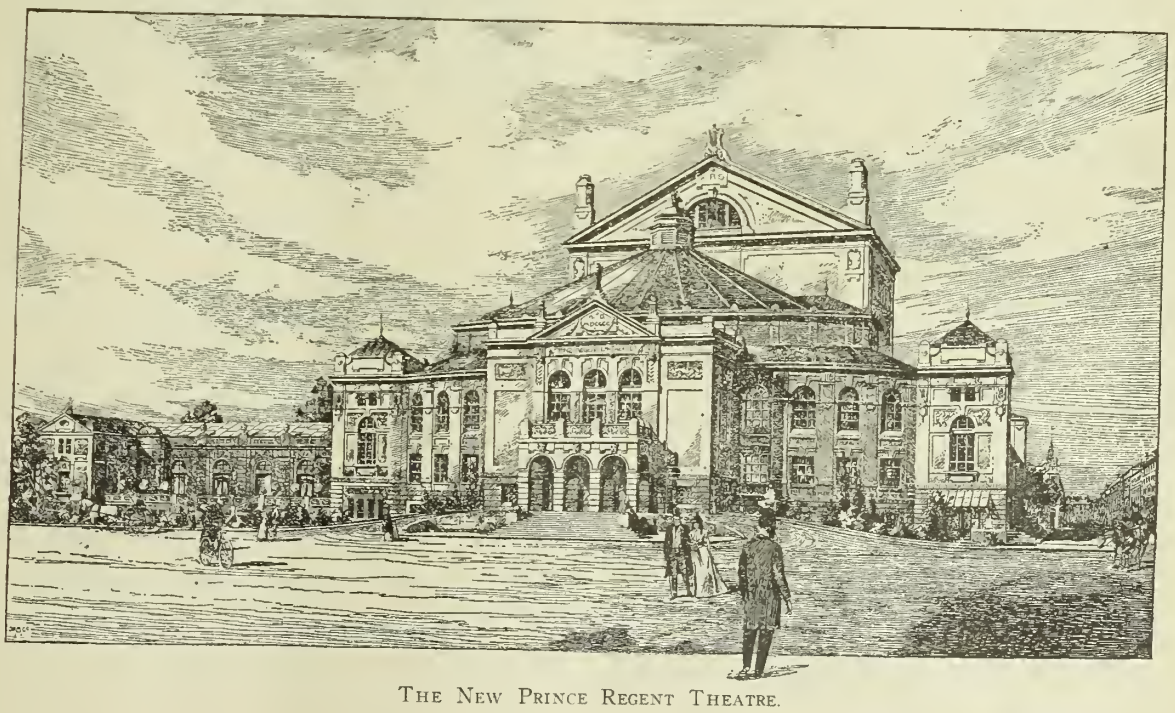
Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.

I.

PRINZREGENTEN-THEATER. Amphitheatralischer Zuschauerraum. Unsichtbares Orchester. This pleasing announcement greeted my picture-weary, pigment-soaked eyes at the top of a program. It told me that in the new Prince Regent's Theatre there was an amphitheatrical audi-orium, and that the orchestra was invisi-le. The hour had struck when I must of ne-essity take up the white man's musical burden and se my ear tympani once more in a professional nanner. Bayreuth had given me a midsummer dose f Wagner, and though I ostensibly came to Mu-ich for its opera house, I avoided it as long as I ould. Then my friends began to make remarks, nd I saw the game was up; I had to Wagnerize ith the rest of the world or else go home. I pre-erred the former.

The paint was hardly dry on the walls of the the-tre last August when the rehearsals began. To-day e building stands quite completed, and its exterior one of the most distinguished of any on the globe. admire it more than I do the Paris Opéra—it oks like a Wagner theatre.

At first blush the house seems the duplicate of the ayreuth one. This impression vanishes on closer spection. Magnificently built of stone, marble and on, the Prince Regent receives the public on the rth side from a porte cochère. There is a massive stibule, a corridor with cloakrooms, and at the d of each corridor a large foyer. Stairways lead the four entrances which admit one to the audi-rium. This dips down toward the orchestra, ough the angle of descent is not so steep as at ayreuth. Its gradient is easier. The seats are ge and comfortable. Everyone stands up until e house is darkened and the last comer admitted. ter the final fanfare—there are three—no one n enter. But if you are sick you can walk out as easily as in any other theatre, for the aisles are wide and the ushers easily cajoled with a little palm-grease. I was disappointed in the size of the auditorium, which only holds 1,106 persons in all, boxes included. Everything is of the most luxurious—except the ugly frescoes in the foyer. These are of the accustomed flaring Munich brand. I was surprised to find the comparative brightness in the auditorium after the curtain was up. Twelve candles in semi-darkened lanthorns on either side of the building shed quite a diffused glow over the audience, the ceiling electric lights being lowered. The Munich music lover is of a cheerful disposition. He dislikes the total darkness of Bayreuth, as he does its monastic silence, so there is whispering, and the obscurity does not trouble the nervous ones. In case of fire the building could be emptied much more rapidly than the old trap up at Bayreuth. The Metropolitan Opera House on a Wagner night is much darker than this one.



THE NEW PRINCE REGENT THEATRE.

The stage is smaller than at Bayreuth; indeed it seems far too small for all the important artistic business transacted upon it. I dislike a small Wagner stage; for Mozart it is necessary. And the Prince Regent's stage is set back too deep within its proscenium. The frame is too large for the picture. This, and the heavy material, stone, iron, bronze, used in the construction of the Vorbühne—for there is in reality no proscenium arch—may be the cause of the several distressing echoes heard in the house. At least that is what Francis Neilson, of the Covent Garden stage direction, believes. At Bayreuth there is an arch over the stage, while the space between the footlights and the orchestral shell is wider. So the tone wells out from the "mystic gulf," ascends to the curved roof and thence disperses over the auditorium in one unbroken volume. In the new house here the tone is cramped by the smaller aperture between stage and orchestral hood, and when it reaches the top of the proscenium it breaks upon a mass of stone and bronze, and an echo is caused. Then, too, the sides of the proscenium are quite solid—stone and bronze again. One of the singers told me that on the stage there are two distinct echoes. How to remedy this grave defect is now a matter of the deepest concern to the architects and Intendant Von Possart. Bayreuth and Wahnfried are in high glee over the mishap, for it would mean practical ruin to the little town up in the Fichtel Mountains if Munich succeeded in diverting its clientèle. But where there is so much energy, skill and ambition I do not doubt that some means will be devised to correct the faulty acoustics. Already there has been much experimenting, such as heavily padding the orchestral canopy, but to no avail. A radical change, such as Mr. Neilson suggests, seems to be the only chance, and that means tearing down the top of the auditorium and putting in an arch. The sunken orchestra, too, must be changed. At the close of the first act of "Tristan and Isolde" a back drop cloth was lifted, and we heard the most absurd clangor, the seamen's voices, the orchestra and the voices of the principals reaching us in broken accords. Even when the curtain is down I notice a certain smothered effect in the playing of the band. Polyphonic passages do not come out clearly, and in a big fortissimo all is muddled and thick. What a pity it is! If the interior of the Bayreuth house had been more closely patterned after this accident might not have occurred—for architectural acoustics seem to be largely experimental. There is no statuary around the sides of the building in Bayreuth, while here there are large figures of Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner, Shakespeare, Schiller, Lessing and others. A Wagner theatre should be quite bare, reserving sculpture and all such symbolical decoration for the halls. Still, this house is a superb art temple, and all the more wonderful when you consider that the first stone was laid in April, 1900.

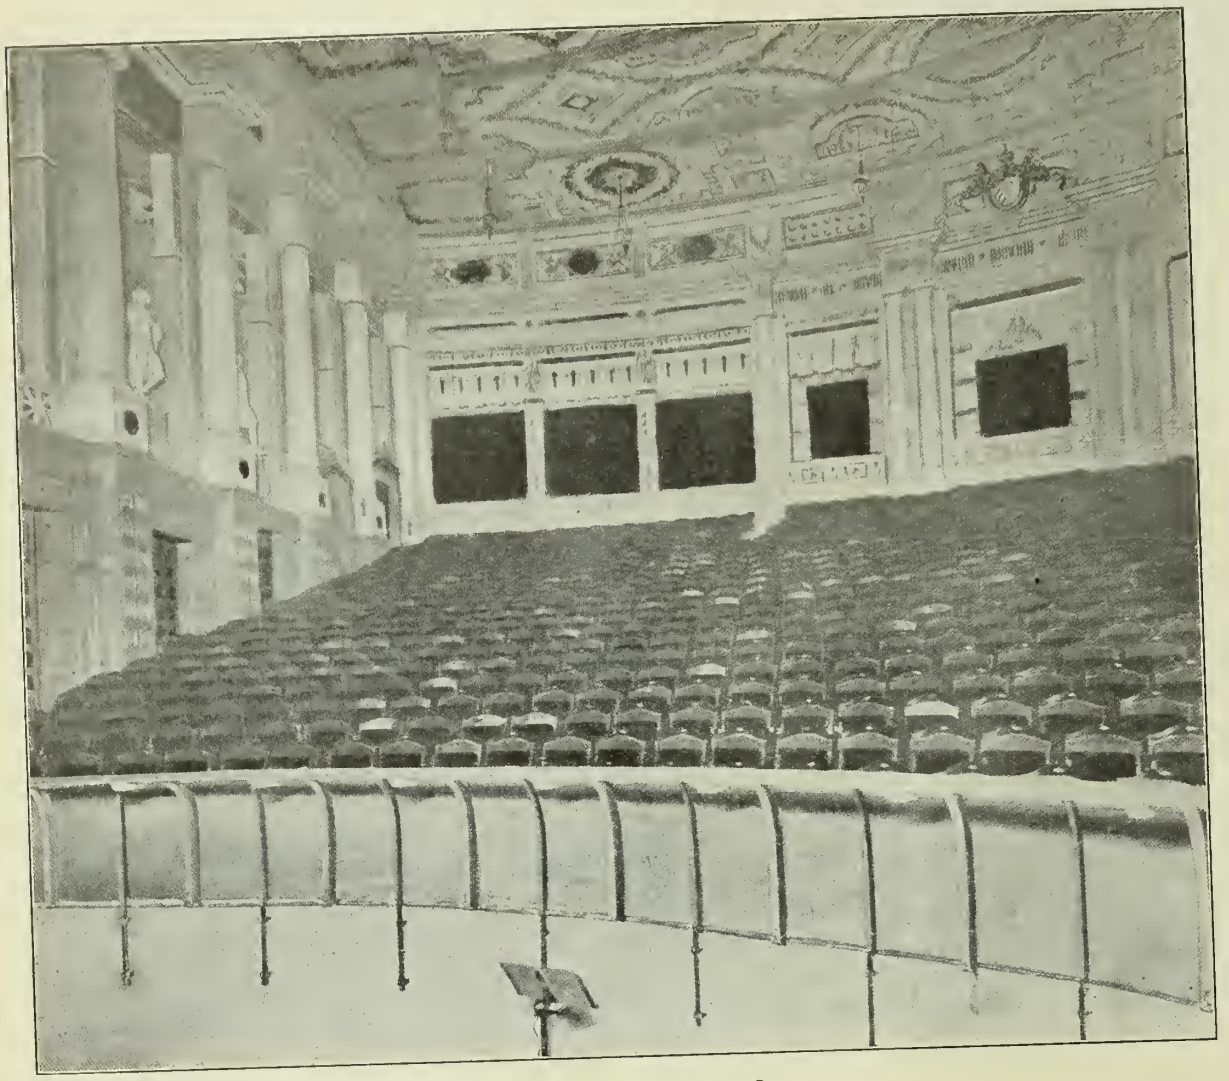
So much for the material envelope, the body of the Prinzregenten Theatre. Its soul is far more developed, and I feel assured that when the inevitable rawness wears off this place will become a second Bayreuth. At present there is much to critically cavil at. Intendant Von Possart knows this better than anyone else, and doubtless has suffered from the triumphant crowing in Bayreuth.



THE THEATRE VIEWED FROM THE ORCHESTRA.

* * *

The four operas rather hastily prepared for presentation were "Die Meistersinger," "Tristan and Isolde," "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin." They were presented in the following sequence: "Die Meistersinger," August 20, 25; September 2, 10, 14, 26. "Tristan and Isolde," August 23, 27; September 4, 12, 20. "Tannhäuser," August 29; September 6, 16, 22, 28. "Lohengrin," August 31; September 8, 18, 24. Von Possart is the chief intendant; Karl Lautenschläger the head machinist; Anton Fuchs and R. Müller, chief stage managers; Miraslav Weber, concertmaster; F. Fischer and H. Zumpe, musical conductors—with the occasional co-operation of Bernhard Stavenhagen and H. Röhr. The orchestra is a large one. The Brandt system is used for handling the stage. It can be managed with electricity. The singers who came as "guests" were Lillian Nordica; Anthes, of Dresden; Gerhäuser, of Carlsruhe—now engaged here; Grüning, from Berlin; Hoffmann, of Berlin; Reichmann, of Vienna; Reiss, of Wiesbaden; Greef-Andriessen, of Frankfort; Helgermann, of Vienna, and Staudigl, of Wiesbaden. The regular Hoftheater company of Munich participated. If. King Ludwig II. were alive he would be happy, for this scheme of a Wagner theatre in his city was always a darling project of his own. And to give the house a motto that would have pleased Wagner, the inscription "Der Deutschen Kunst" stares at one from over the Vorbaüde when you reach the plaza on Prinzregentenstrasse.

A crowd is always waiting before the doors, though it is not so curious as the motley mob at Bayreuth. The streets are decorated with poles flying festal banners, and mounted police officials are visible. A monstrously fat beadle in blue salutes you as you reach the stone vestibule; the man inside only looks at your ticket, and, with the exception of the tag which serves as a cloakroom check—oh! sensible and economical Teutons—you may retain it as a souvenir. The tickets are printed in white and blue, thus separating the right from the left side of the house. At 5 o'clock precisely the first fanfare is heard in the garden adjoining the theatre restaurant. Two more proclamations in the right and left foyers, and the auditorium lights are lowered. At exactly ten minutes past 5 the performance begins. Between each act there is a pause of a half hour, during which the amount of sandwich munching and beer swallowing is tremendous. Ah! again sounds the hospitable motive of food and drink in Munich! The restaurant is high priced, the waiters making all they can while the sun shines; and the service is very bad. I saw many English and Americans here. Very much bronzed by travel, Conductor Emil Paur came down from Berlin for a "Lohengrin" performance, but was not much pleased with the house. Emil Sauer, the piano virtuoso, greeted me in the lobby. He is sitting for his portrait to Kaulbach, and is looking very well. He told me that he was engaged for the Vienna Conservatory at a high salary. This salary proved too much for the old piano staff, so there was an uprising and a demand made for higher salaries. This being refused a secession is talked of. I hope Sauer will not back down or resign. The prices paid for piano lessons in Germany are ridiculously low, while many good singers are glad of a high class engagement—such as the Kaim-Saal Symphony concerts at the enormous sum of 50 marks, about $12.50!

* * *

Here is the cast of

"DIE MEISTERSINGER V. NURNBERG."

IN DREI AUFZÜGEN VON RICHARD WAGNER.

PERSONEN:

Hans Sachs, Schuster.....	Meistersinger	Herr Feinhals.
Veit Pogner, Goldschmied.....		Herr Klöpfer.
Kunz Vogelgesang, Kürschner..		Herr Stöger.
Konrad Nachtigall, Spängler....		Herr Mang.
Sixtus Beckmesser, Schreiber...		Herr Geis.
Fritz Kothner, Bäcker.....		Herr Fuchs.
Balthasar Zorn, Zinngiesser.....		Herr Vogel, jun.
Ulrich Eisslinger, Würzkrämer.		Herr Mayerhofer.
Augustin Moser, Schneider....		Herr Kellerer.
Hermann Ortel, Seifensieder....		Herr Th. Mayer.
Hans Schwartz, Strumpfwirker.		Herr Hautmann.
Hans Foltz, Kupferschmied.....		Herr J. Mayer.

Walther von Stolzing, ein Ritter aus Franken..Herr Knote
David, Sachsen's Lehrbube.....Herr Reiss a. G
Eva, Pogner's Tochter.....Fr. Fleischer-Edel a. G
Magdalena, Eva's Amme.....Frau G. Staudigl a. G
Ein Nachtwächter.....Herr Schlosse

Bürger und Frauen aller Zünfte, Gesellen, Lehrbuben Mädchen, Volk. Nürnberg—Um die Mitte des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts.

* * *

The "Meistersinger" performances were by fa the best of the series. A German musical comedy it can best be played by German actors and singer For this reason I took more delight in the piec than in any of the others. In the first place ther were no cuts—Wagner's classic comedy sparkle from a dozen facets that do not exist in the mut lated Anglo-Saxon versions. The parts of Dav and the mastersingers gained new meanings, whi Beckmesser, pompous, pedantic, conceited, envio and a bore, if you will, is not played as if he we a malignant villain, an ignoble Iago, a scoundrel the deepest dye. There are no dark tints in th gracious comedy of manners, this loveliest tra scription of a lovable period in German life and a Whosoever has studied old Nuremberg, has enter into the charm of its quaint streets and houses, customs and histories, seen its mementoes of Has Sachs, Luther and Albrecht Dürer, that one w appreciate the wonderful rebirth it has been giv by Wagner. While a cast comprising great sing is always welcome, I rather prefer a well traind company, a balanced ensemble of German sings So, with Herman Zumpe at the orchestral helm, ne performance in question was a wholly enjoyable ce

* * *

The fanfares blown were nearly the same a a Bayreuth in 1892 and 1899. Before the first act w heard the motive of the meistersingers, not endi however, on the E, but dropping an octave bew For the second act several bars of Beckmesr Serenade were used; and for the last act instea o the trumpet fanfare given on the stage—it alw begins like "Where Did You Get That Hat?"—Sachs' "Wahn" motive was sounded. Zumpe's reading of the prelude surprised me. I had always heard the man described as pedantic—he is given to over-refinement, the scholar's fault, as an English poet hath it. But there was an elasticity in his beat, an uplifting quality with due consideration for breadth and sincerity that were all very consoling. The tempo was a shade faster than Seidl's, and there were many deviations from the everyday interpretations. Bülow's runaway tempo, when the chief theme of the working out section is heard in diminution, was not adopted, though here there was no diminution in crispness or spiccato. The E major melody was sung with fervor, and if the acoustics of the theatre were what they should be the glorious polyphony of the peroration would have been admirable. Throughout Zumpe proved himself a close and sympathetic accompanist. He was as steady as a rock in the second act finale, and brought the last to a triumphant conclusion. That he sometimes missed the deeper poetic note of Sachs' and Walther's music did not surprise me. Zumpe is not that sort of a man. The stage was smoothly managed by Anton Fuchs, whom I remember very well at Bayreuth. When the curtain rose on the interior of the Katharinenkirche, painted by Mettenleitner, of Munich, you were at once transported to old Nürnberg. But it did not escape my notice that the chorus calmly went off pitch in the second verse of the chorale even as does the polyglot chorus in our own Metropolitan Opera House. At last I saw a real David, a delightful David, a fellow of infinite mirth, a jesting, honest, merry lad, who sang well, danced with legs of quicksilver, and when he reached that fatal top tone, "Oh, Magdalena!" did not go to pieces vocally. Herr Reis, a "guest," was the name of the young artist who sang the role. As his part was not a mere silhouette, as in the cut version, he was able to build it up into a real character of flesh and blood. He was neither a buffoon nor a zany. He wooed Magdalena ardently, and as she was not dressed as a forbidding hag or as a first old woman in a witches' chorus, Wagner's idea was clearly expressed. Hitherto I have wondered what attracted the youthful apprentice to a woman old enough to be his mother's sister. Magdalena, a companion of Eva Pogner's, is still sufficiently young to sympathize with a romantic love affair, for she loves herself. A former visitor to New York, Gisela Staudigl, treated the part with discretion. Herr Geis, the Beckmesser, was a joy. From his first dignified entrance, his eyes sparkling with malice, his whole frame denoting self-satisfaction, I felt that I was to see a real vision of the crabbed old Sixtus. And I did. Not much of a singer, Geis nevertheless suggested the idea that in his youth Beckmesser must have had a voice. He was a mastersinger, a man of some science and seriously listened to by his fellow mastersingers. These worthy men and true did not march as if in a funeral procession, but sauntered in, gravely discussing the great question of the hour. Pogner's speech, the long discussions, lengthy but not wearisome, the by-play of the apprentices, Kothner's harangue, the building and rebuilding of the marker's retreat—all these things were given with a Teutonic heartiness that shed absolutely new light on the act, an act usually slurred over in New York. After the curtain fell I felt as if I had never seen "Die Meistersinger" before. And yet it was not a remarkably brilliant representation—only a sound, German one.

* * *

The Hans Sachs was a slow-going person. Herr Feinhals, who suggested the bourgeois side of the poet, the deep, capacious feather beds and black beer of old Nürnberg. The deeper fount of sentiment and poetry existed not. Feinhals has humor and looked the character. I liked much better Klöpfer as Pogner, whose singing and acting were admirable. The mastersingers were all they should be, and Frau Fleischer-Edel from Hamburg made an engaging Eva. That dangerous quintet proved to be the usual pitfall. The curtains were hardly drawn quickly enough to conceal the shattered intonations and false notes strewn about the stage. Walther Von Stolzing was assumed by Knote, whose tenor voice took my breath away. So enthusiastic was I after the opera that a kind friend bade me wait until I had heard the same singer in more heroic roles. I am sorry to say I did, and my newly born enthusiasm received a setback. Heinrich Knote is a young man of thirty-two or thirty-five. He is good looking, though a trifle too stout and short—the usual fate of most German tenors. But he is of fine presence, graceful, light of foot, and some day will be an actor. The emotional temperament so far predominates over the intellectual; study may harmonize the two, and I hear that he is a student. He spoke excellent English to me when I met him. Setting everything aside, Knote's voice will carry him when all else fails. It is a genuine golden tenor; lyric, not heroic, and of the most exquisite timbre when it is not forced. His emission is free from the inevitable Teutonic throatiness, and when there is not a cloud on the sky the man's voice is full of golden landscapes. I can't describe it otherwise. In New York we are so accustomed to the perfect art of Jean de Reszké that his voice is forgotten, swallowed up in his poetic personality. Knote is not poetic, but the rich, youthful vibrancy of his organ, its thrilling youth brings tears to the eyes. It is a young lover who sings "Fanget an," a lover in love with life, with the glad spring, with love itself. When from his wooden dais he began "Am Stillen Heerd" I mentally exclaimed, "A tenor at last!"

But I wish I had missed his Tannhäuser!

ERNEST VON POSSART.

* *

The street scene was painted by Professor Bruckner, of Coburg, as was the interior of Sachs' cottage. The latter was most picturesque. The festival suffered because of the cramped dimensions of the stage. Here the Metropolitan stage, with its chances for perspective, is far superior. Herr Fuchs grouped his people skillfully, and the entrance of the principals was a real climax, the crowd becoming frantic, the huzzaing, waving of banners and the medley of women and children making a rare picture, and there was no wait between the first and second scenes. The lighting was in the main satisfactory, though that moon proved as erratic in Munich as on upper Broadway. The best effect was in the Sachs cottage; the poorest in Act I., where the variations in brightness were alarming. With all the complicated and costly machinery here at Herr Lautenschläger's command the effects are far from commensurate. I set all this down to the deadly Bayreuth tradition, yes even to Richard Wagner himself. Stage machinery of all sorts has been enormously bettered since Wagner's death; yet such is the curse of precedent here in Germany, in Europe, that not an iota of improvement dare be made on the traditions of 1876. "So the master wished it!" is the answer to the sensible fault finders. And so it is that improved apparatus for handling the stage, sinking it, raising it, shifting scenes, affording facilities for superb lighting effects, are employed with a timidity that almost neutralizes their value.

I admired the night watchman's ox-horn and hope I shall never forget Beckmesser's eloquent pantomime in the third act. The performance was over at exactly 10:30 p. m., just four and a half hours long, omitting the two pauses.

F. W. RIESBERG AT WORK.—Returning from the Asheville Summer School, of which, with A. P. Babcock, he was musical director the past summer, Mr. Riesberg again visited the Pan-American Exposition, where he last July gave a series of recitals; then he went to Norwich, N. Y., to play at a fashionable wedding; returned to New York and played at his first concert last week at the Educational Alliance, that noble philanthropy of Mr. Strauss. He has resumed his position as organist at Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church; is attending to his duties as secretary of the New York State Music Teachers' Association, and begun his lesson giving, piano, organ and harmony.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

Free Scholarship Examination in Orchestral Department (Thursday) October 3, 2 until 3 P. M. Leo Schulz and others Examiners

MUSIC IN ITALY.

CORSO VENEZIA 65, MILAN, ITALY,
September 14, 1901.

OPERA good, bad and indifferent, or good, medium and mediocre—as I indicated in my last week's letter to THE MUSICAL COURIER—is holding sway and high carnival at several of the Milan theatres.

At the Scala three seasons ago the management found it impossible, after many promises, much loss of time and considerable preparation, to produce Bellini's opera "Norma." Now, we are to have what might be termed in the Italian "enorma," there being no fewer than three "Normas" announced at as many different theatres, and all at nearly the same time.

The Alessandro Manzoni Theatre will have a short season of opera, beginning to-night with "Norma."

The opera season at the Dal Verme is also to be inaugurated to-night, opening with Donizetti's "Poliuto" and to be followed by "Norma." This company is strong in names of good singers, and has been looked forward to all summer by the operagoing public as a "good thing" in store for them.

The third "Norma" is in preparation at the Fossati Theatre, where up to the present time "Ruy Blas" and "Lucia di Lammermoor" have been contending for first place in public favor. Each of these two operas has enjoyed a goodly number of repetitions thus far.

The Aurora Theatre has been open for some weeks with a repertory of light and comic opera, presenting "Boccaccio," Offenbach's "Orfeo all' Inferno," "Madame Angot" and the like.

At the Commenda "Il Carnet del Diavolo" of Serpette is still playing to crowded houses nightly.

Concerning the late Isabella Galletti-Gianoli's life and career, I have heard so many different and conflicting stories that I deemed it my duty to obtain for THE MUSICAL COURIER a short story of facts, yet a true history of the great singer's life.

Isabella Galletti-Gianoli was born at Bologna November 11, 1835, the daughter of Antonio Rustichelli and Maria Galletti, and was christened Filomena, so that her real name was Filomena Rustichelli. She was dedicated very early in childhood to music, and when scarcely nine years of age was an excellent little pianist.

After studying singing with Livio Tosini, she made her first appearance upon the stage at Piere di Cento, in the part of Fenena in the opera "Nabucco." After another year's study with Raffaele Gamberini, she appeared during the carnival season of 1855 at Spoleto, under the name of Isabella Galletti, as prima donna assoluta in Pacini's opera, "Buondelmonte Buondelmonti." From there she went to the Theatre San Benedetto at Venice (now the Rossini Theatre), singing with great success in the opera "L'Ebreo," of Appoloni, and then began her festive and triumphant career, singing at many places in "Macbeth," of Verdi, and in "Assedio di Corinto," of Rossini.

About this time she met and was married to Girolamo Gianoli, and thenceforth continued to enjoy a most glorious and successful series of veritable triumphs throughout Italy and all Europe until the year 1883, when she sang for the last time in public at the Theatre Rossini in Venice the part of Azucena in "Il Trovatore."

Isabella Galletti was a splendid creator and model interpreter, particularly of such parts as La Favorita (Leonora), La Norma and in Rossini's "Otello." In voice and style she embraced wonderfully and successfully roles ranging from light soprano, dramatic and mezzo-soprano to contralto, as evidenced by the following repertory of operas in which she appeared: "Anna Bolena," "Gemma di Vergy," "Lucrezia Borgia," "Il Trovatore," "Aroldo," "Ballo in Maschera," "Forza del Destino," "Don Carlos," "Il Profeta," "L'Africana," "La Vestale," "Cenerentola," "Semiramide," "Vittor Pisani," and in "Dolores," of Anteri.

After her last appearance in 1883 she retired from the stage and public life and devoted herself to teaching. Among her pupils are some well-known names, including that of her daughter Carolina.

For a period of tweny-eight years, during which Isabella Galletti sang in nearly all the principal cities of Italy, of Europe and in Egypt—Milan, Bologna, Florence, Rome, Venice and Naples, Lisbon, Madrid, London, Vienna, St. Petersburg, in Cairo—she never had any desire to go to America, strange as that may seem.

Having appeared for the last time upon this earthly stage among worldly scenes, singing her last notes and making her final adieus, Isabella Galletti-Gianoli, one of Italy's most brilliant stars of the operatic constellation, has departed for the Great Beyond, and will no more be able to shine and dazzle her hosts of admiring but sorrowing friends of this opera loving country.

She died in Milan, August 31, and her funeral was largely attended by artists, singers and actors, musicians, journalists, theatrical managers and friends without number. Floral tributes were brought and sent from near and far.

Isabella Galletti was undoubtedly a star of splendid magnitude—a diva of Italian lyric art! Following in the footsteps of Malibran, Pasta, Frezzolini, she was the one who maintained on high the melodic art of the Italian school, completing and enhancing the works of Italy's great masters, which she created and interpreted in such majestic, sublime style.

Within the memory of the oldest and best informed operagoers here I can learn of no other artist who was in any respect anything like her equal. As written you before, she was most popular in her days of activity before she retired from public life. She had an extremely artistic and musical nature, exquisite in its make-up; refined sentiment, efficacious and spontaneous in gesture; a beautiful and potent voice, the timbre full of feeling, color, inexpressible vibrations equal to the various demands of expressing all the passions of love, jealousy, hatred, sorrow, desperation.

Galletti could play upon one's heartstrings, and knew the entire gamut of the passions. She was a veritable, a born artist!

Since the announcement that Signora Eleonora Duse would produce D'Annunzio's new tragedy of "Francesca da Rimini," with Gustavo Salvini as Paolo, another "Francesca da Rimini" has come forward. Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, it is understood, has just signed a contract to produce at her theatre in Paris a drama which Marion Crawford has written on the subject of "Francesca da Rimini." The play was written in English, but a rough French translation was read to Madame Bernhardt by Mr. Crawford during the actress' visit to London this summer. It has since then been arranged that the actual version which Sarah Bernhardt will perform is to be made by Marcel Schwob, who made the prose translation of "Hamlet," acted by Madame Bernhardt. Mr. Schwob is in no sense a collaborator with Mr. Crawford. His version will simply be an accurate translation of the drama as originally written by Mr. Crawford and accepted by Madame Bernhardt.

The other day I met that genial man and good musician, the well-known New York Metropolitan Opera House conductor, Mancinelli, in Milan on the Corso Vittorio Emanuele. Of course he was going toward the Galleria, where everybody meets everybody. He remarked that he would not return to the United States to conduct at the Metropolitan this coming fall, but would go to Lisbon instead. Next year, however, he expected to go to America again.

The audacious, horrible outrage upon the President's life during his visit to the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition has called forth in the Italian press the strongest expression of horror and sorrow, with words of warmest sympathy for President McKinley and the entire American nation. Italy hasn't yet forgotten the murder of her beloved King Humbert, a year ago, by an assassin's bullet.

Mr. McKinley's personal character is respected in his own country and among foreign nations, and the dastardly outrage, the fatuous wickedness of the attempt on his life will meet with universal reprobation.

Here is a striking tribute, translated from a Viennese

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.
A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Reszk and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, volum or compass. The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio.
MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAGO

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
Address all communications to
613 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO. CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Buildi... (Tower, 1406.) Chica...
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectu...
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circu...

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very success... appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, IL...

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, Il...

paper called the Reichswehr: "Mr. McKinley was one of the most terrible enemies Europe has ever known. He fought not with weapons, but with protectionist tariffs and check books. His economical dictatorship closed our factories, stopped our engines and brought our machinery to a standstill. If Bismarck was a man of blood and iron, Mr. McKinley may be called a man of blood and coal. But he is an adversary who commands involuntary respect, and before whom we lower the sword as a mark of esteem. He is a man we should not like to miss from the ranks of the living." DELMA-HEIDE.

S. C. BENNETT'S PUPILS.—Miss Grace W. Heagle, contralto of the Memorial Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, and Miss Cecelia Quinn, formerly of Kansas City, are among the best contraltos in New York. Both are attending the American School of Opera. Miss Gertrude M. Horner, of Pittsburg, Pa., holds one of the best paid positions in that city. Vernon Stiles, leading tenor of the Bostonians, is another of Mr. Bennett's talented pupils.

LAMBERT PUPIL TO GIVE RECITALS.—Miss Mercedes O'Leary, a talented pupil of Alexander Lambert, will give several piano recitals during the season.

DRESDEN, FRANKLINSTRASSE 20,
September 15, 1901.

KARL WEIS' two act opera, "The Polish Jew," was the first musical novelty of the season produced here at the Court Opera on September 7, needless to say in a model way and excellently cast. The fact speaks greatly in favor of the opera management and the musical zeal of Von Schuch, who so early in the fall accomplished the wonder of a very carefully prepared reproduction of a work quite new to Dresden, of such serious aims, such technical and scenical display and such strong demands upon soloistic forces as this opera.

The libretto, which is drawn from Erckmann-Chatrian's novel of the same title, has received a good dramatic treatment by the part of Victor Leon and Richard Batka, the latter being the well known critic of the daily paper Bohemia and other journals and periodicals of Prague. As to the scenical effects of the book, however, it loses some of its attraction and so to speak "misses its mark" by the long drawn out scenes of the second act, the music and the gruesome content of which is full of phrases, expressing the pangs of remorse, the anguish and the despair of the conscience-stricken man, Mathis, who murdered the Jew, the very theme upon which the whole plot turns. As a spoken drama, the story, no doubt, would prove very effective; as a subject for musical treatment it is not poetical enough to arouse artistic enthusiasm. History and criminal matters do not well go with the poetry of the musical language. Hence the disappointment which took hold of the audience after the close of the representation.

That the opera nevertheless fully justified the good fame that preceded the talented Bohemian composer is an undeniable fact. His work, replete with melody and natural invention—at least as far as the first act goes—is possessed of that vitality called national color which is guarantee for its future existence. The composer's bent is the lyrical direction; what he lacks are conviction, dramatic intensity, pathos, enthusiasm and true artistic working up of the musical climaxes, such as suggested by the book. Otherwise the first act, as mentioned above, contains much that is very charming, especially so in parts where the folklore style prevails.

The story briefly told is this: Mathis, the Burgomaster of a small Alsatian village, is about to make preparations for the marriage of his only daughter, when suddenly a guest, a Polish Jew, enters his house requiring shelter for the night, which is bitterly cold. The fact vividly recalls a similar occurrence some fifteen years ago, when another guest—he also happening to have been a Polish Jew—spent a night in the Burgomaster's house. The stranger, owner of a great sum of money, departed early, at daybreak, accompanied by Mathis. After that he vanished. Nobody knew what had become of him. Mathis, however, knew it, for he had killed him, robbed him of his money and burned his corpse. Mathis, the Burgomaster, nevertheless, was not found out to be guilty of the murder; he remained in his post, being honored and respected by all. At his daughter's marriage he gave her 30,000 thalers as a wedding gift.

Peace, however, with his own mind he had not. Constant remorse tore upon his life's thread, and one fine morning—the very day of his daughter's marriage—he was found dead in his bed. A heart stroke had finished his life. The night preceding he had a dream, a vision of having been summoned to appear before the court of justice to confess his crime, whereupon he saw himself taken to the gallows to be hanged.

This vision is most wonderfully put upon the stage, and would no doubt be even more effective were it not for its great length and the endless repetition of phrases, lacking in immediateness of expression and dramatic power. That there are very beautiful parts in the second act, as well, goes without saying, though space forbids to enter here into details.

Scheidemantel's impersonation of Mathis' role compels generous admiration. Identifying himself thoroughly with

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD,

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY,

LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

HANNAH & HAMLIN Dissolved June 1st.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY

DIRECTORS OF CONCERTS AND MUSICAL ARTISTS.

514-517 KIMBALL HALL
CHICAGO.

LOUIS EVANS, President.

CABLE ADDRESS: LINARK, CHICAGO.
LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE: HARRISON 2255.

REPRESENTATIVE AGENCY OF MIDDLE STATES

EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION

GENEVIEVE CLARK WILSON—Soprano.
SUE HARRINGTON FURBECK—Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN—Tenor.
CHARLES W. CLARK—Baritone.
AUGUSTA COTTLOW—Pianiste, and others.
THEODORE SPIERING—Violinist.
JESSICA De WOLF—Soprano.
ELAINE De SELLEM—Contralto.
HOLMES COWPER—Tenor.
SYDNEY BIDEN—Baritone.

WE WILL NEGOTIATE FOR ALL HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD
Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
CONCERT ORGANIST.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

CARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Address: 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HOWARD WELLS,
Pianist,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director,
Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free.
243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
'Phones: Harrison 1910 and 1736. Unsurpassed Faculty Teaching.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC.
Stage Training, Elocution, Languages and the Fine Arts. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

ROWDON
Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

the spirit of both text and music, his art quite overleaps the conventionalities of other good historians and opera singers. He is dramatic to his finger-tips, and his characterization of the role is worked out into the minutest detail, in a way revealing his thorough mastership. Next to him Fräulein Krull, impersonating Anette's (Mathis' daughter) part, deserves to be mentioned as one of the most promising young forces of the opera personnel. Herr Erl, too, as Notar, acted his part, small as it is, to utmost satisfaction. Many others in the cast, for instance, Mr. Rains as the Jew, come in for great praise, in which shares, above all, the orchestra under Von Schuch's lead. Herr Moris, as stage manager, acquitted himself of his task wonderfully. After the close many recalls of the soloists, of Von Schuch and the composer occurred, Scheidemantel alone being compelled to appear no end of times to receive the ovations paid to his unexceptional talent. The opera will gain in popularity after it has been shortened off considerably. Other operatic works of Karol Weis have been (I am told) produced on the Bohemian stage, in Prague, under the management of its highly esteemed director, F. A. Subert, and later on also at the German theatre, with Angelo Neumann as a director.

Paderewski's "Manru" continues to draw full houses. Lately I witnessed a quite wonderful representation of the work, finished in every detail. In the audience Maurice Grau was present, who, according to communications in the papers, acknowledged the representation to be the model one for the intended reproductions in London and New York. Report had it that Paderewski himself had come over for the occasion; if so, he must have felt strongly convinced of the popularity his fine opera has achieved. It is the most attractive novelty produced here for years. Schuch as the soul and spirit of the whole is above praise. He is a wonderfully magnetic artist.

Madame Schumann-Heink was the other great attraction of the Court Opera of late. You all know her superb art; she "brought the wonder about" that even the old, threadbare "Trovatore," where she sang Acuzena's part, was sold out. Her other guesting appearances were Mrs. Fluth, in "Merry Wives" and Fides in "The Prophet," all parts in which she excelled. Hers is the true artistic temperament and dramatic inspiration of the born (not made) artist.

The concert season begins to throw its shadow (or light) beforehand. Herr Ploetner announces five philharmonic recitals, with the assistance of Eugen Ysaye, Polly Blumenbach, Emil Sauer, Emmy Destinn, Theresa Carreño, Jacques Thibaud (the young violinist), Charlotte Huhn, &c.

Emil Kronke, the Dresden pianist, arranges three subsciption concerts, a chamber music soirée, a vocal and piano recital and an orchestral concert, in which novelty compositions will be rendered. The Leipsic Gewandhaus Quartet will assist. The soloists are Marie Joachim, Lillian Sanderson, Gura Burmester, Julius Klengel and W. Bachmann.

Paderewski's tournée in Germany has been arranged by Hermann Wolff. It commences on October 24 and lasts till the middle of December. During this time twenty-eight recitals will be given, including one in Dresden. This is good news.

Of chamber music soirées there simply seems to be no end—to judge from the announcements published so far. The programs of the Royal Symphony concerts I hope to give in my next.

A. INGMAN.

Author of "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

MANY voices yesterday were singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the dead President's hymn; and most of the mourners in this country doubtless sang it to Dr. Dykes' familiar tune, known as "Horbury," which is printed both in "Hymns Ancient and Modern" and in "The Scottish Hymnal." In the Bristol Service Book there is a musical version of it as a hymn anthem, by W. Clarke Ainley, and doubtless there are several others. But in the United States, we believe, this beautiful hymn is chiefly associated with the original tune by Eliza Flower, the poet's sister, and in her day a favorite concert soprano. Both gifted sisters died in the late forties, and both were members of the congregation at South Place of William Johnson Fox, that stout old Unitarian and Anti-Corn Law champion, and later on Radical member for Oldham. In 1841 Sarah Adams, who was born Flower, wrote thirteen hymns for the congregation of Fox's chapel, among them the well-known "He sendeth sun, He sendeth shower," which is often sung here, and "O, Hallowed Memories of the Past," which is more popular in the United States. Her sister Eliza composed music for most of these hymns, and besides "Musical Illustrations of the Waverley Novels," she also composed a once well-known part song, "Now Pray We for Our Country." As to "Nearer, My God, to Thee," as it was written by an avowed Unitarian, the words have often been changed to suit various phases of belief, among others by Bishop How, Rev. A. T. Russell and Dr. Monsell.
—London Daily News, September 20, 1901.

Musical Clubs.

The Woman's Musical Club, of Columbus, Ohio, will give its first recital to-day, October 9.

The Dominant Ninth Chorus, of Alton, Ill., will give its first concert for this season on November 14.

Miss Florence Clexton, a member of the senior class of Smith College, has been chosen leader of the College Glee Club.

A. W. Platte conducted the first rehearsal of the Schumann Club, of Saginaw, Mich., on September 23. This is a mixed club, women and men being equally eligible.

The Rainy Day Club, of New York city, will organize a glee club this autumn, with Mme. Evans Von Klenner as the musical director. Whatever musical features were introduced at past meetings of this club resulted from Madame Von Klenner's active interest and ability.

Over in Brooklyn the Students' Musical Club will hold its first autumn meeting at the Pouch Gallery on October 11. The works of some German composers will be illustrated by members of the club, and Miss M. Louise Mundell, the director, will give a talk upon "Music as an Art." Other interesting programs will be arranged for the meetings to be held monthly during the season.

The Berkeley (Cal.) Oratorio Society, assisted by the Berkeley Orchestral Society, presented Mendelssohn's "Elijah" on October 3, under the direction of Clinton R. Morse. The soloists were Mrs. Charles B. Mills, soprano; Mrs. J. E. Birmingham, contralto; Harry L. Taylor, tenor; S. Homer Henley, bass. Last year the societies produced "Elijah" and "Creation" with great success.

Musical matters in Grand Rapids, Mich., are being stimulated by the work of the St. Cecilia Society, the Schubert Club and the prominent members of musical clubs. Mrs. C. B. Kelsey, the president of the St. Cecilia, is chairman of the national press committee of the General Federation of Musical Clubs. Mrs. Kelsey was in New York last month when the directors of the federation held their meeting.

Musical and club circles in Utica, N. Y., naturally were greatly rejoiced over the fine singing of the clubs from their city at the big Eisteddfod at the Pan-American. Among the choruses which participated were the Haydn Male Chorus, the Cecilian Ladies' Chorus and the Utica Philharmonic Society, all from Utica, under the direction of Iorwerth T. Daniel. Altogether the Uticans carried away with them $1,385 in prizes, and established a firm reputation as superior choral singers.

The Philharmonic Club, of Marion, Ind., will give twelve concerts during the season. This is one of the progressive musical clubs of the Middle West, composed of both sexes. The officers are: President, Percy L. Nussbaum; vice-presidents, Mrs. Robert Spencer and Captain John Pitt Stack; secretary, Miss F. Case; treasurer, Benjamin Larrimer. Marion has also two ladies' clubs—the Lyric and Morning Musicale.

The Woman's Musical Club of Georgia will hold a convention during the Interstate Fair this autumn. This club and other musical clubs in the State will give morning musicales in the Woman's Building on the days of the fair, and will infuse a general atmosphere of art into the more prosaic interests of the fair. One of the sessions of the convention will be devoted to a recital by De Giuseppe Ferrata, at which he will play his prize compositions. This club offered $100 for the best arrangement of Chopin Valse, op. 64, No. 1, and a gold medal for the best original composition by a Southern composer. The judges appointed are Alexander Lambert, Louis Saar and Joseph Hoffmann, all residents of New York. The officers of the club include Miss Annie M. Sanford, president; Miss Belle C. Dykeman, first vice-president; Mrs Zourie Lee Polhill, treasurer; Mrs. Rhodes Browne, Columbus, second vice-president; Miss Kirlin, Columbus, third vice-president; Miss Alida Printup, Rome, secretary.

The Cynthiana Musical Club, of Cynthiana, Ky., which was organized in 1899, held its first meeting for this season on October 1. A miscellaneous program was given. October 15 some American composers will be considered. "Some American Women Composers" will be the topic for the meeting October 29. Following are the names of the officers and members of the club: President, Miss Sallie V. Ashbrook; vice-president, Mrs. E. W. Bramble; secretary, Mrs. J. L. McDonald; treasurer, Mrs. W. S. Cason. List of members: Miss Lucie W. Allen, Miss Sallie V. Ashbrook, Miss Orrie Barnhard, Mrs. E. W. Bramble, Mrs. W. S. Cason, Miss Florence Cox, Mrs. J. C. Dedman, Miss Sidney R. Haviland, Mrs. E. R. Hutchings, Mrs. Sophia Lail, Miss Ida Land, Mrs. Orie Lebus, Mrs. C. A. Leonard, Mrs. J. L. McDonald, Mrs. Walter Lee Northcutt, Miss Minerva Rees, Miss Bessie Lee Shawhan, Miss Alice Lair Smith, Miss Maude B. Smith, Miss Lena Walters and Miss Frances P. Whaley.

The Orchestral Association of Los Angeles, which supports the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, is planning for the fifth season. The officers and board of trustees follow: Mrs. Emily Earl, president; Mrs. Hugh Macneil, vice-president; Mrs. Mossin, second vice-president; Miss Waddilove, secretary; Mrs. Jaro von Schmidt, treasurer. Trustees: O. S. A. Sprague, James Slauson, Jr., Miss Wills, Miss Hershey, Miss Waddilove, Mrs. Hugh Macneil, Count Jaro von Schmidt, Alfred Wilcox, Dr Macleish, Mrs. W. F. Botsford, Miss Senter, Dr. Norman Bridge, J. D. Hooker, Walter S. Newhall, Mrs. Alfred Solano, Mrs. John G. Mossin and Mrs. Emily Earl. The concerts last season reflected creditably upon the conductor, Harley Hamilton, and the musical taste of the people of Los Angeles. At the closing concert last season the orchestral numbers included Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," and Novelette by Mason. Miss Mollie Adelia Brown, a coloratura soprano, was the soloist, and she sang the flori aria (Queen's air) from "The Huguenots."

Music of importance will be considered this season by the Matinee Musical Club, of Duluth, Minn. A study of music from the sixteenth century to the present time has been undertaken. The study meeting was held October 7, with Miss McKay, Mrs. Mark Baldwin and Mrs. David Black in charge of the program. The other meetings follow: October 21—"The Composers of the Seventeenth Century," Mrs. McAuliffe, Mrs. G. L. Tyler and Miss Lynn. November 4—Continuation of study of seventeenth century music, Miss Simonds, Mrs. Stephenson and Miss Field. November 18—"Composers and Music at the Beginning of the Eighteenth Century," Mrs. McLean, Mrs. Ostergren and Miss Corneile Smith. December 2—"Gluck and Haydn," Mrs. Christiansen, Mrs. Stephenson and Mrs. Thornton. December 16—"The First Epoch of the Classical School," Miss McKay, Mrs. Mark Baldwin and Mrs. David Black. January 13—"Mozart," Miss Elizabeth Frazer, Mrs. F. E. Searle, Mrs. Crowley. January 27—"The Second Epoch of Classic," Mrs. Stephen Jones, Mrs. McRae and Miss Holm. February 10—"Italian Composers," Mrs. McAuliffe, Mrs. Munger and Mrs. W. T. Bailey. February 24—"American Composers," Miss Elizabeth Frazer, Mrs. F. Clarke and Miss Draper. March 10—"Beginning of the Romantic School," Mrs. McLean, Mrs. Henry K. Brewley and Mrs. G. Herbert Jones. March 24—"Schumann," Miss Simonds, Mrs. W. R. Spencer, Mrs. J. C. Curtis, Jr. April 7—"Continuation of the Romantic School," Mrs. Millen, Mrs. C. P. Craig and Miss Crowley. April 21—"Liszt and Franz," Mrs. Christiansen, Mrs. LeRicheux and Mrs. Tyler. May 5—"The New Roman School," Mrs. Stephen Jones, Mrs. Munger and Mrs. Holmes. May 19—"Women Composers," Mrs. Millen, Mrs. Clarke and Miss Corneile Smith. The officers of the Matinee Musical Club are: Mrs. F. B. Clarke, president; Miss Charlotte Simonds, vice-president; Mrs. G. Herbert Jones, recording secretary; Miss Alice Fox, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. A. LeRicheux, treasurer.

RICHARD T. PERCY AT CARNEGIE HALL.—Richard T. Percy, the organist and accompanist, has removed his studio from the Knickerbocker Building to Carnegie Hall.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

Musical . . People.

A violin school has been opened in Portland, Me., by Carl Lamson and Adelbert Sjoholm.

Clara Hunt and Edwin Howard gave an operatic concert at Potsdam, N. Y., on September 27.

L. Lee Wellman, a vocal teacher in the Cortland (N. Y.) Conservatory of Music, has organized a class in Cazenovia.

John C. Manning, of the Faelten Pianoforte School, Boston, returned recently from a successful piano recital tour through the West.

Whitney Coombs, choir director in the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, has returned from his vacation, passed up in Maine.

Edmund Thiele, a gifted young musician from Scranton, Pa., will study the violin this season with Henry Schradieck here in New York.

A. Ceruelos has resumed his work at the Troy Piano School after the summer vacation. Mr. Ceruelos teaches the piano, harmony and theory.

Edward Baxter Perry, the blind pianist and lecturer, gave one of his instructive recitals on October 4 at the Congregational Church at Rockland, Me.

Mrs. Jessie Gaynor's operetta, "The House That Jack Built," will be presented by children of the Grand Rapids, Mich., public schools some time in November.

Miss Eda Bartholomew, a graduate of the Royal Conservatory at Leipsic, has assumed her duties as teacher of piano and organ at La Grange, Ga., Female College.

John Geiger, the Indianapolis voice teacher, has returned from a European tour. Mr. Geiger passed most of his vacation in Germany, and Bayreuth was among the places he visited.

Miss Emma K. Loeffler, of Allegheny, Pa., expects soon to make her début in opera abroad. Miss Loeffler studied in Paris with Marchesi, and now she is taking lessons from Sbriglia.

Mrs. Eugene Inge, who successfully filled an engagement as soprano soloist this summer at Monteagle, expects to come to New York and study with some of the leading teachers here.

C. L. Tracy and T. A. Hoeck gave a piano recital at the home of H. W. Tracy, Shelburne, Vt., for the benefit of the Methodist Episcopal Church of that place. The program included several numbers for two pianos.

The friends of Francis M. Hendricks, of Denver, Col., arranged a concert for his benefit, and the affair was successfully given on September 25. The receipts have been added to the fund with which young Hendricks hopes to finish his musical education in Europe.

E. F. Beal's piano classes of Springfield, Mo., gave a recital at the residence of Gustav Marx on Friday evening, September 21. During the evening five medals were awarded to those students completing grades. A long program was given and the numbers were equally divided between the classic, romantic and modern schools.

Miss Jane Tonks, a mezzo soprano, gave a concert at the Universalist church at Berlin, N. H., on September 26, at which she was assisted by Lyman V. Banker, tenor, of Boston, and two of her pupils, Miss Flora Belliveau and Mrs. Joseph Steinfeld, sopranos. Miss Hallie Wilson was the accompanist.

A trio composed of Mrs. Evelin Choate, of Buffalo, pianist; Miss Bertha Bucklin, of New York, violinist, and Miss Lillian Littlehales, of Syracuse, violinist, will give a series of three salon concerts at the homes of Mrs. William K. Pierce, Mrs. Frank H. Hiscock and Mrs. Eugene B. McClelland, all of Syracuse.

At a concert given at the Capital Theatre, in Little Rock, Ark., on September 25, Sullivan's "Lost Chord," arranged for eight voices, was sung under the direction of Willibald Lehmann. The concert was given by Miss Hudspeth, and the vocal star of the evening proved to be Mrs. C. P. J. Mooney, a pupil of Leoni.

Dr. Charles G. Woolsey gave a song recital on September 20, in St. Paul's Parish House, Erie, Pa. Dr. Woolsey has studied in New York with Herbert Wilber Greene. He is a basso, and his program at the recital was one well chosen to display the range and quality of his voice. Mrs. Gertrude Colby was the accompanist.

An interesting program by French composers was given at an organ recital by Judson M. Mather in the Congregational church at Yankton, S. Dak., on September 25. Mr. Mather was assisted by Miss Anna B. Waterman, contralto. The organ numbers were "Suite Gothique," by Boellmann; andante from Fourth Symphony, Widor; March of the "Magi Kings," Dubois; "Marche Funebre et Chant Seraphique," Guilmant; "Torchlight March," Guilmant. Miss Waterman sang two songs by Chaminade. The recital was given under the auspices of the Yankton College Conservatory of Music.

LECTURE BY W. A. WHITE.—W. A. White, the teacher of harmony and ear training, gave a lecture at Clavier Hall last Thursday evening on "Positive Pitch and How to Acquire It." The remarks of the speaker proved unusually interesting, and he fully succeeded in impressing some of his hearers with the fact that he made some new discoveries. At this time THE MUSICAL COURIER can publish only a few extracts from Mr. White's instructive lecture:

"The remarkable power of music lies fundamentally in the sense of hearing." * * * "But no matter how good the ear may be, if the brain cannot hear the sounds intellectually, know what it heard, and know what we know it is, it is no use to us. Thus we see it is all 'brain technic.' * * *

"In the very last analysis all music playing is 'brain technic.' In the case of a pianist it is brain technic through fingers and body to the keyboard; with the violinist a different medium is used, and with the vocalist another, and in this case, the case of hearing, it is brain technic manifesting itself through the medium of the ear, and all musicians most sadly need it. * * *

"The first step is training of the mind through the ear that naturally and of necessity gives a full knowledge of harmony and the gradually molding of the two results; mind you, I say results in the sense of positive pitch."

The lecturer told how a man, not a musician, or even educated in music, acquired positive pitch in three months through the instruction given him by Mr. White. The man was fifty-three years old, and completely mastered the art. During the lecture Mr. White played scales to illustrate his theory and quoted Emerson and other authorities to prove the logical foundation for his work.

Mr. White is a member of the faculty of the Clavier Piano School, and he will conduct the classes in his specialty and deliver other lectures during the season.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR HATTIE SCHOLDER.—Miss Hattie Scholder, the child concert pianist, is being booked for concerts and recitals in most of the larger cities of the Union by the leading orchestras and musical clubs for the coming season. Although her managers, Francke & Eppinger, expected a big season for little Miss Scholder, the present indications surpass their expectations. The little artist will make a Southern tour in the spring.

MUSIC IN BROOKLYN.

LAST evening (Tuesday) the Tonkünstler Society assembled for its first meeting this season. The meetings will again be held at the Argyle on Pierrepont street. The members of the Tonkünstler Society are doing their share toward promoting good fellowship and the fraternal spirit among musicians, and truly no profession needs this sort of missionary effort more than the pianists, violinists and singers in Greater New York. The meetings of the Tonkünstler Society are musically instructive and socially pleasant, and always delightfully informal. "Dress informal" is the welcome footnote on the cards of admission. The program for last evening follows:

Sonata for 'Cello and Piano (F sharp minor, op. 52).....Martucci
Messrs. Emil Schenck and George Falkenstein.

Songs for tenor—
Wie bist Du meine Königin, op. 32, No. 9.....Brahms
Murmelndes Lüftchen, op. 21, No. 4.....Jensen
In Waldeseinsamkeit, op. 85, No. 6.....Brahms
Charles A. Kaiser, accompanied by Josef Weiss.

Piano solo, Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Händel, op. 24.....Brahms Josef Weiss.

Some comment upon the performance will be published next Wednesday.

During last week theatregoers in Brooklyn enjoyed a musical innovation, and credit for this is due to a woman, Mrs. Isabel Sinn-Hecht, the manager of the Montauk Theatre. Without the usual advance flourish of trumpets Mrs. Sinn-Hecht engaged Franz Kaltenborn, the orchestra leader and violinist, to play between the acts of "The Brixton Burglary." Just how this impressed the audience and the critics may be learned from the appended report in the Brooklyn Eagle:

The first hint the audience had of the matter was when they found Mr. Kaltenborn's name on the program, so that when he came down the aisle to play the Vieuxtemps "Fantaisie Caprice" there was a pleasant air of expectancy throughout the theatre. No anticipation could have been disappointed in the performance. Mr. Kaltenborn not only easily vanquished the technical difficulties with which this great display aria is studded, but he sang the melody in the slow movements with a breadth and richness of tone, a warmth of musical feeling which is only to be found among the really great solo violinists. It was such playing as is heard upon the platforms of great orchestras like Mr. Kaltenborn's own or the Boston Symphony, but has never been offered to theatre patrons as a part of their regular entertainment before. Mr. Kaltenborn was enthusiastically encored and played the Berceuse from "Jocelyn," in which the richness of his tone greatly moved his hearers. Perhaps this innovation was foreshadowed when Mrs. Hecht reorganized her orchestra this season, adding several men to the strings, so that the cornet and the drum are properly balanced and less aggressive at the Montauk than in most theatre orchestras. Mr. Kaltenborn will play every evening this week and he will be followed during the winter by other soloists at intervals.

After reading the above, some bright minds will see how it is possible to solve one of the musical problems, that of affording an occasional opportunity for local soloists to be heard by an audience that pays its way in. It's a sad commentary upon ungrateful and thoughtless human nature when we hear excellent local musicians declare that it is impossible for them to clear expenses for concerts arranged by themselves. None of them, however, have any difficulty to crowd the hall with "deadheads." Should Mrs. Sinn-Hecht's innovation become popular, New Yorkers will see a revolution in the matter of music in the theatres, and who will not encourage the beginning of such a revolution?

Heinrich Klingenfeld, of the Klingenfeld College of Music on Hancock street, is filling some professional engage-

Owing to the numerous requests for Lessons,
Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY
has decided to teach a limited number of advanced Piano Students.
ADDRESS: Luitpold Strasse 20, BERLIN, W.

ANNOUNCEMENT.
First American Tour
Marie Titiano
In America November, December and January.
DATES NOW BOOKING, Direction: S. KRONBERG, 2314 Broadway, New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager, 444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y

ments in Toronto. His wife, Mrs. Marie Klingenfeld, herself an able musician, will conduct the Brooklyn school while her husband remains North. A competent faculty assists Mrs. Klingenfeld, and with her will participate in the musicales to be given at the school this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard O'Donnell provided an evening of Irish music for the Brooklyn Institute at Association Hall last Thursday.

The musical director and officers of the Temple Choir are planning an interesting series of events for the seventh or jubilee year of the organization. Last week we referred to the celebration of Founder's Night in November. In December four glee concerts will be given. The annual meeting of the seventh year will be held the first Thursday in January, 1902, and on March 27 will come the annual festival concert. Director Bowman is one of the happiest and busiest men in New York, or anywhere else for that matter.

The music department of the Brooklyn Institute is preparing to send out its first programs, and the music lovers of the borough are especially pleased at the auspicious beginning with Madame Schumann-Heink and Emil Fischer in a joint recital at the Academy of Music, on October 17.

Recital by a Mildenberg Pupil.

MISS GERTRUDE HILTON, a pupil of Albert Mildenberg, gave a recital at Carnegie Chamber Music Hall last Tuesday (October 1) afternoon. Although it was several weeks in advance of the opening of the regular musical season, Miss Hilton was greeted by what managers describe as "a full house." The young woman played a "romantic program," and particularly distinguished herself in the performance of the intermezzo from Schumann's "Faschingsschwank" and a Mendelssohn study, the latter being an extra piece. Miss Hilton was not so successful in the Grieg Sonata with which she made her début. Very likely she was nervous, for later she again displayed some uncertainty in the Chopin numbers. These were Studies Nos. 1 and 7 in op. 25, the D flat Nocturne and the Scherzo in B flat. The first study was charmingly played; the second not so well. The Nocturne was better; but the big Scherzo, with its varying moods, seemed rather beyond the young performer. Another excellently performed number on Miss Hilton's list was the Brahms Intermezzo. Miss Hilton shows the results of conscientious study with an able teacher. In her case the usual plan of piano pupils is reversed. Most pupils study here and then go abroad to "finish." Miss Hilton studied several years in Berlin with good teachers, but she is getting her finishing touches from an American and right here in New York.

Miss Josephine Mildenberg, the soprano, who was expected to assist at the recital, was too ill to sing, and Madame Torriani, who happened to be in the audience, volunteered. Madame Torriani sang a song by Chaminade; "May Morning," by Denza, and "At Parting," by Rogers.

Mme. Ludwig Breitner, violinist, and Miss Ada Lohman, soprano, contributed the musical program at the reception by the Rainy Day Club on October 2, at Carnegie Chamber Music Hall. Madame Breitner, who has just returned from Newport, where she appeared at a series of musicales, played charmingly. Miss Lohman delighted all with the sweetness of her voice and the finish and distinction of her style. The young soprano is one of the pupils of Madame Von Klenner who have already been admitted into the circle of artistic singers.

CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, October 5, 1901.

EDWIN C. GLOVER, local conductor of the May Festival Chorus, has accepted the position of director of the Orpheus Club, made vacant by the resignation of Charles A. Graninger, who will take charge of the Apollo Club at Minneapolis. Mr. Graninger will continue to be at the head of the Auditorium School of Music.

Jessie Ayres Wilson, who recently played at one of the organ recitals in Music Hall, is a former pupil of W. S. Sterling, dean of the College of Music. She is a Sidney (Ohio) girl and continued her studies under Guilmant.

Rosa Cecilia Shay is at present in New York, accompanied by her mother. She is busy rehearsing "Priscilla," the new American opera, and will open the season with her grand opera company in Norfolk the early part of November.

The faculty of the Auditorium School of Music includes as new members this year Dr. W. C. Harris and Dr. A. D. Murphey, who will give a series of lectures on the vocal organs; Miss Nellie T. Splain, piano; Prof. E. C. Duval, French; Sig. G. B. Castellini, Italian; Christian W. Dieckman, theory, and Louis Aiken, public school music and sight singing.

Professor Broekhoven is at present engaged on the score of a grand opera comique, the scene of which is laid in China in the Middle Ages. Mr. Broekhoven has written his own libretto. He has finished his exhaustive treatise on Greek music.

Mrs. F. H. Covalt, wife of the city clerk of Newport, Ky., has been selected as leading soprano in the choir of Christ Church. She succeeds Mamie Hissem de Moss, who left this city to accept a position in the choir of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

The board of directors of the Apollo Club held its annual meeting recently and elected the following officers: President, Elliott H. Pendleton; vice-president, J. R. Callahan; secretary, Joseph L. Adler; treasurer, H. T. Loomis; librarian, C. B. Brandeburg; musical director, B. W. Foley. The club will hold its rehearsals as usual, on Tuesday evenings, in the Assembly Room of the Odd Fellows' Temple. Rehearsals begin October 8. It will be a close corporation, as in the past two or three years, for the benefit of members only and invited friends.

The May Festival Chorus, under the direction of E. W. Glover, resumes its regular rehearsals Monday evening, October 7, in the Mechanics' Institute Hall. The works to be taken up this year are Bach's B minor Mass; "The Beatitudes," by César Franck and Berlioz's Requiem. Theodore Thomas' arrangement of Gluck's "Orpheus" for-chorus, orchestra and soloist, is also in the repertory. The solo parts have been written for Madame Schumann-Heink.

Miss Martha Henry, one of Cincinnati's most promising singers, has left Cincinnati for New York, where she will continue her studies and will accept a church position.

Miss Kathryn Gibbons, soprano, and Ralph Wetmore, violinist, both of the College of Music, have been engaged as soloists at the concert by the Louisville Philharmonic Orchestra, at Louisville, Ky., on October 17.

The School of Expression of the College of Music will give its first invitation recital of the season under the direction of Miss Mannheimer next Saturday, October 12, in the Odéon. "Stories in Poetry and Prose" constitute the program.

For the fifth season the popular music class and the College Evening Choir will be organized on Monday and Tuesday evenings, October 14 and 15, under the direction of A. J. Gantvoort. The popular music class will meet on Monday evening and will be for beginners, no previous musical knowledge being necessary. The College Evening Choir will be organized this season on a new basis which will be announced on the opening night. It is advisable as well as to their advantage for all to come at the very beginning and to be regular in their attendance. Admission will be 10 cents at the door. Tickets for the course will be $1 as in previous years.

George Smith, violinist, has been engaged as soloist at one of the concerts to be given by the Nashville Philharmonic Orchestra in that city on November 6. Mr. Smith graduated from the College of Music of Cincinnati in 1899 with honors.

Signor Albino Gorno, of the College of Music, has written a composition for piano and orchestra, called "The Ocean." It will be given a performance in the near future.

Miss Elizabeth Mathias has been appointed an assistant in the vocal department of the College of Music.

The Marien String Quartet has begun rehearsals for the first chamber music concert to be given this season. Signor Romeo Gorno will play the piano part of the Dvorák Quintet.

Asa Howard Geeding, baritone, of the Oscar Ehrgott Vocal School, has been engaged for a number of concerts during the winter, opening at Hamilton, Ohio, October 1. Mr. Geeding appeared at several watering places during the summer in concert and oratorio, always with success. Among the cities he is booked for this winter are Dayton, Columbus, Indianapolis and Wheeling, W. Va. He will appear in recital in this city at an early date.

Zilpha Barnes Wood, after spending a delightful vacation at Manhattan Beach, N. Y., has returned to the duties of her constantly enlarging school. She has added to it an elocution department, under the direction of Miss Emma Mae Crapsey; Rev. G. B. Castellini, teacher of Italian and French; and Miss Edna Cochnower, who will perform the duties of secretary. Her enrollment of pupils this year has been exceptionally large, far exceeding that of last year. Mrs. Wood has established the

AUGUSTA COTTLOW, THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. Carl Alves
Vocal Instruction.
1146 PARK AVE., near 91st St., NEW YORK.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Send for Circulars.
126 East 83d Street, - NEW YORK CITY.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W.,
LONDON, ENGLAND

free scholarships—one each in voice, piano and elocution. The examinations for these take place October 12. Mr. Brandt, Dr. Bacharach and Mr. Lockdie will be the committee of judges. The contest is open to all. Mr. Kinslow, one of her most advanced pupils, will give a song recital in the early winter. He will be assisted by Miss Emma Crapsey Signor Romeo Gorno and Dr. N. J. Elsenheimer will give a series of duo piano recitals during the season. Their tour will be later in several of the Southern and neighboring States.

One of the best choirs in the city is that at that Mound Street Temple. It is composed of the following members: Sopranos—Laura A. Weiler, Antoinette Werner and Mrs. H. Lerch; altos—Miss Martha Henry and Miss Charlotte Callahan; tenors—John M. Schaefer and J. Fred Lampe; bassos—A. Remde and A. Goldstein.

Mrs. Corinne Moore-Lawson, soprano, has returned from a pleasant summer spent among the Michigan lakes.

Mrs. Wm. McAlpin will undertake a concert tour this season under prominent management. It will begin some time in December. Her programs will include such numbers as "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster"; aria from "Fidelio"; Mad Scene, from "Hamlet"; "Elsa's Dream," from "Lohengrin"; "Elizabeth's Prayer," from "Tannhäuser," and songs of Schumann, Schubert, Mozart, Franz, Grieg and Reis. Concerts are already booked for New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Montreal, Quebec and Cincinnati.

J. A. HOMAN.

"Elements of Violin Playing."

THE publishers of Heinrich Klingenfeld's book, "Elements of Violin Playing," continue to receive testimonials about the excellence of this comparatively recent instruction book. Following are three additional indorsements of the work:

Messrs. Breitkopf & Hartel:

DEAR SIRS—I have examined with much interest the copy of Klingenfeld's "Elements of Violin Playing" which you kindly sent me. It is the most complete first book yet published, and meets the increasing demands of the day. It cannot fail of good results, if faithfully carried out, and should be the means of exciting industry and zeal in the young violinist. Yours very truly, 845 Boylston street, Boston, Mass. CHARLES N. ALLEN.

Messrs. Breitkopf & Hartel:

DEAR SIRS—I find the violin school called "Klingenfeld's Elements of Violin Playing" of great interest, and it will give me pleasure to recommend it. Yours very truly, RICHARD ARNOLD.

208 East Sixty-first street, New York, N. Y.

Messrs. Breitkopf & Hartel:

GENTLEMEN—Have carefully examined "Klingenfeld's Elements of Violin Playing" several times. In my opinion, the work is unique, owing to the many practical suggestions it contains, which one finds in no other violin method. I also admire the brevity with which the different subjects are handled, which clearly proves the author's experience in teaching. Shall make it an object to use this work whenever I possibly can. Yours sincerely,

Albany, N. Y. CHARLES EHRICKE.

MRS. BEARDSLEY AT THE POUCH GALLERY.—Mrs. William E. Beardsley has resumed her teaching in her studio in the Pouch Gallery on Clinton avenue, and after October 15 will be at the Clinton avenue studio except Thursday. As the chairman of the music committee of the Chiropean Club, Mrs. Beardsley will direct the musical program at the first meeting of the club, October 17. Her soloists on that occasion will be Florence Mulford, contralto; Walter McElroy, tenor, and Leonard Dalley, pianist. Mrs. Beardsley and her daughter Constance passed a pleasant summer in the country at Milford, Conn., and later in traveling in the northern part of the State and Canada.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, October 5, 1901.

Mrs. Nina K. Darlington has just returned to the city and opened her studio at 1085 Boylston street, where she is already very busy with classes, arranging hours for lessons, &c.

During the summer months Mrs. Darlington's class numbered between twenty-five and thirty. Part of this time was spent in the city and later she went to her summer home in Casco Bay, off the coast of Maine, where she had an equally large class. Mrs. Darlington's enthusiasm and interest in her work, added to a refined and charming personality, makes her a most interesting teacher and friend.

Mrs. Darlington's "Kindergarten Music Building" is so well known throughout this country that it is hardly necessary to mention that she is the author and originator of the system.

Miss Marie L. Everett, well known as teaching the Marchesi method, has returned to the city, and already has many hours engaged, although only a few days in town. Miss Everett will give two recitals early in the season, one in Boston, the other in Worcester.

Mrs. Charles R. Adams will have Miss Mary L. Shaw as accompanist this winter, Miss Shaw having occupied the same position with Mr. Adams for a number of seasons. Mrs. Adams has her studio settled and arranged, and it is one of the handsomest ones in the city. The room has a familiar air to those who knew the Adams studio on Tremont street, and everything in it is closely associated with the life and work of Mr. Adams.

Arthur Philips, whose excellent singing has been commented upon in these columns many times, is sailing next week for a two years' stay in Paris and London. He will first go to Sbriglia, and Mr. Slack, whose pupil he is, says that a brilliant future is before him, as he has an artistic temperament and a thorough musical training as well as a beautiful voice.

Carl Faelten's first recital of the season takes place at Steinert Hall on Tuesday evening, October 8. Introductory remarks will be made by Mrs. Reinhold Faelten.

The Newton Choral Association, Everett E. Truette director, is now entering upon its second season. The programs for the two concerts have been carefully selected; for the first one, January 14, there will be miscellaneous chorus selections, and the cantata "Fair Ellen," with soloists and chorus. The second concert in April will consist of the historical cantata, "Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans." This society, although so young, already has a waiting list, which shows the active interest taken in it. Regular rehearsals are held twice a month. The officers of the society are: President, Charles H. Buswell; vice-presidents, Charles S. Ensign, Charles W. Hall, Stephen Moore, J. R. W. Shapleigh, Albert E. Wright; secretary, Mrs. Mary C. Blakemore; treasurer and manager, Philip H. Robinson; membership committee, Edward L. Bacon, chairman; James H. Wheeler, Jr., Mrs. Howard R. Mason, Mrs. Hiram Leonard, Mrs. Jerome Sondericker, Mrs. William H. Potter; press committee, Frank D. Frisbie, Mrs. Mary C. Blakemore, Miss Grace G. Johnson; musical director, Everett E. Truette; pianist, Miss Laura Henry.

Miss Leslie Kyle, a pupil of Miss Priscilla White, has been engaged as soprano soloist at Dr. Butters' Methodist church, Somerville. There is a chorus choir in addition to the quartet.

Boston is to have its first complete hearing of the great B minor Mass of Bach this season. The Cecilia Society are to bring it out in the early part of December, under the direction of B. J. Lang.

Daniel Kuntz, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been given a year's leave of absence, which he will spend in Paris and other cities abroad, partly in recreation, partly in study. Mr. Kuntz has played with the Orchestra for twenty years, and is the only first violinist who has been with it since it started.

Miss Florence Garvin, a young soprano, made a most pronounced success at the concert in Steinert Hall this afternoon.

John Orth, pianist, assisted by Stephen Townsend, gave a Liszt recital in Somerville this afternoon before the Forthian Music Club.

Felix Fox returned from Europe, where he spent the summer studying with his former teacher. He will be heard in recitals during the winter.

Karl Kaufmann, a former member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has been engaged as director of the Orpheus Musical Society. This society is now in its forty-ninth year, and at one time was under the leadership of Carl Zerrahn.

The New England Conservatory of Music is offering a free scholarship for one year in the vocal normal department to young men and women of limited means who have good voices and natural musical ability. All that is required of those who wish to take advantage of this generous offer is a personal application and examination at the conservatory.

A large audience enjoyed the first afternoon recital of this season by the Faelten Pianoforte School last Saturday in Huntington Chambers Hall. The playing was very creditable throughout, and was well received. The program consisted of two ensemble numbers, class drills by members of the juvenile department, and solo pieces by the following students: Robert Wilson Gibb, Mary Pumphrey, Elizabeth James, Miss Marion L. Kent, Miss Caroline Cunningham and Miss Alice Julia Riche.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL.—The Morris Piano School, 201 West Eighty-first street, gave its first recital of the season on Saturday, October 5, at 3:30 p. m.

The soloist was Master Hans Barth Bergman, age nine years, who was assisted by Master Edward Williams, soprano, age nine years, and Master Frederick Williams, contralto, age seven years. The program was as follows:

Invention No. 8.... Bach
Spring Tidings.... Löw
Two French Songs.... Edward and Frederick Williams
Allegro, from Sonata, op. 2, No. 1.... Beethoven
Two English Songs.... Edward and Frederick Williams
Etude.... Wilson G. Smith
Neckerein.... Von Wilm
Tarantelle.... Heller

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

New Hotel Bellevue.
NEW, MODERN, FIREPROOF HOTEL.
BEACON STREET (near Tremont Street),
BOSTON, MASS.
Central Location. European Plan.
HARVEY & WOOD.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
Management DUNSTAN COLLINS, Steinway Hall, CHICAGO.

LACHMUND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
132 WEST 85th STREET, NEW YORK.
CARL V. LACHMUND, - Director
(DIRECTOR WOMEN'S STRING ORCHESTRA SOCIETY.)
All branches. Faculty unsurpassed. Private instruction. Special course for students preparing for a public career.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, October 5, 1901.

AND now we are all impatience for the concert season to begin.

The Chicago Mendelssohn Club and Harrison M. Wild, its capable director, are to be congratulated upon an excellent selection of soloists for the society's concerts this season. The eminent soprano, Charlotte Maconda, will attract many lovers of the artistic, for her singing cannot fail to excite the admiration of thoughtful musicians as well as the enthusiasm of conventional concert-goers. Mabelle Crawford, contralto, is a vocalist of recognized standing and exceptional talent, while Esther Feé, violinist, whom all Chicago is anxious to hear, completes a brilliant trio. Then, for the last event, Joseph S. Baernstein, one of the most prominent of American bassos, a singer who enjoys great popularity in the East, and whose visits to the West likewise are welcomed, has been engaged.

Would that in the matter of choosing artists all American musical societies might this season display a discriminating judgment similar to that of the Mendelssohn Club!

The programs and dates are as follows:

PROGRAM I.
December 17, 1901.
Soloist: Miss Charlotte Maconda.

Chorus of Bishops and Priests.....Meyerbeer-Buck
Accompaniment of piano and organ.
To My Turtledove.....Henschel
The Testament.....Marschner
My Love's in Germanie.....A. von Othegraven
Within a Mile of Edinboro' Town.....Bartlett
With soprano and tenor solos.
Idylle Mongolienne.....Stevenson
Four-hand accompaniment.
Love and Time.....Thorn
Bonnie Katrine.....Von Holstein
Under Flowering Branches.....Von Woess
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan-Brewer
Accompaniment of piano.

PROGRAM II.
March 6, 1902.
Soloists: Miss Mabelle Crawford and Miss Esther Feé.

Marching.....Trotere-Nevin
Spring Song.....Beines
King Death.....Houseley
Rhapsodie.....Brahms
Alto solo and Maennerchor.
Salamis.....Gernsheim
Incidental solo by baritone.
Folksong.....Borodine
Serenade.....Schumann-Buehren
Träumerei.....MacDowell
Bonnie Ann.....Buck
The Signal Resounds.....

PROGRAM III.
April 24, 1902.
Soloist: Joseph S. Baernstein.

Praise of Music.....Isenmann-Buck
Into the Silent Land.....Foote
Soft Floating on the Evening Air.....F. W. Root
The King and the Bard.....Hegar
The Lay of the Norsemen.....Bruch
With baritone solo.
A Ballad of Charles the Bold.....MacDowell
The Impatient Lover.....Leu
Dance of the Gnomes.....MacDowell
The Toper's Glee.....Zelter

The Chicago Musical College faculty concert will take place on October 15, Rudolph Ganz conducting an orchestra of fifty musicians. A brilliant program, concluding with the last act of "Faust" in costume and with scenic effects, has been arranged by Dr. Ziegfeld and his associates. The soloists will be John R. Ortengren, Dr. Louis Falk, Mary Forrest Ganz, Hans Von Schiller, Bernhard Listemann, M. Gauthier and Herman Devries.

Here, indeed, is an event which offers many sources of inspiration to the students of this influential college!

Much interest is centred in the series of historical programs which the Chicago Orchestra will give in the auditorium this season, as previously announced.

It is very satisfactory to learn that Mme. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler will be the first artist to play before the Amateur Musical Club this season.

The program which Emil Liebling, Allen Spencer and Glenn Hall will present at Kimball Hall on the evening of October 8 is varied, inasmuch as it includes compositions by Moscheles, Reinecke, Brahms, Schumann, A. Vannini, Margaret Lang, MacDowell and Saint-Säens. Miss Julia Caldwell will be the accompanist.

A forthcoming event which arouses much local interest is the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory's faculty concert, to take place in the Music Hall (formerly University Hall), Fine Arts Building, on October 10. The soloists will be Mrs. Zimmerman and the Misses Hill and Lewis; Messrs. Sansone, Stevens, Herner, Willett, Dickson, Laffey and Keller.

William A. Willett, of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, will give a song recital at the Hotel Hayden on Halloween.

Dr. Ziegfeld, president of the Chicago Musical College, has just received a congratulatory note regarding the college from Massenet, whom the distinguished Chicago musician counts among his many friends. At the present time over 3,000 students are attending the Chicago Musical College.

At his interpretation classes William H. Sherwood not only deals with the works of great composers, but gives his pupils masterly illustrations regarding piano technic in its various aspects.

Miss Mary M. Shedd, director of the American Method of Singing, returns to-day from a successful New York sojourn, to her studio in the Auditorium Building. Her many enthusiastic pupils will gladly welcome this clever and most energetic musician.

Esther Feé, the American violinist, will sail for this country on the steamer La Champagne, which leaves Havre on Saturday, October 19. Her manager, Charles R. Baker of the Fine Arts Building, predicts a brilliant tour for this exceptionally gifted young artist. Before leaving Paris Miss Feé will give a musicale at the Marlborough Hotel

Charles R. Baker announces that William H. Sherwood the pianist, has been secured for a recital at St. Mary' School, Knoxville, Ill., in December. The piano facult of this institution is composed largely of Mr. Sherwood former pupils, and he has filled this important engagemer for a number of years. He will visit Eastern States i the first part of December and Indiana cities early in No vember, playing at Wabash, Ind., on November 6. D cember 2 is the date of his appearance at Wellesley Co lege.

Louis Evans, president, states that the Hamlin Cor pany's recently established choir agency is proving to a valuable addition.

Emil Liebling will give piano recitals at the Milwauk Downer College and the Brazelton Conservatory Music, Ashland, Wis., on October 12 and 19, respective

Mrs. Rique, of New York, the exponent of a system physical and mental training which is said to overco the nervousness or stage fright which many artists ex rience, is staying at the Auditorium Annex.

The voice of Miss Louise Neilsen, the Swedish mu cian, who of late has made her home in Chicago, inspi the ensuing words in the Boston Sunday Globe: "She si a wonderful range of clear notes with great volume, her voice is of delightful quality."

One of this season's talented visiting musicians is Mis Katherine O'Brien Stewart, a well-known vocalist pianist from Nashville, Tenn.

At a dinner recently given in Paris by Mrs. Clarence Eddy the guests of honor were Madame Marchesi, vocal instructor, and Esther Feé, the young violinist, merly of Chicago. During the evening Miss Feé plaed several selections, accompanied at the piano by Mad Marchesi. Mrs. Eddy sails for America on October

The Church of Our Lady of Sorrows, which wil dedicated in November, has engaged the following so ists: Miss Bessie Doyle, soprano; Mrs. Paulina M griffo-Maina, contralto; Mr. Heffner, tenor, and

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YOR

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TI E

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Boki

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Boyce, basso. Miss Torey and Mariano Maina, respectively, have been appointed organist and choir director.

At Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, "King Dodo's" phenomenally successful reign of twenty weeks' duration terminates to-night. But the company goes "on the road," and the route, which inevitably claims the interest of thousands of Chicagoans, has been outlined as follows:

October 7, Elgin; 8, Aurora; 9, Joliet; 10, Bloomington; 11, Peoria; 12, Springfield; 14, Decatur; 15, Terre Haute; 16, Anderson; 17, Kokomo; 18, Toledo; 19, Toledo; 21, Columbus; 22, Columbus; 23, Dayton; 24, 25, 26, Louisville; 28, 29, 30, Indianapolis; 31, Muncie; November 1, Fort Wayne; 2, South Bend; 3 to 9, Milwaukee; 10 to 13, St. Paul; 14 to 16, Minneapolis; 18, Dubuque; 19, Davenport; 20, Rock Island; 21, Galesburg; 22, Hannibal; 23, Quincy; 25, Keokuk; 26, Burlington; 27, Iowa City; 28, Cedar Rapids; 29, Marshalltown; 30, Des Moines; December 2, Lincoln; 3, 4, 5, Omaha; 6, Grand Island; 7, Cheyenne; 9 to 14, Denver; 16, Cripple Creek; 17, Colorado Springs; 18, Pueblo; 19, travel; 20, Wichita; 21, Leavenworth, 23 to 28, Kansas City; December 29 to January 3, St. Louis.

A gifted young local composer, Robert Hood Bowers, gold medalist at the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory and pupil of Frederic Grant Gleason, has been engaged in rewriting the last act of "King Dodo." That Mr. Bowers does not confine himself to classical music is further illustrated by the fact that he has written a vaudeville operetta, "At Three P. M.";' also a musical act for Duke & Harriss.

George Hamlin, Tenor.

George Hamlin, the eminent Chicago tenor, having withdrawn from managerial pursuits, will now devote his time and attention exclusively to teaching at his spacious studio in Kimball Hall, and to concert engagements.

Holmes Cowper's Engagements.

Holmes Cowper, the tenor, has been re-engaged by the Evanston Choral Club to sing "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast" on November 21. He will interpret the same work for the Dominant Ninth Choral Club, of Alton, Ill., and also at a concert at Muskegon, Mich.

Johanna Hess-Burr.

The eminent teacher of singing and piano accompanist, Johanna Hess-Burr, is engaged in giving lessons to a large and flourishing class of pupils. Not only has she a studio in the Fine Arts Building, but every week it is her custom to visit Milwaukee, where her teaching clientèle is large and influential. Mrs. Hess-Burr's exceptional musical ability, amounting one might say to genius, and her rare capacity for imparting knowledge have long since placed her in a unique and enviable position, while critics ever unite in praising her skilled and sympathetic piano accompaniments—accompaniments which fill the souls of great artists with tranquillity and the ears of vast audiences with delight.

The accompaniments of Mrs. Hess-Burr are characterized by rhythmic accuracy, finish, repose, responsiveness and discrimination. Technical difficulties are vanquished, and art finds expression in music's lofty utterances.

Helen Buckley's Season.

The gifted and beautiful young soprano, Helen Buckley, will have a busy season, her engagements including the opening of the Bush Temple of Music, in January, a recital at Davenport, Ia., on October 7, the Chicago Apollo Club's "Damnation of Faust," and engagements in Kansas during December.

Howard Wells, Pianist.

Happy is the pianist who possesses an essentially musical touch. Howard Wells, instructor at the American Conservatory, and chairman of the program committee of the Illinois State Music Teachers' Association, is fortunate in having so rare a characteristic. The ensuing press notices of recent date are discriminating and applicable:

Mr. Wells' first number, the Schumann "Carnaval," was magnificently played. His technic was sure, brilliant and adequate, and his interpretation in keeping with the idea of the composition.—Rockford Register-Gazette, December 28, 1900.

Mr. Wells' piano numbers were well worth hearing, so true were they in tone and expression. His Chopin numbers were almost beyond criticism.—Omaha World-Herald, May 6, 1900.

Mr. Wells played with intelligence, and displayed good technic and a rare beauty of tone. His touch was refined, possessing a singing quality rarely heard, and in the forte passages it was masterful.—Omaha Excelsior, May 5, 1900.

Mr. Wells' playing may be characterized as artistic in detail. His remarkably beautiful cantilena he showed to best advantage in the "Frühlingsglaube" of Schubert-Liszt. The interpretation of the Chopin numbers was interesting and most musical.—Illinois State Register, Springfield, Ill., June 20, 1901.

Charles R. Baker is completing arrangements for what should prove to be one of the most notable features of the Chicago season. This consists of two concerts at the Auditorium, the Pittsburg Orchestra, Victor Herbert conductor, participating. The first event is to celebrate the eleventh anniversary of the opening of the Auditorium, on which occasion the soloists will probably be Suzanne Adams and William H. Sherwood, while those proposed for the second concert are Madame Sembrich and Esther Feé. It is understood that Mr. Herbert's orchestra will consist of seventy-five players.

Carl Sobeski.—Carl Sobeski, tenor, of Boston, has opened a new studio at 402 Boylston street; the room is large and beautifully fitted up with pictures by celebrated people, and all the thousand and one things that go to make up an artistic interior.

Early last spring Mr. Sobeski placed himself in the hands of Dr. Arthur Shaw, who performed several successful operations upon his throat, thereby enhancing the beauty and power of what has always been a good tenor voice.

During the summer Mr. Sobeski made a tour of Canada and the Maritime Provinces with Mr. and Mrs. Karl Feininger, everywhere meeting with much success as press notices from every city show. While devoting much time to teaching, Mr. Sobeski will be heard in concert this winter more than usual, and will probably visit New York professionally.

Mr. Goodrich in His New Studio.—A. J. Goodrich, the harmony teacher and author, is established in his attractive new residence studio in Carvel Court, 114th street and St. Nicholas avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich passed the summer in Lake George, enjoying to the full nature's beauties in that region.

Yersin Sisters in New York.—The Mlles. Yersin have returned to New York, and have resumed their work at their home, 465 Lexington avenue.

"Deutschland Über Alles."

THE well-known song "Deutschland, Deutschland, über Alles" lately passed its sixtieth birthday. The writer, Hoffmann von Fallersleben, being expelled from the University of Breslau for his revolutionary principles, took refuge in the then British island Helgoland. There in 1841 he was visited by the Hamburg publisher Caenpe, and wrote: "On August 29, I took a walk with Caenpe on the shore. I read him a song, but it cost four louis d'or. Before I had finished he laid down four louis on my pocketbook. We then discussed about its publication. Caenpe said: 'If it hits it will be a Rheinlied,' alluding to Becker's 'Sie sollen ihr nicht haben,' published the year before. On September 4 Caenpe brought it to me with Haydn's music and my portrait." The melody is that of the Austrian national hymn, written for the birthday of the Emperor Francis and first performed February 12, 1797, in all the Vienna theatres.

Gregory Hast.—Gregory Hast, the renowned English tenor whom Mr. Charlton will introduce to American audiences this year, brings a reputation second to none in oratorio and recital work. He is famous for his ballad concerts at St. James', Royal Albert and Queen's halls, London, and elsewhere in England and on the Continent; and in oratorio, which he studied with the veteran Sims Reeves, he has scored a long series of notable successes. Mr. Hast is credited with a pure tenor voice of rarely beautiful quality, and his interpretation is said to be exceptionally sympathetic and artistic. Owing to other important engagements abroad Mr. Hast can only give November and December to America. A recital tour of the English provinces, just completed, will be followed immediately by a joint tour with Mme. Blanche Marchesi that will last until the day previous to his sailing for this country, October 26. Mr. Hast will return to Europe January 3, 1902, to fill bookings which extend to May. Such vogue abroad would seem tangible evidence as to his pre-eminence and distinction among the concert tenors now before the public.

Madame Von Klenner in Buffalo.—Mme. Evans Von Klenner is in Buffalo attending the convention of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. She is a delegate from a New York city club, and will read one of the few papers permitted at this convention. Madame Von Klenner is well qualified to speak on the subject chosen for her essay: "Literature which has inspired the great composers."

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

CLARA POOLE-KING,

Prima Donna Contralto

SEASON 1901-1902.

WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

Elsa Marshall,

222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Soprano.

Madame CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES

Professor of Voice Production.

Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir. (Under Royal patronage.)

Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils

For Prospectus and Terms apply to

121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL

TENOR.

Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago.

THE Guilmant Organ School

(COPYRIGHT)

RE-OPENS

Monday, October 14th.

EXCEPTIONAL ADVANTAGES.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.....

34 West 12th Street, NEW YORK.

2046 Leavenworth Street.
San Francisco, September 30, 1901.

LAST week at the Tivoli we had Verdi's early composition of "Nabucco," said to have been written when he was but twenty-seven years of age. I think the opera has never been produced here before, and it has been received with quite a bit of enthusiasm. While it is not of so finished a character as Verdi's later works, it has some very pleasing music, notably the chorus of Jewish captives, which was beautiful. Salassa made a striking Nebuchadnezzar, but the part is not possessed of enough opportunity for a man of his resources dramatically. Barberschi, as the slave Abegaille, was a splendid figure and fitted the part admirably. Fenma was well done by Politini, Ismaile by Cortesi, and Napoleoni with his splendid figure made an ideal high priest of Baal. Dado shone as the High Priest of the Jews, and his vocal work was as good as anything he has yet given us. It is a type that fits both voice and personality, and he did it well. The stage pictures were striking, and Paul Steindorff with his fine orchestra made the most of the instrumentation, the overture being enthusiastically applauded. Madame Carusi produced some beautiful harp effects.

At the Columbia this evening opens a week's engagement of "Florodora," which promises to be full if interest. George Lask, one time stage director of the Tivoli Opera House, is with the troupe, as also other old friends, who will be well received.

Much interest is being manifested in Berlin musical circles in the forthcoming début of the talented pupil of Hugo Mansfeldt, little Alma Stencel, whose appearance in Vienna and Budapest last winter created quite a furore of enthusiasm for the young pianist. It is candidly admitted in Berlin that Mr. Mansfeldt has undertaken a great deal, more in fact than has thus far been accomplished, when he promises to present "the little Stencel," who is not yet fourteen years old, in a repertory of three concertos and three entire piano recitals. The first concert will take place in Becthoven Saal on October 26, with the assistance of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under Rebicek's direction. Alma Stencel will play the Concerto in E minor, by Emil Saur; Concerto in E flat by Liszt, and Concerto Symphonique, in D minor, by Litolff. The program of her second concert on November 8, also in Beethoven Saal, will be Rondo e Capriccio, op. 129, Beethoven; Sarabande, Gigue, Gavotte, Bach-Mansfeldt; "Neun Walzer," op. 39, Brahms; "Auf Fluegeln des Gesanges," Mendelssohn-Liszt; Etude, op. 10, No. 5, Chopin; Romanze, op. 28, No. 2, Schumann; Etude, op. 25, No. 9, Chopin; Romance, Mansfeldt; Rhapsody, No. 13, Liszt.

Mr. Mansfeldt will return to America immediately after the first Stencel concert.

The concert season is fairly under way, and Sherman-Clay Hall has been the scene of much activity during the past week. On September 17, the concert of Bradford and Mme. B. Anais Peck and their pupils was given to a large audience, those appearing on the program being Bradford Peck, Miss Vera Van Fossen, Mrs. Thomas Graham Crothers, Miss Margaret Knox, Miss Carrie Eulass, Mme. B. Anais Peck, vocalists; Miss Lou Barbageleta, violinist, accompanied by Miss Alice Carrington, and Mrs. Margaret Cameron Smith accompanist for the voices.

There were three fine concerts on Thursday, September 26. In Byron Mauzy Hall William Piutti gave a piano recital with a superior program, embracing numbers from Schumann, Brahms, Rubinstein, Padcrewski, Bach, Chopin and Liszt.

The same evening at Sherman-Clay Hall a first recital in this city was given by Miss Annette Hullah, recently from London, and a pupil of Leschetizky, and Harry H. Barnhart, basso-cantante, pupil of Cortesi, Florence, Italy, and Randegger, London. Miss Hullah had been previously announced in the papers as having created a furore in London by her superior playing, so some disappointment was felt here at her performance, as the program she played is for the most part performed by many of our pupil players in 'Frisco. It embraced the following: Variations in G, Mozart; "Lieder ohne Worte" (Shepherd's Complaint), Mendelssohn; Gigue, Bach; Sonata in E minor, Grieg; "Song of the Waves," Henton; "Humoreske," Leschetizky; Rondo, op. 16, Chopin. The Grieg sonata was well rendered, but her best number was the Chopin Rondo. Miss Hullah plays well, but we have so many fine pianists at home in 'Frisco it takes something out of the common to excite comment. Mr. Barnhart was very satisfying in his work. He has a magnificent voice and uses it well. His numbers also had the merit of not being heard every day. He sang "Maometto Secondo," Rossini, and "Philemon et Baucis," Gounod, for his first number. This was followed by "O, Ruddier Than the Cherry," Händel, in which he displayed to fine advantage his perfect breath control; "A Voice by the Cedar Tree" (Boston), which was sublimely lovely and rendered with beautiful expression; "A Garden Serenade," Levi, and lastly the Toreador Song, by Bizet.

At St. Paul's Church the third concert was being rendered by the choir of St. Paul's in the guild room of the church. It was a fine program and some good work was given, notably that of the choir and the Colonial Quartet of ladies' voices, Mrs. Mead and the Misses Isabel Kerr, Xena Roberts and Elsie Arden. Miss Marks gave a Chadwick number with good effect, Miss Grace Marshall played a Moszkowski waltz very daintily, and Elsie Arden gave Lalo's "Captive Maid" in her usual satisfying manner. She has a voice of velvet, it is so beautifying round and melodious. Miss Marks and Miss Arden as also the ladies of the Colonial Quartet, are pupils of Mrs. Mariner-Campbell. Those who assisted in the program were Miss Ruth Weston, Sig. R. Stantini, Hugh Williamson, Mrs. Mead, Miss Kerr, Miss Roberts, Miss Arden, Mr. Lawrence, George Pachacco, Miss Marks, Miss Grace Marshall, J. H. Hallowell and St. Paul's choir.

A fine concert is to be given to-morrow night by Carrie Brown Dexter, soprano; Grace Carroll, contralto; Algernon Aspland, tenor; Homer Henley, basso, and Wm. H. King, accompanist and pianist. It is to be given in the Unitarian Church in Oakland, and one of the features of the program will be "In a Persian Garden," by Liza Lehmann.

A great deal of interest was manifested in the first appearance of Belle Clair Chamberlain, who made her first appearance on Friday evening, September 27, after an absence of two years in the East and Europe, which she has employed in studying with Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, in Chicago, and Teresa Carreño, in Berlin. Anticipation was pleasantly realized in Miss Chamberlain's first number. Her touch is clean, crisp and resonant, while her power is something surprising in a young woman and bears ample testimony to her superior training. She plays with the ease and abandon of one who is perfectly sure of herself, and the result is exceedingly artistic. She opened the program with the "Sonata Characteristique" of Beethoven ("L'Adieu," "L'Absence," "Le Retour"); there were the Chopin numbers, with a Chopin Prelude for encore, a Schubert Impromptu, Tschaikowsky Nocturne, and "Ballet de Ballet," Moszkowski. The program closed with a Ballade and Tarantelle, Liszt.

Recitals in anticipation are those of Edward Xavier Rolker, for October 8; Helen Heath's graduating concert, for October 7; Mrs. M. E. Blanchard, October 26; F. I. Biggerstaff, November 2; Enid Brandt, child pianist, November 5 and 9.

The San Francisco Oratorio Society has been resurrected after a two years' discontinuance, and under

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.

LEONORA JACKSON
Assisted by HARRY J. FELLOWS, Tenor
WILLIAM BAUER, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: New York, 31 Union Square West. Chicago, 71 Monroe St.

direction of Hamilton Howe is preparing "The Messiah" for its first concert. The society is equipped with new officers and has for its meeting place Mission Hall.

In speaking of his recent publication of "Mandolin Memories," which, by the way, was done from pure love of the plectrum instruments and a desire to have them better known and understood, and not for financial gain, Mr. Adelstein, the author, showed me congratulatory letters from musicians all over the United States speaking in the highest terms of praise of the work and the author's object in publishing it. The work is not for sale and has been mailed everywhere with purely missionary intent. It deals with the plectrum family, its uses and abuses, its ancestry and the footing it has obtained in Italy, Japan and other parts of the world, giving interesting excerpts from the author's own experience. Its object is to create broader knowledge of and love for the mandolin and its first cousins.

A letter from a distant reader corrects me on a statement made a few weeks ago, wherein I mentioned a Count de Boston as occurring in "I Puritani." It seems I was at fault, as it is in "Un Ballo in Maschera" that the character is cast. I want to thank my correspondent for the correction and also other interesting matter contained in his letter which referred to the early days in the career of Julie Rosewald. He speaks of having been the one to inform her of the first time she was cast for Marguerite in "Faust," which occurred one night when she was playing Zerlina in "Fra Diavolo."

Speaking of "Un Ballo in Maschera," he says the opera was sung for the first time in Philadelphia the day after Fort Sumter was fired upon in April, 1861, and mobs were going about the streets looking for traitors the day the performance took place.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

MADAME MANTELLI IN CHILI.—Mme. Eugenia Mantelli, the operatic contralto, has completely captured her audiences in South America. In addition to the former criticisms, we reproduce an article from the Chilian Times, an English newspaper published in Valparaiso:

This celebrated prima donna, whose portrait we reproduce as Mignon and Carmen, has had many successful engagements before joining the Padovani Opera Company, having sung in all the principal theatres in Europe and the United States, namely, Italy—in Rome, Naples, Milan and Florence; Portugal, in Lisbon (Royal Theatre St. Carlos; Russia, in the Teatro Imperiale, Moscow; Germany, in Berlin at Kroll's Theatre; London, at Covent Garden; South America, in Buenos Ayres, Montevideo and Rio Janeiro; in the United States, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo. Madame Mantelli has sung in about forty operas; but where she has scored the greatest success has been in "Carmen," "Mignon," "Aida," "Santonc," "Dalilah," "Lohengrin" and "Trovatore." When she was recently at Lisbon, Portugal, she made a splendid representation of Carmen, appearing by royal command at four state functions, and afterward received a superb gift from the King and Queen. She was also the recipient of a floral crown at the hands of Signor Puccini on the closing night of the opera season. The royal present was a magnificent brooch in the shape of an eagle. It contains 1,400 diamonds and eight large rubies. In Santiago on Friday night she took the title role in "Carmen," given for the benefit of the French colony, and scored a great success. She was repeatedly encored and at the close was presented with a gold medal and several bouquets of flowers.

BURMEISTER'S SUCCESS AT THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

IT was not until the sixth concert of the Worcester Music Festival that the audience rose to the pitch of genuine festival enthusiasm, and it was Burmeister's great performance of Liszt's "Concerto Pathetique" which accomplished it and stirred up the hearers to a prolonged outburst of applause. An encore was persistently demanded, but refused on account of the strict rule of the management, and it was at the seventh call that Mr. Burmeister stopped bowing to the audience in order that the concert could be continued; in fact, he was the success of the festival.

Here are some press notices:

A good piano concerto played by a first-rate pianist is always sure to be one of the most popular things in a music festival, and the Liszt concerto this afternoon, played by Mr. Burmeister, was no exception. In fact, the audience was roused to a greater pitch of enthusiasm than by any preceding number during the week, and the genuine "festival spirit" seemed to be spreading.

This work of Liszt, entitled "Concerto Pathetique," was originally written for two pianos. Mr. Burmeister, who, by the way, was a pupil of Liszt's, thought that it would be far more effective if re written as a concerto for one piano with orchestra, so he re-wrote it and orchestrated it. He is no novice at such work, having made a very skillful and effective rearrangement of Chopin's F minor concerto. He handles the orchestra with skill in this Liszt concerto and treats the piano in the true Liszt manner.

Mr. Burmeister played the concerto with as much spontaneity and loving interest as if it were for the first time. Although his playing did not lack fire, the poetic element stood out as predominant. Ample technic he has, but it was not forced upon the listener's attention. And that is high praise, for technic is merely a means of revealing music. Mr. Burmeister is evidently a pianist who plays because he enjoys music, and not because he wishes to prove to his audience that he can play faster or hit harder than anyone else.—Worcester Gazette, September 28.

Richard Burmeister, playing his own arrangement of a concerto written by the greatest pianist that ever lived, is an event to be not lightly chronicled.

Mr. Burmesiter has taken the Liszt "Concerto Pathetique" in E minor, which was written for two pianos and has rearranged it for one piano with orchestra. There is an undercurrent of Liszt thought in the work, but the setting is strikingly new.

The audience was the largest of the week for an afternoon concert. There was great interest evidenced in the striking personality of Mr. Burmeister, and his surpassing mastery of the keyboard was the subject of discussion as the audience left the hall. Mr. Burmeister's execution was of immense breadth and his artistic temperament is almost ideal.—Worcester Spy, September 28.

The regulation that prohibits responding to encores with a second number is usually good, but in the case of an artist like Richard Burmeister, who was new to Worcester, and who was filled with magnificent virtuosity which he would willingly have displayed in larger measure, an exception might have been made with impunity.—Worcester Spy, September 29.

First of these was Richard Burmeister, who played his arrangement of Liszt's concerto for two pianos. Mr. Burmeister wrote the orchestral score, embodying in it Liszt's ideas, but adding features of his own. This might be regarded as artistically questionable, and it should be condemned if the result detracted from the dignity of the original, or represented Liszt, the composer, in any unworthy way. Perhaps Liszt would have objected, but if he could rise from the grave and rebuke Mr. Burmeister, it would be only fair to regard him as a very ill-mannered ghost. The work as it stands is beautiful. The piano part is brilliant, the orchestration rich in color and characteristic of Liszt. The rearrangement has been done with entire faithfulness. As to the performance, Mr. Burmeister showed himself a worthy companion to the many splendid pianists who have appeared at past festivals. He was recalled again and again, but declined to add anything to the program.—Worcester Telegram, September 28.

Mr. Burmeister is well known in Boston as a pianist. He is a man of dreamy, poetic appearance, who often forces tone and suggests the hammer and anvil. This afternoon he played with delightful ease and with an appreciation of dynamic value that surprised those who knew him chiefly as a robust virtuoso.—Philip Hale, in Boston Journal, September 28.

A Nordica Story.

HERE is a very graceful and characteristic story, quoted from the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, about Madame Nordica, who is to make a transcontinental recital tour in America this season under the management of Loudon G. Charlton:

Madame Nordica spent some time in the Black Forest during the past summer, preparing for her appearances at the opening of the new Wagner Theatre in Munich, an event of importance in the musical world. The theatre is a counterpart of the one planned and built by Wagner at Bayreuth.

In her walks, for she is an inveterate pedestrian, she passed, one morning, in the tiny village of Boll, four little girls playing in front of a tumbledown house, built, apparently, in mediæval times. They had a doll of a unique description. It was made of a bootjack, clad in a torn bit of apron.

The next afternoon Madame Nordica set out on foot for Bonndorf, the nearest village of importance, with two friends. Half way up the mountain the rain, which had threatened for some hours, came dripping down. Throwing her cloak about her shoulders and digging her walking cane firmly into the slippery way, she climbed upward. Her cheeks were pink from exertion, and perspiration mingled with the raindrops on her face, but to Bonndorf she finally came.

A search disclosed a shop where dolls of wonderful waxen and expressionless countenances, of the kind that see light in the Black Forest, were waiting on the shelves.

The hour was late, so a carriage was ordered at the inn, and down to Boll she drove in the twilight. Out of the carriage she climbed, the famous Brunnhilde of the Metropolitan Opera, and lifted the antique knocker on the door of the tumbledown house in Boll. It was not yet night, but the peasants had gone to bed. Presently a man's head was stuck out of the window. To explain her mission was a brief matter. The smiling father, in rather scant raiment, hurried down to take the paper containing the four dolls. As she drove away four tousled yellow little heads were stuck out of the window, and shrieks of delight followed her while she waved her hand until a bend in the road shut out the sight and sound of the happiness that she had left behind.

LAURA CRAWFORD.—Mrs. Laura Crawford has returned from the country, and will open her new studio at No. 9 West Ninety-first street on October 1. Mrs. Crawford is prominent as an accompanist, and is also one of the most capable women organists in the city, having been the assistant organist of the "Old First" Church under William C. Carl for several years. Mrs. Crawford had a large class of pupils last year in piano and organ, and is expecting a busy season this coming winter.

NEW YORK COLLEGE OF MUSIC.—The opening concert of the New York College of Music has been postponed to October 17, on which occasion Alexander Lambert will have the assistance of the Venth-Kronold String Quartet.

GRACE G. GARDNER.—Miss Grace G. Gardner has returned to the city, and is accepting concert and drawing room engagements. She has also resumed teaching at her spacious residence studio, 36 West Twenty-fifth street.

Victor Harris,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

Frederic Mariner,

TECHNIC SPECIALIST,

Ten seasons with the Virgil Piano School, New York,

—NOW—

Director of the Bangor Piano School, BANGOR, ME.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

Greater New York.

NEW YORK, October 7, 1901.

S. ARCHER GIBSON, organist-director of the Brick Presbyterian Church, also of Temple Beth-El, is hard at work developing plans for his winter season. He expects to give some recitals on his splendid organ, not as yet heard in this manner, when he will play some new things and his choir will also assist. They are now at work learning Bach's cantata, "God's Time Is the Best," little known here, but beautiful throughout. Among other things he gave three recitals at the Pan-American Exposition in July, and as the writer was there he can testify to the enthusiasm with which they were received. One of these recitals occurred on "Maryland Day" and as Mr. Gibson came from that State many early friends heard him.

A fleeting visit to the Wirtz Piano School, just removed to its own new building, brings at once the idea that here is prosperity commensurate with the merits of the methods in vogue, under Conrad Wirtz, the director. Having three floors, the first is given up to studios, opening into each other, with a stage, so that 100 people can be accommodated. On the second floor there are more teaching rooms, with blackboards, &c., for the harmony classes, and the third is mainly for pupils' practice, many younger ones doing their daily practicing there. All over are Clavier tables and Claviers and all the furnishings are in good taste.

The school will this season give a series of recitals, under the captions of "Musical Hours," Children's Recitals" and "Pupils' Evenings." Mr. Wirtz will also give recitals and everything about this Harlem institution betokens activity and success.

The public recital of last June was a most creditable affair, the following pupils taking part: Viola Danielson, Mabel Drummon, Elsie Jennings, Howard Mott, Flora Potter, Adolph Roemermann, Mae Symes, Elsie Timmerhans, Mabel Dowe, Jennie Symes, Grace Stryker, Lillie Breng, Florence Brown, Marie Hancock, Lena Kleemeyer, Grace Locher, Bella Thom, Irene Walls, Bernhard Kuehne, Isabel Carroll, Isabel Rough, Clarence Carroll, Gustave C. Wirtz, Chester Armstrong, Amandus Bagge, Frank Bagge, Amie Baker, William Baker, Harry Boyle, Margaret Kitchelt, Ruth Rapson, Millie Repetti, Albert Roemermann and F. J. Chapman.

Adelaide C. Okell has during the last eleven years made for herself a fine position here as instructor of the piano. At the National Conservatory, under Dr. Dvorák, her ability was recognized, and she became a teacher there. She studied some time with Joseffy, later going to Berlin for study, becoming one of the few favored pupils of Madame Carreño, and from her she acquired the secret of the wonderful tone production and artistic ease and finish for which the great artist is famous. She has devoted special time to the Carreño method, and has her certificate for teaching it.

Miss Okell's great aim has been to impart to others the results of her own extended study; her love of teaching is pre-eminent, and from the famous artists with whom she has studied and her own large experience in teaching, she has perfected methods the excellence of which a dozen years of successful teaching has proven. With her pupils, who occupy especially high social standing, Miss Okell will this season give musicales, and her semi-annuals especially do her credit.

She has begun what promises to be a most successful winter.

Franklin Sonnakolb played at Newport last August and September. He has arranged to give thirty piano recitals, and is finishing his system of employing the master works, as a means of acquiring a finished technic, along with preparatory inventions of his own. He is writing music to Poe's "The Raven," and is finishing some essays on the philosophy of music. Also he has begun a concerto, in the key of C sharp minor, and a work (after Schumann), "Etudes Symphoniques." He has a large class in Philadelphia, and spends three days each week at Steinway Hall. His son, Franklin De S. B. Sonnakolb, was admitted into Grace Church choir last spring; there were fifty candidates. Last summer Mr. Sonnakolb had a house at Gwynedd, Pa., with several acres of grounds, a fine brook, and the William Penn Inn was near enough to run over and visit with Schuyler Van Rensselaer and others, who spent a week or two there. His son was with him; apart from his musical talent, his passion is for mathematics, and he is preparing for a course in naval engineering and construction.

Pupils of Madame Finkel are covering considerable ground in the public eye, among them these: Helen Darling sang with a prominent Hoboken society as soloist lately. She had forty-two Chautauqua engagements in the West the past summer, and recently sang at Rev. Russell Conwell's Church, Philadelphia. Lucille Presbry sang at Narragansett Pier, and sings regularly in her church on West Seventy-sixth street, where another Finkel pupil, Beatrice Mocs, substituted for her. Miss Mocs herself sings at the Church of the Good Shepherd, and has now her own Brooklyn studio. Belle Newport is contralto of Dr. Meredith's church, same borough. Dorothy Bell was the soloist at the Round Lake concerts the past summer.

Madame Finkel spent some time during the past summer as the guest of Dr. W. O. MacDonald, Eastern Point, New London.

Katherine Pelton began her studio receptions last week, and a goodly crowd of society people came to the first. Of course there was music, the fair Miss Pelton singing charmingly, despite a bad cold; also, Miss Henrietta Weber played some things of Rachmaninoff and Sinding. Miss Belle Maze-Munson also played the Reinhold C sharp minor Impromptu and Moszkowski Menuet. Miss Pelton and Mr. Belvor sang a canonic duet, new to me ("Friendship," by Marzials), and Belvor sang a couple of songs.

Miss Pelton purposes having these monthly, and at the next more well-known artists are to assist.

Sarah King Peck rejoices in the possession of a photograph of Madame Schumann-Heink, with the following inscription:

Meiner lieben Collegin
Sarah King Peck
Zur freundliche Errinnerung an Rheingold
and
Season 1901,
Schumann-Heink.
New York, 27-5-'01.

It will be recalled Miss Peck sang in "Rheingold" several times, in both this city and Philadelphia. She has also a personally presented photo of Olitzka.

Reinhardt Gebhardt begins the season with numerous pupils, as usual, and the other day showed me a trio for piano, violin and 'cello, of undoubted beauty throughout; the slow movement has a lovely melodious flow. Also, I found some songs, among them a valse, written in the popular vein, interesting. He has published much music of this sort, it finding a ready sale, and is now striving to make place for this music of classical form.

Mrs. Jocelyn-Horne, who after leaving Belmar, N. J., was the guest of Miss Tilmar in one of the attractive camps on Raquette Lake, in the Adirondacks, has resumed teaching voice. Those desiring to arrange hours may address her at 63 Fifth avenue. Her season promises to be a fine one. Mrs. Horne has made conspicuous success of her teaching.

William H. Purdy, organist-director of the boy choir of Epiphany Church, on Lexington avenue, was for nine years in charge of a similar choir in Troy, and before that began as a boy chorister in that city. He learned much of C. A. White, then of Troy, now of Boston, and later went to London, with a letter of introduction to Sir George Martin, of St. Paul's Cathedral, which procured him the privilege of attending choir rehearsals, &c. Voice is his specialty.

Amy Fay has returned to the city, and is prepared to resume teaching at 60 West Ninety-fourth street, where she has most comfortable rooms. Miss Fay's reputation as critic, littérateur, speaker and pianist is widespread, and to these she adds that of organist, having been organist in her father's Episcopal church, and later in Cambridge, Mass., and Chicago, Ill.

Marie Louise Todd resumes teaching of the piano after a summer at Shelter Island and the Adirondacks. She returns full of interest in her pupils, and with a color and pretty animation which speak well for the "rest cure." Her studio is at the San Remo.

Kate Stella Burr has issued a neat little circular announcement, containing her specialties as accompanist, coach and organist, with several press quotations, among them these:

Kate Stella Burr played accompaniments in a manner which was surely perfection—more cannot be said.—MUSICAL COURIER.

Much admiration has been expressed for Kate Stella Burr's artistic accompaniments. * * * Brilliant work.—New York Times.

Kate Stella Burr ranks among the highest in her profession.—New York World.

Brilliantly accompanied by Kate Stella Burr. * * * Admirable work.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Kate Stella Burr presided at the piano and one of the events of the evening was the rendering of a new song she has written.—Mail and Express.

On the back she prints this:

Coach—oratorio. Song work entire; song recitals arranged; school of church music also concisely presented.

Miss Burr has introduced many artists now holding exceptional choir positions and well known in the concert field.

At home to artists from 5 until 6 afternoons, Sundays excepted.

Josephine Ware writes from Berlin that she has been working very hard all summer, and has accomplished all she hoped. She has had exceptional musical and social advantages. Mr. Cole, the tenor, heard her songs at George Fergusson's studio, and took them to London with him, when he expects to sing them in his Octo song recitals. The songs will soon be published,

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
Faculty and Examiners include WILLIAM MASON, ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, JOHN C. GRIGGS, PAUL AMBROSE, ORTON BRADLEY, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES, ALFRED D. WICKES, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LIZA DELHAZE-WICKES, WM. F. SHERMAN, MCCALL LANHAM, etc., etc.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. EVANS VON KLENNER
School of Vocal Music.
Voice Culture, Style and Repertoire in Four Languages.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
RESUMES TEACHING AT NEW RESIDENCE-STUDIO,
230 WEST 52d STREET,
SEPTEMBER 18.

VAN YORX
Tenor
6 E. 17th St
NEW YORK

Miss Ware expects to return to New York the middle of this month.

Joseph P. Donnelly, concert organist, baritone, accompanist, receives pupils for the study of piano, voice and organ, and coaches singers for church, concert and oratorio at his studio, 2033 Madison avenue, corner 129th street, New York, or the Pouch Gallery, Brooklyn.

Reginald Barrett has just published a "March Fantasque" for the organ in G major. This is a very taking sort of thing, of much rhythm, with considerable contrapuntal variation, cleverly done. It is dedicated to Victor Hamerel.

Carl M. Roeder resumed piano tuition September 16, the regular course consisting of elementary, progressive, intermediate and advanced classes, comprehending touch, technic, reading, memorizing, analysis, practical harmony and interpretation, and embracing the entire field of instructive, classic and modern musical literature.
Special courses in touch and technic, interpretation and teaching methods.
Instruction given at studio in Steinway Hall, at residence studio or at pupil's home.

RECEPTION TO TOM KARL.—A reception was given at the American Institute of Applied Music on Friday, October 5 to introduce Tom Karl to the students. A large gathering of friends enjoyed the evening, and the following program was given:

Andante Spianato.....Chopin
Etude de Concert.....Martucci
Madame Delahaze-Wicks.
Beloved, It Is Morn.....Aylward
Bytime.....Speaks
Joseph A. Phillips.
Aria, from Cavalleria Rusticana.....Mascagni
Still wie die Nacht.....Böhm
Miss Maria Strakosch.
Lullaby.....
Madrigal.....Victor Harris
Miss Julia Strakosch.
Ich liebe dich.....Mildenberg
Winter Song.....Rogers
Tom Karl.

NEW YORK SCHOOL OF ACCOMPANYING.—The New York School of Accompanying opened its season on October 1, under most favorable auspices and with an increased attendance. The aim of this institution is meeting with constant recognition, and its scope is as constantly increasing. Pupils who come from Maine to California are in attendance at the school. These results speak well for the conscientious motives and efforts of the heads of the institution—Heinrich Meyn, the well-known tenor soloist of the Rutgers Presbyterian Church, and Rosetta Weiner, whose work in concert and educational lines has placed her among the foremost. Miss Wiener returned from abroad October 1, where she has been combining business and pleasure.

DUFRICHE AT THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

MRS. THURBER has engaged Eugene Dufriche as head of the singing department at the National Conservatory. For six seasons M. Dufriche has been a member of the Grau Opera Company. He is an artist of long and varied experience and one whose training admirably fits him for the important duties of his new position.

M. Dufriche was born in Paris. He was a first prize pupil of the Paris Conservatory. In 1875 he made his début in opera at the Comique and for six years sang at that theatre the principal basso roles. He created the part of Zuniga in "Carmen." New Yorkers have often seen him in this role. From Paris M. Dufriche went to Italy, and in that country made his first appearance at the Carlo Felice in Genoa, singing the baritone part in Massenet's "King of Lahore," and he continued singing leading baritone parts in many operas. M. Dufriche has sung the roles of Figaro and Don Bartolo in "The Barber of Seville" over 100 times. He traveled extensively and made his mark singing in opera in Spain, Russia and South American countries. For ten seasons M. Dufriche sang at Covent Garden, London, and during these years he made tours through England, Scotland and Ireland, singing with brilliant success in all of the principal cities of the United Kingdom. In 1891 M. Dufriche returned to the Opéra in Paris and sang there the baritone parts, and it was while filling that engagement that the artist became a reigning favorite at the French capital. As already stated, seven years ago M. Dufriche became a member of the Grau company.

Like other operatic artists, M. Dufriche began his career as a singer in the church choir. In 1856, when he was only seven years old, he took his first vocal lessons. Before singing in grand opera he had established his reputation for artistic singing, having filled engagements in some of the leading churches in Paris. M. Dufriche has enjoyed the personal friendship of Bizet, Ambroise Thomas, Gounod, Reyer, Massenet, Saint-Saëns, Ponchielli, Mascagni and Puccini.

Francis Walker.

THE well-known baritone and author from the beginning of this season devotes himself definitely and almost exclusively to teaching, and next week will be established in one of the largest and handsomest studios in New York. The "Van Dyck Studios," the professional home of many first-class artists, on Eighth avenue at Fifty-sixth street, is the place elected by Mr. Walker, and on the second floor of this block a room 46 feet in length has just been partitioned off for his use, and is being especially decorated to make it as artistic and attractive as possible.

It is not too often that, as in Francis Walker's case, a man in the very prime of his powers as a singer, and with the most thorough preparation in all the varied schools and styles of music, and with an immense repertory, leaves public work to give his best years to helping others along the road he has trod with such success. Nor are there too many teachers of singing who have no "new methods" to advertise, no fads to exploit, but who have to offer to the public only honest, earnest work, guided by the traditions of the best masters. Of Mr. Walker the famous old maestro di canto, Francesco Cortesi, of Florence, writes:

> Many qualities and gifts are necessary to one who would dedicate himself to the teaching of singing, and they are:
> Perfect ear, great understanding of tone emission (commonly called voice placing), wide experience and perfect knowledge of the details of vocal art, such as scales, trills and agility of every kind; and to these must be added exquisite artistic taste and sufficient acquaintance with musical science, harmony, &c.
> Francis Walker possesses in the highest degree these excellent and rare gifts, and I who for many years have known him as student, artist and teacher, have had frequent occasion to admire them in him. It is in consequence of this knowledge that I feel myself entitled to declare him to be among the most perfectly equipped of those who teach singing and who honor art.
>
> FRANCESCO CORTESI,
> Professor of Singing in the Royal Musical Institute, Florence, Italy.

It would be manifestly impossible for an artist and gentleman of Mr. Walker's standing to associate himself with any but the best, and he is in fit company with Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Severn, with whom he now begins the Walker-Severn School of Music. In it he has the department of singing and acts as secretary of the school, which has his splendid new studio in the Van Dyck as its headquarters, although the Severns retain also their home studios at 131 West Fifty-sixth street.

WEGENER OPENS A STUDIO AT CARNEGIE.—William A. Wegener has engaged a suite at Carnegie Hall, where he will open a vocal studio. Mr. Wegener will be remembered as one of the leading tenors of the Metropolitan English Opera Company last season, when he achieved success as Lohengrin. His method of singing won for him unstinted praise from the leading critics. Aside from an extensive operatic repertory, Mr. Wegener has sung a large number of oratorios in both English and German, and was chosen on nearly every occasion to assume the tenor roles of modern German oratorios on their initial presentations in the United States. Mr. Wegener as an interpreter of lieder has charmed many audiences. Having himself studied with some of the first masters in Europe, he is admirably fitted to teach and impart to his pupils the true principles of vocal art in all of its branches.

THE SEVERN TRIO.—The members of the Severn Trio will soon begin their regular rehearsals. This will be the fourth season of the organization. Dates for a series of concerts will soon be announced. Edmund Severn, the violinist and leader of the trio, is arranging to perform at the concerts this winter some unfamiliar and comparatively new compositions. Trios by Schuett, Smetana and Volkmann are in the list.

FELIX FOX.—Felix Fox was among the passengers who arrived last week from Europe on the steamship City of Rome. Mr. Fox spent three months in France very profitably, and returns home to resume his professional duties.

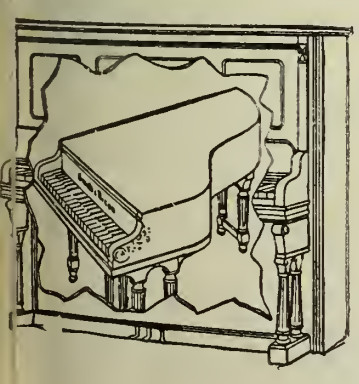
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

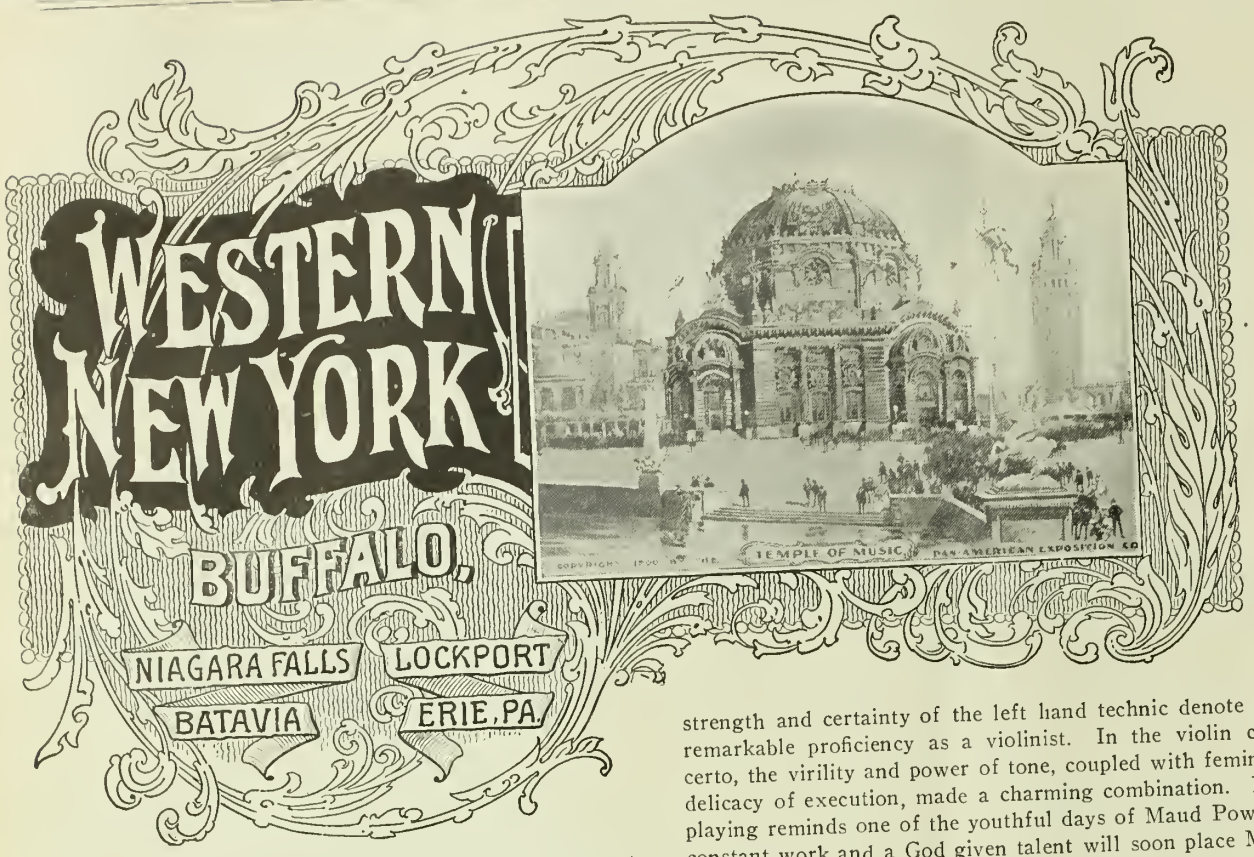
HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
13 rue Bassano (Etoile), PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK,



Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., October 1, 1901

WHEN we review the list of organists and singers we have had at the Pan-American Exposition and the shining lights still coming, such as William C. Carl, Clarence Eddy, Dr. Gerrit Smith and others, from New York and elsewhere, we realize what a gigantic task it must have been for Simon Fleischman, chairman of the music committee, to select from the hundreds of applicants such a fine array of talent. Mr. Fleischman is an excellent organist himself, having formerly filled the position of organist of the Unitarian Church, but being also a brilliant lawyer and councilman of Buffalo, he was compelled to resign for want of time, much to the regret of music lovers here. I am sure Buffalonians and the millions of visitors are grateful for the excellent choice made for the music in the Temple, as well as the bands at the Esplanade stands.

October 3 was Nebraska Day at the Exposition, and Lincoln, Neb., sent some excellent musical talent to grace the occasion. Miss Silence Dales, violinist, was the chief attraction. Others on the program were Miss Marie Hoover, solo pianist and accompanist, and Mrs. Frederic W. Taylor, soprano soloist, of Buffalo.

The violinist, Miss Silence Dales, is the musical representative from Nebraska chosen officially and professionally for this occasion. She resides at Lincoln. She was soloist at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha in 1898, accompanied by the Chicago Thomas Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Mees. She was also soloist at the Bellstedt Band concerts at the Greater America Exposition in Omaha in 1899.

Upon the announcement of Miss Dales' appearance at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, President Schurman, of Cornell University, sent her an invitation to give a recital under the auspices of the university, as is customary with the honorary lecturers of the university. Miss Dales has accepted the invitation, and will give a short recital before the university convocation on Friday evening, October 4.

Miss Silence Dales is a young lady of fine appearance and charming personality. With the first number, Violin Concerto, G minor, by Bruch, she won her way with the audience. Violin solo, Polonaise, op. 4, Wieniawski was given with dash and spirit. The clearness and bell-like harmonics, and the ease of the sweep of the bowing strength and certainty of the left hand technic denote her remarkable proficiency as a violinist. In the violin concerto, the virility and power of tone, coupled with feminine delicacy of execution, made a charming combination. Her playing reminds one of the youthful days of Maud Powell; constant work and a God given talent will soon place Miss Dales in the front ranks of her profession. The instrument in her hands ceases to be a mechanical apparatus, but becomes a living breathing human voice depicting all the passions of the human heart. She was interrupted many times during her program by spontaneous applause. Miss Dales was born in Lincoln, Neb. She became a private pupil of the then instructors in music in the State University, Nebraska. Miss E. D. Cochran, of New England Conservatory at Boston, for the piano, and Gustav C. Menzendorf, of the Leipsic Conservatory, for the violin.

SILENCE DALES.

The piano solos, as well as the accompaniments by Miss Marie Hoover, of Lincoln, Neb., were beautifully rendered, adding much to the success of the concert as a whole. She is a pupil of Scharwenka and Otto Bendix.

Mrs. Frederic W. Taylor, of Buffalo, gave three selections; Soprano solo, "The Heart's Spring," Wickede; "Slave Song," Teresadel Riego; "In Summer Time," Edward German, in a delightful manner. She has a beautiful soprano voice of unusual and exquisite quality. Mrs. G. W. Thomas, of Omaha, Neb., gave a soprano selection "La Primavera," by Torry, in the coloratura style. She has just returned from abroad after a three years' study. This number was interpolated at a late hour.

Poets are born, not made. This assertion may be applied with equal truth to organists. A bright example is W. K. Steiner, of Pittsburg, Pa., who gave an evening concert at the Temple of Music, September 21. He came unheralded but proved a revelation to musicians of Buffalo and the vast crowd of visitors. His program had the advantage of containing many new numbers; some have never before been played in this country. For the benefit of organists I inclose the program:

Introduction and Passacaglia.....Max Reger
Concert Overture in F.....Wolstenholme
Evening Song.....Bairstow
Toccata and Fugue in D minor.....[illegible]
Fantaisie, op. 188.....Rheinberger
Pastorale, op. 30, No. 11.....Nicolai
Symphonic Prelude, op. 30, No. 12.....Stoughton
Pro Gloria et Patria.....Simonetti
(Variations on the German National Anthem.)

W. K. STEINER.

Mr. Steiner's registration was that of the true musician, his technic was always subservient to true interpretation, and while the concert as a whole was very brilliant, every nothing seemed played for mere technical display. His pedaling in his last number "Variations on the German National Anthem," Stehle, was marvelous.

Mr. Steiner passed his examination successfully in 99 and became a member of the American Guild of Organists New York. He is a native of Allegheny City, and received his first instruction on the piano and organ from Pittsburg leading teachers, Bissell, Salmon, Jitterbart and Hall successively.

After holding positions in various churches as organist he traveled in Europe during the summer of 1894, and finally settled down in Dresden, where he studied piano and theory under Heinrich Germer for four years. On his return, Mr. Steiner has been organist and musical director of Calvary M. E. Church, and has given a number of organ recitals in the vicinity of Pittsburg. He passed his examination successfully in 1899, and became a member of the American Guild of Organists, New York. Mr. Steiner has written some very acceptable piano pieces and some effective quartets and solos for the church service (in manuscript). Mr. Steiner is booked for several concert engagements.

It can be considered a red letter day at the Temple of Music when we find on the program the names of [illegible]

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall NEW YORK.

such artists as L. Huntington Woodman, organist, of Brooklyn, and Miss Bessie Greenwood, coloratura soprano, from Hornellsville, N. Y. Mr. Woodman is as much celebrated for his correct intepretation as for his ability as an executant.

Miss Greenwood has a real treasure of a voice, which she modulates with rare artistic sentiment. Her singing is melodious, sweet and full of passion, and, therefore, aroused the enthusiasm of the audience. Her presence is very pleasing, and in the florid "Villanelle," by Dell' Acqua, she was heartily encored and had to respond. As an encore she sang the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria." Another selection was "Song of Repentance," which she gave with dramatic fervor. We predict that we will find her soon in the front ranks of American artists.

Henry B. Vincent, of Erie, Pa., gave a delightful organ concert, September 20. He is the pianist at Chautauqua, and organist and choirmaster of the First Presbyterian Church, of Erie, Pa. Mr. Vincent was ably assisted by the eminent Winifred Eggelston, contralto, who sang her numbers in a musicianly manner. "Over the Desert," Kellie, she sang with dramatic dash, which won hearty applause.

Christian Stein, of Troy, N. Y., gave an organ recital September 23. The singers assisting him carried off all the honors. Mr. Lindsay, baritone, in Granier's "Hosanna," and Mr. Calhoun, tenor, in a solo by Bartlett, displayed fine voices and good method. Mr. Woolsey's voice is a rich bass. He sang "By the Waters of Baylon," by Howell.

J. B. Tipton's concerts were held September 24 and 25. His two programs contained legitimate organ music, played with faultless technic and good taste. Mr. Tipton is known as the teacher of Wm. Gomph, the official organist at the Pan-American Exposition.

Henry S. Hendy, organist of St. Mary's-on-the-Hill Church, of this city, gave an organ recital September 28. Mr. Hendy's program was filled with choice selections, among which the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Overture to "Prometheus," Beethoven, and Liszt's "Canonette," were the most effective. His playing was clean cut and nice throughout.

A series of recitals on the Aeolian pipe organ at the Mission Building on the Exposition ground were given by Frank Tafft, of New York. To illustrate the enterprise of Mr. Tafft, Tracey Balcom and the Aeolian Company may be mentioned the fact that on Friday was played the first time in America a selection from Paderewski's new opera, "Manru."

The Musical Lira Columbiana, a quintet from South America, whose music is unique and highly pleasing, gave an entertainment at the home of Mrs. Marvin in honor of her mother, Mrs. Katherine Riesberg. They claim to be the only organization of their kind in the world. One plays the guitar, one the tiple and there are three bandolas. It is a very unusual combination, playing classic music, as well as their own popular airs, under the direction of Senor Pino. Their engagement at Shea's Music Hall proved a great success, and they hope to be equally attractive in New York city soon.

MRS. KATHERINE RIESBERG.

Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory.

WE have received the annual report of the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory of Music and Operatic and Dramatic School, under the direction of Dr. Hugo Goldschmidt. The piano classes are conducted by Xaver Scharwenka and the classes for other instruments and theory by Philipp Scharwenka, while Director Goldschmidt conducts the vocal classes and the department of musical science. The opera classes are conducted by Director Goldschmidt and Dr. Wilhelm Kleefeld. On September 25, 1900, Karl Klindworth celebrated his seventieth birthday, when addresses were presented to him, making special mention of his services in promoting the labors of Richard Wagner and Franz Liszt, as well as his services at the Conservatory.

On October 1, 1881, Xaver Scharwenka opened the Scharwenka Conservatory, with such teachers as Philipp Scharwenka, Professor Rüfer, Frau Marianna Scharwenka-Streson, A. Becker, W. Langhans and others, and October 1, 1900, sees the addition of a dramatic department under Dr. Hans Oberländer and a department of musical science. At a late conference of teachers of the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory, a resolution was adopted "That the establishment of an obligatory examination for candidates who contemplated adopting teaching as a profession is necessary to the interest of teachers and pupils alike.

The total number of pupils is 372. Prof. Xaver Scharwenka and Philipp Scharwenka have been elected members of the Royal Prussian Academy of Arts.

THE WOMEN'S STRING ORCHESTRA.—The managers of the Women's String Orchestra Society intend to strengthen its membership by adopting a still higher standard for admission to its ranks. Only professional players are eligible as members, and the managers wish it understood that the orchestra is in no wise maintained in the interests of any violin teacher's class. Its aims are of an entirely different nature. By suggestion of the director, Mr. Lachmund, the members of the orchestra will in future be divided into three classes, namely, "Principals," "Special Members" and "Regular Members."

MARIE POTVIN.—Miss Marie Potvin, the pianist, has returned from her vacation passed at Lake George and the Adirondacks. She will play in concert this season. In the meantime she has resumed her teaching at 117 West Forty-fifth street.

HIBBARD-HOWARD STUDIOS.—Miss Adelina Hibbard, soprano, and Mrs. Hortense Hibbard Howard, pianist, have resumed their classes at their new studios at 32 East Forty-fifth street, and at their residence studio, 228 West Seventieth street.

WILLIAM C. CARL'S RETURN.

AFTER a three months' holiday William C. Carl has returned well browned and in good health, to take up the winter's work, after a sojourn in the mountains and Canada. Mr. Carl has many plans for the coming season, which bids fair to be one of activity for the popular organist.

The Guilmant Organ School, now entering its third year of work, will reopen next Monday with a large enrollment of students and under flattering conditions. Mr. Carl has worked unceasingly for its success, and the results already achieved have been such as to demonstrate what thorough instruction on the organ will accomplish. The course is most comprehensive, including besides the organ the study of harmony, counterpoint, musical form, musical history, musical analysis, organ tuning and practical work in preparation for the church service. Students' recitals occur each month, and lectures by prominent musicians are frequently given. The organ lessons are given privately and not in classes, and this branch is entirely under Mr. Carl's supervision.

In addition to his duties at the school Mr. Carl will be heard in concert this season, and among the new organs he will inaugurate will be one at Wilmington, N. C., in December. A series will be given at the "Old First" Church, New York, beginning early in November, and on Monday of this week a recital was played in Bethlehem, Pa., where the Bach Festival was so successfully given. To-morrow and Friday and Saturday will occur the three recitals at the Pan-American Exposition, at the Temple of Music, when the following interesting programs will be played:

FIRST RECITAL, OCTOBER 10, 1901.

Allegro, Sixth Symphony	Widor
Romance (new)	Richmond
Menuetto, in the ancient style	Lee
Fugue in D	Bach
Vorspiel to Parsifal	Wagner
Intermezzo (dedicated to Mr. Carl)	Callaerts
Concerto for organ in D minor	Händel
Reve Angelique	Rubinstein
Fantaisie on a Welsh Air	Carl
The King's Coronation March	Duncan

(New. First time in this country.)

SECOND RECITAL, OCTOBER 11, 1901.

Organ Sonata in C minor	Th. Salome
Meditation, First Symphony	Widor
Tempo di Gavotta	Händel
Pedal Rondo (new)	Plant
Largo, New World Symphony	Dvorák
Pastorale in F	Lemmens
Funeral March, Die Götterdämmerung	Wagner
Toccata in E minor	Tombelle
Carillons de Dunkerque	Carter
Grand Chorus in March Form	Guilmant

(Dedicated to Mr. Carl.)

THIRD RECITAL, OCTOBER 12, 1901.

Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach
Andante Pastorale (new)	Richmond
Rigaudon	Lulli
Choral with Variations	Merkel
Barcarolle	Lemare
Allegro Appassionata, Sonata V.	Guilmant
Chanson Pastorale (new)	Higgs
Toccata in E minor	Callaerts
Etude for the pedals alone	Bricqueville
Marche Heroique de Jeanne d'Arc	Dubois

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James Hall, Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall, Oratorio, Crystal Palace, Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World
ADVICE GRATIS.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Sole Manager, Room 95 Carnegie Hall, New York.

American School of Opera
Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary. WINTER SEASON NOW OPEN.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

Berlin Musical Life.

Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.

BERLIN, September 22, 1901.

"WHEN I read what the New York critics say of their troubles and worries and their decision to enter a convent because of a few additional recital announcements I merely sigh and congratulate them, for here in Berlin we have about 500 musical events a season, not counting light opera or operette, which makes the New York season a bagatelle." This was said to me a few days ago by a well-known Berlin musical personality who did not know that I had in my possession at the time a rescript or copy of the engagements booked up to September 17 by the Hermann Wolff Music Direction. And this rescript shows that the Wolff Bureau alone will give nearly 500 concerts in Berlin this season.

In addition to the concerts given by Wolff there are the other symphony concerts—Richard Strauss and Weingartner and innumerable recitals, making the total concerts from October 1 for six months ensuing about 650 in the city of Berlin.

But Berlin also has opera for about thirty-seven weeks, every evening, and then, at Kroll's, light opera, and therefore we can well conclude that 1,000 musical events take place in this Kaiser city during the season, considering the concerts, recitals, operas and light operas combined.

What have we in New York? We average about fifty opera performances a season here and our light opera does not figure, because it has degenerated into farce and farce comedy. Strauss, Millöcker, Genée, Offenbach and Lecocq are unknown to the present generation, which is regaled with "horseplay," called comic opera. Comic opera, otherwise "opera comique," is an old form of opera, in which the foremost minds coped with one another for the production of the best models of a new form. In our easy-going, indifferent New York we debauch it by giving horseplay and introducing low comedians, not because they can sing, but because they can slip down a greased pole or roll in a bag or fall down over a ladder with

List of Dates and Events Booked by the Concert Direction Hermann Wolff, Berlin, as Early as Sept. 15.

OCTOBER, 1901.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. D	Prill Quartett	Valerie Pohl, V.	M. Cunningham, G., I	Pop. Concert
2. M	Karl Kämpf, Comp.	Arthur Friedheim, K.	Jacques Weintraub, V.
3. D	Clara Haessler, Ges.			Pop. Concert
4. F	Ella Herrmann, G.
5. S	Hertha Pfeil-Schneider, G. / Carl Barleben, Viol.	Gottfr. Galston, K. m. Orch., I.	Maria Krebs, G.
6. S	C. Nürnberg, Schül.-A.
7. M	Wald. Lütschg, Klav.	Ernest Schelling, K. m. O., I.	Marie van Beekum, G.
8. D		Ruth Harlfinger, G. / Elvira Schmuckler, V.	Alwine Kelch, G. / Ludwig Feuerlein, G.
9. M	Albert Geloso, V. / J. V. da Motta, K.	Tilly Koenen, G., I.	M. Cunningham, G., II
10. D	Max Salzwedel, V.	Anna Langenhan-Hirzel, m. O.	Rich. Koennecke, G.
11. F	Aug. Schmid-Lindner, K.	Henri Marteau, V. m. O., I.	Margarethe Petersen, G.
12. S	Ida Ekman, G., I.	E. R. Blanchet, K. m. O., I.
13. S	Alice Berend, Rec.			I. Philh. Concert
14. M	Emma Gerok, G.
15. D	Selma Thomas, G.	Fred. Lamond, K., I.	Thea Dora Reicher, G.
16. M	A. van Eweyk, G., I.	Leop. Godowsky, K., I.	M. Blanck-Peters, G.
17. D	A. Geloso, V. / J. V. da Motta, K.	Hugo Kann, Comp. m. O.	Robert Hausmann / Robert Kahn
18. F	Julia Culp, G.	Ernest Schelling, K., II
19. S	Hedwig Hartmann, G.	H. Marteau, V. m. O., II	Streichorch. Berl. Tonk., I
20. S	Martin M. Leeser, G.		Martha Gentz-Malte, G.	Philh. Chorus, I
21. M	J. von Prangen, G. / Erna Schulz, V.		August Gentz, V., I
22. D	Emile R. Blanchet, K., II	Eva Lessmann, G.
23. M	Steffi Kiegerl-Hildemar, G.	Anton van Rooy, G.
24. D	Johanna Granzow, G.	Wilh. Ammermann, Dir. m. O.	Joachim Quartett, I
25. F	Richard Buhlig, K., I.	Anna Langenhan-Hirzel, II
26. S	Gerhardt und Witek, I.	Alma Stenzel, K. m. O., I.
27. S	A. van Eweyk, G., II		Karl-Mayer, G., I	II. Philh. Concert
28. M	Franz Stolzenfels, G.
29. D	Gottfr. Galston, K., II.	M. and F. H. v. Dulong, G.
30. M	Helene Ferchland, V.	Leop. Godowsky, K., II	Schumann, Halir, Dechert, I
31. D	E. R. Blanchet, K., III	Frida Quehl, V. m. O., I

NOVEMBER, 1901.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. F	Agnes Leydhecker, G.	Fred. Lamond, K., II	Kattow. Singacademie, I
2. S	Etelka Freund, K., I.	Carl Halir, V. m. O.	Jeanne Golz, G. / Hjalmar Arlberg, G.
Reform Fest	Marie Geselschap (Matinée)
3. S	Verein f. Volksunterhalt.	Dr. Rob. F. Mannreich, G., I.	Kattowitzer Singac., II	Stern'scher Verein, I
4. M	Ernst Lochbrunner, K.	Hansi Delisle, G.	Marie Spies, G.
5. D	Hollaender Quartett, I.	R. von Zur-Muehlen, I.
6. M	Trio Chaigneau	Thea von Redwitz, G.	Eugen Brieger, G.
7. D	Saenger-Sethe und Reisenauer, I.	Alexandrine Zanolli, V. m. O.	Joachim Quartett, II	Lehrergesang Verein, I
8. F	Rich. Buhlig, K., II.	Alma Stencel, K., II		Arb.-Wohlfahrts-Einr., m. O.
9. S	Ida Reiter-Reich, K.	Arrigo Serato, V. m. O.	Dr. Fel. Kraus, G., I
10. S			Alphonse Mustel, Harm.	III. Philh. Concert
11. M
12. D	Minna Weidele, G. / Alfred Kastner, Harfe	Fred. Lamond, K., III	Zajic-Grünfeld, I
13. M	Bruno, Fink, Schrattenholz, I.	Therese Behr, G., I
14. D	Saenger-Sethe und Reisenauer, II.	Maurice Kaufmann, V. m. O.
15. F	Marie Luise Ritter, K.		F. della Sudda, K.
16. S	Etelka Freund, K., II	M. P. Marsick, V. m. O., I	Anna Stephan, G., I
17. S	Rich. Kursch (Matinée)	A. Schnabel, m. O. (Matinée)	Karl-Mayer, G., II
18. M	Vita Gerhardt, K.	Caecilia Melodia, I
19. D	Ida Ekman, G., II	Fred. Lamond, K., IV
Busstag
20. M
21. D	Saenger-Sethe und Reisenauer, III.	Vict. Staub, K. m. O.	Joachim Quartett, III
22. F	Arthur Schnabel, K.	Frida Quehl, V. m. O., II	Marthe Chassang, G., I
23. S	Martha Schley, G.	Leop. Godowsky, K., III	Zudie Harris, K. m. O., I
Todtenfest
24. S				IV. Philh. Concert
25. M	Henriette Goos, G.
26. D	Bernhard Dessau, V.	Böhm. Quartett, I
27. M	Heinr. Scheden, G.	Gertrude Peppercorn, K.
26. D	H. Marteau Quartett, I	Arthur de Greef, K. m. O., I
29. F	Hedwig Jacob Anspach, G. / Marie Burnitz, V.	Dr. Ludw. Wüllner, G., I	Jean ten Have, V. m. O., I
30. S	Gerhardt und Witek, II	Joseph Debroux, V. m. O., I more noise than a Bowery actor. Our audiences complacently accept such rot as comic opera and the migratory reputation of a horseplay actor carries the whole work with his antics. In Berlin comic opera is a serious matter, as it should be. It must consequently be added to the repertory toward the building up of the 1,000 performances during the season.

Of course, Mr. Wolff's preliminary list will prove convincing, although it is hardly necessary to produce statistics, except to illustrate distribution. His Philharmonic concerts at the Philharmonie are the well-known Nikisch concerts with which tours are made annually all over Europe. Nikisch is now one of the leading leaders, to use a euphemism. Mottl, Muck, Mahler, Zumpe, Strauss, Weingartner and one or two others represent the advanced field of orchestral directing. Emil Paur ranks with these men as one of the elect; probably no conductor outside of Germany enjoys in Germany such a place, such renown as does Emil Paur. There was a report here that he was coming to the opera house here, but that was premature, to say the least.

The many concerts announced for Berlin indicate a tremendous outlay of energy, particularly when we reflect that no tickets are sold for most of them. They are débutant concerts, the débutant paying for all the outlay; for what? For Berlin newspaper notices. And what is the value of Berlin critical comment? It is worth a great deal as a musical investment on a professional basis; worth much in Germany and in other parts of Europe and with us in America also. If a dilapidated vocal organ like Lilli Lehmann's, which is never heard in Berlin now except as an apology for an approaching New York season—if such an organ can attract large American audiences simply because it has its origin in Berlin then Berlin is a "go" and anybody who wishes to figure largely in New South Wales, Tasmania, Cape Colony, New York and London should first sing or play in Berlin for preliminary notice.

I said that no tickets are sold for the débutant concerts, but they are offered for sale and friends of the young people who play and sing to Berlin audiences for the purpose of passing over their heads to other lands—chiefly the United States and Jersey—are the purchasers. It costs about $250 to give such a Berlin perspective performance, during which the performer has the stars and stripes in his or her mind. (No animadversion on Professor Sousa, who is a big card here.) After the performance the idiot—syncrasy becomes more apparent and the parents ask themselves Schumann's "Warum?" "Why did I did it?" as Weber & Fields would articulate. And then they never solve it.

However, for European purposes the Berlin début has a commercial value and when we estimate commercial values here it must be done on a European basis. To receive 100 marks—$25 to call it even—represents a respectable fee. Few artists draw large audiences. Eugen d'Albert averages 4,000 marks a performance here, and that is called marvelous, and so it is. There are few pianists who

DECEMBER, 1901.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. S.
2. M.	Maurina, Svédrofsky, Smith, I.		Marthe Chassang, G., II.
3. D.	Markees und Hegner, I.	Therese Behr, G., II.
4. M.	Gustav Friedrich, G.	M. P. Marsick, V., II.	Schumann, Halir, Dechert, II.
5. D.	H. Marteau Quartett, II.	R. von Zur-Muehlen, II.	Fanny Opfer, G. Werner Düwell, 'Cello.
6. F.	Jean ten Have, V., II.	Mary L. Sherratt, K. m. O., I.
7. S.	Joseph Debroux, V., II.	Arthur de Greef, K. m. O., II.	Helene Günter, G.
8. S.		Berl. Liedertafel.
9. M.	Felix Lederer-Prina, G.
10. D.	Ida Suske, K.	Leop. Godowsky, K., IV.	Marthe Chassang, G., III.	V. Philh. Concert.
11. M.	Jos. Debroux Quartett.	S. Nicklass-Kempner, G., I.	Paula Meyer, G.
12. D.	Wald. Lütschg, K., II.	Fr. Grützmacher, 'Cello m. O.	Dr. Fel. Kraus, G., II.
13. F.	Maurice Kaufmann, V.	Cath. Hennig-Zimdars, G.	Helene Berard, G.
14. S.	Marie Fromm-Kirby, K.	Marie Berg, G.	Dr. G. Quedenfeldt, G., I.
15. S.
16. M.	Mary L. Sherratt, K., II.	Else Widen, G.	Georg Wille, 'Cello m. O.
17. D.	Maurina, Svédr., Smith, II.	Gastone Bernheimer, K.	Zudie Harris, K., II.
18. M.	Hans Pfitzner, Comp.	Ernesto Drangosch, K.
19. D.	Lina Goldenberg, Sopr. Bertha Weiler, Alt.	Oliveira, V. m. O.
20. F.
21. S.		Pierre Sechiari, V. m. O.
22. S.
23. M.
24. D.
Weihn.
25. M.
II. Feiert.
26. D.
27. F.
28. S.	Hedwig Kirsch, K.	Carl Heinzen, V. m. O.	Joachim Quartett, IV.
29. S.		Eugen Gura, G.
30. M.	Elisab. Schenk, G.	Dr. Ludw. Wüllner, G., II.
Sylvester.
31. D.

JANUAR, 1902.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. M.
2. D.
3. F.
4. S.	Paul Lutzenko, K.	Arthur Hartmann, V. m. O., I.
5. S.	O. Lamborg, I.
6. M.	Gisela Springer.	Böhm. Streichquartett, II.	Speed, K., Such, 'Cello.	Stern'scher-Verein, II.
7. D.	Maria Avani, K., I.	Max Pauer, K., I.
8. M.	Isabelle Mercier, G.		Zajic-Grünfeld, II.
9. D.	Hollaender Quart., II.	Edouard Risler, K. m. O., I.	Anna Stephan, G., II.
10. F.	Else Kutzki, K.	Lula Mysz-Gmeiner, G.	Streichorch. Berl. Tonk., II.
11. S.	D. F. Tovey, K., I.	Emile Sauret, V. m. O.	Dr. R. F. Mannreich, G., II.
12. S.		Tilly Koenen, G., II.
13. M.	Adolf Walnöfer, G.
14. D.	B. Hubermann, V., I.	Ferruccio Busoni, K., I.		Philh. Chorus, II.
15. M.	Bruno, Fink, Schrattenholz, I.	Ed. Risler, K., II.	Otto Hegner, K.
16. D.	Arthur Hartmann, V., II.	Gisella Grosz, K. m. O., I.	Joachim Quart., V.
17. F.	D. F. Tovey, K., II.	Max Pauer, K., II.	Hedwig Schweicker, G. m. O. Johannes Miersch, V.
18. S.	Gerhardt und Witek, III.	Corinne Coryn, V. m. O.
19. S.
20. M.	Greta Antis, K.
21. D.	B. Hubermann, V., II.	Böhm. Streichquart., III.	Gabriele Wietrowetz, V.	IV. Philh. Concert.
22. M.	Kara Chattelyn, K., I.	Ed. Risler, K., III.	Schumann, Halir, Dechert, III.
23. D.	D. F. Tovey, K., III.		Dr. Fel. Kraus, G., III.
24. F.	Wilma Norman-Neruda, V. Prof. F. Gernsheim, K., I.	Ferruccio Busoni, K., II.
25. S.	P. V. Blumenbach, G.	Max Pauer, K., III.	Hella Sauer, G.
26. S.	O. Lamborg, II.
Kaiser's Geb.
27. M.	O. Lamborg, III.
28. D.	D. F. Tovey, K., IV.	Therese Behr, G., III.	Maly von Trützschler, G.
29. M.	Kara Chattelyn, K., II.	S. Niklass-Kempner, G., II.	F. Scherres-Friedenthal, K.
30. D.	Maria Avani, K., II.
31. F.		Ferruccio Busoni, K., III.

can anywhere at any time draw $1,000 per ("per" is the abbreviation of "per concert," &c.).

There is no opportunity in America for such a concert agency as Hermann Wolff's in Berlin, because in our beloved anarchistic land people sing and play for money and not as a result of paying money. Musical papers cannot exist in countries where artists must pay to be heard; after they pay to be heard there is no money left to subscribe for a musical paper. The economic principle at the bottom of this is readily discernible here after a prolonged sojourn. Values are gauged here in accordance with precedent, and that dictates a very limited tribute to music, because the people have been educated to consider music as protected by the State. What they pay here to listen to an artist is looked upon as an additional tax. We consider it a privilege we are happy to find; as a presentation from European art sources, although it may be a pure or impure money making scheme seems to inspire us. To make it short, we are naïve; we are children. We go forward on the basis that the candy costs nothing; and children must have candy. Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Gould, Mr. Vanderbilt (we call the type Mr.), Mr. Astor—these few men have more money than all the potentates and their retainers put together and the American income represents more per annum than the cost of all royal establishments in a bunch. To go to a country where such Arabian Nights shine in the day and not to demand money would seem perilous to commercial judgment, and hence the Berlin début is made to impress the American reader. When it is not published in this paper the début does not become known to the world, because the world does not read Berlin papers, granting that they do pay attention to débutants.

Most of the débutants are never heard of again after their first appearance, which is due to the fact that they do not expect it. Rosenthal was heard after his début because he was and I presume continues to remain Rosenthal, but everyone cannot be a Rosenthal. When Rosenthals appear they do not require a début and I really believe that Rosenthal never had one. He did not need it. If he goes to America he can make his début without paying for it.

The Wolff Bureau does an immense business in Europe; it is not dependent upon any American events and pays very little attention to American engagements. It is probable that no less than 1,000 concerts pass through the Wolff régime each season.

BLUMENBERG.

FEBRUAR, 1902.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. S.	J. V. da Motta, K., I.	Gisella Grosz, K., II.	B. Hubermann, V. m. O., III.
2. S.				VII. Philh. Concert.
3. M.
4. D.	Markees und Hegner, II.	Alice Schwabe, K.	Martha Gentz-Malte, G. Aug. Gentz, V., II.
5. M.	Kara Chattelyn, K., III.	R. von Zur-Muehlen, III.	Desider Szántó, K.
6. D.	Gustav Loeser, K.		Joachim Quart., VI.
7. F.	Hertha Dehmlow, G.	Dr. Ludw. Wüllner, III.	Ilona Eibenschütz, K. m. O., I.
8. S.	Amanda Hunger, G.	Johann Kruse, V. m. O.
9. S.	Kirchdorffer und Wietrow. (Matinée), 12th yr.		Joh. Kruse Quartett.
10. M.	Gisella Grosz, K., III.
Fastnacht.
11. D.	Frieda Hallwach-Zerny, G.	Raoul Pugno, K., I.
Ascher Mittwoch.
12. M.	Kara Chattelyn, K., IV.		Dr. G. Quedenfeldt, G., II.
13. D.	Dessau und Schnabel.	Conrad Ansorge, K., I.
14. F.	Ed. Hertz, K., I.		Alexander Heinemann.
15. S.	J. V. da Motta, K., II.	Raoul Pugno, K., II.
16. S.				VIII. Philh. Concert.
17. M.
18. D.	Luise Pinoff, G.	Eug. d'Albert, K., I.	Ilona Eibenschütz, K., II.
19. M.	Alfred Reisenauer, K., I.
20. D.	Aug. Goetz-Lehmann, K.	R. B. Platt, K. m. O., I.
21. F.	Eugen d Albert und Frau.	Clotilde Kleeberg, K., I.
22. S.	Alfred Smolian, G., I.	Eug. d'Albert, K. II.
23. S.
24. M.
25. D.	Edm. Hertz, K., II.	Böhm. Streichquart., IV.	Teresa Carreño, K.
26. M.	Alfr. Reisenauer, K., II.	Mark Hambourg, K., I.
27. D.	Helene Staegemann, G., I.	Conrad Ansorge, K. II.		Lehrergesang Verein, II.
28. F.	W. Norman-Neruda, V. Prof. F. Gernsheim, K., II.	Dr. Ludw. Wüllner, IV.		Eugen Gura, I.

MÄRZ, 1902.

	Saal Bechstein.	Saal Beethoven.	Singacademie.	Philharmonie.
1. S.	Hollaender Quart., III.	Clotilde Kleeberg, K., II.
2. S.				IX. Philh. Concert.
3. M.
4. D.	Edm. Hertz, K., III.		Zajic-Grünfeld, III.
5. M.	Alfr. Reisenauer, K., III.	Berl. Lehr. Ges. Verein.
6. D.	Alfr. Smolian, G., II.	Bruno Hinze-Reinhold, K.	Joachim Quart., VII.
7. F.	R. B. Platt, K., II.
8. S.	Stefan Thomán, K.
9. S.		Caecilia Melodia, II.		Philh. Chorus, III.
10. M.	Emily Müller, G.
11. D.	Aug. Hensel, G.	Conr. Ansorge, K., III.	Streich. Berl. Tonk., III.
12. M.	Bruno, Fink, Schrattenh., III.	Mark Hambourg, K., II.	Schumann, Halir, Dechert, IV.
13. D.	Th. Slottko und W. Willecke.
14. F.	Alfr. Reisenauer, K., IV.
15. S.	Rudolf Braun, Comp.	R. von Zur-Muehlen, IV.
16. S.				X. Philh. Concert.
17. M.
18. D.
19. M.	Helene Staegemann, G., II.		Joachim Quart., VIII.
20. D.
21. F.		Tilly Koenen, G., III.
22. S.
Palmsonnt.
23. S.				Stern'scher Ges. Verein, III.
24. M.
25. D.		Dr. Ludw. Wüllner.
26. M.
Grün-Don.				Eugen Gura, II.
27. D.
Charfreitag.
28. F.
29. S.
Osterfest.
30. S.
31. M.

Explanation of the Tables.

1. The management of Hermann Wolff, Berlin, controls four concert halls, enumerated at the top of the columns. The concerts and recitals take place in those halls.

2. Comp. stands for composer.

3. Ges. or G. stands for vocal or song recital.

4. Viol or V. stands for violin.

5. K. stands for Klavier, otherwise piano; Orch. or m. O. with orchestral addition. Orch. alone stands for orchestra.

6. The Arabic numerals indicate the number of the series of concerts—thus, I. or III. Philharmonic, &c., or Joachim Quart. III. or IV.

7. Alt stands for contralto.

WEBER'S BAND AT BUFFALO.

THE great success of Weber's Band at the Buffalo Exposition was generally acknowledged. It was conceded by impartial critics to be equal to the best that had been heard at the Pan-American. The press notices were unanimous in its praise and these encomiums came with the better grace, for they were entirely unsolicited:

Weber's Cincinnati Band, which will complete its engagement at the Pan-American this week, has won decided favor with visitors at the Exposition during its stay in Buffalo. Mr. Weber has hosts of admirers in Cincinnati who claim that his is the most perfect concert band in the country. Pan-Americans may not be willing to make or agree to so sweeping an assertion, but they will all agree that Weber's Cincinnati is certainly one of the best bands in the country. This band was unknown, except by reputation, in Buffalo, until it came here the middle of the month. But its work has won cordial approval on all sides. The band is well balanced and very complete. The players seem to have been selected with care and good judgment, and there is a precision of individual work which secures a splendid ensemble. The concerts given by the band in the Temple of Music have been very attractive, the audiences showing such pleasure in each number that the programs have been nearly doubled each time by the demands for encores. The programs have covered many styles, and have been selected from a wide range of composers, showing a very large repertory, and a desire to please many people. Mr. Weber and his band have received well deserved favor, and their success during their Buffalo engagement is a satisfaction and a pleasure to record.—Buffalo Evening News, September 27.

Weber's Cincinnati Band and Brooke's Chicago Marine Band have been the two bands of the past week that entertained and delighted the crowds at the Pan-American. Mr. Weber's Cincinnati Band has achieved a decided success for its first engagement in Buffalo. The band is an excellent one, being composed of players who are individually fine performers, and whose ensemble work is far above the work of the average band. Cincinnati is very proud of the Weber Band and also very appreciative of it, giving it an abundance of financial support as well as warm praise.

But the growing reputation of the organization has made outside engagements imperative, and wherever the band has played it has received decided commendation.

John Weber himself is a fine clarinetist. He is also a great student and ambitious to have and to know all the best music of the world. He has a musical library of 6,000 selections, to which he is constantly adding. In the News of last Friday the success and popularity of the band was spoken of and also the pleasure which the audiences evinced at its performances. Nearly every program was doubled, encores being demanded for nine-tenths of the selections. Mr. Weber and his band will leave Buffalo after making many friends, many admirers and securing many compliments.—Buffalo Evening News, September 29.

The public has shown that it approves of Weber's Military Band from Cincinnati by according it successive triumphs, which culminated last night at the concert in the Plaza band stand.

Last night the great feature was the tone picture, "The Civil War," arranged by Moses Tobani and dedicated to the Grand Army of the Republic.

There was a large audience, even though the night was cool, and at the end of the meeting great enthusiasm was displayed.

In Weber's Band are a number of eminent soloists, some of them secured by Director John C. Weber for this Exposition season. Among them are William Kopp, Joseph Sochker and Fred. Weiss, cornetists; Carl Kohlman, euphonium player; Howard Kopp, xylophone expert, and Louis Brand, the composer of the famous "Enquirer March," and the new furore, "The Blue and White."

Before Mr. Weber left Cincinnati, leading citizens of the place presented him with two medals, one being the handsomest and most expensive ever given a bandmaster.

To-night in the Temple of Music the band will render a number which military bands rarely attempt. It will be Tschaikowsky's "1812," being a depiction of Napoleon's fateful invasion of Russia. It is one of the best things ever written by the renowned composer.—Buffalo Courier, September 27.

It is with much regret that Exposition-goers have listened to the last of the concerts given at the Pan-American by the John C. Weber Military Band of Cincinnati. The organization has made a distinctly favorable impression, and will always be welcomed on tour. With a fine, mellow tone quality, excellent precision and nice shading, the band shows in its interpretations the musical intelligence and feeling of its conductor. Mr. Weber has given programs of good music in a thoroughly enjoyable manner, and his departure with the band will be heartily regretted.—Buffalo Express, September 29.

Press and public alike have showered praises upon John C. Weber's Military Band, of this city, which has just concluded an engagement at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, N. Y.

The band won decided favor with the visitors at the Exposition, and many of them coincided with the views of a host of Mr. Weber's friends in this city—that his is the best band in the country.

The band was unknown in Buffalo, except by reputation, until it reached that city during the middle of the month. From that time its work met with approval on all sides.

The concerts given in the Temple of Music were attended by throngs of persons. Musical connoisseurs and one and all declared the music to have given complete satisfaction, the programs having been doubled on many occasions by the encores. The programs were selected from a wide range of compositions, showing the desires of Director Weber to please his audience. One number familiar to citizens of this city, which caught on immensely at the Pan-American, was the famous "Enquirer March." The band completed its labors at the Pan-American with the close of the week, and will arrive in this city this morning.—Cincinnati Enquirer, September 30.

The John C. Weber Military Band, of this city, has made a big hit at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo. The papers all speak of its playing in the highest terms. On last Tuesday night it performed a descriptive piece called "The Civil War," which aroused such enthusiasm that, by request, Mr. Weber played it again on Friday night. Next week the Weber Band will play in the Temple of Music, which has now become historic because the lamented President McKinley was shot there. The Exposition officials are greatly pleased with the Weber Band, which, they say, has not been surpassed by any military band that has been heard at the big show.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

John C. Weber's Military Band returned yesterday from Buffalo, N. Y., where, at the Pan-American Exposition, it created a perfect furore. The band played every day of its engagement, afternoon and evening, and hundreds of thousands were delighted with its music. There was heard but one voice of praise regarding the performances. All the newspapers devoted much space to the concerts of Weber's Band, and were unanimous in the conviction that it is the banner band of the United States, at least so far as they were heard in Buffalo. Mr. Weber owes much of his success to the excellent soloists he had in his band.—Cincinnati Volksblatt, October 1, 1901.

WHITNEY TEW.—Whitney Tew, the English basso, who comes to this country for a concert tour during the months of November, December and January, is to arrive here this week from Europe on the steamer Barbarossa. Mr. Tew is to sing in the principal "Messiah" performances that are to be given in the East and Middle West, and also in song recitals in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Toronto, Montreal and other cities.

BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER RECITALS IN NEW YORK.—Henry Wolfsohn announces that he has arranged for Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler to give two piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall, the first of which will take place on Saturday afternoon, November 16, and the second Wednesday afternoon, the 19th.

Zeldenrust.

A WELL-KNOWN critic of things musical in general and pianism in particular extols Zeldenrust, the Dutch pianist, both as artist and man. He heard him play last year in Paris and met him socially as well. According to this authority, Zeldenrust's playing unites virility and power with extreme delicacy; his tonal capacity is extraordinary in its range and variety of modulation, yet its roundness is always preserved and in the most forte passages he never pounds. The man's strong individuality is displayed in his interpretation, which is at the same time always scholarly and logical. As a man he is unassuming, earnest, sincere and cultured. He is a linguist, speaking German, French and English as fluently as his mother tongue, Dutch. He can talk with intelligence on a broad range of subjects, and has a lively interest in many things besides his music, which he regards with deep reverence and absorbing devotion.

Adelaide Griggs at the Worcester Festival.

BELOW we give some press notices of the Boston contralto, whose fine singing at Worcester was the subject of so much favorable comment:

Miss Griggs is the only festival débutante this season. She is a Boston woman. Her voice is large, her phrasing broad and smooth and she sings with a style which will make her one of the desirable contraltos of the country. Her magnetic presence, too, evidently is much in her favor, for this afternoon's reception was an enthusiastic one, and the artist was recalled three times.—Boston Herald.

Interest centred in Miss Adelaide Griggs' singing, and she received a succession of plaudits, constituting no small ovation, being forced to bow her acknowledgments again and again. She has a contralto voice of much power, especially noticeable in her chest tones, which she produces admirably, and the voice flowed smoothly.—Worcester Spy.

Miss Adelaide Griggs, of the Park Street Church, Boston, sang her way into the hearts of the audience, and was generously rewarded with applause. Miss Griggs has a voice of fine quality, and sang the beautiful song with a fine appreciation of its mood.—H. C. Krehbiel, New York Tribune.

Miss Adelaide Griggs, in Berlioz's rarely heard setting of Victor Hugo's poem, "La Captive," showed a fine contralto voice which carries well. She sang musically and with an intelligent understanding of the text. She was recalled three times.—Boston Transcript.

Miss Griggs gave an interpretation of the beautiful Berlioz aria that was full of repose and well under control. Her voice is abundant and of a smooth and agreeable quality, and the audience hung with breathless attention upon the singing, and at the close gave hearty applause. Part of this interest may have been due to the fact that Miss Griggs sang the aria in English with a distinct enunciation.—Worcester Gazette.

Miss Adelaide Griggs made a very successful appearance. Her voice is large and rich in quality, and she uses it with artistic discretion.—New York Times.

HAROLD BAUER AND THE PHILHARMONIC.—Harold Bauer, the pianist, has just been engaged by the New York Philharmonic Society to appear as soloist at their concerts on February 14 and 15 next.

WANTED—Male pianist and teacher, good soloist, for Southern female seminary, one or two months, $40 per week; place may be permanent. Address ATLANTA, MUSICAL COURIER office.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK,

Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN

Distinguished American Pianist.

Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS.

WEBB GARDNER

SOPRANO.

FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.

ORATORIO, CONCERT. RECITAL.

Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B.

VOIGT

SOPRANO.

Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.

Address

RICHARD BYRON

Manager.

301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK.

M. VITTORIO CARPI,

Vocal Instruction.

ITALIAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH AND SPANISH.

210 WEST 59th STREET, opposite Park, NEW YORK.

Elizabeth

Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals

Direction
Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1124.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blauchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . . .	£1 5s.	Austria, ...	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.
PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.
Published Every Saturday During the Year.
GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.
For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

MUSIC as a topic for discussion has been cut off from this year's convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs in session in Buffalo. If the good club sisters would eliminate about forty-three other subjects they would doubtless return to their homes in a happier and more restful state of mind.

FROM the enthusiastic cablegrams John Philip Sousa is the musical idol of the hour in London. The British critics have capitulated and now pronounce Sousa's American band one of remarkable excellence and superiority, and the comparisons which they draw are decidedly in favor of the graceful and courteous American and his musicians. As has previously been stated by us, Sousa went abroad this time to fill a long engagement at the Glasgow Exposition. It seems needless to add that he will be honored with the most cordial of Scottish welcomes.

NO one will be likely to find fault with the patriotism of Capt. Richard Leary, commander of the receiving ship Richmond, now stationed at League Island Navy Yard. Several weeks ago the captain issued an order to the effect that all sailors on board the Richmond must be able to sing all the verses of "The Star Spangled Banner" from memory by October 1. Some of the jackies regarded this as a joke and did not memorize the immortal stanzas by Francis Scott Key. When called to go through the new musical drill many of the sailors failed and as a punishment were not permitted to go ashore. No shore leave will be granted the delinquents until they go before the ship's chaplain and sing or recite from memory the national anthem.

THE London Daily News is somewhat in error over the residence of two great pianists. In its weekly musical column it referred to the annual exodus of European musicians to America and then added these lines: "Among the pianists going over from Europe are Paderewski, Harold Bauer, Josef Hofmann, Gabrilowitsch, Zeldenrust, Burmeister, Bloomfield-Zeisler and Gertrude von Betz, of Leipsic."

Mme. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler lives in Chicago, and that has been her home since she was two years old. Richard Burmeister lives in New York, and before making his home in this city he resided in Baltimore. Last week we announced that Gabrilowitsch would not revisit the United States until next season, a Russian tour preventing him from coming this winter.

ALL of the foreign opera stars are with one accord glad to be back in this country. One by one as they step off the gangplank of the European steamers declare they are so happy to be in America one more, where the streets, by the way, for the operatic stars are paved with gold. After witnessing life in Egypt and the Far East Madame Calvé says she returns to us a better Christian than ever, and thus she refutes all those weird tales about harems, pink eyed camels on the Nile, Theosophy and Buddhism. The Grau Company opened in Albany last Monday night and from Albany will go to Canada. Returning to the United States the tour will be resumed and extended until December 22, which is the date announced for the opening of the New York season at the Metropolitan Opera House. Naturally these artists are glad to be in this generous country, where dollars are easier to earn than francs and marks in the Old Country.

HERE is one tribute from Robert Schumann to Mendelssohn:

"Mendelssohn is a man to whom I look up as to some lofty mountain. He is a true divinity, and no day passes in which he does not utter at least two ideas worthy to be graven on gold."

FIRMLY and politely the uniformed guards on duty at the Music Temple at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, decline to show visitors the spot where our beloved President was shot. Since the national tragedy the Music Temple is the building of all buildings that has attracted the greatest crowds. There is no moment in the day or evening when crowds are not besieging the entrances to the now famous structure. Those who have only a day or two in which to see the Exposition naturally get a little impatient if access to the Temple is not immediately granted. The Music Temple, like all buildings in the Exposition proper, is free to the public. The crowds must wait their turn to enter, and the time usually allowed for this is between numbers. When the exercises happen to be more than usually interesting few seem to desire leaving until the entire program is completed. When few exits are made correspondingly few are admitted, and then your typical American does what is expected of him or her—grumbles and denounces the management. Only 50 cents for admission to everything on the Exposition grounds outside of the Midway, and yet human nature hourly, daily, gives illustrations of petty meanness and inconsistency.

GUARDING A SECRET SPOT.

In our Western New York Department readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER will find a good cut of the exterior of the Music Temple. The design is a graceful treatment of the Spanish Renaissance. For that matter the architectural scheme of the Pan-American is all after Spanish models, as transplanted to the Western Hemisphere. There is no monotony, and best of all none of those feeble attempts at Grecian and Roman models tried at other expositions. The beauty of the Chicago World's Fair was preserved by painting those mammoth buildings white. Making it "A White City" was a happy idea. The imagination could have pictured nothing more vulgar, or in worse taste, if the great buildings at the Chicago World's Fair had been painted in colors. While the buildings at the Pan-American are not small they are, of course, insignificant when compared to those huge Chicago structures. Being smaller and more varied in architectural design the Pan-American buildings look extremely beautiful painted in colors. All is warm and harmonious, and particularly the Music Temple is a building very inspiring to the artistic conception and taste.

Myriads upon myriads of musical works have been played and sung at the Temple, and there are still five weeks left for those who care to see one of the most artistic fairs ever held. While the guards at the Temple refuse to show visitors the spot where the fatal bullets were fired at the late President, the boys who sell programs in the building volunteer the information. But truly there is no reason why such idle curiosity should be satisfied for after all what does it matter now? The Buffalo police department, not wishing the secret spot in the floor chipped by relic hunters, probably issued the order to refuse to answer pointed inquiries. On the day the President was assassinated the chairs were all removed, and according to one daily newspaper 3,000 persons were in the building at the time. These were hoping to fall into the line formed to extend a greeting to the honored and distinguished guest. Twenty-five thousand people were outside of the Music Temple waiting to see the President when the reception was over. It seems miraculous that in all this vast throng of people within and without the building no one was crushed during the excitement following the shooting.

Buffalo was too stunned by the tragedy to do more than unite with the army of visitors in expressions of sympathy. Some patriotic Americans are talking of erecting a permanent Music Temple on the ground occupied by the temporary building. But no one in authority has been heard from, and most likely nothing will be done about it until the fair closes. The present site of the Music Temple is some distance from the heart of the city. Still a part of Delaware Park forms a very attractive feature of the Pan-American. The permanent art gallery, the gift of Mr. Albright, is in course of erection. This building is in the park, and such a building could have no finer companion than a music temple as a memorial to President William McKinley. Several cities are planning to put up monuments in memory of this grand man. In Chicago they are talking of an arch. In Atlanta about a granite pile, and in Canton, the home of the former President, the citizens are planning to build some permanent memorial. Surely Buffalo, the city where the beloved President was murdered, will do something to honor and perpetuate his memory.

SPARE THE SUPERLATIVES.

DOES it ever occur to a certain class of musical artists and their managers that the extravagant use of adjectives weakens the tributes about themselves and very frequently prejudices people previously favorably disposed toward them. To adequately describe the skill of an artist who is a genius the use of a qualifying adjective is not only permissible, but demanded in the advanced article, and most assuredly in the criticism. But even in commenting upon the attainments of a supreme artist it is foolish to pour out recklessly all the superlatives in the dictionary. The sages of ancient and modern times have declared that the wisest man is he who best governs himself, and the artist who truly inspires respect is the one who is not forever and eternally inviting attention to himself or herself. It is necessary, to be sure, and perfectly honorable and businesslike to advertise, as all legitimate enterprises are advertised. In the world of politics a man would soon be forgotten if he did not keep himself properly advertised before the public eye. Yet, here again there is danger if the advertising be overdone. Many a public man of high ideals has defeated the realization of his aspirations because the public refused to take him seriously.

It was one of the iron rules of the late Augustin Daly never to permit a woman in his company to be interviewed by a newspaper reporter. Again and again Ada Rehan refused to express an opinion on matters relating to her profession, and she is perhaps to-day the one star actress who never granted an interview. If there are any grand opera singers who are like her in this respect, the writer does not happen to recall them. Miss Rehan's manager refused ever to allow any fulsome statements to be made about his star, but then, Mr. Daly, a most admirable man, was an extremist in all his direction. Some of the worthiest and most sincerely noble and respectable members of the dramatic and musical professions have consented to be interviewed and their views and opinions have interested thousands in the community, and on occasions what they had to say proved of real public benefit. The artist who sings, plays or acts for money, as the lecturer and author who talks or writes for a consideration, does after all belong to the public, and there is an unwritten law that the public which pays the price is entitled to condemn or commend the deeds, trivial or great, committed by public men and women.

While these comments upon public men may seem a little removed from our subject, they do belong in a discussion like this. Public men—and musical artists belong in that category—should, indeed they must, ignore written or verbal criticisms upon their acts. Their dignity, if nothing more, demands it. When a public man's probity is assailed there are times when he would be justified in defending himself, but in anything reflecting upon his lack of taste, mental or moral deficiency or any lapse or mistake in social life, there is but one course for him—silence—and if he possesses the instincts of a gentleman he will remain silent, too. No man in the pulpit in our day has been more violently abused than the Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, and yet it was to this writer the good doctor once said: "I never reply to adverse criticisms about myself." The most lovable trait about the lamented President McKinley was his magnanimity. How sublime, serene and lofty were his instincts!

Music teachers, particularly those who give instruction in singing, should ponder well over the use they make of adjectives in talking of methods and the progress of their pupils. They should remember that modesty is the twin sister of honesty. Many well meaning and capable singing teachers sometimes appear insincere and inconsistent because they talk too much about themselves, and never seem quite happy unless they hear agreeable compliments. Moderation in speech and with the pen will do more in the end for a promising pupil and a good vocal method than all the superlatives in Webster and Worcester combined. There is a law of psychology well understood by superior, awakened minds, and that is, if you wish to succeed you must refrain from talking too freely about your undertaking and your work. Talking has been the death of many well laid plans and good intentions, while some of the happiest events were wholly impromptu. Thinking is a force, a powerful force, but if interrupted by talking our ideas with everyone who happens along, no results can come. The man or woman in the musical profession who is self-respecting and who hopes for permanent success must, it would seem, be reasonably modest and moderate in his or her speech as well. There have been great artists who were neither, but certainly the happiest pianists and singers are those who possess the saving sense of humor and the well balanced intellect, which ever saves a man from appearing ridiculous.

A NEW BOOK OF GOSSIP.

A NEW volume of reminiscences of Weimar has just been issued, and is more interesting than those of many earlier writers. The early works of this character are done in a hurry, and in most cases the writers, so soon after the death of those whom they mention, do not tell the truth and the whole truth. The latest of such reminiscences to appear is by Adelheid von Schorn, a lady of the Weimar aristocracy, under the title of "Two Generations." The writer had not only been in regular communication for years with Franz Liszt and his "ewige braut," the Princess Caroline Sagn Wittgenstein, but had the duty of sending to the Princess, then residing in Rome, all the news about her ci-devant betrothed, and about all the musical and spiritual life in Germany. She knew Peter Cornelius, Joachim Raff, Joseph Joachim, and had many opportunities to see the artists, as we may say, in dressing gown and slippers. This lady tells us, among other things, that the first performance of "Lohengrin" (August 28, 1849) would have taken place before a half empty house had not the Grand Duke bought a lot of tickets and distributed them. About the relations of Liszt and the Princess Wittgenstein, she says from her intimate knowledge of both parties that the marriage never took place, not so much because the Pope opposed it as because Liszt's interest in the matter was evidently decrescendo, and if the lady finally refused his proposal it was because she had seen this and concluded that nothing good could come of their union.

She has much to tell of the famous performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in 1872, having been present at the rehearsals. "Johanna Wagner, the niece of Richard, gave a deal of trouble. She could and could not do correctly the difficult parts (the alto solo and quartet of the last movement). Wagner called out one of the ladies of the chorus, Frl. Jenny Meyer, from Berlin, to support her. Wagner was raging mad." All of which, considering what we know about Johanna Wagner, is rather doubtful.

Frau von Schorn tells a charming little anecdote about Liszt and Rubinstein. They first played together four handed, then they played each alone. When Rubinstein was playing Liszt stood near him and observed his hands. When he ended Liszt said: "Dear Anton, tell me, pray, how you did that?" and struck some notes. Rubinstein stared, then fell at his feet and cried: "Master, do you ask me that?" He could not believe that there was anything in piano playing which the master did not know, but Liszt simply continued: "But I really do not know how you did this finger passage."

The Princess in 1873 wrote to Frau von Schorn about Liszt's relations with pretty women. "I am often so sad," she said, "when I think how misunderstood at last he will be. His triumphs will appear perhaps in later days as a Bacchanal orgy, because some Bacchantes were mixed up in them. But he never summoned them. He would have remained in his purely spiritual sphere if he had not been called out from it." The lady tells of the day when Liszt was made a Kammerherr by the Grand Duke. "A cousin, who also had the Golden Key, brought the news to my mother. He was very much disturbed. 'Such a thing was never known as that a man should be made a Kammerherr on account of his vices.' My mother replied: 'Have you all got it for virtue?'"

AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER.

THE new studying of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" at the Court Opera of Vienna has brought out an interesting letter from the composer to the famous basso Joseph Staudigl. The opera had been commenced in Vienna and some numbers from it were given at his farewell concert there in 1847. It was not, however, produced on the stage till March 9, 1849, at Berlin, eight weeks before the composer's death. He had always hoped to see the first performance take place at Vienna, where he had worked so long and had entered into some negotiations for that result. The letter which has never been published is as follows (Nicolai uses throughout the familiar du):

RESPECTED FRIEND—You were always kind to me, and relying on the continuance of this feeling I take the liberty of writing to you. I have completed my opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and would most dearly prefer to have it appear before the Vienna public. You will be the most God-like Falstaff that I can wish, but my old and still young patroness and friend, Madame Lutzer, would be a Frau Fluth such as I have dreamed of. I am here as Royal Capellmeister, engaged at the opera and the cathedral, and enter on my duties March 1. Till that time I could very well stage my new opera in Vienna. The matter is glorious. It alone would support the opera. The arrange ment is by Herr H. J. Mosenthal, of Vienna. I write by this post to Director Pokorny, and beg you—do your best for its acceptance. I believe I can say confidently that you will not repent it. What a real pleasure for me, if I, the banished and accursed by Balachino, could make a success in the Theater am Wein! Read Shakespeare through again; the last act in which spirits and elves appear gave me especial delight in composing. A comic romantic opera we have, I believe, not yet had on the stage. The personages to which my arrangement of the material are reduced, are

Sir John Falstaff	Bass.
Fluth	Basso-Buffo.
Reich	Bass.
Dr. Caius	Bass.
Fenton	First Tenor.
Sparlich	Tenor.
Fr. Fluth	First Soprano.
Anna	Soprano.
Fr. Reich	Alto.

Chorus and Ballets.

I commend myself to your friendship and this affair to your support. Remember me to your good wife and greet our friends. That Berlin cannot and will not compensate me for Vienna, I feel clearly. Good-by.

With esteem and friendship, Yours sincerely,

OTTO NICOLAI,
Leipziger Strasse, No. 89.

BERLIN, December 17, 1847.

THE programs of the Leipsic Gewandhaus concerts for 1901-1902 comprise symphonies by Schubert, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, Liszt, Bruckner, Draseke, Dvorák, Tschaikowsky, v. Hausegger, and lesser works by Bach, Händel, Gluck, Weber, Cherubini, Volkmann, Wagner, Strauss, Schillings, Krug, Kössler and Rachmaninoff. The choral works in preparation are: "Judas Maccabæus," Händel; "Ein deutsches Requiem," Brahms, and "Das Paradies und die Peri," Schumann. The opening concert takes place October 10.

'Cellist Gerardy Returns.

AFTER one of the most successful and extensive concert tours ever undertaken by an artist of distinction through Australia, New Zealand and Honolulu, Jean Gerardy, the celebrated Belgian 'cellist, has returned to this country. In all Mr. Gerardy gave forty-two concerts, eighteen of which were given in New Zealand within three weeks. His success was most flattering and he has arranged to return again next spring. His American tour, which is under the management of Henry Wolfsohn, opened in Indianapolis to-day, October 9. Then will follow appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston on October 19 and with the same distinguished organization in Cambridge on the 31st; Philadelphia on November 6, New York on the 9th, Providence on the 13th. Then with the Pittsburg Orchestra, in Pittsburg, on November 15 and 16; Cleveland on the 20th, New York Philharmonic Orchestra on December 6 and 7, and then Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Troy, Buffalo, Alton and St. Louis, with the Choral Symphony Society.

PAUL AND FRANZ LISTEMANN.—Paul and Franz Listemann, sons of the well-known violinist and teacher of Chicago, spent a pleasant summer, principally in the West, in Chicago, Wisconsin, &c., and return ready for their usual busy season. Paul Listemann, violinist, teaches at the Klingenfeld School, at the Misses Peck's school, Brooklyn; at the Grand Conservatory, New York, and has many private pupils. Franz Listemann, 'cellist, teaches at the Lachmund Conservatory and elsewhere, and last Monday night took part in the first faculty concert.

This latter young man shows friends the product of his literary genius in the shape of a five act drama, founded on a Russian subject, in which the Czar appears; he reads for them several thrilling passages, and states that a well-known manager has interested himself in it, so he has hopes of its being staged. Of superior early musical advantages there was in the Listemanns' case no lack, and this was later rounded off by several years' study in Europe, so that now they fill a large place in metropolitan music life.

OBITUARY.

Carl H. Lellmann, Jr.

WE regret to have to chronicle the sad death of Carl H. Lellmann, Jr., which occurred last Saturday at his late residence in this city. Mr. Lellmann, although he had only reached his thirty-sixth year, was a man of prominence in the legal profession and was the attorney for THE MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY until the end of last year, when he was obliged on account of his illness to give up his practice. Mr. Lellmann left for Europe last December in the hope of regaining his failing health, but unhappily he continued to decline. He returned home a few weeks ago. Carl H. Lellmann, Jr., was well-known to all the leading musicians here as a noble hearted, fine man of integrity. He was a patron of all of the best concerts and a great music lover. THE MUSICAL COURIER staff keenly feels the loss of a dear personal friend. The deceased was also attorney for the Blumenberg Press, Victor Herbert and Witmark & Sons.

CARL H. LELLMANN, JR.

Mr. Lellmann was born in this city June 9, 1865, and was a son of Dr. Carl H. Lellmann. He was a graduate of the New York University class of '84 and Columbia College Law School '86, and began practicing in the office of Abbott & Fuller, and later became one of the firm of Russ & Heppenheimer. He was married in 1896 to Miss Nellie Cruger, and she and one child survive him.

At the funeral services on Monday night many of his relatives and friends were present, including a number of well-known musical artists. The house of Witmark & Sons was represented, and there was also present Victor Herbert, August Lüchow, Otto Weil, General Heppenheimer, Ernest Heppenheimer, Dr. Lange and Dr. Cecil. Louis Blumenberg and Spencer T. Driggs represented THE MUSICAL COURIER and the Blumenberg Press. Henry Schmidt and Louis Schmidt played during the service.

Samuel Carter.

Samuel Carter, the father of Mme. Helene Maigille and Charles Davis Carter, of the Conservatory of Music in Pittsburg, was descended from an old English family, which emigrated to this country in the early part of the seventeenth century. Mr. Carter died in Redding, Conn., in the old summer home. The funeral services were held there, and the remains brought to New York for burial at Greenwood Cemetery. Although not a professional musician himself, THE MUSICAL COURIER publishers this obituary of Mr. Carter because all of his children are musical. His three daughters, Mme. Helene Maigille, Mrs. F. Homa Leonard and Miss Isabel Davis Carter, are singers, the most prominent being Madame Maigille. Charles Davis Carter, one of the sons, conducts a large conservatory of music in Pittsburg. Another son, Robert Carter, is the controller of the Consolidated Gaslight Company, of which the deceased was for many years an officer. Mr. Carter retired from active business over a year ago, and he and his wife made their winter home with their daughter, Madame Maigille, of this city. Mr. Carter was born in New York in 1829. His branch of the Carter family removed to New York from Massachusetts. It is recorded in the State records of Massachusetts that only one Carter escaped from the terrible Deerfield (Indian) Massacre, and this Carter was the founder of the family to which Samuel Carter belongs. Mr. Carter was from his early youth interested in music, and gave his children every opportunity to become accomplished in the art. In his home and in social circles Mr. Carter was a man beloved for those qualities which stamp the man and gentleman. His manners were courtly, like those of "gentlemen of the old school."

Wilkommen!

VICTOR THRANE, the well-known ex-impresario spent yesterday shaking hands with his many friends on his first visit to this city since he severed himself from the musical field. Mrs. Thrane and her mother, Mrs. James D. Lacy, accompany him on his trip from the West. He has received a cordial welcome and when he leaves he will carry with him the good wishes of artistic New York.

E. PRESSON MILLER RESUMES.—E. Presson Miller has recovered from his severe illness, and has resumed teaching at his new studio, 601 and 602 Carnegie Hall. The excellent work done by his numerous pupils has established Mr. Miller in the front ranks of New York's best vocal teachers, and his outlook for the present season is gratifying.

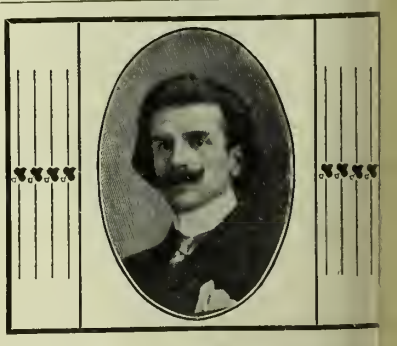
EVAN WILLIAMS.—Evan Williams, the concert and oratorio singer, has opened a studio at 9 East Seventeenth street, and will there accept a limited number of pupils

Engagements?

—30 IN ALL—

17 already closed—for

SLIVINSKI



Would like to close balance as soon as possible, so if you are interested write to

R. E. JOHNSTON, St. James Building,
Broadway and 26th St, New York City.

New Telephone No.:
1610 Madison Sq.

1901. American Tour of 1902.

EMMA NEVADA

AND HER GRAND COMPANY.

First Appearance in America,

—INTRODUCING—

PABLO CASALS, Europe's Greatest Violoncellist.
MOREAU, The Eminent Composer and Pianist.
MAGNARRE, The Celebrated Flutiste.
AND OTHER ARTISTS.

For Terms and Dates, Special Recitals or Concerts, address

37th Street and Broadway, Room No. 3, NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

Direction: EDWARD A. STEVENS, ALBERT SUTHERLAND.

S. M. FABIAN.

AMONG the native American pianists few enjoy a more enviable reputation, few have won a higher place among the exponents of artistic piano playing, than S. M. Fabian, whose portrait embellishes the cover of this issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

The subject of this sketch was born in California and passed his early years there. When a mere boy he gave evidence of unusual musical talent, and showed a predilection for the piano. He received the best instruction which could be had, and made very rapid progress. He was fired with an ambition to be a great pianist, and worked and studied incessantly to that end. His greatest desire, however, was to go abroad, and there perfect himself in his chosen profession. This was accomplished after many difficulties, and soon after young Fabian settled in Berlin, fired by ambition and hope. Shortly after his arrival in Berlin he called upon and played for Moszkowski, and this great master, recognizing Fabian's extraordinary talent, accepted him as a pupil immediately and mapped out a course of study, which Fabian followed untiringly. His energy and conscientious work found its reward, for the master, pleased with his pupil's progress and ability, secured an engagement for Fabian, which resulted in bringing him to the notice of the musical people of Germany. Mr. Fabian was at this time studying theory with Ludwig Bussler, of Berlin. Fabian's first public appearance in Berlin was with Mme. Etelka Gerster, upon which occasion he played Liszt's "Hungarian Fantaisie" and several solo numbers. His success was unqualified, and the Berlin critics predicted a great future for the young American.

From that day he was a recognized artist, and offers of engagements poured in rapidly. He preferred remaining in Berlin that season, and frequently played with the Philharmonic Orchestra at their public concerts, performing Liszt's, Chopin's E minor, Mendelssohn's G minor and Beethoven's concertos, also Weber's "Concertstück," with his famous organization. Early in the following year Fabian was engaged to tour Germany with Mme. Amalia Joachim, the great liedersänger. Returning to Berlin late in the year from a successful tour, Fabian went to Von Bülow and Dr. Eduard Franck, with whom he studied off and on for two years. His cup of success was not full, however, until May, 1883, when he received a letter from Abbé Liszt, inviting him to Weimar. Enthusiastic over his good fortune, Fabian hurried thither and remained studying with the great maestro until October, when he again returned to Berlin.

Rubinstein appearing in his famous "historical conquests," Fabian followed him to Leipsic, holding that every opportunity given him to hear the greatest of players would add to his store of knowledge and proficiency. From Leipsic, Fabian went to St. Petersburg, professionally, the press of that city being enthusiastic in its praises of the "young American from the Far West." After many triumphs abroad Fabian returned to his native land, finally settling in Washington.

Mr. Fabian recently moved to New York. Henceforth he will be an active factor in the musical life of the metropolis. As a member of the faculty of the Clavier Piano School, Mr. Fabian will be able to show his ability as a teacher.

Mr. Fabian gave the closing recital of the summer season at the school recently, when this paper printed the following:

The closing recital of the summer session at the Clavier Piano School was given by S. M. Fabian, a leading member of the faculty, who has become immensely popular since coming to New York. As an interpretative artist Mr. Fabian is at the top with a few other Americans, but as comparisons are never safe it remains for each listener to settle with himself (or herself) who is greatest. Certainly Fabian is an artist of remarkable gifts, virile, direct and yet never lacking on the poetic and imaginative side.

The closing recital of what has been a very successful term of earnest study was given at Clavier Hall last Friday evening. The program played by Mr. Fabian follows:

Mazurka in B minor	Chopin
Nocturne, F sharp major	Chopin
Valse, G flat major	Chopin
Chant Polonaise (Liszt transcription)	Chopin
Etude, C minor	Chopin
Ballade, G minor	Chopin
Berceuse	Grieg
Danse Caprice	Grieg
Etude	Henselt
Andante e Rondo Capriccioso	Mendelssohn
Soirées de Vienne, No. 6 (Liszt transcription)	Schubert
Gnomenreigen	Liszt
Danse Macabre (Liszt transcription)	Saint-Saëns

The writer has often marveled at the feats of memory of great pianists. To think of all the notes, say, in the group of Chopin's compositions played by Mr. Fabian, is in itself an astonishing achievement; each one different and affording contrast and variety. Mr. Fabian gave that broad and healthful reading to the pieces by the Polish composer that appeals to well ordered minds. The valse he played daintily, and the "Chant Polonaise," which proved the graceful and characteristic song "Maiden's Wish," transcribed by Liszt, was performed archly and with the rhythms nicely executed.

The tender Berceuse by Grieg, the "Danse Caprice," by the same composer, the beautiful Henselt study and the Mendelssohn Andante and Rondo were played as a second group, and throughout Mr. Fabian compelled rapt attention, and at the conclusion prolonged applause. As an encore he gave a Menuet by Bouvy. "The Soirées de Vienne," by Schubert; "Gnomenreigen," by Liszt, and Liszt's transcription of Saint-Saëns' "Danse Macabre" were performed as the closing group, and the latter was given with all the orchestral effects needed to emphasize the weirdness and yet beauty of the modern Frenchman's strange conceit. The audience insisted on another number, and Mr. Fabian returned to the stage again and played in joyous style the appropriate selection the Wedding March from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

It is not inopportune to state that Mr. Fabian's reputation as a pedagogue is second to none in this country, and that he ranks with the great piano teachers of Europe.

The latter part of this month Mr. Fabian will give a recital in Mendelssohn Hall. Mr. Fabian will also give recitals in Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, Pittsburg and St. Louis, Montreal and other large cities this season.

Frederic Lamond.

THE eminent piano virtuoso, Frederic Lamond, is engaged on the continent of Europe for nearly every available night the coming season. Our Frankfurt correspondent informs us that he will send by next mail a complete list of these engagements, which signify a demand for piano playing that indicates the artist's popularity among the most important musical organizations of Europe, for Lamond plays at the foremost events, as is generally known.

PAPPENHEIM PUPILS PROCURE POSITIONS.—Among the pupils who studied last season with Madame Pappenheim we mention the following who have secured positions. Miss Winifred Florence, with the "Chaperons" Company; Miss Ada Randrup, with the "Florodora" Company; Miss Augusta Northup, at the Church of the Divine Paternity, and Miss Frances Tichborne, soprano, at St. Thomas' Church. Miss Frieda Stender is singing in concerts under the management of L. M. Ruben, and has a number of first-class engagements already booked for October and November. Thus the Pappenheim pupils keep to the fore.

MRS. VIOLA C. WATERHOUSE.

It is worth noting how much of the music of the representative American composers, and particularly the younger men of distinction, is being published by Oliver Ditson Company. A glance at their new series of analytical and thematic catalogs, just issued, of songs and piano music, and the portrait catalog of American composers, partly tells the story.

And where the foremost composers go with their manuscripts singers go for their program material. Among the latter is Mrs. Viola Campbell Waterhouse, the Boston soprano, and soloist with the Ridgway Concert Co., who sings W. Berwald's "Visions of Hope," Carlo Minetti's "One Day," Marie von Hammer's "A Rose Once Grew" and "Love's Doubt," C. Mawson-Marks' "The Little Dutch Garden," and James H. Rogers' "April Weather."

A469

Pears'

Pears' soap is dried a whole year. That's why it lasts so. It wears to the thinness of a wafer. Sold all over the world.

arah Bernhardt says: "It is simply perfect."

ELECTA GIFFORD

SOPRANO.

Dates Booking for Concert, Recital and Oratorio.

WEST:
CHARLES R. BAKER,
Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

EAST:
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

ARNOLD SOMLYO, Manager

CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK CITY.

Has the honor to announce the following distinguished Musical Artists:

LIZA DELHASE-WICKES,
The Brilliant Belgian Pianiste.
GERTRUDE VON BETZ,
Pianiste, (First Prize Leipzig Conservatory.)
ALFRED DONALDSON WICKES,
Violinist.

HENRIETTA WEBER,
Pianiste and Accompanist.
FLORENCE SAGE, Pianiste,
In Historical Recitals.
MINNE HUMPHRYES,
Soprano.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS—
in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

WHITNEY TEW

In America
November,
December
And January.

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

The Stage—"Mr. Whitney Tew proved himself a singer of excellent capabilities. His voice, which is a bass of great compass, is delightfully sympathetic—now full of tenderness, now instinct with passion and joy. He could not have been surpassed in his rendering of Schumann's 'Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn' and Liza Lehmann's curiously weird 'Myself when Young.'"—July 4, 1901.

London Musical Courier—"Mr. Whitney Tew's singing was marked by a high order of intelligence. He is one of the few singers now before the public who possesses the many qualifications that mean success. Besides a voice powerful and sympathetic he has a remarkable memory, and he never fails to display an intuitive knowledge of the poetic and dramatic significance of the text. In four songs by Bach, Brahms, Schubert and Schumann he exhibited great powers of vocalization and expression, and a style in singing German so thoroughly Teutonic that it was hard at times to realize his American origin . . . Three songs in English were equally impressive."—July 5, 1901.

Ladies' Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals in Steinway Hall. Madame Lehmann's 'In Memoriam' was a great test of Mr. Tew's manner and inflection, and he sustained the interest of his audience well throughout it; and it is a supremely hard work for a single voice—fragmentary, passionate, moody, with its pedal-note of acute sorrow. . . . Mr. Tew is fortunate in possessing a powerful voice of fine quality, and he has both the voice and brains for success."—May 25, 1901.

Daily Telegraph—"Mr. Tew is an artist who commands attention and deserves praise. Especially has he the gift of feeling and the power of conveying it to others, while in point of intelligence he leaves but little to desire. Mr. Tew essaye last evening songs of widely contrasting kinds and of various centres, but the manner and spirit proper to each were easily revealed, and the result was a conspicuous success."—May 23 1901.

Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

BY PHILIP HALE.

BOSTON, October 6, 1901.

I SPOKE last week a few words about César Franck and the characteristics of his genius, and I referred to the fact that his musical nature was mystic, not dramatic. A day or two after I received the eighth number of the Revue d'Histoire et de Critique Musicales, published in Paris. The magazine is solid and heavy. The reader is not surprised to find the leading article devoted to the Byzantine "Echoi." There is a formidable list of contributors, many of whom are full fledged professors. This last number, the one for August-September, contains an interview with the son of César Franck, Georges Franck, who gave lectures on art at the Sorbonne, and now lives at Sceaux.

The correspondent, himself a professor, was full of emotion on entering the house, and he nearly wept at the sight of pianos, grand and upright, a musical library, and a portrait of the composer of "The Beatitudes." I do not see why the piano left behind by a composer or virtuoso should awaken feelings of deep reverence, especially in these days when the virtuoso cannot justly be called the silent partner of the manufacturer. Nor am I interested in any cast-off clothing. Some time ago my friend and colleague, Mr. Krehbiel, was disappointed in the critics of Boston, because they did not rush in droves across Harvard Bridge to see, feel and smell a shirt that once belonged to Beethoven, was afterward treasured by A. W. Thayer, of Trieste, and then made its terrible approach toward Cambridge, Mass. The adagio of the Ninth Symphony, the Overture to "Coriolanus," the prison scene in "Fidelio," these would not have been the more wonderful to us if we had been allowed to try on the shirt in the presence of President Eliot, Prof. Charles Eliot Norton and Prof. John K. Paine. Of course a portrait is another matter, but even here the emotion depends largely on the painter, who is often an assassin.

This picture of Franck represents him in the act of improvising on the organ. The musician is clothed in an ordinary pepper-and-salt suit. The left hand, nervous, elegant, is on the upper manual, while the right is arranging a combination of stops. The face is a three-quarters view. The eyes are lowered, and yet the face is alert; you see the honest whiskers—the whiskers of a good notary of the province; the lips are close shaven, the nose is thin and rather short, the forehead one of power. The hair of the head is without "romantic pretension." The whole gives you the impression of a sane and wholesome man without affectation or pose. No one would ever infer from it that Franck was a musician of genius, the chief of a school, and that in his profound and simple mind he knew "how to unite the knowledge of a Bach, the passion of a Berlioz, the poetry of a Schumann." I quote the timid expression of the learned professor:

"What a difference between his head and that of Liszt. In Liszt (remember the Olympian hair, the face starred with warts, the smile of calm defiance, the look that seems to measure up God) there is a sort of magnificent charlatanism. In the personal appearance of César Franck, as in his music, there is no charlatanism of the façade. The essential quality of man and music is what the Germans call Innerlichkeit. Of analagous nature is the portrait of Schumann, who looks like a Bavarian brewer." The correspondent recalls the phrase of La Bruyère: "True greatness is free, gentle, familiar, even popular; it allows itself to be handled; it does not allow us to feel that we are little." The face makes another impression; the beholder soon recognizes the signs that betray the master: the size and carriage of the head, the jaw bone well developed (as with Beethoven), the imperious hand that takes possession of the keyboard, and which "makes synthesis" when you consider expression.

Georges Franck entered, made compliments and received them. He said: "It is the exact likeness. Miss Rongier asked permission of my father to see him often and to observe him without being seen. She made many sketches, and of one of them was born this picture. My father was life itself; always in action, always vibrant. He was excessively nervous, but he was always dominated by a clear and swift will, even in the most exquisite reveries."

The son said many things about his father; how he died in consequence of a carriage accident—this fact is not stated so deliberately in the biographical sketches; how the critics applauded him heartily immediately after his death, and then for the first time; how he was not merely a mystic.

"To believe writers who deduce everything from a single principle and insist on unifying everything, César Franck was a mystic, whose true kingdom was religious music. Nothing is less true, I assure you. The public is given to judging a composer by a work or a group of works, and then classing him for all time. And forever after the composer walks in the street with a placard which will go with him to the tomb. As a matter of fact, my father cultivated all kinds of music; and he showed a like inspiration in them all. A consummate musician, he made himself master of all forms of composition. He wrote sacred music and profane music, songs, dances, pastorales, oratorios, symphonic poems, symphonies, sonatas, trios, operas, &c. He did not put himself into a work of one species to the neglect of other kinds; he expressed himself everywhere."

The correspondent agreed with the enthusiastic son. "I remember an engraving which portrays César Franck playing the organ while an angel is by his side; but I dream also of 'Hulda,' the first pages of the score, the whole of the first act and its energetic color, the 'Danse des Epées,' the 'Ballet de l'Hiver et du Printemps,' the death of Gudleik, the duos of Eiolf and Hulda, Eiolf and Swanhilde; so many pieces in which cries of hate are mingled with cries of love, in which are found both the dramatic bustle of savage life and the morose poetry of Norwegian landscapes."

But is a son a discriminating judge of his father? I believe that some years ago I advised a young singer or pianist to seek all lawful methods of ridding herself of parents, brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts. The same advice might be extended for the benefit of a prima donna, although I am told that in some instances a husband has been of assistance in checking baggage and entertaining at a public and moaning bar newspaper men whom the prima donna did not care to meet. Must there be a leap into futurity? Must a great composer, zealous of his fame, deny himself children, or at least be as wary as the lamented Abbé Liszt?

Franck's two operas have never been given in this country, although the heroine's part in the second, "Ghiselle," was created at Monte Carlo by Emma Eames. But these two operas have never been given in Germany, Belgium, England, or for that matter in Paris. "Hulda" was performed in 1899 at Nantes. I cannot speak, therefore, of the operas with any personal knowledge. But examine Franck's chief works, whether for church or for the concert stage, and you will find that he rises to his supreme height only when the music is contemplative, mystic, or without any specifically dramatic emotion. The text of "The Beatitudes" is wretched stuff; nevertheless there is an opportunity given the composer for the display of bellicose, riotous, sensual, Satanic music. The music written in answer to such suggestions is almost always commonplace except in the technical structure; there is no apparent appreciation of the baleful splend

OLIVE MEAD,
VIOLINIST.

Orchestral Engagements Season 1901-2.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Boston (third time).
Boston Symphony Orchestra—New York.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Philadelphia.
The Chicago Orchestra—Chicago.
Personal address: 1425 Madison Avenue, New York.
Sole Management of
FRED R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO

••••

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire

••••

Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.
MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.
During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET
Fourteenth Season.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.
Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

of wickedness; there is no dramatic character drawing. None of his music in other works is sensuous, when it might justifiably be glowing and passionate. His greatest song, "La Procession," is distinctly religious, with a leaning toward mysticism. His chief symphonic poem, "Le Chasseur Maudit," portrays the blasphemous behavior of the wicked hunter on the Lord's day and his consequent punishment. And what is the chief impression made at the time, the impression that haunts the memory? The exquisite tone-picture of the peace and religious joy of the Sunday. When Satan rises and joins the hunting party, the interest of the hearer flags and at the end he echoes the famous line of Desdemona. In Franck's quintet, in his quartet, in his sonata for piano and violin, in his symphony, you find the same mood, the Stimmung that is the one great characteristic of the man, and when he himself was in this mood and most devoutly absorbed he knew no rival in any land, in any century. And why should not his son Georges be content with this? Why should he wish him to be regarded as a man of many musical tricks? Delibes could write a better ballet; Gabriel Fauré's songs are a larger and more valuable contribution than are the few melodies of Franck; Franck could not have written "Manon" or "Carmen" or even "Samson et Dalila"—but what of that? I doubt if César Franck would have heard patiently the remarks of his son Georges, who is tall, thin, pale and with grayish beard and whiskers.

Then there was talk about César Franck's style, of his taste for the simultaneous leading of several melodic themes, for the unexpected meeting of notes which form chords that can be classed and referred to as elementary types, but by their disposition give the impression of something new, original, rare, of exceeding value. The son said: "I assure you that this manner of writing was natural to him and in no way sought out. When my father wrote an operatic scene he sometimes made twenty melodies for the same situation. Then he chose one, but all that he put aside was as rich and rare, as counterpoint, as the sketch he preserved. 'Twas the same when he improvised at Sainte-Clotilde; everything had a definitive construction and could have been published as it was played."

Now a great dramatic composer does not write twenty essentially distinct melodies for one and the same situation, nor does he first examine them with an eye to contrapuntal display. A great dramatic situation haunts the composer of genius until the one, necessary, inevitable melody is shaped. I doubt if even the restless Meyerbeer put aside sketches for the immortal air of Raoul when he learns of Valentin's love on that night of terror. This habit of Franck as a composer of operas was of evil augury.

The son quoted his father as saying: "I write only when I have something to say." There were few letters of interest to show a visitor: "My father wrote few letters. He gave his pupils a sound æsthetic education, but he did not like to write except on music paper." But they found a letter from Mendelssohn to Franck, written from Leipsic in 1846. This letter is courteous and without significance. There was also a copy of a letter written by Franck to Von Bülow, probably about 1859, in which Franck thanked the pianist for bringing out his piano trios. "I do not know whether you know my Fourth Trio in B minor; it is in only one movement, and it is addressed to the mass of the public even less than the first or the third, but I think you would like it. I am very fond of it. I intend to write this summer a sonata for piano and violin; it will be dedicated to Madame von Bülow." Then Franck discusses the possible performance of his oratorio "Ruth," in Dresden. "This work will surprise you; for it is impossible to recognize the hand that wrote the trios; the work is exceedingly simple. I am singularly fond of it, on account of the ideas themselves and the peculiar color of the whole work."

The interview closes with a remark of the son about a performance of "Hulda" at the Opéra. Still harping on poor "Hulda"! "Gailhard," said M. Georges, "told me some years ago that he should not produce anything of my father's; and he wishes without doubt to keep his word."

There is little news about the Symphony concerts. I hear that Gérardy will play Lalo's 'Cello Concerto, which was first played in Boston by Elsa Ruegger in the fall of 1899. There have been some changes made in the personnel. The first clarinet will be Victor Edmond Lebailly. Born at Boulogne in 1872, he took the first prize at the Paris Conservatory in 1888, and was a member of the Opéra-Comique orchestra. The first bassoon will be Albert Debuchy, who was born at St. Quentin in 1864, took the second prize at the Paris Conservatory in 1886, and also belonged to the force of the Opéra Comique. The new second bassoon is J. Helleberg, and the bass clarinet will be played by O. Fritzsche. I am told that a third oboe has been engaged—Lenom. If this is his name, is he the Lenom, a Belgian, who played in the Monte Carlo orchestra?

Can any one of your readers tell me the original of the caricature O'Trillo, the dilettante composer, who is introduced by Peacock in his "Crotchet Castle"? "They say his name was O'Trill, and he has taken the O from the beginning and put it at the end. I do not know how this may be. He plays well on the violoncello, and better on the piano; sings agrecably; has a talent at verse making, and improvises a song with some felicity. He is very agreeable company in the evening, with his instruments and music books. He maintains that the sole end of all enlightened society is to get up a good opera, and laments that wealth, genius and energy are squandered upon other pursuits, to the neglect of this one great matter." It was Trillo that believed in the revival of the Athenian theatre and the regeneration of the lyric drama, an extreme Wagnerite of 1831. It was Trillo who remarked to fellow guests: "Your last exclamation runs itself into a chorus, and sets itself to music. Allow me to lead, and to hope for your voices in harmony:

After careful meditation
And profound deliberation,
On the various projects which have just been shown,
Not a scheme in agitation
For the world's amelioration
Has a grain of common sense in it, except my own.

If Trillo listened amiably to tunes from "Matilde di Shabran," he did not wish to hear harpers in Wales, for "those fellows are always horribly out of tune."

We know the names of others caricatured. Thus Coleridge sat for Mr. Skionar, the transcendental poet, but who was "Trillo"?

Now Mr. Trillo was not unlike Ellesmere in Sir Arthur Helps' "Social Pressure." (What, by the way, is opera or a musical season but social pressure?) Ellesmere did not care much about music; indeed, he wondered at the passionate delight found by some of his friends in the tinkling of cymbals; but he once proposed seriously to a powerful statesman that the surplus of the Irish Church revenues should be devoted to giving opera boxes to poor people who were fond of music.

Sir Arthur Helps was in the habit of writing pleasantly about music, and it is interesting to note how he would occasionally play the philister, although he himself detested philistinism. Let me quote in illustration from Ellesmere's little essay on "The Art of Leaving Off":

"There shall be a song sung by some great artist with an ending, admirable in every respect, to which even those who, like myself, delight in a grand and conclusive outburst of satisfying harmony can make no objection. Yet, if afterward, the person accompanying the singer plays only a few bars to wind up, as it were, the accompaniment, the ending of the song loses much of its effect upon the audience, and the applause is not so fervent as it would have been if the vocal and the instrumental music had ceased at one and the same moment." Did Sir Arthur include certain songs by Schumann in this sweeping condemnation? And what would he say if he were alive to certain songs by Fauré, Debussy, Richard Strauss and Stcherbatcheff?

The death of Chrysander, who devoted his life and fortune to the worship of Händel, has called forth remarks of warm and discriminating appreciation. In no one of the articles published in Germany did I see any reference to fierce attacks of Heinrich Dorn and Julius Schäffer. Dorn's article was entitled "Goldmännchen von Bergedort," and it began: "Man kann ein guter Musikgelehrter und daneben ein schlecter Musiker sein. Hiermit will ich nicht andeuten, dass Herr Chrysander ein guter Musikgelehrter sei, wohl aber behaupten; dass er ein schlechter Musiker ist." And all this to introduce a discussion concerning the proper interpretation of ornaments in works of Bach. Schäffer's pamphlet, "Fr. Chrysander in seinen Klavierauszügen zur deutschen Händel Ausgabe," might have been written with an ax.

Chrysander, as a musician, no doubt deserved the censure administered so roughly; and yet what are his mistakes in harmony in comparison with his self-sacrifice, which may justly be called heroic! The Händel revival in Germany was mainly due to his efforts. Interest was awakened in oratorios that had been forgotten, although conductors did not always follow the wishes of Chrysander the editor in the matter of cadenzas. (Chrysander, by the way, was historically correct on this point, however weak his own interpolations may be; for even in pious England and early in the nineteenth century such arias as "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth" were ornamented with cadenzas.) Furthermore, the great edition of Händel will be Chrysander's monument. He left his laborious life of Händel unfinished. Who reads it? Who could read it except for a wager? And therefore that

New York College of Music,
128-130 East 58th Street.
ALEXANDER LAMBERT, Director.
Private Instruction in Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello and all branches of music, by a faculty unsurpassed for its excellence.
SPECIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BEGINNERS.
All instrumental and vocal students receive free instruction in harmony, counterpoint, vocal sight reading, ensemble playing and free admission to concerts, lectures, etc., etc.
Students received daily. Catalog sent on application.

JEAN GERARDY
BEGINNING WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, OCT. 18 and 19.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER
JANUARY to MAY, 1902.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau,
131 EAST 17th ST.,
NEW YORK.

SARA ANDERSON,
SOPRANO
JOSEPH BAERNSTEIN,
BASSO
Exclusive Management: WILLIAM FISHER, "The Monterey," 351 West 114th St., New York.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: The Hetherington, 571 Park Ave., New York.

Rebecca Holmes
VIOLINISTE.
Address:
32 West 40th St., - NEW YORK.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

most heroic figure in the musical life of the eighteenth century is still to-day without a biographer. Chrysander was in the service of the composer; he could see no flaw or blemish in him; every scrawl on music paper was inspired. The other lives are of little account. But I know a man who could write the life of Händel, and his name is John F. Runciman. The sketch in "Old Scores and New Readings" is of only a few pages, but the portrait was caught immediately. "George Fréderic Händel is by far the most superb personage one meets in the history of music. He alone of all the musicians lived his life straight through in the grand manner. Spohr had dignity; Gluck insisted upon respect being shown a man of his talent; Spontini was sufficiently self-assertive; Beethoven treated his noble patrons as so many handfuls of dirt. But it is impossible altogether to lose sight of the peasant in Beethoven and Gluck; Spohr had more than a trace of the successful shopkeeper; Spontini's assertion often became meré insufferable bumptiousness. * * * But in Händel we have a polished gentleman, a lord amongst lords, almost a king amongst kings."

Chrysander grubbed for facts. When he wrote it was not in the sunlight; nor did he write in a room lighted by wax and festal tapers. The air was chill and musty; he put notes into a shabby book, close to which was a dark lantern.

PHILIP HALE.

ANOTHER HALL PUPIL.—Alexander Howell, tenor of the West End Avenue Presbyterian Church, is one of the numerous Walter John Hall pupils who has a growing reputation. The young man has a voice of unusually pure tenor quality, singing the high A in "Thou Shalt Dash," from "The Messiah," with fine volume. He is well up in oratorio work, and is sure to be heard of in time.

There are other Hall pupils making names for themselves, men and women whose entire vocal training has been that of Hall; some have the best possible positions here in churches, others in other cities, and all acclaim Walter John Hall as the one who did it all for them. A rare knowledge of voices and their treatment, as well as good musicianship, characterizes Hall's teaching.

ADOLF GLOSE.—Adolf Glose, the pianist, has been engaged by Major J. B. Pond to accompanying Florizel Von Reuter on his tour through the United States, beginning February 1. Mr. Glose also goes on a fall tour illustrating Wagner melodies on the piano, for Mrs. Chas. W. Rhodes' stereopticon Wagner lecture. Augusta Glose, his daughter, has made a "big hit" in Harry B. Smith's musical comedy, the "Liberty Belles," giving her original musical specialties.

MARY LOUISE CLARY.

MARY LOUISE CLARY, the well-known contralto, who during the last three years has been engaged for the greater portion of her time in touring this country and Canada as a stellar attraction under the control of some of the leading musical bureaus, has announced that for the present season she will devote herself again especially to miscellaneous concert and oratorio work.

However, on account of the great success achieved last year by her own concert company she does not intend to abandon this altogether, but will make a few occasional short trips of about a week or so in length, to supply the demand for this organization, arranging these trips so as not to interfere with her other work.

Her company of last season will remain intact, including, as it does, John Cheshire, the celebrated English harp virtuoso, and Miss Celia Schiller, the talented concert pianist, who has just returned to America after a summer spent in Europe under the tutelage of the great pianist Rosenthal.

Miss Clary will, as always heretofore, be under the exclusive management of Remington Squire, both for her solo work and also in connection with her concert company.

During the last three seasons she has by actual count appeared in considerably more than 300 first-class concerts, or an average of over 100 concerts each season, a record in its entirety that has probably never been equaled by any other concert contralto that this country has yet produced. She has, moreover, been overwhelmingly successful without exception in every concert where she has appeared, as is clearly evidenced by a few of the criticisms from her first tour of last season, which are so unusual as to be worthy of reproduction at some length herewith:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., PRESS CLUB FESTIVAL.

Miss Clary's title of "America's greatest contralto," bestowed upon her by eminent critics, was clearly and unquestionably proved.—Rochester Post-Express, November 16, 1900.

A group of four artists appeared at the Lyceum last evening and gave one of the finest concerts that the season may expect to afford. The company consisted of Miss Mary Louise Clary, undoubtedly one of the finest contraltos now before the American public; John Cheshire, harp virtuoso, and Celia Schiller, concert pianist. Miss Clary's voice is one of that superb quality that deserves the use of the word "glorious" in any attempt to describe it. To attempt to do the artists and the concert justice is out of the question, for the simple reason that it would require columns of space.—Rochester Herald, November 16, 1900.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., RE-ENGAGEMENT.

The Mary Louise Clary Concert Company paid a flying return visit to Rochester yesterday evening at the Lyceum. Thursday's concert was a sufficient drain on lauditory epithets. Yet last night would furnish a legitimate excuse for the coining of a new set.—Rochester Herald, November 19, 1900.

TORONTO, CAN.

The two thousand or so people who attended the concert i Massey Hall last night listened to a musical treat of exception excellence, which, it is safe to say, will stand out prominently t the end of their days as one of the finest concerts which they ev listened to. It is not often that a company of artists visits Toront each of whom is so capable, not to say eminent, in their chose line. To speak of their performance last night, whether individuall or collectively, is to speak in superlatives. Mary Louise Clary a superb contralto. To a voice of rare quality and volume, equ to every emergency, Miss Clary brings a majestic and impressiv presence, which harmonizes with the situation. So effective wa her execution that she responded with a number of extras.—Toront World, November 20, 1900.

Miss Clary made a most favorable impression. She has a co tralto voice, full, rich and warm. One of her best numbers wa from "Samson and Delilah," which showed her dramatic temper ment very clearly.—The Mail and Empire, November 20, 1900.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

The Clary Company last evening proved to be all that was pron ised and expected, and was pronounced the finest concert ever give in this city. Mary Louise Clary, as a singer par excellence, is s well established that words of praise sound like vain flattery; suffi cient it is to say she sustained her justly deserved reputation.— Gazette and Bulletin, November 17, 1900.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

The concert was one of the best, if not the best, ever heard i this city in late years. Miss Clary is undoubtedly the greatest co tralto this country possesses. Her voice, which has a wonderfu range, is of such sympathetic fibre that the simplest song sung b her would thrill the most unmusical soul. Her tones are so rich, s full and so masterful that her audience is swayed with emotion t her will.—Kalamazoo Gazette News, November 25, 1900.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

The appearance of Mary Louise Clary and her superb compan last night at Hamblin's was truly the musical event of the seaso The very appearance of Miss Clary is a delight, and not one in th select audience of music lovers would consider her in any respe save that of the finest contralto soloist ever appearing in Batt Creek.—Battle Creek Moon, Mich., November 23, 1900.

It was one of the best concerts ever given in this city.—Dai Journal, November 23, 1900.

LONDON, ONT., CANADA.

The appearance at the Cronyn Hall last night of Miss Mary Loui Clary gave the greatest possible pleasure. While the honors of th evening were very fairly distributed Miss Clary was evidently th favorite. She is possessed of a rich contralto voice, pure and swe and beautifully rounded, and having the rare quality of super power. She was repeatedly recalled upon the rendition of eac number.—Free Press, November 21, 1900.

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN.

The concert was of unusual excellence throughout, and a gre treat to the audience. Mary Louise Clary, the famous contralt gave each selection alloted to her with a wealth of tone and dr matic force seldom heard. It was evident that the great succe Miss Clary has attained was deserved.—The Sentinel, Novemb 13, 1900.

RIPON, WIS.

From the opening number to the last encore the program w faultless in point of unity and variety. Mary Louise Clary, co monly acknowledged by all as America's leading contralto, is stranger. Her voice, magnificent in volume and depth, seems

PERMANENT ADDRESS: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.
HAMLIN, Tenor
EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE: LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS. ORATORIOS.
PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA.
FESTIVALS.
FRITZ SCHEEL, Conductor.
OFFICE: 1520 CHESTNUT STREET.

Frieda Siemens
THE EMINENT GERMAN PIANISTE.
American Tour October to April.
UNDER DIRECTION OF
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Carnegie Hall, New York.
BALDWIN PIANO USED.

HENRIETTE WEBER
Pianist and Accompanist.
INSTRUCTION. For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Studio: 60 West 39th St. 'Phone: 2058-38.
ARNOLD SOMLYO, Mgr. CARNEGIE HALL, N.

Concert Direction . . .
W. ADLINGTON,
22 Old Burlington Stree
SOLE AGENT FOR LONDON, ENGLAND,
I. J. PADEREWSKI,
And other eminent Artists, Vocal and Instrumental.
TOURS and CONCERTS ARRANGE

Just Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
. . . Vocal Score of . . .
MANRU.
Opera in Three Acts by
I. J. PADEREWSKI.
Translated and Adapted for Performance in English
By H. E. KREHBIEL.
PRICE, ... net, $5 00.
Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

The Walker-Severn Conservatory of Music, New York.
FRANCIS WALKER, Singing.
EDMUND SEVERN, Violin and Theory.
Mrs. EDMUND SEVERN, Piano and Singing.
ARTHUR SEVERN, Violoncello.
Open October 1st, 1901.
For terms write to the Secretary, Mr. FRANCIS WALKER,
"Van Dyck Studios," Eighth Ave. and 56th St., New York.
Homes for Students. Special Course in Accompaniment Playing, by Mrs. Severn. Class lessons in Italian for Singers, Mr. Walker. Ensemble Playing, Mr. Severn.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FRE

Edward MacDowell
PIANO RECITALS.
Address Columbia University, New York.

FRANCIS ROGERS
BARITONE.
Oratorio, Concert, Recitals, &c.
Address Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, 131 East 17th S or 26 East 33d Street, New York City.

have been enriched remarkably since her last appearance here. Possibly her most popular selection was the rendition of "The Lost Chord." The almost limitless use of superlatives in commenting upon this concert is unavoidable, so perfect was it from every standpoint.—Ripon Commonwealth, November 27, 1900.

FLINT, MICH.

In Miss Clary all the requisites of a great artist are most happily blended.—Evening Journal, November 22, 1900.

Miss Clary, from the moment she commenced to sing, won her hearers. She is by far the greatest contralto ever heard in this city.—Flint Globe, November 22, 1900.

OBERLIN, OHIO.—COLLEGE RECITAL.

Miss Clary is such a favorite in Oberlin that it seems only necessary to state that she delighted her audience even more than usual by her marvelous gifts. Her beautiful tone production, faultless intonation and her ample and easy climaxes are in themselves a joy and delight. In addition it is pleasant to note in Miss Clary's singing her charming simplicity of manner and the absence of exaggerations which are so common. She sings in a straightforward manner and has the art of bringing out the beauties of the song, rather than calling attention to herself. Miss Clary's engagements here either in the Artists' Course or as a soloist for the Musical Union, cannot be too frequent.—The Oberlin News, December 7, 1900.

Charlotte Maconda.

MME. CHARLOTTE MACONDA has just added to her brilliant triumphs in past seasons at the Maine festivals by her performance in "The Redemption," at Bangor, Friday night of last week, when she was accorded an ovation both before and after the concert, and won most enthusiastic applause for her artistic and beautiful work. At Portland last night she repeated her success. Appearances at Manchester, N. H., on the 11th, and at Burlington, Vt., on the 15th, will complete the festival series in New England. The distinguished young soprano will start very soon on a transcontinental recital tour, which manager Loudon G. Charlton is now rapidly booking. Here are some press notices:

"THE REDEMPTION."

And then Maconda! It would be superfluous, of course, at this late day to attempt any criticism of the methods or technic or voice of this great soprano—that has been done already; but this much may be safely said—seldom has Madame Maconda appeared in better voice or to better advantage than on Friday night. Her solo with the chorus, "Thy Love Is a Father," was beautifully done—the solo gem of the evening. The audience demanded a repetition and the singer gracefully responded.—Bangor News, October 5, 1901.

Mme. Charlotte Maconda, the old time festival favorite, sang the soprano part and her work was a revelation, even to her warmest admirers. It is doubtful if any singer ever won her way deeper into the hearts of Bangor audiences than has Madame Maconda, and her singing on Friday night was beyond all price and praise. Never before has she appeared to a better advantage. Superbly crowned and radiantly beautiful, she carried the audience with her in a tidal wave of enthusiasm, which finally broke into a roar of applause.

The solo, "Thy Love Is a Father," which Madame Maconda sang with the chorus, was, in many respects, the most notable of the evening. The pure, rich tones of the singer, which rippled out without the slightest apparent effort, held the audience entranced. Madame Maconda gracefully responded to an encore. Her singing in Bangor on Friday night will long be remembered by those who heard her.—Bangor Daily Commercial, October 5, 1901.

SHANNA CUMMING SINGS

Verdi's Requiem at Worcester Festival.

MISS CUMMING undertook on short notice the difficult task of singing the soprano role of the difficult Requiem, Madame Eames being indisposed, a part all the more difficult because Madame Eames had been widely advertised to sing this role. Miss Cumming made a success, as the press comments below will testify.

After hearing Miss Cumming in the Requiem, the management requested her to sing an aria on Artists' Night, a compliment never before paid a festival singer. One of the immediate results of her Worcester success was that she was engaged to sing at the 100th anniversary of Yale University.

The most trying work of the evening fell to Mrs. Shanna Cumming, who sang the part which was to have been Madame Eames' in a manner which did her credit.—Worcester Post.

Great interest was shown on the part of the audience in Mrs. Cumming's singing of the soprano part, which Madame Eames was to have taken, and many friendly comments were heard as the audience left the hall, such as "I didn't miss Madame Eames!" Mrs. Cumming certainly deserves praise for the musician-like manner in which she went through the part.—Worcester Gazette.

The fact that Shanna Cumming stepped gracefully into the part left vacant by Madame Eames' non-appearance will be gratefully remembered, and was so received last night. Mr. Bispham warmly congratulated Mrs. Cumming on her success last evening, and the singer expressed much pleasure at the words of praise from so competent a critic.—Worcester Spy.

Mrs. Cumming's clear, brilliant voice and absolutely pure intonation made her an ideal representative of the soprano part. It would be hard to ask for anything more beautiful than her obligato in the final number.—Providence Journal.

Mrs. Shanna Cumming was a revelation of tone-production.—Worcester Spy.

In the original plan for the festival Emma Eames was cast for the Requiem, and when she failed to keep her engagement Mrs. Cumming was substituted. Her voice is true and sweet, and though apparently light it proved to be large enough for the work.—New York Times.

Mrs. Shanna Cumming, to whom the leading place among the festival sopranos had fallen, is to be complimented upon the readiness with which she mastered the difficult solos and ensemble numbers, at a week's notice, having never before studied the part. She has a fresh and unspoiled voice, and sang with as much verve and precision as though the work had been in her repertory.—Springfield Republican.

The solo parts were better sustained as a whole, and Shanna Cumming proved her right to be classed among the best sopranos of the country.—Boston Herald.

Mrs. Cumming was a newcomer to the festival, and distinctly successful, though the chief soprano role in the oratorio is not calculated for vocal display.—New York Times.

The singing of Shanna Cumming confirmed the favorable previous impressions. The aria chosen by her was well adapted to her dramatic voice, which is immensely flexible. The "Faust" aria displays the careful finish in writing for which Spohr was famed and is a pleasant blending of the old Italian and early German schools. Her success with the audience was marked from the first, and her Worcester début seems to have been most satisfactory. Evidence of her good musicianship and artistic perception was constant in all three concerts.—Boston Herald.

The soprano, Shanna Cumming, was a stranger to most of the audience, and made a very favorable impression. Her voice is a pure soprano, agreeable to hear, and she sings with intelligence and feeling. Furthermore, she gives the impression of being a singer who can be depended on.—Worcester Gazette.

An unusual and agreeable circumstance must be recorded. It will be remembered various changes had to be made in the program. This is a delicate matter, owing to the sensitiveness of singers. Mrs. Cumming relieved the situation greatly by the readiness with which she granted the requests of the management, thereby making at once a group of friends. She undertook to sing Verdi's Requiem in place of Eames, a hazardous task, because the prejudice of comparison would be against her. Her admirers observed that by so doing she had lost that opportunity so dear to most vocalists, a show-piece of her own selection. Some of them went to the managers about it, suggesting Mrs. Cumming be assigned a number of the final program, and soon there was general pressure from all sides that she have this opportunity. Mrs. Cumming is a thorough musician, and as such she was undoubtedly content with having done her part in the festival with sincerity of purpose and to the best of her ability. She took no part whatever in the movement to bring her into the final concert. The unwritten law of the festivals was in her case broken, and she was asked to sing one of the numbers she had originally chosen. This was the "Faust" aria; she was most enthusiastically welcomed when she appeared to sing it, and gave it with charming effect.—Worcester Telegram.

Mrs. Cumming will be photographed this morning in a Worcester studio. She is one of the handsomest women who has sung at the Worcester Festival in many years.—Exchange.

A great deal of pleasure was expressed over Mrs. Cumming's voice, which will be heard again this evening.—Worcester Post.

The chief soprano role is not one calculated for vocal display; it is difficult, and the part was sung by Mrs. Shanna Cumming intelligently, with perfect intonation, and in a voice which promises favorably for her future appearances here, where there will be better opportunity to estimate her place among artists.—Daily Telegram.

A compliment never before paid a festival artist was showered on Mrs. Cumming at this morning's recital, when it was announced that by special request Mrs. Cumming would sing on the Artists' Night. Great applause followed the announcement.—Boston Herald.

If you love your children buy them a

"KINDER" Adjustable Foot Rest.

Don't be cruel and make them practice at the piano from one to four hours a day with their feet dangling in the air.

Send for Booklet. All first-class piano houses or

W. MARKS,

WITHOUT. 568 Jefferson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. WITH.

EDUARD REUSS, PIANIST.

MME. LUISE REUSS-BELCE, Soprano, with Maurice Grau Opera Company.

For Concerts and Recitals address

BELVEDERE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

William H. RIEGER

ORATORIO, CONCERTS, SONG RECITALS.

18 East 22d Street, - New York City.

Edmund J. Myer.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.

32 East 23rd St., New York City.

CIRCULAR FREE.

Summer Term on Lake Chautauqua.

Portraits of Successful

BOWMAN PUPILS

ADDRESS E. M. BOWMAN,

Piano and Theory Studio, Steinway Hall, New York.

Organist and Conductor of the Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

Organ Privileges in New York and Brooklyn.

LEROY W. JACKSON.

Piano, Organ and Theory. Director Flatbush School of Music, Organist and Deputy Director Central Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

Originally I intended securing only 50 Concerts for his Season, but everybody seems to want him, and I have now (Sept. 10th) more than 75 arranged for, so I have decided to secure another 25, which will not be difficult. Mr Bailey's Company includes

WM. WORTH BAILEY

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano, and EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist.

R. E. JOHNSTON, Room 930 St. James Bldg., Broadway and 26th Street, New York City.

MARY LOUISE CLARY

CONTRALTO.

Concert Direction: REMINGTON SQUIRE, 125 East 24th Street, New York.

HERMANN HANS WETZLER

Will resume his instruction in

Piano, Harmony, Composition and Organ;

—Also—

German Opera and Song Interpretation.

Residence: 5 East 84th St., New York.

ELLISON VAN HOOSE TENOR.

Sole Management

Wolfsohn's Musical Bureau, 131 E. 17th St., New York.

Hattie Scholder

Phenomenal Child Concert Pianist

Age 10.

For terms, dates, etc., address

J. E. FRANCKE, 109 East 14th Street

S. EPPINGER, 718 Lexington Avenue

New York.

Harry J. Fellows' Success.

HARRY J. FELLOWS, the tenor of the Leonora Jackson Company, has held the past two years one of the highest salaried church positions in the United States, at the First Presbyterian Church, St. Louis. This popular artist had his training under the best masters abroad, and won from foreign critics high encomiums. In this country as well wherever he has sung he has scored an emphatic success. Repeated efforts have been made to engage him for a starring tour across the Continent, but, a man of domestic tastes, he has heretofore rejected the most tempting offers, preferring to devote himself to his large class of pupils, his church choir work and other professional duties.

Managers Jackson and Wakefield are to be congratulated upon securing Mr. Fellows for the Leonora Jackson tour, and the musical public will accord him a hearty welcome.

The following brief press extracts tell of Mr. Fellows' popularity:

Mr. Fellows is a great favorite and always receives an ovation.—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Mr. Fellows, with his rich, sweet, powerful voice, fresh and unworn, and under perfect control, scored an emphatic success.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

A charming tenor. He sings with a style that shows experience and takes a high C with perfect ease.—Montpelier Daily Journal.

His work was of the highest order of merit.—Buffalo Evening Times.

One of the finest tenor singers in this country. When he finished he received an ovation.—Erie Daily Times.

Mr. Fellows' singing of Tipton's "Sailor Song" made a hit.—Cleveland Leader.

He made immediate friends with his audience. His tones are pure, mellow, sympathetic. His singing was the work of an artist.—Parkersburg Daily Journal.

A beautiful tenor voice of good range.—W. S. B. Matthews, in Music, Chicago.

Harry J. Fellows made a hit last night. He was recalled again and again.—Madison Daily Democrat.

Mr. Fellows possesses many of the fine qualities that once made William Castle famous in English opera.—Indianapolis Daily Sentinel.

From the first he captured the hearts of the audience. He is a singer who loves to please.—Mobile Daily Register.

Showed himself to be a splendid artist.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

His singing was much admired. Enunciation, expression, tone left nothing to be desired.—Lawrence Journal.

"Lohengrin's Farewell," by Harry J. Fellows, was a beautiful presentation of this touching song from Wagner. His rich, sympathetic voice is admirably suited to this selection.—(Concert with Thomas Orchestra) Omaha World-Herald.

His voice is tender and appealing, and the manner in which he sang the sweet and familiar "In Native Worth," clearly proved his ability as a tenor.—Denver Republican.

The Last Girl of Summer.

IN last Sunday's New York Herald appeared an artistic half-tone picture of the last summer girl, depicting a handsome girl, the last of the season, in a pretty pose on the wave washed rocks by the sea. The interest in the picture was considerably enhanced by a poem by Gustav Kobbe, with the above heading. The four verses were well written and stamp Mr. Kobbe as a poet of no mean order.

THIERS ENGAGED.—Mr. Thiers' lecture on "The Technic of Musical Expression," which was such a success last year, being given before various New York clubs, such as the Salon, Sorosis, &c., with F. W. Riesberg at the piano, will be heard in the regular lecture course of the Board of Education this season, as the following will show:

The Board of Education has engaged Mr. Gerard-Thiers to deliver his lecture and song recital on "The Technic of Musical Expression" before the public schools. Mr. Gerard-Thiers' new lecture recital, "Eliland," is taken from Karl Stielers' poem of that name, using Von Fielitz's song cycle for analytical illustrations. These two lectures were given before the Paris Institute this summer to an audience of enthusiastic musicians.—Exchange.

HEINRICH MEYN BUSY.—A letter dated "Mayflower Cottage, Onteora Club, Tannersville, N. Y., September, 1901," says that the well-known baritone will not be in the city until November 1. He and Mrs. Meyn are building a lovely home there, and find much to do in connection with the building, laying out an old-fashioned garden, designing furniture, &c.

Supplementary Examinations at the National Conservator

THE supplementary examinations in all branches (sin ing, piano, violin, 'cello and all other orchestral i struments) will be held October 14 (Monday), from to 12, 2 to 4 and 8 to 9 p. m. The regular faculty, Rafa Joseffy, Adele Margulies, Leopold Lichtenberg, Euge Dufricke, Leo Schulz, Henry T. Finck, Max Spick Charles Heinroth, with others, will be in attendance these examinations, application to which are numerous.

The supplementary examinations are instituted in ord to accommodate many pupils and music students who ha been out of town on their annual vacations. There we so many applications that Mrs. Thurber, president, thoug it would be better to receive them at a stated period, a give them the benefit of the regular examining board. A missions are, nevertheless, daily for those who wish begin at once.

CAROLINE MABEN.—Miss Caroline Maben has removed 103 West Fifty-eighth street, where she has opened studio. She will continue to give lessons in Carnegie Ha but in her new studio will have more room for ensem work and for pupils' recitals.

WANTED—A salesman to travel for concert co pany in advance. Only a professional salesm need apply. Address R. B. J., care MUSICAL COURI 1133 Broadway, New York.

EVAN WILLIAMS

TENOR.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.

Address for Appointments, Terms, etc.

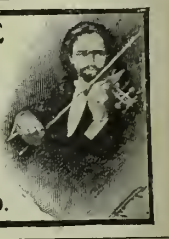
Studio No. 10, . . 9 East 17th Street, New Yo

VIOLIN VALUE

A Violin bought by our Original and unique plan becomes simply an investment. It is always worth exactly what you paid for it. It will pay you to investigate. We carry the largest line of fine and rare Violins in America. Good ones, $5 up. Easy payments, if desired.

Large, handsomely illustrated Violin Cat FREE on request.

THE RUDOLPH WURLITZER CO.
E. Fourth Street, CINCINNATI, O.



Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

JOSEPH JOACHIM SCHOOL.
STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.
GERALDINE MORGAN, Director.
Orchestral and 'Cello Department, Paul Morgan.
914 CARNEGIE HALL, New York.

SHANNA CUMMING,
SOPRANO.
1424 Pacific Street, Brooklyn.
Telephone 906A, Bedford.
WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU.

MRS. L. P. MORRILL,
SCIENTIFIC VOICE CULTURE.
The Chelsea, 222 West 23d Street, New York.

KATE STELLA BURR,
VOCAL CULTURE—ACCOMPANIST.
Coach to leading artists. Correct interpretation. Highest artistic finish. Opera, Oratorio, Song Recitals. Organist-Director Grace M. E. Church.
Studio: 76 West 82d Street, New York.

JOHN YOUNG,
TENOR.
Oratorio and Concert.
271 West 113th Street, New York

HUBERT ARNOLD,
VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
138 West 65th Street, New York

J. JEROME HAYES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 40 West Twenty-eighth Street.

WALTER L. BOGERT,
Musical Lectures, Song Recitals, Conducting. Instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint and Song Interpretation.
72 Lawrence St., Flushing, New York City.

THE BERTA GROSSE-THOMASON SCHOOL FOR PIANO.
340 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.
Piano Classes. Theory, Harmony, Composition.
W. E. BASSETT. Tuition per Term, $15 to $50.

PERCY HEMUS,
BARITONE,
(St. Patrick's Cathedral.)
Vocal Instruction.
128 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York.

PAUL LISTEMANN,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
FRANZ LISTEMANN, 'CELLO VIRTUOSO.
118 East Eighty-sixth Street, New York.

ADELAIDE C. OKELL,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Certificated pupil of Teresa Carreño.
Studio: 57 West Eighty-fourth Street, New York.

J. W. PARSON PRICE.
VOICE CULTURE AND ART OF SINGING.
10 East Seventeenth Street, New York.
"I can confidently state that Mr. Parson Price's knowledge of the voice, both male and female, and his style of singing, entitle him to a high rank among teachers."—MANUEL GARCIA.

VICTOR BAILLARD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
Oratorio and Song Recital.
Address: 141-143 Fifth Avenue, New York

WIRTZ PIANO SCHOOL.
CONRAD WIRTZ, Director.
Class and private tuition. Piano, Harmony, Theory. 120 East 124th Street, New York

H. W. GREENE.
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
489 Fifth Avenue, New York.

McCALL LANHAM
BARITONE.
OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS.
Opera, Concerts and Oratorio
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Care AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUS.
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAG

This space will be devoted to piano compositions of HENRY XANDER.
"Springtide." } Published by JOHN F. ELLIS & C
} 937 Pa. Av., N.W., Washington, D.
Now being performed by prominent pianists with much success.

GEORGE ENSWORTH
Baritone,
Address, 24 West 72d St., NEW YOR

LEO SCHULZ
'Cello Virtuoso,
77 WEST 55th STREET, NEW YORK.

THE KLINGENFELD COLLEGE OF MUS
—AND—
SCHOOL OF ELOCUTION.
108 Hancock Street, BROOKLYN, N.
NEW YORK STUDIO: 40 West 35th Street.

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK - LONDON - PARIS - BERLIN - CHICAGO - BOSTON

VOL. XLIII.—No. 16—Whole No. 1125

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1901.

MRS. EUNICE ST. CLAIR MARTENS

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR.

Price, 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign, $6.00.—Annually.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Head of Vocal Department "The American Institute of Applied Music," 212 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York. Permanent Studio. Also CONCERTS and RECITALS.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Concerts, Recitals, Oratorio.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

MORRIS PIANO SCHOOL,

201 West 81st Street, New York.
LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS, concert pianist and teacher of piano and theory, director. Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. M. Virgil; certified teacher of the Virgil Clavier Method of Technic.
Private and daily class instruction.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: "The Montevideo, 7th Ave., near 54th St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

NEW YORK SCHOOL OF ACCOMPANYING.

Piano—Sight Reading a Specialty.
ROSETTA WIENER.
Carnegie Hall Studio: 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 19 West Thirty-eighth street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street, New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music, Normal College, New York City.

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 401 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: Room 1201, Carnegie Hall, New York.
Telephone: 1351 Columbus.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 206 West Eighty-sixth Street, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

CHARLES RUSSELL,

'CELLIST.
Pupils and Concerts.
Studio: 112 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LEO LIEBERMAN,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert.
Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, or
57 East 117th Street, New York.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

H. W. GREENE.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
489 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CLAUDE MAITLAND GRIFFETH,

Virgil Method. Pupils in Piano and Harmony. Six years instructor at the Virgil Piano School. Pupil of Heinrich Barth and Moritz Moszkowski. Classes in Sight Reading, Ear Training and Time Keeping. Studio: 132-133 Carnegie Hall, city.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA. OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Terms reasonable.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
851-852 Carnegie Hall.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
172 West 79th Street, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or "Niagara," 71 East 87th St., New York
Telephone: 461 79th.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

VOCAL CULTURE, TONE EMISSION.
VOICE BUILDING, STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH
128 East 64th St., or address MUSICAL COURIER

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
80 Washington Square East, New York.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 70 Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

Pianist.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method.
Studios: 1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Studio: 60 West Thirty-ninth Street.
Private 'phone: 2058 38th. New York.

S. ARCHER GIBSON,

SOLO ORGANIST.
Organist-choirmaster of Brick Church and Beth E Temple, Fifth avenue.
Address: The Iowa, 135 West 104th Street.
Telephone: 1108 Riverside. New York.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE IN ALL BRANCHES.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

MRS. M. PRICE, Director, 2105 Seventh Ave corner 125th Street. Special daily class. The on one in New York where the pupil has a lesson a practice every day under the care of compete teachers. Terms reasonable. Virgil Clavier use

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Illustrated Lectures on Music.
Private instruction Classes in music-study.
Residence-studio: 17 West 103d Street, New Yo

HEATHE GREGORY,

BASSO.
Management HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street.

ADOLF GLOSE,

Pianist, Accompanist and Musical Director
Piano Instruction.
Address: 347 West 23d Street, New York

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Chur
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOIS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Réperto
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, C chestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," thetic Counterpoint," "New Method of Memo ing." "Carvel Court," 111th street a St. Nicholas avenue, New Yo

MUNICH THE MUSICAL.

BY JAMES HUNEKER.

Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.

II.

HAVE been congratulated on missing Frau Senger-Bettaque's Isolde; but I had to hear Gerhaüser's Tristan, so I do not feel so elated about not seeing the lady as I might. Nor, despite the fact that Nordica and Fremstad were in the "Tristan and Isolde" performance, did I enjoy it as much as "Die Meistersinger." Perhaps climatic influences had something to do in the matter; the day was raw and forbidding. When it starts in to rain here you forget that sunshine ever existed. Following is the housebill, for which I paid 2½ cents—an extravagant sum for value received.

"TRISTAN UND ISOLDE."

IN DREI AUFZÜGEN VON RICHARD WAGNER.

PERSONEN:

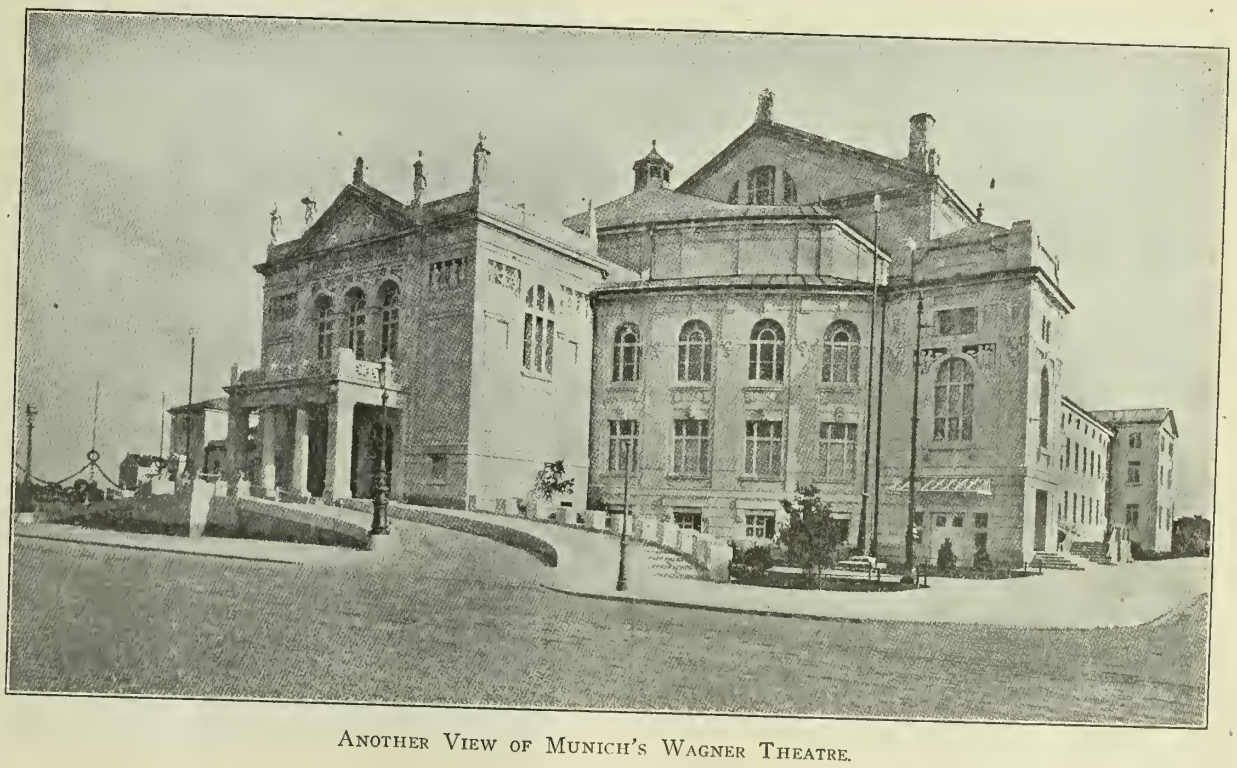
Tristan.....Herr E. Gerhäuser
König Marke.....Herr Klöpfer
Isolde.....Fr. Lillian Nordica a. G.
Kurwenal.....Herr Scholz
Melot.....Herr Mikorey
Brangäne.....Fräulein Fremstad
Ein Hirt.....Herr Hofmüller a. G.
Ein Steuermann.....Herr I. Mayer
Ein Matrose.....Herr Walter
Schiffsvolk. Ritter und Knappen. Isolden's Frauen.

The fanfares blown were the following: Before the first act Tristan's entrance theme—instead of the motive of the young seamen, as at Bayreuth; before act two the death motive, and before the third the Shepherd's motive. Robert Müller looked after the stage, the costumes being designed by Prof. Jos. Flüggen. The dekorationen was designed and painted by Frahm of the Hof-theater. It was very attractive and not without novelty.

Nordica rather startled the natives by her artistic singing. Her Isolde is a familiar assumption to us, but for Munich it seemed a revelation. I suppose the fact that a woman could sing the music without howling off-pitch provoked both wonder and enthusiasm. She wore some gorgeous costumes and wore them bravely. As there were no excisions made in the score the American soprano had much more to sing with Brangäne in the first and second acts and over Tristan's body in the last. I have heard her give the Liebestod with more volume, though never with such sorrowful tenderness. She has heard Ternina's execution of this scene to advantage. The second act after Tristan's entrance went heavily, for Gerhäuser is not an inspiring actor or singer, and Nordica has been accustomed to Jean de Reszké. There was little of the poetic, of the passionate in the love duo, while the intonation at times was like skating over very thin ice—you could hear it cracking. In the death scene the German tenor fell so clumsily that Nordica was caught in the tumble and together they sprawled over the couch. She extricated herself gradually with the aid of much muscular exertion and a cool head and was able to dispose the very lively corpse in a less awkward position.

Gerhäuser has a robust voice of the baritonal order, which he uses in a burly manner; he shouts when he becomes excited and he becomes excited whenever the score is not marked piano. Vocal dynamics, finesse, nuance, are all missing, the supposition being that Tristan is a rude warrior and superior to such. Yes, the real Tristan was; but Wagner's Tristan must sing most subtle and exacting music, and to do this he should master the art. Gerhäuser has not yet accomplished this; he enunciates clearly, and is a big fellow who is raved over by the knitting and coffee-drinking Klatsch here. I liked his steering of the ship, which has a real rudder and helm, more than his singing; and his entrance after the heroic music in act one was a dramatic, or undramatic, mistake. The noble measures lose their meaning if Tristan is not seen approaching. Nor need he come down from the deck as if surrounded by drums and trumpets—he is not a victor but vanquished, vanquished by love.

The Brangäne at this representation was Olive Fremstad, an American girl, who has been successfully singing abroad for the past seven years. Miss Fremstad's lovely contralto may be remembered in New York, for she appeared in concert there with Seidl. Her singing is now on a high artistic plane, and her conception and realization of Isolde's faithful companion are admirable. Her one fault is her youth, a fault that time will correct. Fremstad is slender, graceful and good-looking. Her slim, well-garbed figure is a novel sight on a Wagner stage, where the overgrown is accepted as the classic. I watched with interest the movements of this Brangäne, some of whose "business" was unfamiliar to me. She remains half concealed when the curtains part, for a huge tent is built in the middle of a solid looking ship. This tent or royal canopy screens Isolde and her tire-women from the scrutiny of the seamen. Brangäne lurks in the background until she is called. The chest wherein the potion vial is concealed is not the cumbersome affair we usually see; but I still wonder at the stilted pose of Brangäne, who stands with her back to the audience, while Isolde and Tristan are making eyes over the catnip. Couldn't the woman who caused the trouble feel remorse and in repentant agony fall across Isolde's couch?



ANOTHER VIEW OF MUNICH'S WAGNER THEATRE.

Couldn't she do anything else but stare at the sea during this long exciting scene? This motionless figure is a dramatic error, she is a blot upon the action, she means nothing. It is always exasperating to see a stolid face or figure at a dramatic performance, and in the fierce passion unloosed by Wagner in his score and poem the impassability of Brangäne has always set me wondering if the composer really knew the stage as well as he said he did. To do Miss Fremstad justice it must be admitted that she made the most of her opportunities in this act and the other two. You know Brangäne sings in the final scene, though a mere dummy in the cut versions of the work. The interview with Isolde in the garden scene is fuller, too, and this contralto sang the music with a perfect understanding of its meanings; the warning songs were really thrilling. Fremstad is a Wagner singer both born and educated. Her Carmen is said to draw big houses here. Of her very dramatic and strong interpretation of Ortrud I shall speak hereafter.

Wagner usually divided his acts into three scenes each, so if there are omissions the symmetry of the score of the poem is lost. The third act of "Tristan and Isolde" is generally skeletonized in New York, and with the heavy cut in act two the drama is shorn of much of its significance. That the ungarbled version would interfere with the dinner hour and digestive functions of fashionable New York does not concern me in the least. What has art and fashion in common? The Germans take opera as a serious art and miss their evening meal for it—though they do make up for it later. But there are unhappy individuals in the world who cannot enjoy music unless in evening clothes and stuffed with rich food and wine.

How long, I wonder, will it be before the stage management of the Wagner dramas undergoes a radical change? The conventional Bayreuth tradition is as tyrannical in Munich as in Wahnfried. Everything else changes, Frau Cosima alters tempi, costumes, introduces scenic innovations, but the old-fashioned gesture, the mournful movements seem destined for eternity. Why? The music of these dramas is the most restless, modern and dramatic ever penned. The story of "Tristan and Isolde," to select a typical example, pulses at fever heat; all is movement. Yet with an orchestra flowing under their feet like volcanic lava, with words on their lips that burn and madden, Tristan and Isolde stalk ponderously about the boards, coolly clasp hands and eventually sit down on that damnable garden bench—O! sweet souvenir of German rustic retreats, with coffee and knitting needles—and try to hold on to their tone-productions. That all this conventional acting could be, should be, banished I need hardly say. Wagner started with the assumption that Greek sculpture should be patterned after. What ridiculous nonsense! Greek classical tragedy, we read, was a portentous affair, a solemn series of movements, rhythmic as the poet's verse. But Wagner, the musical revolutionist, was not a man to ape the classic. He was a romantic, a rotten-ripe romantic, the last of the romantics. He wrote romantic music set to romantic, mediæval themes. He was not a Greek in any joint of his body, for his art is often strained, morbid, fantastic. To glowing texts he wedded glowing music. Yet his characters on the stage wander about gloomily, wave ineffectual arms, in a word retain in all its senile decay the traditions of the German classic drama. What a revelation "Tristan and Isolde" will be when some audacious Wagner of stage managers appears and smashes the antiquated formula. Then shall we see young men, young women, acting with natural freedom and expressing in their gestures the psychology of the score; for bodily rhythms have their symbolism. Consider what Milka Ternina did in "La Tosca," what emotional shades she was able to send shivering across the footlights! But if you say any of these things to the most intelligent of stage managers here the answer is always conveyed in a wondering stare and an ejaculation: "Aber der Meister!" Let the master sleep!

I spoke of the tent in act one. It is a capital idea and an improvement over the side drop always used. Besides you can see the water at the sides and back of the ship, excellently painted water in this production. The gradual view of land is managed by shoving in on wheels a flat set representing a low lighthouse, beach, rocks, and finally a wooded country with the castle in the background. Pilots board the ship, there is much noise and jubilation, and in the midst of it all the lovers are not noticed—something that pleases one's sense of the actual. Maids throng up through a companion-way and help Brangäne to attire Isolde for the coming bridegroom and the act closes vigorously.

A Glimpse of the Stage.

The tower from which Brangäne watches in act two—why always out of sight?—is lower than others that I have seen, so the frantic rush down the flight of stairs is not fraught with danger. The woods are charmingly painted in this set, but the hunting horns were as tremulously uncertain as in New York. The short duel between Melot and Tristan was funny, King Marke's spy being a litt fellow and seemingly nervous about Tristan's fc midable cleaver. Marke was extremely well pc trayed by Klöpfer, who has sung with success Covent Garden. The Kurwenal of Scholz did n impress me greatly. The fight in act three w not realistic. Fancy a sturdy warrior like Kı wenal stopping the conflict to sing a line! Yor musty Wagner tradition again! The lighting w fair, two sciopticons doing meagre duty in the fi act for cloud effects. But they cast such hea shadows that the illusion was thereby damag Lights were thrown on the water in the last sce which would have proved more striking if the sa had been moonlit. The enthusiasm was great o Nordica and Fremstad. It was decidedly a r letter day for American singers.

Kapellmeister Fischer, of Munich, conduct but without much passion. I longed for the d matic climax that never came—not even in prelude. It is conceded that the Munich band der Fischer is a trifle sleepy, but more poetic th pedantic. This latter difference is a direct allusi to Zumpe, who is inclined to dot his i's. I co not detect much poetry in Fischer's conducti though he gets a richer, warmer tone than de Zumpe. With such a matter-of-fact Tristan a Gerhäuser, who sadly hampered Nordica, it wo have been impossible to do more than Fischer i on this occasion. He finished the work on sc ule time, about 10:20 p. m. The orchestı strong in the brass and string choirs. I di fancy the first oboe or the wood generally. T echoes I spoke of last week were noticeable first act, and much of the prelude was smuc y color. There were many Americans and Eı present.

Both the "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" p formances were excellent, considered as p d tions. Much money was expended on scenery, costumes, and usually with good results. At the first "Tannhäuser" that I attended Ternina was the Elizabeth, Heinrich Knote the Tannhäuser. Zumpe conducted and Anton Fuchs managed the stage. Flüggen's costumes were used. Frahm painted the Venus grotto, Professor Brückner the Wartburg landscape. Both were beautiful. Mettenleiter painted the Singers' Hall on the Wartburg and Brückner the scenery for the last act. The fanfares sounded were the hunting call before act one; the Wartburg march fanfare before the second; and the "Verheissungsklänge" before the last act. Here is the cast:

"TANNHAEUSER."

UND

DER SANGERKRIEG AUF WARTBURG.

IN DREI AUFZÜGEN VON RICHARD WAGNER.

PERSONEN:

Hermann, Landgraf von Thüringen.....Herr Klöpfer
Elisabeth, dessen Nichte.....Frl. M. Ternina a. G.
Tannhäuser..... } Herr Knote.
Volfram von Eschinbach..... } Herr Feinhals.
Walter v. d. Vogelweide..... } Herr Walter.
Biterolf..... } Herr Scholz.
Heinrich, der Schreiber..... } Herr Mayerhofer.
Reimar von Zweter..... } Herr Mang.
Ritter und Sänger
Ein junger Hirt.....Frau Bosetti
Edelknaben..... { Fräulein Koch. Fräulein Pfaff. Frau Gaab. Frau Vogger.
Venus.....Fräulein Breuer
Drei Grazien..... { Fräulein Haber. Fräulein Habitz. Fräulein Olly.

Thüringische Ritter, Grafen und Edelleute. Aeltere und jüngere Pilger. Jünglinge. Sorenen. Najaden. Nymphen. Amoretten. Bacchantinen. Satyre und Faune. Thüringen. Wartburg. Im Anfang des 13. Jahrunderts.

Knote has not the "Tannhäuser" nature—he lacks heroic breadth. His voice was hard in the first act, but in the great duo with Elizabeth it mellowed to its accustomed suavity. All things considered he did good work in the pilgrimage scena; but I liked much better his Lohengrin and Walther. Ternina has been in better voice—I think that despite its southern skies Munich is trying on the ice. Her Elizabeth is one of her best characterizations. She was warmly received. Klöpfer again created an excellent impression with his Landgrave. The Venus was a trifle shrewish, the shepherd boy a very agreeable singer. The so-called Paris version was sung, or rather danced, and the tableaux, three instead of two, were very elaborate. Venus' grotto was a glittering dream, and the corybantic dance as furious and bacchanalian as Wagner—or the Paris Jockey Club—could have wished for. But when a group of flying cherubs was sent across the stage on palpable wires at the close of the revelry, the illusion revolted. And the wires soon became entangled with the gauze drops. I wonder why that third tableau was used? It is a pretty bower, but meaningless after the Europa and Leda pictures. Yet Wagnerians of the true blue Bayreuth brand foam at the mouth if the third set is omitted. Warum?

I did not care very much for Zumpe's reading. It seemed dry, academic.

The cast for the "Lohengrin" was this. Isn't it a prettily printed program?

"LOHENGRIN."

IN DREI AUFZÜGEN VON RICHARD WAGNER.

PERSONEN:

Heinrich der Vogler, ein deutscher König...Herr Klöpfer
Lohengrin.....Herr Anthes a. G.
Elsa von Brabant.....Fr. Lilian Nordica a. G.
Friedrich von Telramund, brabantischer Graf....Herr Feinhals
Ortrud, seine Gemahlin.....Frl. M. Ternina a. G.
Der Heerrufer des Königs.....Herr Scholz
Brabantische Edle..... { Herr Mikorey. Herr Mayerhofer. Herr Fuchs. Herr Mang.
Edelknaben..... { Frau Bosetti. Fräulein Koch. Fräulein Höfer. Frau Vogger.
Herzog Gottfried, Elsa's Bruder.....Fräulein Brünner
Sächsische und Thüringische Grafen und Edle. Brabantische Grafen und Edle. Edelfrauen. Edelknaben. Mannen. Frauen. Knechte.
Ort und Zeit der Handlung: Antwerpen, erste Hälfte des zehnten Jahrhunderts.

Zumpe again conducted, Robert Müller being stage manager. Burghart, of Vienna, painted the three sets of scenery—the bridal chamber being rather prosaic. In the second act, first scene, the practical staircase is built at the back so the descent of Elsa is quite majestic. Costumes were rich and varied. The moon did not "function" very well, and there were curious gradings of light in the dark scene which I did not like. The fanfares were the King's trumpets, Lohengrin's "Frageverbots" and the Gralmotiv.

The announcement that Nordica and Ternina would sing drew a large house. There is little to say that is new of Nordica's Elsa. It is one of the best things she does. Ternina's Ortrud was histrionically a forceful piece of work. Her voice was not at its best. Anthes, from Dresden, was a disappointment. He is not poetic, mystic, knightly, nor yet a great singer. His voice is genuinely German and "throaty," though in singing and acting he is more acceptable than Gerhäuser. Klöpfer was a satisfactory Heinrich, Nordica and Ternina easily carried off the honors, and the "dark" duo went very well. Feinhals as Telramund died well.

That the artistic average of the performances at the second Munich Wagner festival next August will be higher I do not doubt. A first season in a new house, with visiting singers and scanty, hurried rehearsals, is apt to prove a risky enterprise. So the performances in 1901 really have been of a high order, despite minor and major shortcomings, despite the opposition of Bayreuth—Frau Cosima Wagner contrived to persuade the Prince Regent Luitpold to open the new theatre the day after the closing of the Bayreuth season! The prices have been too high—$5 a ticket means a lot of money in Germany. This will not be the price for the regular Munich season—that is if the house is reopened during the winter or the spring. At present it is closed and may remain so until next summer. The company goes to the Hoftheater, where seats are more moderate. If Munich hopes to outrival Bayreuth, the first step toward victory will be the lowering of that 20 marks admission fee. Ernst von Possart and his associates deserve the highest praise for their arduous efforts to give Munich an ideal home for the Wagner music dramas in the Prinz Regenten Theater.

MAESTRO SEBASTIANO BREDA.

NOT many years ago there arrived at Milan a young musician and singing master named Sebastiano Breda. He was a native of Padua, and a graduate of the Royal Conservatory at Bologna, but at that time quite unknown to fame in the city of "La Scala."

Gradually and steadily he has worked his way up, and to-day enjoys the reputation of a well-known and most successful maestro di canto.

His address in Milan is at Via San Pietro all' Orto, No. 18, where he is engaged all day giving lessons.

From Maestro Sebastiano Breda's large number of pupils, past and present, the following small lists of artists and students has been selected, including some Americans with good voices, whose work and progress warrant the prediction of splendid careers in the musical world.

ARTISTS:

Elisa Marcomini, mezzo soprano, Padova.
Sofia Adriani, soprano drammatico, San Pietroburgo.
Lina Cassandro, soprano leggero, Padova.
Anita Budriesi, mezzo soprano, Padova.
Jenny Zussó, soprano leggero, San Pietroburgo.
Enrico Broggi-Muttini, baritono, Novara.
Giovanni Ottone, baritono, Novara.
Ernesto Pettinato, tenore, Catania.
Vittorio Emanuele Castellano, tenore, Torino.
Oliver H. Clark, basso, Boston.
Samuele Romanenko, tenore leggero, Odessa.

STUDENTS:

Mary B. Deane Jarvis, soprano drammatico, New Hampshire.
Jennie E. Cushman, soprano leggero, Massachusetts.
Floy Bradshaw, soprano, California.
Norma H. Rockhold, contralto, California.
Florence A. Dillon, soprano leggero, California.
William Wolf, tenore, New York.
Wm. H. Wilmarth, baritono, California.
Alfonsina Moreno, soprano drammatico, Buenos Ayres.
Carlo Rajneri, tenore, Torino.
Adolfo Bucchignani, basso, New York. D. H.

EMMA WIZJAK.—Among the foremost teachers of vocal music in this city is Mme. Emma Wizjak, who has recently returned from a vacation spent in the White Mountains. Madame Wizjak has sung in the operas of "Faust," "Huguenots," "L'Africaine," "Lohengrin," "Romeo and Juliet" and others in the French, Italian and German schools. She has appeared in all the principal cities of Europe, including four seasons at the Apollo in Rome, San Carlos in Naples, La Scala in Milan, in Berlin, St. Petersburg and Moscow. Madame Wizjak has sung with such artists as Patti, Nicolini, del Puente and Galassi. She is an exponent of the old Italian method, which has produced wonderful singers. Madame Wizjak has her studio at 170 West Forty-seventh street, and hereafter will devote herself exclusively to teaching.

CONCERT IN AID OF ST. MARK'S HOSPITAL.—The annual concert in aid of St. Mark's Hospital will be given at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, November 30, and the musical program will be under the direction of Emil Paur.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

Founded by Mrs. Jeanette Thurber. Chartered in 1891 by special act of Congress.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

(ADMISSION DAILY.)

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, EUGENE DUFRICHE, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

A LETTER FROM PARIS.

PARIS, October 1, 1901.

DEAR JACK—What a bore you are to expect me to tell you about my French studies, and what a bally idiot I was to promise to do so! But for the sake of your wife, who does not know French but wants to learn, I should never take up the pen of an unready writer.

I have settled here in Ville-Lumière, of course. For art, music and language students, "qui dit Paris, dit la France."

You know I always had a private belief that speaking a language is (or should be) like playing the piano or building a house. There must be a systematic way of doing all three. The budding pianist, young architect and linguist in embryo must surely make the most rapid progress when taught according to a method. Time is money, and systematic study means time and money saved.

I had heard of the Berlitz School, and as your wife's friend, Miss Sudbury, wanted me to try the so-called "Berlitz method," I did so. They gave me a man who knew no more English than I did French. He jabbered restlessly away with many feverish ejaculations of "Pappy, Pappy," and "leave, leave," and "vassy sissy," and "vassy selah"—only Selah did not end his canticle. My head ached trying to make out whether he wanted to leave his father, or his dad wanted to leave him in a cold, bleak world, but considering the thermometer (end of August), I rejected the latter hypothesis. The excitable Frenchman really meant to impart a knowledge of "papier, livre, voici, ceci, celà," to my benighted brain, but he only addled it. It is the famous "natural" or "conversational" method of object lessons, but the only thing "natural" about it was the black desire in my heart to throttle the teacher, once for his inoffensiveness, again for his incompetency, and a third and generous throttle for his damnable politeness. It was positively gnawing! They give you nothing to learn, nothing to write, and if you are made, perchance, to gabble an abortive French phrase, it is but little more comprehensible than your own blue English. One girl at the pension afterward privately confided to me that she wanted to live in a tent, or dwell in a cave, even though she had to eat raw bear—anything to get away from that obsessing "plafond, c'est le plafond, tapis, voici un tapis, le parquet, fenêtre, porte," &c., ad nauseam, which she had had from five different teachers during five consecutive lessons, with no prospects of ever getting away from the objects of the confounded room. Their teachers are paid 150 francs a month, and are seldom visible after thirty days. The excuse that change of teachers prevents pupils becoming too much accustomed to the voice of one person is tommyrot. Of course one learns next to nothing. Fancy the mental calibre of a 150 francs a month man! The joke is that the pupils pay a good price for the lessons, make a deposit down, and often grow so disgusted and discouraged that they never claim the lessons due on the deposit, reimbursement not entering into the scheme of the universe as conceived by the director of the school.

I was still looking for a teacher with a method, notwithstanding my Berlitzian disappointment. The Paris edition of the New York Herald showed a plenitude of names, but a dearth of methods. "Distinguished lady, ex-artist," "French most rapidly taught," "Certificated teacher" (I knew the value of certificates (?)) smacked of inky réclame. The next card was different. "Yersin method, Mlle. Nilande, French language, lyric diction, trial lesson, 37 rue de Chaillot." The non-committal sobriety of the two lines was insistent. The bare announcement carried unsuspected weight. What could that school be which manifested such serene confidence in the mere mention of its name? One is offered a lesson, and one judges therefrom of the merits or demerits of the system. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating"; so off I go to the Yersin-Nilande School to ask for a lesson. While waiting I idly located the school on the map, with a view to getting my bearings. Economy in cabs is the saving feature of my financial budget. No joke intended. It (the school I mean, not the joke) is situated on the rue de Chaillot between rue Bizet and avenue Marceau, quite accessible by omnibus, electric tram, underground and boat.

Mlle. Nilande enters. She probably asks me to be seated, but as she speaks in French she might be criticising the cut of my coat and I none the wiser. A brief examination reveals my total ignorance of that language. The lesson begins. It is in English. Indeed, how else could she begin to teach me French if she did not speak English? I have since learned that she is American, though no one would think so from her utterance. The strong national flavor is evaporated. It does not occur to one to think whether she is English or American. One has the impression, simply, that she speaks most excellent English. Its purity is admirable; like water, it is almost colorless. It is pleasing to listen to her well modulated voice, to the words articulated with a smooth, rhythmical precision, a certain clean cut ease of enunciation, which gives to her speech a rare charm—that of spontaneity. Most people work so hard when they talk. I was not surprised to learn later from one of her pupils (who has been studying with Sbriglia) that several people whom she knew had gone to Mlle. Nilande in order to rid themselves of their "nasal twang" and the habit of excessive use of the "white voice," the results being most gratifying. Make a note of this, but don't say I mentioned it.

As to the way Mlle. Nilande speaks French, the position she holds is, to my eyes, the highest possible indorsement of her ability as a teacher and of her own perfect pronunciation and mastery of French. Nell (see note below —Ed.) was dining at a pension, avenue de Villers, a mon ago, and happened to meet Miss S——z, who is studyi singing with Hardy-Thé, the Frenchman to whose conce you took me last winter upon the occasion of my flying t to Paris. You told Nell Hardy-Thé was an excelle authority on diction. As she is constantly "swoopin down on people whose experience she thinks will help h in writing her book, she "pumped" Miss S——z. Now l ten, Jack, and you will see there is a chance of your s ceeding at the Opéra here after all, notwithstanding th refusal to take you last year and the year before on count of your accent. Miss S——z said that Hardy-T urged her repeatedly to take lessons of Mlle. Nilande, claring that it was his business to teach her how to si but that he had neither the time, inclination nor spec ability required to teach her the French language or pronunciation of her French songs; that he had heard the Yersin method for some time past, and knew it be the quickest and best means for a foreigner to acqu the language and the only way to get rid of his accent, a that he had believed the Yersin sisters alone were c able of teaching their method. It was only when his o pupil, F—— H——— (a man who has studied and spok French all his life, and lived in Paris over eight year suddenly improved so remarkably in his pronunciation singing that he asked the reason, finding that the said p had had a few lessons with Mlle. Nilande, and that Hardy-Thé, became aware of the Yersins having someb here able to teach. He further stated that he had never s Mlle. Nilande but once, talking with her perhaps a qua of an hour, but it was ample time for him to find out, his amazement, that she spoke French without any A ican or English accent whatever. He would never h taken her to be an American from the way she sp French. Nell says she was so "staggered" (you know American slang) to hear a French professeur de chant de diction praise an American teacher that she wrote it off to me "instanter," as she was going on to Germany next day. I had, however, already had a trial lesson, needed no recommendations from anybody to induce m try the method. I am sending you by registered mail Yersin phono-rhythmic method of French pronunciat accent and diction, together with a Nilande School circu showing you that with the correct pronunciation from start you learn the language quickly and thoroughly. have had but thirty lessons, and my progress in Frenc the admiration of the pension. The men openly accuse of having a French mistress to whose kind not to say fectionate aid and conversation they attribute my rapid provement, while the women here say I had a Fre nurse when a child, both suppositions being erroneou hasten to add, though I admit that the former might prove a disagreeable reality if my forty-nine birthdays a growing intellect had not bulged out my forehead so

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS, Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF SINGING.
A recently discovered science which develops every accepted voice into the same tones with which Patti, De Re and all great artists were born. Thus far no singer has ever known the possibilities of his voice in quality, vol or compass. The American Method is not taught outside the Chicago Studio.
MARY M. SHEDD, Discoverer and Teacher, Auditorium Building, CHICAG

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
Address all communications to
613 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTE
722, 724, 725 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Buil (Tower, 1406.) Chic
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lec
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for c

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned fr Europe, where made very succes appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, I

my hair beat an honorable retreat to the nape of my neck. If I were your age, now, I might find the Parisian women capiteuses, and—but there, your wife might read this. I have bought myself a conduct, you know, je me suis acheté une conduite.

I suppose my French progress surprises you, for I am the dullard of the family, never could get beyond first year at Rugby, as you are aware, and my orthography and composition are what your wife said a Scotchman's kilts were, indecent. I have been jogging along in a rut, teaching my men mechanical drawing, and have never studied anything but patterns for twenty years. C'est mon métier. Don't even read. My pipe and designing receive my undivided attention. I'll cheerfully lick the man who insinuates that I don't know English grammar and write badly; not because he tells the truth, but because it hurts my feelings to hear him say so. Now then, Jack, when you think of your bald-headed brother Oliver buckling down to a blessed book and learning how to pronouncee correctly, spell correctly and recognize fifteen sounds, and when you picture him absorbing the overwhelmingly simple fact that the whole French language is simply the repetition of those fifteen sounds, and that foreigners don't succeed in pronouncing French words as an educated Frenchman does, because they don't know, don't pronounce and can't pronounce the sounds of which those words are composed, you will see that your aforesaid brother Oliver "has a good thing," as the Americans say.

I am not going into the question of why they do not pronounce correctly. It is a matter of the training of the ear, and you will find it all explained in the Yersin book. You know I have no ear whatever—couldn't carry a tune if my life depended on it—and can't join in "God Save the Queen" (I mean the King), because I get off the key so terribly. It took me nine lessons to be able to pronounce properly the sounds "un," "é" and "eu," as for instance in the words "emprunter," "défunte" and "un peu." A musician or singer usually gets them the fourth or fifth lesson, Mlle. Nilande says, yet now I have them, and do not even think of them as I say them. You see it is the secret of French pronunciation which this method reveals.

As to the language, Mlle. N. is a wonderfully good teacher. At my first lesson I was in the condition of Paul Dombey, who wondered in pathetic perplexity if a verb always agreed with an ancient Briton or three times four was Taurus, a bull, and I assure you I could not tell a tense from tuppence. But learning verbs is easy, because I am taught at the very outset how to form and pronounce them. Rules of grammar? Why, my boy, I am astonished to find how few they are, how quickly remembered and how soon one gets to follow them automatically, as it were. This Yersin teacher drills you most systematically, wakes you up and makes you think before speaking, so that you know you are right when you pronounce such or such a word in a certain way, or put it in a particular place in the sentence. All the parts of her instruction fit into each other like the gearing of my machines; the reading aloud and the speaking and the acquiring of a vocabulary, the translating and the writing, the familiarizing yourself with idiomatic construction and the studying of French literature and history are all parts of a complete system of instruction.

As you don't care how you speak—very foolish of you I think not to care, when it is so easy to speak well by this method—you would only want the lyric diction, about which I know nothing, save that it is bound to be good, since Sbriglia and Delle Sedie (Italian), and Bouhy (Belgian), and Hardy-Thé (French), all recommend it, as I learn from the Americans at the pension.

As for me, I expect to take another thirty or forty lessons (probably three a week, instead of every day, as I have been doing), and then join one of the classes, as by that time I shall be able to get along nicely without the private lessons. They are dear, 7.50 francs each, but they are worth it. The classes I think are 50 francs for twenty lessons—but you will see all about terms by prospectus, which I shall try not to forget to inclose with book.

If I had been trained to study as you are, or had had a good ear, I could undoubtedly have done in fifty lessons what it will take me seventy to accomplish. Then, too, I am getting old, forty-nine Michaelmas; think of it. Time, Time! How I hate that grim old measurer of days:

"Le Temps qui s'enfuit
Une horloge à la main.

Mais oui, parfaitement, je te cite Boileau, mon vieux!"

Here ends my plain unvarnished tale. I have not written you for three months, and I do not expect to write you for another six. Should not do so to-day were it not that you will be glad to know you can learn to sing French without accent if ever your engagements in Germany permit you to come to Paris; and it would be far from disagreeable to you to have your wife follow a course of study by which her speaking voice would lose its somewhat unpleasant nasal quality.

Hoping that your Berlin successes will not turn your head, and with best of good wishes to your wife and Nell. Yours, OLIVER.

(NOTE.—Nell is the cousin of Jack's wife.—ED.)

KATHARINE FISK.—Mme. Katharine Fisk is commencing a season which gives every promise of being long and active, with a song recital at Norwalk, Conn., to-night, October 9. The program will include a group of children's songs which are especially artistic and attractive, and which, with other unusual and beautiful numbers, Mrs. Fisk has added to her extensive repertory during the summer. This is Mrs. Fisk's fourth annual song recital at Norwalk, where her rare art and her attractive personality have won for her, and deservedly, a large following.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD,

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

HANNAH & HAMLIN Dissolved June 1st.

THE HAMLIN COMPANY

DIRECTORS OF CONCERTS AND MUSICAL ARTISTS.

514-517 KIMBALL HALL
CHICAGO.

LOUIS EVANS, President.

CABLE ADDRESS: LINARK, CHICAGO.
LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE: HARRISON 2255.

REPRESENTATIVE AGENCY OF MIDDLE STATES

EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION

GENEVIEVE CLARK WILSON—Soprano.
SUE HARRINGTON FURBECK—Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN—Tenor.
CHARLES W. CLARK—Baritone.
AUGUSTA COTTLOW—Pianiste, and others.
THEODORE SPIERING—Violinist.
JESSICA De WOLF—Soprano.
ELAINE De SELLEM—Contralto.
HOLMES COWPER—Tenor.
SYDNEY BIDEN—Baritone.

WE WILL NEGOTIATE FOR ALL HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.
Studio 6, 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Address: 4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HOWARD WELLS,
Pianist,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Bottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
G. BOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

ELIZABETH BLAMERE, Soprano. Pupil OSCAR SAENGER, New York.
Direction: THE HAMLIN CO.; or 3242 Groveland Avenue, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
'Phones: Harrison 1910 and 1736. Unsurpassed Faculty Teaching.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC.
Stage Training, Elocution, Languages and the Fine Arts. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

NEWS FROM MILAN.

MILAN, SEPTEMBER 15 1901.

THE old Scala Theatre Company, of which I spoke in my last letter, has definitely ceased to exist. At a meeting of the directors held last month in the green room of the Scala, after passing a vote of thanks to those who had co-operated so efficiently in promoting the success of the last three theatrical seasons, and especially to the Duke Visconti d'Modrone, who more than the others had contributed also large sums of money, all the members of the board resigned.

Although the now defunct company has legally fulfilled its mission, it has nevertheless left, as a sort of heirloom, the famous action brought by the artist, Signora Dé Frate, some two years since against the Scala Company for payment of 100,000 lire damages, consequent on the non-representation of the opera "Norma."

It is a most complicated question, so much so that it has already dragged on about two years. The ultimate decision will certainly form a valuable precedent for artists having to claim their rights against theatrical managers, who inconsiderately, and sometimes even from caprice, may compromise the future career of any artist. The Signora De Frate, although she has not yet obtained complete satisfaction, has already several judgments in her favor.

Coming back to the question of the position of the Scala, the municipality of Milan has at last appointed a commission to submit for public consideration the question whether or no this theatre, which in times past has been of world wide importance, shall be carried on or not. The Scala is for Milan, as indeed for all Italy, not only a good artistic fashion of boundless limits, but also a financial resource of no little importance. But its statutes are not satisfactory to the majority of the Milanese public, saturated as they are with modern socialistic ideas, for the reason, as they put it, that only the rich can profit by its representations.

Now that the municipality of Milan has, with public money, to supply the endowment (absolutely necessary to enable the theatre to continue), it is not, they say, just nor admissible nowadays that this should be for the sole benefit of the rich; that if the rich want a theatre to themselves, let them spend their own money; that if the municipality have to pay money belonging to the city of Milan, let it be in such manner that all, of whatever degree, may profit by it.

The commission now appointed by the municipality of Milan must submit the question whether the opening of the Scala be really useful and necessary, and, if answered in the affirmative, then find the mode by which all and everybody may enjoy the advantage of it. The reply must be given by the people themselves by a vote called the "referendum."

Allowing the modern idea of the sovereign people, the idea of the referendum would appear just, but submitted to artistic judgment it can only be called ridiculous. In fact the voters summoned to give their votes are those same who hold the political right to elect their town councillors, which means all those who just know how to write their own name. Is it possible to imagine anything more absurd than that such persons should be called on to judge of an artistic question of so difficult a nature? And then, these people for the greater part not having any direct interest in the theatre, only look at it as a meeting place for the rich, where even if they were able they would not have the courage to go, because the representations being also of an artistic nature would not be within the pale of their comprehension. What then will be their reply? At Milan, as all over the world, the public choose their special amusements according to their social position, their education and their artistic feelings. Some, for example, having to choose between "Tristano ed Isotta" at the Scala and a horse circus with clowns, would prefer the latter, because of the former he would weary, while the latter would amuse him, and the general public are mostly of this opinion.

But, even supposing that the vote favored a continuance of the Scala with municipal subsidies, this would only be on the one condition that the theatre was accessible to all persons of whatever class. And here lies the knotty point of the question. The Scala, unhappily, now lives principally on its past glory; a glory given to it by our ancestors by high class representations of operas, which to this very day constitute the glorious richness of the Italian repertory. In fact it was at the Scala that Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, Verdi—to cite only the principal composers—gave the first representations of their chef d'œuvres; it was at the Scala that the greatest singers in the world gave to Italy its pre-eminence in the world of song; it was at the Scala that the most celebrated dancers, by their punte (steps) helped Austria to govern the good natured Milanese, and it was from the Scala that artists went with the "cachet" of celebrity, to carry abroad an art which was completely and entirely Italian. Now, unfortunately, of all this there remain but the recollections—the monuments as it were.

But, even compelled as we are to adapt ourselves to present circumstances, the representations at the Scala are still the best that can be artistically imagined or found in any theatre. Take from the Scala this very distinctive mark; put on the boards representations that could be found at the Fenice of Venice, the San Carlo at Naples, the Argentina at Rome, the Regio of Turin, and we shall have taken from the Scala the only reason for its existence!

For this is clear, that if the entrance prices are to be such as to be within the means of every class, then they must be extremely low and such as not to meet the expense of important representations; unless, indeed, the municipality be disposed to concur with the managers in their good intention by large grants of money—supposition which may be excluded a priori.

More than this; what has also contributed greatly to the fame of the Scala is the class of persons who frequent it, and who are the ornaments of this old and gilded house of Picrmarini. However much anyone may wish to form an idea of it, he must see, for example, an important first night, in order to convince himself that the reality surpasses any preconceived notion. I can remember journalists from abroad who had come to the Scala on important occasions, and who were compelled to admit that the Scala was superior to many other first-class European theatres. And I remember, too, how last season at the first night of "Messalina," in which Tamagno sang, two American ladies, whom I had the honor to accompany, although accustomed to the Paris Opéra, where they frequently went, were wonder stricken with the splendid appearance of our theatre, enlivened as it was by its light, its "beauty" and their sparkling jewelry, such as they had never before thought possible; for the Milanese aristocracy, unpretentious as they are in their everyday life, when at the Scala display a startling magnificence not to be seen on any other occasion—the Grand Prix not excepted.

Now, if to an ordinary spectacle we add an audience still more ordinary, will not the Scala become a very ordinary theatre? And here I ask: Is the referendum necessary; is it necessary to excite such profound study in so many super-excellent men; is it necessary to turn a whole country upside down on a question of the management of any theatre, however great or small? Do not all the theatres in the world work splendidly and with good performances without upsetting anybody or causing so much trouble?

I am firmly convinced that the great question of the Scala Theatre will not be solved by any referendum. In any event the vote of all intelligent people, who have the welfare of their country at heart, will be that the Scala Theatre is necessary for Milan, because it places the city, artistically speaking, among the first cities of the world, besides bringing to it a not indifferent financial profit from the many strangers it attracts. And the question of the Scala would also be much simplified if the Ricordi question could be settled; the subvention of the municipality would be much reduced if the pretensions of Ricordi, as regards the choice of operas (which he can almost dictate) and his terms for rights of representations, were more limited.

At Turin some of the leading ladies of the aristocracy formed themselves into a company for the noble purpose of subscribing toward a series of representations of high artistic interest; they had succeeded in obtaining from the municipality a sufficiently liberal subvention; they had secured the co-operation of first-class artists well known for their interpretation of Wagner's operas; nothing was wanting but the consent of the editor Ricordi, who was requested to name the price he required for his permission to give the operas in question. All the work, however, of so many estimable people, the noble initiative of so many of our brightest artistic lights, had to give way to the caprice of a single individual—had indeed to be entirely abandoned—because the price demanded by Ricordi (who did not wish this series of representations) was so absolutely absurd that the company had to dissolve rather than face the enormous and sure loss which his preposterous pretentions involved. The press likewise took the matter up for a while, but they, too, had to yield.

And this failure of artistic results at the Scala, at Turin, at Rome, draws from certain critics the exclamations: "The final experience of patronage as applied to art has now been attained! It is time to do away with the theatre of the past—that is to say, art reserved for the upper classes—there must be an end of theatres limited to or sustained by the rich, the municipalities, the Government, &c. * * * We must think of the theatre of the future, the theatre for everybody, enriched and sustained by all classes, living on its own strength. Take for example the Costanzi at Rome, which without patrons, without subventions, has been able to give good entertainments throughout eight whole months with the sole concourse of the great public."

But just at the moment when these critics are making their voices heard, are endeavoring to console themselves for the lack of patronage, and are dreaming of the popular theatre of the future, the management of the Costanzi Theatre—that theatre which they hold up as an example—losing all hope of being able to support the expense of a long series of representations on the sole incomings from the public, announce that next season the number of representations will be reduced to half! F. ORLANDI.

FREDERIC LAMOND.

FRANKFORT-O-M., September 29, 1901.

THE peculiar fact appears that certain eminent pianists of Europe are so busily engaged here that it becomes difficult for them to leave the Continent even to play in Great Britain. Frederic Lamond, himself a Scotchman, stands in such favor on the Continent that he is unable to accept outside engagements, as the following booked appearances prove; and it must be observed that the season has not yet opened, and that many additional dates are to be filled. Let us glance at the list:

DATES AND PLACES.

Amsterdam (Concert des Lehrervereins)	October
The Hague (Concert des Lehrervereins)	"
Eisenach (Beethoven Festival)	October 5 to
(A Beethoven program only.)
Gotha (Musikverein subscription concert, Tschaikowsky Concerto, op. 23)	October
Erfurt (Recital)	"
Berlin (Recital)	"
Copenhagen (Recitals)	October 17, 21, 25,
Berlin (Recital)	November
Lubeck (Orchestral)	"
Brunswick (Recital)	"
Dortmund (Concert with Petschnikoff)	"
Dresden (Recital)	"
Berlin (Recital)	"
Munich (Recital)	"
Berlin (Recital)	"
Dresden (Recital)	"
Augsburg (Recital)	"
Munich (Recital)	"
Frankfort (Recital)	December
Paris (Art Concerts of Société Philharmonique)	December 6 to
Dresden (Recital)	January
Dresden (Recital)	"
Vienna (Recitals)	February 5, 7, 11,
Bremen (Orchestral)	February
Bremerhaven (Orchestral)	"
Hamburg (Recitals)	February 23 and 28; March 18 and
Berne (Orchestral)	March

These are Lamond's Continental engagements up to the present time, but before the close of the season they will be doubled. The activity represented by such a virtuoso campaign, as you in American might call it, can only be appreciated by those artists who are occupied before the public. The strenuous work, the concentration of effort, the physical energy and the nervous force needed to bring such a season to a successful close belong to few artists only. Lamond may devote the whole of next season to Russia and Scandinavia.

The new palatial theatre building of this city is now approaching completion. It is one of those new conceptions in architecture that blend the classical with the Renaissance and adapt the scheme to modern, practical purposes. It will outstrip in beauty and perfection of detail any theatre in Europe. DRI

MME. OGDEN CRANE.—Mme. Ogden Crane, the celebrated vocal teacher, has taken studio No. 1007 Carnegie Hall for the convenience of her uptown pupils. Madame Crane will be at the Carnegie Hall studio Tuesdays and Fridays from 12:30 to 4:30 p. m. The balance of the time she will be at her old studio, No. 3 East Fourteenth street.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

Musical . . People.

Miss Harriette Cady gave a piano recital on October 2, at Middlebury, Vt.

Miss S. Belle Stone has reopened her studio at 316 Beckley Building, Rochester, N. Y.

Frederic Martin is giving a series of talks on the Beethoven symphonies at his home in Harrisburg, Pa.

The music department in the college at Lake Charles, La., will be directed by Miss Wallie Redman this season.

Charles Haverdell, a tenor, has been engaged for vocal instructor at the Wolfram College of Music, Cleveland, Ohio.

Miss Katherine Ridgeway and her concert company are giving musicales in the Y. M. C. A. courses in the West.

Andrew Lang, the orchestra leader of Providence, R. I., has resumed his teaching at 400 Westminster street, Providence.

Arthur Morgan, of Taylor, has been appointed bass soloist at the Providence Presbyterian Church, Scranton, Pa.

Mrs. Lida Buckingham gave a concert at Houston, Tex., on September 27, under the auspices of the Caledonian Society of Houston.

Miss Marguerite Y. Bosch, a New York soprano, sang recently at a special musical service at the Epworth M. E. Church, Norfolk, Va.

Miss Eva S. Mott, who recently returned from a sojourn in Florence, Italy, sang last month for the Universalists at St. Albans, Vt.

Miss Bertha Sonntag, a graduate of the Royal Conservatory at Munich, is planning to give song recitals in the West. Miss Sonntag is a contralto.

George Lawrence, of Washington, D. C., gave a musical at his studio last week. Mr. Lawrence expects to give a recital in the latter part of October.

Frederick H. Haywood is attracting large audiences to his organ recitals in the John Street Church, Lowell, Mass. As is customary, singers assist at each recital.

Arthur Johnson, a pianist from the East, who studied in the Royal Conservatory at Leipsic, has moved to Seattle, and will make that city his permanent home.

Miss Lois D. McCobb, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, is the new vocal instructor at Winthrop College, at Rock Hill, near Charleston, S. C.

Miss Susanne Baker, of Tacoma, Wash., who hopes to become an opera singer, will study in New York this winter. Miss Baker is a protégée of Mrs. Charles H. Jones, of Tacoma.

Bruno Steindel, 'cellist, with his wife as the piano accompanist, gave a recital on September 26 at Beecher Chapel, Galesburg, Ill., in the "Artists' Course" planned for this year.

Mrs. Frank Kondolph, who removed from Rochester to Pittsburg, has been succeeded at the First Presbyterian Church by Miss Taylor, who formerly played the organ in the Westminster Church.

The musicians of Woonsocket, R. I., extended a hearty welcome to Chumford E. Giguere and J. Arthur Gers, both students who recently returned from their studies at the Brussels Conservatory.

Emanuel Fiedler, who is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a graduate of the Vienna Conservatory, with diploma and gold medal, will teach the advanced class in violin in the Lorthner Music School at Worcester, Mass.

Miss Ella Morris Jones, a pupil at the Michigan Conservatory of Music under Mrs. Inez Parmater, gave a song recital in Saginaw last week.

Miss Nanka Estelle Faucette, a young woman of Little Rock, Ark., and a typical daughter of the South, has recently won distinction through her latest musical composition, "Southern Echoes."

Miss Gertrude Tracy, a pianist of Topeka, Kan., is planning to come to New York for the purpose of taking lessons on the pipe organ. Miss Tracy's friends in the West gave her a farewell concert on October 2.

Miss Bertha Titus, soprano; Miss Viola King, contralto; Charles S. Stoughton, tenor, and Charles E. Mayhew, baritone, will sing Liza Lehmann's "Persian Garden," in the South Unitarian Church, Worcester, on October 18.

Henry Conrad Ostrom gave a piano recital at the Old South Church, Worcester, Mass., on October 1. His program included numbers by Rachmaninoff, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Henselt, Goldmark, Sinding, Jensen, Moszkowski, Raff and Liszt.

The musical faculty at the Baptist Female University at Raleigh, N. C., gave a concert at the opening of the university year last month. Miss Marion Dunwoddy, Miss Julia Brewer, Miss de Veaux Royer, Miss Alice Hammond and Miss Janie Williams contributed the program of piano, violin and vocal numbers.

Amy Murray.

IN view of the fact that Amy Murray, the gifted Scottish-American singer, will be heard in many parts of the United States and Canada this year a retrospective glance at her remarkably successful season of 1900-1901 is of special interest at the present time. Her engagements began on October 12, in Scotland, and ended on July 26, in Nova Scotia. During the interval she traveled from Illinois to Cape Breton and from Ontario to Virginia, appearing in thirteen States of the Union and five provinces of the adjoining Dominion. She made three trips to Canada, the last consisting of twenty-five dates in the Maritime Provinces. Notwithstanding all this, Miss Murray found time for fifteen engagements in New York and eleven in Brooklyn. Among the other prominent cities in which she sang may be mentioned Boston, Montreal, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ottawa, Albany, Columbus, Cleveland, Dayton, Ohio; Newark, N. J.; Washington, Baltimore, Trenton, N. J.; Norfolk, Va., and Halifax.

After filling engagements in Maine, New Brunswick and New York State, Miss Murray leaves at the end of this month for a concert tour of Ontario. In December she will revisit Quebec, New England and the Maritime Provinces, appearing in Halifax, St. John, Fredericton and other places, all of which are extending to her a most cordial welcome. January will find Miss Murray in the West, and March in the South, while during May she will continue her provincial tour, singing in St. Johns, Newfoundland. Thence she will sail for Scotland, to be one of the honored vocalists at the Gaelic Society's concert in Inverness.

The many sided nature of Miss Murray's work has brought her into personal contact with a vast number and variety of people. Not only musicians but literary connoisseurs are irresistibly attracted by it, as well as all conditions of Scottish folk, particularly those who "have the Gaelic." Her researches into Gaelic folk-song have brought her recognition in many quarters. "The fact that you have gathered these songs while living among the people of the North," writes Sir A. C. Mackenzie in a complimentary letter to Miss Murray, "and the enthusiasm which led you so far in order to carry out your researches, must eventually bring its recompense, if only in the increased interest which is thereby attached to your lectures on a subject you seem to have made quite a personal one. For my own part, as a colleague who has done some work in a similar direction, I can fully appreciate the value of your labors, and can therefore cordially wish you all success."

And the Highlander, working in the mines on Cape Breton Island, with the poetic imagery of his race, likened Amy Murray's visit to his town to the coming of the "Fiery Cross"—the token sent through the glens in olden times to rouse the clans.

Ellison Van Hoose.

THE success of Ellison Van Hoose at the Worcester Festival will prove very gratifying to his friends. The tenor appeared to special advantage in the Massenet aria, as the appended criticisms will show:

Mr. Van Hoose sang the aria "Adieu donc," from Massenet's pornographic version of the story of Herod, Salome, John the Baptist and the charger. Mr. Van Hoose, during the festival, has sung in a manner to call forth respectful attention. He is not only earnest and sincere—wretched singers often possess these estimable qualities—but he has a voice of good compass, one that, under favorable conditions, would lend itself easily to the expression of contrasted emotions; and he shows intelligence in technical and æsthetic management of this voice. He sang this afternoon freely and with great dramatic fervor.—Philip Hale, in Boston Journal, September 28.

Ellison Van Hoose made the great success of the day, which was due partly to the fact that he is a newcomer here, but more to his manly, robust voice and earnest manner.—New York Sun, September 26.

Both men were superb. Dufft has long been a favorite here, but it was Van Hoose's first appearance. His robust voice and dramatic style won the audience at once, and his work was altogether well worth hearing.—New York Times, September 26.

The solo quartet was finely balanced, and their singing, both singly and together, was artistic and effective. Mr. Van Hoose, a newcomer, scored a decided hit. His voice has the true tenor ring, he manages it with skill and taste, and in all his work he gave abundant evidence of the artistic temperament. The tenor part in the Requiem is a congenial one to a good singer, and Mr. Van Hoose proved himself a most worthy exponent of its many beauties.—Providence (R. I.) Journal, September 26.

No little interest attached to the first appearance of Mr. Van Hoose. A good reputation had preceded him, although coupled with it was the fact that he is a comparatively young tenor. The only trace of youth in his work last evening lay in the delightful freshness of his voice It is a highly individual voice, robust, virile, yet smooth, and always musical. An energetic, dramatic temperament goes with it, as ought to accompany such a voice, but Mr. Van Hoose has evidently learned that temperament, as well as voice, must be studied and trained. This means that he held himself in firm control, and never overdid his part, a noteworthy fact in a singer whose voice is so powerful and whose presence is so magnetic. His interpretation of his role was purely artistic, and was so recognized by the audience. There was a storm of applause at the conclusion of his chief solo, but the construction of the Mass would not allow it to continue. As Dr. Dufft is a welcome veteran, Mr. Van Hoose is an equally welcome newcomer. Both men sang superbly.—Worcester Telegram, September 26.

Ellison Van Hoose will be an especial favorite here. He gave the Massenet aria, "Adieu donc," at the close of the concerts. Mr. Van Hoose has a voice of exceeding compass, beautiful to listen to, and of great versatility. It is a pure tenor, wholesome and magnetic, as is his presence. He impresses one as a singer devoted ot his art, with a voice under perfect control.—Worcester Spy, September 28.

Mr. Kneisel's stimulating accompaniment made the composition a welcome feature of the afternoon concert. So, too, was a tenor air, new to American concert rooms, sung by Mr. Van Hoose. "Adieu donc," from Massenet's "Herodiade," a very good song very well sung.—New York Tribune, September 28.

The concert was highly enjoyed by the audience, both soloists scoring a pronounced success. Mr. Van Hoose, whose work in the Requiem on Wednesday evening attracted so much favorable notice, was heard in an aria which afforded him a more favorable opportunity to display the power and range of his voice and the results of his long training in dramatic singing. His performance was a most brilliant one, in which there was no suspicion of "playing to the galleries." Voice, delivery and style were all admirable, and the liberal applause which he received was fairly earned.—Providence Journal, September 28.

OLIVE MEAD,
VIOLINIST.

Orchestral Engagements Season 1901-2.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Boston (third time).
Boston Symphony Orchestra—New York.
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Philadelphia.
The Chicago Orchestra—Chicago.
Personal address: 1425 Madison Avenue, New York.
Sole Management of
FRED R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

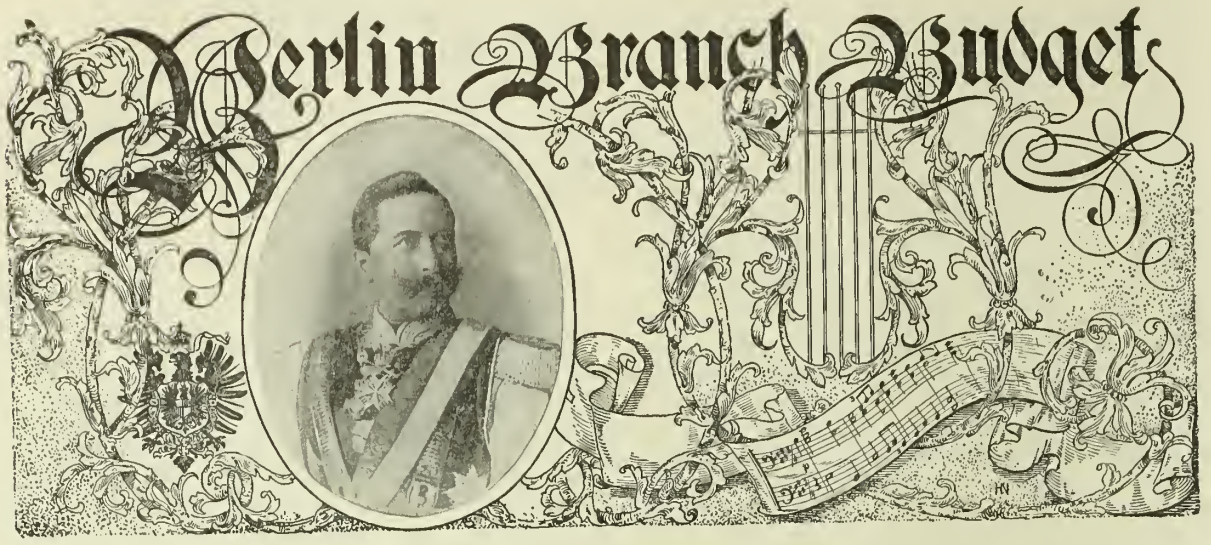
Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.
MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.
During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET
Fourteenth Season.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.
Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

Berlin Branch Budget



GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

September 22, 1901.

AS the concert season has not yet begun—its floodgates, however, will be opened promptly on October 1—attention could be paid musically to the operatic productions of the past week. Leaving the legitimate field of grand opera to the editor-in-chief of THE MUSICAL COURIER, who during his short sojourn in the German capital attended performances of both "Der Freischuetz" and "Tannhäuser" at the Royal Opera House, I contended myself with witnessing the first representations of two new operettas, both of which met with a considerable and not quite undeserved amount of success, and will probably experience a more or less extended "run" at their respective theatres.

At the Friedrich-Wilhelmstaedtischer Theatre, in fact, they seem to have been sure in advance of the success of their new operetta, which was C. M. Zichrer's "Die Landstreicher" (The Tramps), for not only had the management gone beyond its usual outlay and unparsimoniousness in the way of stage setting and general mounting of the novelty, but also the cast behaved and sang with a freedom and assurance betokening confidence in their roles, and with an ease and certainty one does not often notice at first representations. Hence I can indeed proclaim the very best results, as far as the performance of "The Tramps" is concerned. This was notably the case with Siegmund Steiner, one of the best of operetta tenors of the present day, who, with the tasteful, finely shaded delivery of a truly Viennese waltz song captured his audience at the first attempt. The ladies Reichsberg and Door looked even more delightful than they sang in the part and breeches of two young lieutenants. Miss Celice and Mr. Becker were both exceedingly amusing as the tramps, and Hanno, an old acquaintance, represented credibly and creditably the old prince, with the ballet girl eloping attachment, the latter word in the double sense of its meaning.

The plot of the play "The Tramps," by L. Kreun and C. Lindau, is full of life, bustle and action, which never comes to a standstill, and is on the whole very amusing. Perhaps it would have been better still for the effectiveness of the entire work to have cut slightly the somewhat too long drawn out second and final act, and to have taken instead part of the first into this second act, as the amount of real fun and action is disproportionately greater in the former than in the second act. Be that as it may, and granting even that the idea of the book is by no means new, but smacks perceptibly of that trusted old favorite "Robert and Bertram," as did also the in New York once so popular "Erminie," the way in which the old story has been treated, and is newly dressed up, makes it very palatable again. The story this time tells us the adventures of a diamond necklace and a 1,000-mark bill. Both of these valuable articles were lost by Prince Adolar, and have been found by a pair of tramps, a lively young fellow and his spouse. The lucky accident, however, turns out disastrously for the finders. At the first attempt to change the 1,000-mark bill, they make themselves suspicious; they are taken prisoners and are brought before a police judge. He happens to be a young magistrate, who has things more important to him on his mind than the dealings with the alleged culprits. He is head over heels in love with the pretty daughter of an innkeeper, and to her he hastens, after he has ordered the tramps to be taken into temporary custody pending trial. Prince Adolar arrives upon the scene after the magistrate has left, and wants to announce the loss of the valuables. He is not alone, for he travels in company of Miss Mimi, a beautiful prima ballerina, to whom he promises the diamond necklace in case it shall be recovered. The favorable moment of the absence of the police judge is seized by the tramps to break jail, which is an easy thing to do usually upon all stages; so easy in fact that a little niece of mine, whom I had taken once to a performance of "Aïda," said to me after the harrowing final scene: "But Uncle Otto, why don't they jump into the orchestra, if they can't breathe any longer in that cellar beneath the church?" O thou happy, simple soul, may the Lord preserve thee thine innocence for a long time to come! Well, the male tramp dons the official clothes of the magistrate, and his wife the traveling costume of the beautiful Mimi, which the latter conveniently left in the police court. Thus when the police judge returns to his courtroom, he finds the two prisoners gone, and in their stead another couple who in desperation declaim before him the story of their mishaps.

